

QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Vol. 126 1998 - 99

Milan Konopek
ACADEMIC AFFAIRS COMMISSIONER

EXTRA
 QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL

1873

MONDAY, MAY 11, 1998

Tuition hikes approved

Medical students hardest hit, face 124.1% increase

By SHAWN BRIMLEY AND FIONA STEVENSON

All programs at Queen's will be affected by tuition increases over the next two years, after the administration's tuition proposal was approved at last Friday's Board of Trustees meeting.

By a vote of 18-2, most programs will face a 20 per cent increase over the next two years while law and medicine will face dramatic increases of 54.9 and 124.1 per cent respectively. Tuition for graduate programs was capped at 6.1 per cent over the next two years.

"It didn't come as a surprise," said Alma Mater Society President Tom Stanley. "I think we've learned that whenever tuition is viewed on its own as a one-year measure to meet immediate financial needs, it will be increased."

On December 15, 1997, the provincial government announced that universities would have the option of deregulating tuition fees for graduate and professional programs. The policy stipulated that universities would be able to set their own limits for programs to be specified by the government at a later date.

As May approached, and the government's announcement had not yet been made, Queen's administrators drafted a plan proposing increases ranging from 32 to 124.1 per cent over the next two years for programs they assumed would be deemed "professional" by the government. These programs were education, commerce, nursing, engineering, rehabilitation therapy, law and medicine.

However, the government's tuition announcement, made on Wednesday, May 6, restricted deregulation to law and medicine only.

"The main concern we have is about accessibility to medical school. I really question how people are going to pay these high levels."

— Kim Netherel, second-year medical student

As a result, the Queen's administration was forced to revise its initial tuition proposal, limiting increases in most programs to 20 per cent over the next two years while proposing substantial increases to law and medicine. As a

Please see Tuition on page 3

AMS Exec. Pres. Tom Stanley, VP (Ops) Gord Moodie and VP (UA) Alison Loat outside Policy Studies Building after opposing tuition hikes at the Board of Trustees meeting

PHOTO BY RENÉE HUANG

Geography professor dies in avalanche

OBITUARY

By LILIAN KIM

Queen's University and the world of science suffered a great loss on the afternoon of Thursday, April 16, 1998 with the death of Dr. Julian Michael Szeicz, assistant professor of geography at Queen's.

Dr. Szeicz, 33, was killed in an avalanche near Watson Lake in the Yukon Territory while conducting field research with two graduate students. Both students survived the avalanche.

"[Julian] was a bright light, a spark plug in the department — just always helping students," said colleague Robert Gilbert.

Walking down the dark corridor of the department of geography, one will notice the extensive graphs pinned to the walls and the rock samples displayed on office doors.

But in one corner, the words "Simply the best rock flick ever!!" stand out from a movie review taped to Dr. Szeicz's office door. The presence of this article embodies the unforgettable impact that Dr. Szeicz had on the Queen's community.

Fond memories flood the minds of those who had the opportunity to meet the enigmatic professor. Dr. Szeicz first came to Queen's in 1995.

Many remember his keen enthusiasm towards research and teaching.

John P. Smol, professor of Queen's biology and close friend of Dr. Szeicz and wife Barbara Zeeb, remembers him as a "very positive influence because he was very smart, worked very hard, but was also very friendly," Smol said. "He filled a research hole and a teaching hole that we had on the terrestrial side of this paleoenvironmental research."

Students remember Dr. Szeicz as a professor who went out of his way to help someone in need and always remembered a name.

Graduate student Asa Chong, who worked with Dr. Szeicz on her undergraduate honours thesis project, recalls his compassion towards his students and colleagues.

"He was always interested in every person that he met," explained Chong.

"I feel really lucky that I worked with him and I'm going to miss him a lot... he made you really want to be a better person."

— Graduate Student Asa Chong

Dr. Szeicz received a Geography Department Student Council Award for excellence in teaching in 1997.

In an obituary written in The Queen's Gazette, John Holmes, head of geography at Queen's, said: "Julian combined excellence in scholarship with a delightful and engaging personality. He was instantly likable, a kind, thoughtful and gentle man with a wry and self-deprecating sense of humour. Julian's personal qualities combined with his deep, but humble intelligence made him much sought after as a teacher, friend and colleague."

Dr. Szeicz's uplifting presence and infectious laughter will not soon be forgotten among those who worked with and knew him.

"I feel really lucky that I worked with him and I'm going to miss him a lot," expressed an emotional Chong. "He made you really want to be a better person."

Dr. Szeicz was born on January 12, 1965 in England. Raised in Ontario, he derived much of his love for biology and geography from his parents, Geza and

Please see Szeicz on page 2

WEATHERWATCH

Today
 Cloudy with showers
 High 16°C, Low 5°C,
 POP 70%

Tuesday
 Cloudy
 High 21°C, Low 9°C,
 POP 40%

Wednesday
 Mix of sun and cloud
 High 22°C, Low 9°C,
 POP 40%

Thursday
 Mix of sun and cloud
 High 21°C, Low 9°C,
 POP 40%

Gee-Gees plagued with problems

SPORTS UPDATE

BY KETH GEREN

The University of Ottawa football team has already played its 1997 season, but that didn't stop the Canadian Interuniversity Athletic Union (CIAU) from taking the season away.

This was one of several sanctions imposed on the Gee-Gees after the university discovered that its team used two academically ineligible players last fall.

In addition to having their season erased from the books, the Gee-Gees are prohibited from hosting any playoff games or appearing on television during

Queen's football rivals have season erased

the regular season for the next two years. They have also been fined $2,000.

Luc Gelineau, Ottawa's athletic director, declined to talk with The Journal, but during an April interview with The Ottawa Sun, he said the penalties levied against the football team were quite strict.

"I think it's pretty harsh," he said. "But it's important to note that the CIAU recognizes it was an administrative error, not intentional."

Queen's head football coach Bob Howes disagreed with the first part of Gelineau's statement.

"I think it was pretty fair," Howes said. "It wasn't harsh."

Howes said he doesn't hold any ill-will towards Ottawa for using ineligible players, but he does believe the university needs to improve its system for checking the academic status of its athletes.

"I don't think they had anybody really to check if their kids were eligible," he said. "It didn't seem like a high priority for them."

In revoking the Gee-Gees' season, the CIAU will remove Ottawa's name from all trophies and honours the team claimed during last fall's campaign.

Ottawa advanced to the Vanier Cup last fall, eventually losing that game to the University of British Columbia. Along the way to the national championship, the Gee-Gees won the Churchill Bowl and the Dunsmore Cup, given annually to the champion of the Ontario-Quebec Intercollegiate Football Conference (O-QIFC). Ottawa beat Queen's 24-7 in the Dunsmore Cup game last November.

The discovery of the academically ineligible players was made in early April by Ottawa's athletic department. The administration reported that the football team used four ineligible players between 1990 and 1997.

These findings came in conjunction with a six-month CIAU investigation into the university's football program. The investigation was launched after several unspecified complaints were submitted by Carleton University against the football team and its head coach Larry Ring. It is believed that Carleton accused Ring of recruiting violations, such as giving payoffs, and that he knew some of his players were taking steroids.

Last November, two Gee-Gees players tested positive for steroids and were banned from further play. The CIAU exonerated Ring of any wrongdoing.

The use of ineligible players is not a new problem for the O-QIFC. In 1995, Queen's used an academically ineligible player for its first game of the season. Last year, Bishop's football squad discovered a similar problem five games into the season. In both cases the universities reported their errors to the O-QIFC during the season and were penalized by losing all of their victories.

Dr. Szeicz fondly remembered

Continued from page 1

Francis Szeicz, who taught biology and geography respectively at the University of Toronto. Dr. Szeicz combined both interests and studied biogeography.

After receiving his B.Sc. in biogeography from the University of Toronto in 1987, Dr. Szeicz went on to McMaster University where he earned a master's and Ph.D. in geography. The following year, Dr. Szeicz attended the University of Cambridge as a post-doctoral fellow.

After his postdoctoral studies, Dr. Szeicz travelled to Chile where he developed the use of tree-ring analysis. Even after his appointment to the Queen's department of geography, Dr. Szeicz continued research in Chile, in addition to performing research in north-western Canada.

Dr. Szeicz loved the outdoors. He and his wife Zeeb, a paleolimnologist who is an assistant professor of Queen's biology, shared an adoration for rock climbing, canoeing and travelling.

Funeral services, conducted by Rev. Brian Yealland, were held at Grant Hall on April 21. The building was filled with mourners saying their farewells while scientists worldwide phoned to pay their respects to this remarkable individual.

The establishment of a memorial scholarship is currently underway.

Dr. Szeicz in his natural element
PHOTO COURTESY OF THE QUEEN'S GAZETTE

WALKHOME IS OPEN!

9 P.M. - 1 A.M.

WALKHOME WILL BE OPEN EVERY NIGHT UNTIL THE END OF SUMMER COURSES! WE ARE LOCATED IN THE INFOBANK THROUGHOUT THE SUMMER, WHICH IS ON THE LOWER LEVEL OF THE JDUIC. SO IF YOU WOULD LIKE A TEAM TO ACCOMPANY YOU ON A WALK BETWEEN ANY TWO POINTS WITHIN OUR BOUNDARIES, JUST GIVE US A CALL ANY TIME BETWEEN 9 P.M. - 1 A.M. AND WE'LL BE THERE WITH A SMILE!

545-2662

WE WOULD ALSO LIKE TO THANK OUR SPONSORS: TORDIFF COMMUNICATIONS FOR THEIR RADIO SUPPORT, AND CYCLEPATH FOR OUR SIX PEUGOT BICYCLES!

CYCLEPATH
310 PRINCESS ST.
KINGSTON, ONTARIO K7L 1B7
542-3616

Kingston Rowing Club

Summer Rowing Programs

www.intcity.com/krc

Recreational Rowing
Costs $150/6 week session or $260/12 week session. Weekly from 5:30 to 7:30am or 7 to 9pm on Tues. & Fri. or Wed. & Sat. Includes Coaching.

Learn to Row
Costs $90/2 week session and includes over 8 hours of instruction. Week nights (Wed. & Fri.) from 7 to 9pm or weekends (Sat. & Sun.) from 8 to 10am.

Youth Learn to Row
Costs $120/2 week session for ages 12 thru 17. Monday to Friday from 8:30am to 12:30pm. Also, ask about our competitive youth camp held in August!!

Adult Rowing League
Costs $200/8 week session. Racing weekly. Two eight week sessions (6:30 - 8:00pm) meeting twice weekly on Monday & Thursday.

Registration?
At the Queen's Phys. Ed center on Wed. May 20th from 10am to 2pm. At the KRC at the foot of Cataragui St. Thursday May 21st, Friday May 22nd from 5 to 7pm and on Saturday May 23rd from 10am to 2pm. Otherwise, contact a manager a 542-4767.

GET INTO KRC ROWING & PUSH OFF!

FOR MORE INFORMATION CALL THE KRC AT 542-4767. PROGRAMS START IN JUNE AND RUN ALL SUMMER. REGISTER NOW!

Student representatives disappointed

Tuition increases over the next two years

Medicine	124.1%
Law	54.9%
Undergraduate	20.0%
Graduate	6.1%
International fees	6.0%

Continued from page 1

result of the increases, students entering law and medicine in 1999-2000 will face fees of $5,000 and $9,200 respectively.

The Ontario government also introduced a mandatory grandparenting clause which restricted tuition increases to 20 per cent per year for students already enrolled in deregulated programs.

At the meeting Ken Snowdon, associate vice-principal (resources and planning) said the tuition announcement "limited the degree of deregulation that we had built into our fiscal plan."

"We had anticipated that there would be greater deregulation," Snowdon said. "We had hoped that they wouldn't introduce grandparenting," he added later.

In silent protest of the dramatic tuition increases proposed for the Queen's medical program, approximately 30 white-coated medical students attended Friday's Board of Trustees meeting.

Members of the Aesculapian Society distributed a statement on the administration's tuition proposal to the meeting's attendees. The statement included a warning that "increased tuition fees will have adverse effects on the health-care system by forcing graduating medical students to place greater emphasis on income potential, rather than community needs, when evaluating career options."

Medical student Natalie Julian said the increases will, "restrict our choices as rural practice will become less attractive, and there will be more pressure for future medical students to study in the United States."

Before the proposal was voted on by the Trustees, representatives from the AMS, the Society of Professional and Graduate Students (SPGS), and the Aesculapian Society were given an opportunity to speak.

The AMS executive began with a presentation on the history of tuition increases and the impact of tuition hikes on students.

SPGS President, Chris Hales, warned that differentiating fees "will pose serious danger to student government at Queen's" as it will become "increasingly more difficult for students to speak with a united voice."

"No student will have to leave Queen's as a result of the tuition increases."

- Ken Snowdon, associate vice-principal (resources and planning) at the Board of Trustees meeting Friday

Jan Billingsley, the Aesculapian Society's representative to the AMS, denounced the proposed tuition increase for medical students, raising concerns over accessibility and accountability.

During the discussion period, Trustee Mary Collins suggested an amendment to the tuition proposal whereby the 124.1 per cent increase to medical school tuition would be phased in over a longer period of time.

The proposed amendment failed with nine votes for and 12 votes against. Following the defeat, the tuition proposal in its entirety was passed.

Kim Netherel, a second year medical student and spokesperson for the Aesculapian Society, said "we were fairly disappointed" that the proposal passed, but "we really felt like we did everything we could do."

"The main concern we have is about accessibility to medical school," Netherel said. "I really question how people are going to pay these high levels."

Netherel said "our current students were relieved" about the grandparenting clause, however "we're really concerned about who are future colleagues will be," she added.

As a statement against the increases, the medical school's fourth-year class will not make its traditional thank-you donation to the medical school. Instead, it will make a donation directly to the Kingston General Hospital.

Stanley said he "wasn't surprised" by the results of Friday's meeting, but "was disappointed."

"While Board members suggested that they truly understood our concerns, they said that there was no action they could take," he said.

However, Alison Loat, AMS vice president (university affairs) said that "Students should not feel that this diminishes the AMS resolve to protect students in the coming year."

During Friday's meeting, Snowdon said that the university has made a commitment that "no student will have to leave Queen's as a result of the tuition increases."

"We will hold the administration accountable to this vital promise," Stanley asserted in an AMS press release.

The 1998-99 Queen's Operating Budget, which was approved by the Board of Trustees on Saturday morning, lists increased funding for student assistance as an institutional priority.

ELECTROLYSIS

Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely
Experienced electrolysis
Recommended by Physicians

HARRISON SALON

Kingston Since 1959
Free Consultation
Call 542-5595

Alfie's PUB

And He said
"Let the heat
bring on suffocation!"

And We said
"Ha! We got Air Conditioning!"

IMAGE IS SOMETHING, COMFORT IS EVERYTHING!

GO UNDERGROUND

Thursdays
Fridays Saturdays
9pm 'til close

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF Keith Geren Tara Mansbridge	ASSISTANT ASSE EDITORS Sarah Creebie Lillian Kim	GRAPHICS EDITOR Janice Chan
MANAGING EDITOR Laura MacInnis	FEATURES EDITOR Sean Springer	THE READER EDITOR Jessie Craig Bellinger
NEWS EDITOR Fiona Stevenson	ON-ED EDITOR Vacant	SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT John Bowman
ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS Shawn Brimley Kristen Glazer Renée Huang	SPORTS &amp; FITNESS EDITOR Adam Kaminsky	MAGAZINE SUPPLEMENT EDITORS Elizabeth Tropey Shantley McMurtry
EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR Paul Heider	ASSISTANT SPORTS &amp; FITNESS EDITOR Robert MacNeil	PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS Alex Kronby James Terjarian
ARTS &amp; ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR Stefan Murray	MISC. EDITOR Ken Butland	WEB EDITOR Marco Liu

---

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER Claudia Kraft	ADVERTISING MANAGER Vacant	SYSTEMS MANAGER James Clarke
SALES REPRESENTATIVES Andrew Cooke Kristian Li Vacant	ADVERTISING DESIGNERS Katherine Colbourn Annie Ge

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL
Monday, May 11, 1998 • Extra • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.
Contents © 1998 by the Queen's Journal all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Goss Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd., in Gosport, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions.
Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year.
Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to:
272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2H8
Telephone—editorial: 613-545-2800, advertising: 613-545-6711
Fax: 613-545-6728. Email: journal@post.queensu.ca
Internet: http://www.journal.queensu.ca
Circulation 2,000
Issue 1 will be published on Tuesday, May 27, 1998.

Air Castle

Hospitality Tent

Principal's Garden Party

FUN! FOOD! DRINKS!

Explore the Wreck of the Titanic with Steve Blasco, Sc'72 (Must see slide show)

Magician

Balloon Animals

Storytelling

Science Quest

Live Band - "Streetnoise"

Pony Rides

Displays

Artisans

Bubbles

Faculty of Arts & Science Coffee Reception

May 30, 1998

Contact Tammy Young or Teresa Sullivan @ 545-2060 to join in the fun!

Face Painting

FUN! FUN! FUN!

Pancake Breakfast

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY THE JOURNAL

1873

TUESDAY, MAY 26, 1998

Queen's changes phone numbers

BY RENÉE HUANG

Queen's is running out of internal four-digit extension numbers. With less than 300 numbers left, Information Technology Services (ITS) plans to introduce a new phone number and five-digit internal dialing system starting January 1999.

"We're making the change to a new telephone exchange, 533, which will really simplify the dialing for people," said Jack Henderson, manager of telecommunications, audio and video for ITS. "We wanted internal and external numbers to be the same."

"Telephone numbers at Queen's have really been too complicated for people, for too many years," said Henderson.

"We want the telephone system to be as simple, clear, and obvious as possible."

In the past, the existence of two Queen's exchanges, 545 and 546, and various extension numbers made phoning someone a tedious process, Henderson said.

With the new approximately $50,000 system, instead of dialing a phone number and separate extension number, callers will be able to access Queen's offices by dialing only one seven-digit phone number. Every number at Queen's will begin with the 533 exchange. To access an internal extension, callers will dial the last five-digits of the phone number.

Please see Numbers on page 2

Walkhome team and patron harassed

BY SHAWN BRIMLEY

A late-night encounter with an unidentified male left two Walkhome staff and a patron shaken.

On May 9, at 12:30am, Walkhome staff members Ian Wallace and Jaime Blackwood were accompanying a patron along Albert Street when a man walking behind them began to yell at them to turn around.

According to Queen's Security, the man uttered anti-gay slurs, and made verbal threats for no apparent reason.

The man is described as being caucasian, 30 to 40 years old, between 5'10 and 6 feet tall, slightly balding with short, dark hair, and of a medium build. The suspect was wearing a suit, tie and glasses at the time of the incident.

Wallace said the man wanted the team and the patron to get off the road. The group moved to the sidewalk and ignored the individual as he continued to shout derogatory comments at them. "The individual became more irate when we continued to ignore him, not wanting to provoke him further," said Wallace.

The situation intensified when the man shouted: "Get off this road or I'll blow your heads off," Wallace said.

At this point, the individual got into his car and drove onto the sidewalk where they were walking. Wallace and Blackwood pushed the patron out of the way and took cover behind a nearby car.

By the time Wallace called Walkhome headquarters to request assistance from the police, the man had backed the car into the street and driven to a nearby house.

Jen Gresham, manager of the Walkhome service, was in the Walkhome office when Wallace called. Gresham said the police responded quickly to the situation.

However, Wallace stated that "the police were less than helpful." Over the radio, the police recommended the group "hide behind a tree if he tries to hit you again, because he won't want to damage his car," Wallace recalled.

According to Wallace, the police said they were attempting to stop an armed robbery, and could not respond as quickly as they hoped. Wallace said he and the other victims felt stranded.

The police arrived and took details of the incident but were unable to offer further assistance, according to Louise Fish, Director of Campus Security at Queen's.

"While we normally restrict our activity to Queen's itself, we are always concerned for members of the Queen's community," said Fish. Security arrived and offered to drive the students home.

Fish said that Campus Security will continue to stay in contact with the investigating detective on the Kingston Police Force, to ensure action is being taken.

Kevin Lint and Koel Loyer, both Comm '98, celebrate convocation in style.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

QP expansion gets green light

BY MIKE PAYNE AND KRISTEN GLAZER

The recently re-named Queen's Pub will undergo a $130,000 face lift this summer. The planned expansion of the smallest pub on campus will double both its physical size and customer capacity.

Alma Mater Society Vice-President (Operations) Gord Moodie said the new QP will become much more popular. "You'll be able to grab a snack at lunch or do work. It will hopefully be a more attractive place to spend time during the day, and at night it will be just like the QP but with a greater service capacity so that more people can go in and enjoy it."

The current Alma Mater Society executive included the expansion in their campaign platform, and have set a goal of August 15 to complete the project. Bids for the renovation are due this week and construction is slated to begin soon.

Moodie, QP Head Manager Mark Picketts and Services Director Sarah Armstrong head the project team and are excited at the prospect of a financially-viable pub. For the last seven years the QP has ended the fiscal year heavily in debt, said Moodie. However, a recent study revealed that the actual size of the pub is a serious concern for potential patrons.

"It will hopefully be a more attractive place to spend time... it will be just like the QP but with a greater service capacity..."

— Gord Moodie, AMS vice-president (ops)

A survey of five hundred Queen's students in April showed that at least 83 percent of patrons have found it too busy to sit down at some point. In addition to the survey, the project team conducted a two-week study of customer flow. On average 22 patrons a night were turned away due to lack of seating.

The improvements will combat this problem while retaining the most popular aspect of the pub: its atmosphere. It

Please see Pub on page 3

index

Volume 126, Issue 1
www.journal.queensu.ca

News	1	Features	9
Editorials	6	A&E	11
Sports & Fitness	7	MISC	16

WEATHERWATCH

Today Mix of sun and clouds High 21°C, Low 8°C POP 10%	Thursday Mix of sun and showers High 23°C, Low 10°C POP 60%
Wednesday Mix of sun and clouds High 20°C, Low 7°C POP 0%	Friday Mix of sun and clouds High 24°C, Low 13°C POP 30%

COME CHECK US OUT

Our chicken breast is 5oz. & marinated in lemon juice, served on a fresh panini, topped with lettuce, tomato and served with fries or onion rings.

JJ'S
Grill Eatery
We inspire eating!

Our burgers are 6 oz.'s with no fillers, preservatives or MSG added. Topped with lettuce, tomato and served on a kaiser bun with fries or onion rings.

The Gourmet Burger & Grilled Chicken Specialists

A Variety of 19
"Mouth Watering" Burgers and 13 "To Die For"
Grilled Chicken Sandwiches

GREAT PRICES BURGERS
FROM $4.50-$6.25

GREAT PRICES CHICKENS
FROM $5.25-$6.25

Also checkout... JJ's Don't forget our Desserts

- Garlic Bread (5 kinds)
- Homemade Chili
- Nacho Dinners (5 kinds)
- Chicken Strip Dinner
- Chicken Caesar
- Cheesy Chili Fries

- Cheesecakes (5 kinds)
- Sundaes (5 kinds)
- and our Old Fashioned Milkshakes

JJ's 409 Johnson Street at University Avenue
Kingston, Ontario • Canada K7L 1Z1
(613) 547-3771

Numbers revamped

Continued from page 1

The change will occur during December and the entire phone system will be shut down to facilitate the transition. The idea is to "affect the least number of people," said Henderson. "The quietest time at Queen's is between Christmas and New Year's."

"By adding that number to the internal extension, we have so many more [numbers] to play with," said Gord Moodie, Alma Mater Society vice-president (operations).

"All the numbers that pass through the Queen's switchboard," including residences, will be affected, Moodie confirmed.

In the fall, residence rooms will come complete with a phone line hooked up to the Queen's phone system. Students in residence will be able to use a five-digit exchange to dial other residence rooms.

The decision to change phone numbers was made three weeks ago and there are still some unanswered questions. The ITS web site at (www.its.queensu.ca/telecom/) hopes to ease the transition between numbers by providing a guide to figuring out new numbers.

In the months following the phone number change, ITS has a few safety nets in place. "Old numbers will be intercepted for a short time and redirected," Moodie said.

Some numbers on campus that would not take well to a mid-year phone number change, said Moodie. Henderson verified that the Walkhome number and Queen's security numbers will stay the same to maintain continuity for patrons.

The number change also poses a challenge for the What's Next and Who's Where publications. There are concerns about where and how the publication will illustrate the changes.

"When I first heard about it I was scared out of my pants," admitted Mike Beltzner, one of the Who's Where/What's Next editors.

"I understand that the changeover is necessary for ITS," Beltzner said. "From what I've seen, they've done the best they could to maintain the external system."

Who's Where phone numbers will probably be published in two columns, one for before-December numbers and one for after-December numbers, Beltzner said.

"When I first heard about it I was scared out of my pants."

— Mike Beltzner, co-editor of Who's Where/What's Next Publications

For those who use the internet, Henderson said the Queen's dial-in modem number will stay the same until ITS announces how it will be consolidated into the 533 exchange.

Irene Bujara, Human Rights Office director, has some concerns about the phone system switch. A lot of their material has already been printed for September, including safety cards that will be distributed to first-year students, she said.

"We thought we were ahead of the game," said Bujara. "How do we tell people that the safety cards with [emergency] numbers on them are wrong?"

"Because we deal with crisis, giving phone numbers out is important," she said.

"I told people to get used to writing their number out," she added.

CORRECTIONS

In the April 2 issue of The Journal, Kristina Small's name and painting, "Juxtaposition of Decision," were omitted from a story on the First-Year Art Show.

In the May 11 extra issue of The Journal, Kim Mearhler, spokesperson for the Aesculapian Society, was incorrectly identified as Kim Netherel. The Journal regrets the errors.

June 28 to August 30 1998

Kingston Summer Festival

THE GRAND THEATRE

Holly Cole June 28
Borachobis June 29
Imilonji Kolu Choral
Society of Soweto June 30
Leachy (with Bruce Guthro) July 2
Joe Sealy & Mally Johnson July 5
Theatre Smith-Gilmour:
In the Wings of Eden July 8
Purit o Boroque:
Bach Meets Cape Breton July 15
The Second City July 17
The King's Singers July 25
Gino Quilica July 28
A CHORUS LINE July 31 - August 16
Susan Aglukark August 7
Linda McRae August 19
Lorne Elliott August 21
The Kingdom of the Saguenay August 27-30

BABY GRAND STUDIO
How To Eat Like A Child July 16-26
FROGBOG! August 5-15
Spinning Yarns August 5-15

FORT HENRY
Repercussion Theatre:
Midsummer Nights Dream July 23
Mocbeth July 24

Box Office: 530-2050
e-mail: kingfest@istar.ca
Web Site: kingstonfestival.com
at The Grand Theatre,
218 Princess Street,
Kingston K7L 1B2

COMEDY • THEATRE • MUSIC

WALKHOME IS OPEN!

9 P.M. - 1 A.M.

WALKHOME WILL BE OPEN EVERY NIGHT UNTIL THE END OF SUMMER COURSES! WE ARE LOCATED IN THE INFOBANK THROUGHOUT THE SUMMER, WHICH IS ON THE LOWER LEVEL OF THE JDUC. SO IF YOU WOULD LIKE A TEAM TO ACCOMPANY YOU ON A WALK BETWEEN ANY TWO POINTS WITHIN OUR BOUNDARIES, JUST GIVE US A CALL ANY TIME BETWEEN 9 P.M. - 1 A.M. AND WE'LL BE THERE WITH A SMILE!

545-2662

WE WOULD ALSO LIKE TO THANK OUR SPONSORS:
TORDIFF COMMUNICATIONS FOR THEIR RADIO SUPPORT, AND CYCLEPATH FOR OUR SIX PEUGOT BICYCLES!
CYCLEPATH
210 PRINCESS ST.
KINGSTON, ONTARIO K7L 1B7
542-1616

TA union rejected by association

BY LIZ FROGLEY

After a year-long drive, it appears a recent vote has ended attempts to unionize Queen's teaching assistants.

The vote, which was held on April 16, ended with 40 per cent of voters supporting a union and 59 per cent opposed.

The unionization drive began in September when a number of Queen's graduate students formed a group called the Teaching and Research Assistant Certification Campaign (TRACC) to work for unionization. The group's primary concerns were differences in pay rates and workloads between departments, and the lack of a grievance process for TAs. According to a letter sent to graduate students by TRACC Chair James McCrostie, TAs receive between $22.75 and $23.75 per hour, but may be required to work more hours than they are paid for.

The lack of a working grievance procedure is also of particular concern. "There's no standard protocol if there is a problem... since you're a student employee," said Lorena Taricani, vice-president (internal) of the Society of Professional and Graduate Students (SPGS). "That's a big problem."

"I'd like to have a policy where it's all in writing and everyone follows it," Taricani said.

Such a policy is in the works, despite the defeat of the unionization plan. Members of the SPGS executive are negotiating with the administration to improve the conditions of TAs. Steve Kammerer, SPGS vice-president of communications, said he, Taricani and Deb Hume, SPGS vice-president services, are discussing their concerns with Queen's Vice-Principal Operations John Cowan and Dean of Graduate Studies Ron Anderson.

Kammerer believes that although the unionization drive failed, it helped make people aware of the situation of TAs and research assistants at Queen's. "I don't think we'd be in a position to discuss these issues without the unionization drive."

"I am really happy with the talks," he added. "I like to way [Cowan] deals with things — I like his openness and frankness."

Taricani also expressed optimism about the outcome of the talks, saying

TAs' working conditions can be improved without unionization. "We're trying to get the things students have asked for and not deal with a union... We're dealing with the administration ourselves," Taricani stated.

Kammerer is confident that the talks "will go a long way to address things." He hopes that discussions will be concluded by the end of June or early July, so TAs will have a better working situation in September.

Ken Snowdon to leave Queen's

BY FIONA SCANNELL

Ken Snowdon, associate vice principal (resources and planning), is taking a one-year absence from Queen's effective June 1. Snowdon has been selected as a member of a new management team within the Ontario Ministry of Education and Training.

The management team was created in response to a decision made by an advisory panel on post-secondary education to increase communication between the government and education sectors.

By joining forces to tackle complex issues, the government and representatives from the education system, should be able to look at current problems with greater insight, Snowdon said.

This is the first time a university relations branch within the Ministry of Education and Training has been established. Snowdon's position has yet to be clearly defined, although he looks forward to working in the Ministry.

The university relations branch will deal with several key issues including research policy, accountability, student assistance and other funding concerns. It will also examine the relationship between private institutions and the provincial education system.

Snowdon looks forward to interacting with provincial ministers and the federal government. He believes that increasing communication is an important step towards initiating positive changes within the education system.

"It is as important for the government to understand the realities of education as for us to understand the pressures of government," Snowdon said.

Snowdon hopes that this is the first of many opportunities for administrators like himself to collaborate towards broadening the university experience.

"It is as important for the government to understand the realities of education as for us to understand the pressures of government."

— Ken Snowdon, vice-principal (resources and planning)

Assuming this year's implementation goes smoothly, the new government program will be ongoing. The management team will be made up of different members each year.

Snowdon has a long history with Queen's, where he completed an undergraduate degree in history and two graduate degrees, including a Master of Public Administration. He was hired by Queen's as a financial analyst in 1976.

During Snowdon's absence, Tom Sayer of financial services will take on the role of acting director of resources and planning.

One of the Solar Car Team's solar-powered vehicles was on display on campus last week. The team was established in 1988 to build a solar-powered vehicle to compete in the first Canadian solar-car race. Since then the team has built four more cars to compete in races in Canada, the United States, Japan and Australia. Its latest car, Dawn Treader, placed 11th at the 1996 World Solar Challenge in Australia and 10th at Sunrayce 97. The team is currently working on the design and construction of its sixth car, to race in two races next year: Sunrayce 99 in the U.S. and the World Solar Challenge 99 in Australia.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Pub renovations considered an investment

Continued from page 1

the pub were to expand, it should try to create an atmosphere similar to the current QP, said 90 per cent of those surveyed.

The new pub design has a pool table, a larger bar, more seating, as well as a larger kitchen, office and storage space. The menu will be expanded slightly in the fall to reflect the new capabilities of the QP, but a major overhaul will wait until after the expansion has been evaluated.

According to the official proposal passed by the board of directors, the demand for pitas was at times overwhelming due to space constraints. The new area will allow kitchen staff to prepare food much more easily. According to Moodie, while the new menu will be up to the pub's management team, it will have a distinctly healthy theme. The current bar area will be less congested and should make for a more fluid working space for staff. Moodie predicts that the longer bar will result in more efficient service.

"We'll be able to have two bartenders working effectively throughout the night, hopefully have 12 beers on tap."

— Gord Moodie, AMS vice-President (ops)

"We're really happy with how operational the new QP is going to be. We'll be able to have two bartenders working effectively throughout the night, hopefully have 12 beers on tap," he said.

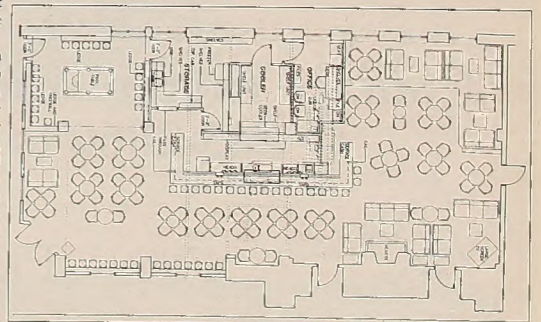

Despite the cost of the expansion, the team is confident that it will be viable in the long run. They expect to make back the cost in seven years. Money for the project will come directly from the AMS. "It's general money that can be spent on any upgrade for any of the services," said Moodie. Considered an investment, the renovation is supported unanimously by the Board of Directors. It also had an 80 per cent approval rating in the survey.

Physical changes in the pub will lead to other improvements. The new pub will be better equipped for entertaining purposes, although Moodie said there will be no drastic changes to the entertainment lineup. The volume of musical acts in the pub are restricted by the location of the QP, directly below graduate residences. Some jazz or comedy acts may be added to the play list, along with familiar regulars. The seating area currently located beside the QP will be dissolved and students are expected to find somewhere else to study or do group projects. "I don't foresee that to be a major problem. Watson Hall has a huge room that's often open for study which is nearby, there's the skylight lounge, and the library. If it is a problem then maybe it's something we'll think about," Moodie said.

A look at the proposed QP expansion plans.

COURTESY OF ALMA MATER SOCIETY

Air Castle

Hospitality Tent

Principal's Garden Party

FUN! FOOD! DRINKS!

Explore the Wreck of the Titanic with Steve Blasco, Sc'72 (Must see slide show)

Magician

Balloon Animals

Storytelling

Live Band - "Streetnoise"

Pony Rides

Displays

Artisians

Faculty of Arts & Science

COFFEE RECEPTION
SPRING FLING

Bubbles

May 30, 1998

Contact Tammy Young or Teresa Sullivan @ 545-2060 to join in the fun!

Face Painting

FUN! FUN! FUN!

Pancake Breakfast

Academic Roundtable rolling into Queen's

BY SEAN GALLIVAN AND RENEE HUANG

Student government representatives from universities and colleges across Canada will make their way to Kingston for the Canadian Academic Roundtable conference this June.

The conference, hosted by Queen's June 9 - 13, is being organized by Alma Mater Society President Tom Stanley, Vice President (University Affairs) Alison Loat and Academic Affairs Commissioner Milan Konopek.

The Queen's team started planning the conference in April. "We have 30 to 35 delegates so far and usually there's about 40," said Loat.

The Academic Roundtable was created to discuss issues faced by all universities and colleges, such as budget cutbacks, marking guidelines and program closures. Delegates will present specific problems they have faced and solutions they have used.

University students from Laurentian, Nipissing, McGill and Bishop's are attending the June conference, Loat said. Kingston's St. Lawrence College and Mount Royal College in Calgary will also be sending delegates.

"We're really excited about it and we're hoping that it will be an exciting conference," said Loat. "We're really hoping that this conference will set the standard for all conferences in the future."

"Part of the point is that we hope delegates will learn from the experiences of each school and bring back ideas to improve their campuses," Loat explained.

Key-note speakers, including David Foot, a University of Toronto professor and author of Boom, Bust, and Echo, will address delegates. Students will have the opportunity to tackle issues of spending, class size, teaching, budget restraints and programs in the nine different discussion sessions.

"We're really hoping that this conference will set the standard for all conferences in the future."

—Alison Loat, AMS vice-president (UA)

Delegates will work towards creating a joint statement to release to the press and government, presenting the roundtable's standpoint on issues discussed in the conference. "We're hoping that we'll arrive at a stated position" that could be presented to the government and media, said Loat.

There are also plans to expose students to the city of Kingston. Tourist activities, such as a ride on the Confederation Tour Trolley and a trip to Fort Henry are scheduled.

Held twice a year, last year's conferences were hosted at Acadia University in Halifax and the University of Saskatchewan in Saskatoon. The Queen's conference will be the first of this academic year. The site of the second conference, to be held in the late fall, will be decided at the June roundtable.

The conference will be held in the John Deutch University Centre. Today is the final day for registration.

THE JOURNAL

Looking for a great job?

Applications are still being accepted for:

- Op-Ed Editor
- Advertising Manager
- Sales Representative

Applications are due on Friday, June 10, at 2 p.m. Application forms are available at 272 Earl Street. Those interested in applying are encouraged to call Tara or Keith, editors-in-chief, at 545-2800. Or drop us an email at journal@post.queensu.ca

APPLY NOW!

Le Caveau

RESTAURANT & WINE BAR

Imagine... warm brick & limestone interiors in an historic building in downtown Kingston with two distinctive dining rooms, plus "The Burgundy Room" for private functions, business or pleasure. Choose from fresh, innovative cuisine...over 30 wines by the glass, and an extensive vintage selection...attentive and informed service from lunch into the late evening...Experience Le Caveau

354 King Street East, Kingston

(613)547-1617

Fine Dining at a Reasonable Price

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

A leader in student journalism for over 125 years

Deregulate this!

WITH THE RECENT BOARD OF Trustees decision to raise tuition, it is apparent that the voice of student protest has not been heard very loudly at Queen's. The decision to disproportionately increase tuition fees for law and medicine comes as no surprise in light of Vice-Principal Ken Snowden's enthusiasm for the Tory policy of deregulating programs that promise greater earning potential.

Our right to education will be limited by each student's ability to pay for the program of their choice.

In the past, tuition hikes have been explained as a necessary solution to the immediate threat of an operational deficit. This apparent endorsement of deregulation, however, has much more disturbing implications for the future of post-secondary education. Behind the government's policy of giving universities greater control over tuition fees is the understanding that our right to education will be limited by each student's ability to pay for the program of their choice.

Regardless of the promised increase to student aid, programs with a greater income potential will be less accessible to less affluent students. The classist principles behind this policy have been widely accepted in both federal and provincial government circles. It would be a mistake, however, for Canadian students to complacently sit by as the principle that education is a right is dismantled.

While it has become apparent that the Queen's administration will continue to try to raise tuition fees in response to its immediate needs, students must not tolerate the elitist consequences of deregulation. Despite the obvious contradiction of pricing certain programs beyond the reach of many students, the administration has promised that no students will have to leave Queen's as a result of the increase. Although the scheduling of the Board of Trustees meeting in May did not allow for many students to hear that promise, the administration should know that we won't let them forget it.

Silence of the damned

THIS WEEK, CANADA'S MILITARY brass dismissed a report in Maclean's magazine that claimed that the Canadian Forces are rife with cases of sexual harassment and assault. While admitting that sexual abuse is a problem, Chief of Defence Staff General Maurice Baril denied that the problem is any worse than in Canadian society at large.

The Maclean's report, however, reveals a pattern of flagrant disregard for Canada's servicewomen that seems endemic to military culture. According to the report, female recruits are being assaulted by sexual predators and then encouraged by senior officers and military police to suffer in silence or face the scorn of their fellow soldiers. Clearly, any system of justice that chooses to punish the victim and allows the perpetrator to strike again is in need of fundamental changes.

The 27 cases of assault reported by Maclean's points to a patriarchal and misogynist way of life that has not adapted to the integration of women into the armed forces that began in the 1990s. Although all serious criminal charges in the military, including sexual assault, are supposed to be tried under the criminal code, few seem to make it past the military's unwritten code of silence.

Despite upcoming initiatives, including harassment training and the appointment of an ombudsman, it seems unlikely that anything will change as long as reporting an assault is treated as an act of insubordination. Until military culture is forced to recognize the seriousness of these crimes, sexual assaults will continue to go unreported and justice will not be served.

Bons Mots:

War is too serious a matter to entrust to military men.

— Georges Clemenceau

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF
Keith Gerein
Tara Marabridge

MANAGING EDITOR
Laura Macdonald

NEWS EDITOR
Flora Stevenson

ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS
Shawn Brimley
Kristen Glazer
Renée Huang

EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
Paul Heisler

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR
Stefan Murray

ASSISTANT A&E EDITOR
Sarah Crosbie
Lillian Kim

FEATURES EDITOR
Sean Springer

O.P. EDITOR
Vacant

SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Adam Kaminsky

ASSISTANT SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Robert MacNeil

MISC. EDITOR
Ken Burdand

GRAPHICS EDITOR
Janice Chan

THE READER EDITOR
Jesse Craig Bellinger

SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT
John Bowman

SPECIAL PUBLICATIONS EDITORS
Elizabeth Frogley
Shandley McMurray

PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS
Alex Kriobny
James Torjanian

WEB EDITOR
Marco Lui

CONTRIBUTORS

Greg Dole, Sean Gallivan, Mike Payne, Tom Purves, Fiona Scannell, Timothy Scott.

SEAN SPRINGER

And now a word from our sponsor

CASTING A DARK SHADOW ON OUR struggle to enter the third millennium is the dreadful "ignoramus syndrome," manufactured by international enterprises everywhere. Eclipsing the murky reality of inaccessible education, it serves as an ingenious deterrent to mobs of angry students. The objective: coercing students into apathy. The method: control thought by restricting ownership of the media to a sparse number of tyrants. With Captain Tubby Black's purchase of two more Canadian daily newspapers this week, it seems as if the forces of ignorance are gaining new ground. The following is a paid advertisement by the corporate titans of globalization:

Hi there! My name is Sean Springer and if you're like me you probably demand the most out of your brain. That's why I'm the proud owner of a deluxe model-1984 brain—specifically hand crafted for me by our very own global media.

It wasn't too long ago, however, when television brought to my attention that my previous brain was melting down because of anxiety attacks caused by the precarious state of the world. It was time to go for a lobotomy at the local, new and used, commercially owned and operated, thinking factory.

Mike the Knife, my suave artificial brain dealer, meticulously explained that the latest "medula oblongata" would excel way beyond my own archaic brain, thanks to a new technology coined "the blight of compassion." Apparently, the process requires the media to pump a manifold of violent piercing images into my skull, resulting in a limp and impotent brain. Nothing, not even tuition hikes, can stimulate a backlash.

It didn't take long for Mike to close the sale. He led me into a cold storage area where a brand new '84 brain was waiting in a formaldehyde jar. His pitch was irresistible: "This is the latest model in brains. It comes equipped with top of the line brainwashing mechanisms that guarantee you will be a contributing member of society (unlike all those useless social science and humanities majors).

"We're talking about a fully charged ethics removal system, an economically driven mentality, weekly insights on all major trends, an image conscious awareness—with free installation, and enough erection fluids to last you until your next purchase five or ten years from now." He even threw in a free television with two channels—CNN and Headline News. Gosh, it sounded too good to be true.

"Sean," he said, "aren't you tired of thinking for yourself? Here, plop this sucker into your cranium and just sit back and enjoy the ride." How could I say no? I have to admit that the initial test drive was incredible. I was like a giddy butterfly breaking free of its cocoon; leaving behind my drab klutzy former self. I morphed into the debonair stud the world wants me to be. Well, I handed Mike my old lemon and never looked back. Granted, I can't think for myself anymore. But hey—who really wants to think when someone else will do it for you?

SEAN SPRINGER is a student at Queen's University who writes about social and political issues.

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Kraft

SALES REPRESENTATIVES
Andrew Cooke
Kristian Li
Vacant

ADVERTISING MANAGER
Vacant

ADVERTISING DESIGNERS
Katharine Colbourne
Annie Ge

SYSTEMS MANAGER
James Clarke

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Tuesday, May 26, 1998 • Issue 1 • Volume 126

The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario. Editorial opinions expressed in the Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.

Contents ©1998 by the Queen's Journal; all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on the Green Community Press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Gananoque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions.

Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2N8. Telephone—editorial: 613-545-2800; advertising: 613-545-6711; Fax: 613-545-6728. Email: journal@post.queensu.ca. Internet: http://www.journal.queensu.ca. Circulation: 3,000. Issue 2 will be published on Tuesday, June 30, 1998.

SPORTS & FITNESS

Baseball manager quits

THE PEANUT GALLERY

BY ADAM KAMINSKY

MARLINS DUMP TALENT
After completing a huge fire sale during the off-season, the defending World Series champions recently tried to outdo themselves in their desire to dump salaries. They made one of the most dramatic, and boneheaded, trades in baseball history when they traded slugger Bobby Bonilla, reliable Jim Eisenreich, defensive wizard Charles Johnson and superstar Gary Sheffield to the Los Angeles Dodgers. Making the return trip from Chivaz Ravine was defensive liability Todd Zeile and extremely talented, but malcontent Mike Piazza.

Compounding their stupidity, Florida's management traded Piazza to the New York Mets for young prospect Preston Wilson and two minor leaguers in the deal. Is it a wonder that the Marlins season ticket holders are suing the team for false advertising?

"I often had to pay for babysitters and meal money while I was with the team."

— Randy Casford, former Queen's manager

With a wife and two young children, the escalating cost of volunteering for the team, and the amount of university politics surrounding the funding of the squad, Casford simply decided that enough was enough.

"I often had to pay for babysitters and meal money while I was with the team" said Casford. "This was money that could have gone into the family's pockets."

The skipper also felt that due to the limited funding the team receives from the university, which for the baseball team is only $5,000 of the necessary $12,000, the players simply had to pay and fundraise too much money. It is the status of the team as a competitive club, rather than a varsity sport, that hinders its funding, and it is this distinction that frustrates Casford.

"I worked with the team for three years to try and get it off the ground, but with the number of varsity teams already in place and other competitive clubs competing for the money, it seemed unlikely we would attain that status," complained the former manager.

The administration argues that it is not the school that is hindering the team, but rather the lack of interest in the OUA. However, current Queen's ball player Chris Cartile disagrees. He feels that with the growing number of baseball teams across the country (upwards of 20 clubs), many of the large schools in Ontario will follow suit, and increase their interest in baseball.

Casford agrees and he feels that the level of play, which he maintains is already "awesome," can only get better if the teams remain in existence.

"With the rising American dollar, partial scholarships no longer appeal to Canadian athletes, and this will create a higher level of ball in the Canadian college system," he said.

Team MVP Aaron Collins also believes that the level of play is exceptionally high, and feels that if varsity status was bestowed on the team, fan interest would certainly be greater.

"All the guys on the team play at the rep level in the summer

The baseball team may have to manage themselves in 1998. (JOURNAL FILE PHOTO)

time," said the second baseman. "This is the highest level of non-professional baseball in Canada."

The former skipper regrets the fact that he is leaving a team that is returning every player and stands a good chance of being in championship contention, but it was a decision he had to make.

"I am going to miss the guys, they are great kids and will do exceptionally well this year," lamented Casford.

The players will miss their old manager as well when the summer turns to autumn. The team has had a great deal of trouble replacing their only skip. "We currently have no leads on a manager and it is looking like we might have to manage ourselves," said Collins.

Casford said he was willing to help them out to find a manager, but felt it would be hard to find someone willing to give up as much time, money and energy as the job required.

Casford concluded, "This is a great program and I would hate to see it fold because they couldn't find someone to manage them."

NHL summer season

The road to the cup takes many turns

BY JOURNAL SPORTS STAFF

Canada's annual rite of passage to spring, or in the case of this year's playoffs, summer, are in full swing. For those of you with your head in the sand, or who are simply enjoying the sun, here is the first month of the playoffs in brief.

OH CANADA!
Three underdog Canadian teams scrape into the playoffs, Ottawa, Montreal and Edmonton, and all of them see their season extend into the second round.

WOE CANADA!
CBC's dreams come to a rapid end as all three Northern entries see their cup dreams dashed in short second-round match-ups.

SPEED KILLS, SIZE DIES:
Two heavily favoured and endowed Eastern Conference teams enter the playoffs, but both Philadelphia and New Jersey meet a rapid demise as they couldn't catch the more youthful and fleet-footed Sabres and Senators.

THE EAGLE FLIES AGAIN
Eddie 'the Eagle' Belfour leads his President's trophy winning Dallas Stars to a Western Conference final with a 1.41 goals against average in the first two rounds. This comes a year after being dumped by the Chicago Blackhawks and short changed by the San Jose Sharks...I wonder if their goalies are hitting the golf ball well?

BLIND LEADING THE BLIND
Commissioner Gary Bettman who has had his worst year at the helm (disastrous Olympics, handling of violence in the league, low T.V. ratings) attempts to advise the Canadian government on tax policy. Stick to what you know, Gary.

PAYCHECK, NOT LOTTERY
By leading his Detroit Red Wings to the conference finals, Sergei Federov becomes eligible to collect a one installment bonus of $12 million. Is it any surprise he seems to have had an extra skip in his step?

OLLIES AND DOMINATORS AND BEARS, OH MY!
The Washington Capitals and Buffalo Sabres match into the conference finals by relying on their two unique, but proficient goalies. Olaf Kolzig and Dominik Hasek have faced and stopped more shots than any other goalies in the playoffs. Something has to give.

A NOVEL IDEA
The referees and the league have finally realized what a whistle does, and that it works in overtime as well. Death to obstruction, long live exciting playoff hockey.

Please see Detroit on page 8

Running of the Bulls

BY ADAM KAMINSKY

This is not about a July event in Pamplona, but one that takes place in May and June throughout North America. However, the results are the same.

No two events send grown men running as quickly as do seeing the bulls of Spain loose on the streets or the Bulls of Chicago loose on the court. As they make their run for a sixth championship in this decade (note: Michael Jordan did not play at all in one of those seasons), the Bulls continue to leave grown men crying as they march through the seemingly helpless Eastern Conference.

The perfect balance of talent and grit has been found in the city with broad shoulders, and it is this chemistry, coupled with the extra-terrestrial talents of Jordan, that have made this team as great as it is. But

Please see Malone on page 8

The Voice of the University
QUEEN'S JOURNAL
Op-Ed
 Opinion Pieces Womyn's Voice
 International Issues Letters to the Editor
 Applications are still being accepted for Op-Ed Editor.
 Call The Journal at 545-2800

Kingston Frameworks
 (talkery & workshop)
Congratulations Graduates!!
 Visit one of our two locations and view a selection of framing options for your diploma or graduation photos.
 Downtown Kingston 198 Princess St (at Montreal Street) 546-1868
 Kingston Township 745 Bayridge Dr (at Taylor-Kidd Blvd) 389-1700
Kingston Frameworks

Hey grads! Why come back to Kingston?
 Have your 1998 Tricolour Yearbook mailed to your home.
 Just mail us your name, address, student number, the year of the book (1998) and a cheque for postage. ($8 within Canada, $10 to the USA, or $15 overseas.)
 Tricolour Yearbook c/o Alma Mater Society JDUC, Queen's University Kingston, Ontario, K7L 3N6
 Mailings will begin just after the arrival of the books in September.

Malone and Stockton seek crown

Continued from page 7
 all is not as rosy as it seems for the two-time defending champs. Although they dispatched of the upstart New Jersey Nets in short order during the first round of the playoffs, these games were surprisingly close. The Nets, despite not having the services of point guard Sam Cassell and rookie phenom Keir Van Horn for much of the series, put up a valiant fight taking one game to overtime and another to the final seconds, before bowing out. Although it was a 3-0 sweep, the youngsters from across the Hudson were able to expose some weaknesses in the vaunted champs.
 The 'Bull run' continued through the Charlotte Hornets, as once again the champs did not expend too much energy in riding themselves of another playoff foe. As before, things were not as easy as the 4-1 series score would indicate — the Hornets gave the Bulls a run for their money in the first three games of the series. The Bulls won two of those games, and then cruised against a disheartened team.

The perfect balance of talent and grit has been found in the city with broad shoulders.

As the victory tour proceeds through the Indiana Pacers, the Bulls continue to reel off wins in games that they are outplayed. Despite a 2-0 series advantage, the Pacers seem to be taking the play to the Bulls. However, with the advantage of more forgiving referees and Scottie Pippen's commitment to defence, it seems like it is a question of when and not if the Pacers will fall.
 When Indiana becomes more roadkill on Chicago's road to the championship, the Bulls will most likely face their toughest challenge yet, the Utah Jazz, who enjoy a 3-0 lead in their series with the Lakers. After defeating the Jazz in a closely fought series in last year's championship, the men from Salt Lake will get a second crack at the champions.

 While Chicago usually intimidates a team long before the opening tap, this will not be the case with the veteran Jazz. The probable Western Conference champs have home-court advantage, enjoy credibility with the referees and are on a roll. This may also be John Stockton and Karl Malone's last chance at the elusive championship, so the incentive is there.
 This 'running of the bulls' will come short of their final destination, as instead of Chicago picking up its sixth NBA crown, the Jazz will pick up their first in seven hard fought games.

Detroit to repeat cup victory

Continued from page 7
 ond consecutive appearance in the cup final, due to their great forward depth. The Stars have a better defence corps and their goaltending has been excellent, but the loss of Joe Nieuwendyk, their leading regular season scorer, is just too much. Detroit in seven low scoring games.
LORD STANLEY'S PICK:
 The first repeat champion since the Pittsburgh Penguins will be crowned as Steve Yzerman hoists the cup for a second consecutive year. Wings achilles heel, goaltender Chris Osgood, really won't matter. Detroit just scores too much. The Wings in six, even if nobody in Washington cares.

CHAMPS:
 Philadelphia Flyers, New Jersey Devils, FOX, the NHL, Philadelphia general manager Bobby Clarke, Colorado coach Marc Crawford, Pittsburgh forward Jaromir Jagr, Gary Bettman, big market American teams.

Canada's nuclear decay

While the world scolds India's move toward another arms race, Canadians are fueling the nuclear breakout

Timothy Scott

Back in Left Field

THE NORTH AMERICAN media certainly are fickle animals. After India's recent nuclear tests, the media, egged on by several world leaders, went into overdrive.

Would this lead to a new arms race? Would the Pakistani government decide to retaliate by conducting tests too? Would American sanctions, Canadian outrage and Russian indifference mean anything?

And then, the media were gone. Gone off to cover the latest student shooting spree south of the border. With their attention now distracted, the media hasn't really found the answer to any of their questions concerning nuclear strife and most importantly, they haven't even asked the right questions.

After all, a ban on underground nuclear tests doesn't really have much to do with stopping the proliferation of nuclear weapons. Manufacturing weapons of mass destruction is hardly the esoteric process it appears to be. Any enthusiastic psychopath with internet access can extract plans to construct weapons of mass destruction.

Canada was embarrassed in 1974 when India first exploded a nuclear device using plutonium produced by reactors that we had sold to them.

Nuclear proliferation is the result of the uncontrolled spread of the technology needed to produce plutonium. One way of producing such plutonium is with help of the Canadian-designed CANDU reactors.

In this case, we already knew that India had the bomb. In fact, Canada was embarrassed in 1974 when India first exploded a nuclear device using plutonium produced by a reactor that we had sold to them. At the time, Canada had been assured by the Indian government that the reactors would only be used for energy generation or other "peaceful" activities.

PHOTO MAGIC BY TOM PURVES

While the sale of nuclear reactors is not tantamount to the sale of nuclear weapons, it certainly comes close. After all, the reactors make it much easier for a country to build nuclear weapons.

Based on the assumption that India would sit back and allow the United States, Britain, France, China and the Soviet Union to monopolize nuclear weapons, it would seem that Canada's actions were hopelessly naive.

In addition to India, the list of past buyers of Canadian nuclear reactors is disturbing. They have included an Argentine military junta, former Romanian dictator Nicolae Ceausescu, the current Chinese dictatorship, as well as Pakistan and South Korea. Media reports indicate that among other countries, Indonesia was being courted last year as a possible buyer of a CANDU reactor.

This tattered list of clients indicates that short of Saddam Hussein or Muammar Qaddafi we'll sell a nuclear reactor to just about anyone. One wonders just what standards we're using. Would Nigeria merit consideration? Does a country's leader have to be declared crazy by some sort of court of public opinion?

With nuclear engineers and technicians horribly underpaid and security relaxed in post-Cold War Russia, the threat of theft or a black market trade in nuclear materials is ominous indeed. Since only a few kilograms of plutonium is needed to build a sizable nuclear weapon, the chance of nuclear terrorism is real.

While we think of helping other countries, we should also consider putting our own house in order. Buried under billions of dollars of debt, Ontario Hydro can blame its nuclear division for much of its troubles. Originally billed as an energy source that would provide electricity too cheap to meter, nuclear power has turned into the anchor dragging Ontario Hydro's finances to the bottom of a sea of red ink.

Nuclear power has turned into the anchor dragging Ontario Hydro's finances to the bottom of a sea of red ink.

Just last year the agency responsible for regulating nuclear power stations in Canada, the Atomic Energy Control Board, discovered that many of Ontario Hydro's reactors were barely meeting minimum safety standards. How they failed to notice the deterioration of safety standards before this point is a question for another day.

Regardless, the subsequent decision to put seven of the reactors out of service ahead of schedule does little to solve the utility's problems. With no money set aside for the decommissioning of the reactors, they will remain a huge liability that Ontario taxpayers will eventually have to pay for.

The trouble faced by Ontario Hydro's nuclear division infuses Canada's recent attempts to sell CANDU reactors with a rich vein of irony. We can't run our own reactors and yet we expect that poorer or less politically stable countries like Pakistan, Romania and Argentina will be able to manage.

BUT WHAT CAN CANADA actually do about this problem? In truth, not much.

The nuclear genie is out of its bottle now and so long as any single country possesses nuclear weapons, there will be other countries in line for them too. As perhaps the greatest catch-22 of them all, this situation will last as long as countries agree to distrust one another.

Timothy Scott, the fearless clean-up hitter and shortstop for the Kingston Mandarin, is affectionately known as the "Aurora Bomber."

bet you're looking foreward to getting back your GOWN DEPOSIT!

the people formerly referred to as cool.

We have some
'ideas'
for you to try.

the pub formerly queen's pub known as quiet

OPEN Tuesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Paris of the Prairies: (from left to right) Wide Mouth Mason's, Shaun Verreault, Safwan Javed, and Earl Pereira are shaking up the music world with their unique sound.

IT'S: A WIDE WORLD AFTER ALL

Saskatoon's Wide Mouth Mason are taking their sound across the continent, and on their way they stopped by the Hub to talk some music.

“HELLO,

this is what Shaun sounds like.”

“Hi, this is Earl, I don't know, just felt like something different.”

And after our coffees and cokes were served...

“Safwan has entered.”

Sitting back in a local K-town restaurant with Wide Mouth Mason before their April 24 appearance at A1's, one will notice the band's charming and endearing trio pumped with energy and excitement. It's an alluring world where a little bit of Hendrix, severe perseverance and fresh creativity take centre stage. The spotlight is bright and the recorder laps up the vibes of one of Canada's big hits.

The band has come a long way from a modest beginning of performing covers in small bars to opening for the Rolling Stones this past April and May. Wide Mouth Mason has ascended into a heightened musical stratosphere where they are making heads turn and ears concentrate on the sound. Their music resonates an intense youthful passion with glib focus. Critics describe the band's image and music as having a mature presence. And to many who listen to a Wide Mouth Mason song, there is an suspicion that perhaps the band is much older than the early twenty-something age bracket that the trio share.

Originating from Saskatoon, band members Shaun Verreault (vocals, guitar) and Safwan Javed (drums, vocals) grew up as elementary school friends. During high school and on the basketball court is when and where bassist Earl Pereira became the final piece to Wide Mouth Mason. After high school, Pereira and Javed decided to pursue post-secondary studies while Verreault focused on his musical endeavours. During this period, the band played as many gigs together as Pereira and Javed's school breaks allowed them to perform.

“It was all experience. It taught us a lot of what we know about winning over crowds and living on the road together,” explained Verreault. When school was done, the trio reunited and focused on their music.

Their first album was the 1996 independent release The Nazarene. “When we did the Nazarene, it was our first time ever recording in a studio together,” reminisced Verreault. “It was a very small, let's say, rustic barn in the middle of a farm in Alberta that used to be a chicken coop that became converted into a studio.” By the time the album had come out for public release, it was already a year old. At that point, the band had grown to be better singers and players. Realizing their progress, the trio decided to re-release The Nazarene earlier this year with improved versions of the originals.

The upcoming year is looking busy for the band. Their summer is filled with scheduled festival performances and presently they are working on songs for the late summer-early fall release of their new album.

But the past year has also been incredible for Wide Mouth Mason. Amidst the flurry of gigs, an invitation to the prestigious Montreux Jazz Festival had them sharing the same stage with their mentors and classic greats.

“It was an unbelievable experience. I was just there to see all our heroes play who we've always looked up to for so long and that was the best part. Then we realized ‘oh yeah, we've got to play too.’ I was nervous for the first time. First time in a long time” recalled Pereira.

Javed explained, “You've got to keep in mind, before we went on stage, it had been the very stage that had been home to some of the greatest musicians in the entire world.”

Shaun added, “The night after we was Van Morrison and Ray Charles playing together.”

Of course, the band has been doing some headlining of their own. They were invited to play SnowJob '98 in Whistler B.C. and showcased in Toronto's Canadian Music Week. Even when they crossed the border, our American counterparts have been nothing but impressed.

“I don't know what I was expecting, but it hasn't been as different as I thought it would be. And it made me realize that no matter where you go some people will like you and some people won't.” Verreault continued “But I don't think it has much to do with geography as it does where they are coming from musically. So we've had great responses in the States so far.”

As Wide Mouth Mason tours heavily their popularity grows feverishly. The number of websites dedicated to the trio constantly build. Verreault instantly expresses the band's gratitude toward their fans.

“If you could in your article please say thank you to all of them,” Verreault added with shining eyes, “that's amazing that they do that. I even look on there to find out stuff that I didn't know, like where we're going to be going. They had a quiz for a while. I would have failed. I didn't know Earl went to that elementary school.”

The band's humble devotion to their listeners is one of the characteristics that is appreciated by their fans. During many performances, the band stops in between their sets to acknowledge the people in the crowd who have helped put out the word on Wide Mouth Mason.

Another striking aspect of the band is their unique sound. Their music is a montage of blues, reggae, funk, jazz and rock. Among their influences are Jimi Hendrix, B.B. King, and Stevie Ray Vaughan. On the contemporary scale, bands like Radiohead, Del La Soul and Soundgarden are grabbing their attention. So, it is not surprising that fans and critics find it challenging to place Wide Mouth Mason into one genre, although their music has often been classified as “Urban Neo Blues.”

“We've been noted for many things,” laughed Javed. Pereira understands the difficulty when it comes to classification. “I think it's cool whatever people want to say because it's hard to describe. I mean, to have somebody whose trying to promote us to someone else going ‘hey you should listen to them’ and somebody says ‘what are they like?’. I don't know what'd you say. There's a lot of different music.”

So what do they classify themselves as?

“This sounds like a turfy answer, but I just classify us as Wide Mouth Mason. And that means all the things that the three like are somehow going to be in there and as we grow as musicians, hopefully it will even get more diverse,” explained Verreault. “And by saying that you are one thing, I think people might get more disappointed.”

So what stopped the band from falling into the conventional rock trap?

“See when we first started playing, and hopefully it's still that way today, I don't think we ever consciously discussed or even thought about what we wanted to sound like,” Javed explained “I think that's why a lot of people have a hard time classifying us or there are so many different genres that they put us in, because we listen to different stuff and we like a lot of different stuff. Rock is a weird word.”

Verreault jumped in, “That's the thing, originally Rock 'n Roll was like Chuck Berry and Bill Haley, and then rock got to mean everything from Alice Cooper to James Taylor, now it's just sort of all encompassing word like Saf said. Rock could mean everything from the Dave Matthews Band to Soundgarden.”

“To Beck?” offered Pereira.

“It might as well be called... music,” laughed Verreault.

By LILIAN KIM

ROTATE THIS!

It Got Game

Public Enemy scores with soundtrack

CD review: He Got Game

By GREGORY DOLE

Stop, what's that sound? Film-maker Spike Lee and the vast marketing machine has revived hip-hop's true group, Public Enemy. Chuck D, Flavour Flav and Terminator X have laid down some new beats with their soundtrack for the feature film He Got Game.

Public Enemy does not sell out the political style that called 911 a joke.

You might very well be living under a rock if you haven't already heard the soundtrack theme "He Got Game," with the inspiring Buffalo Springfield "For what it's worth" guitar riff. The very line "stop children, what's that sound, everybody look what's goin' down" was as applicable in the '60s as it is today. Public Enemy's album takes shots at corporate America and the game behind the game of the National Basketball Association.

Public Enemy does not sell out the political style that called 911 a joke. The assembly of rap artists makes an assault on the music that hasn't been produced in rap music's Puff Daddy-era. "Unstoppable" features the genre's forefather KRS-One on the mic. Flavour Flav steps back into the rap scene with track four's "Shake Your Booty." Clearly made for it's MTV airplay potential, Flav displays his master 'toasting' style that made PE unique in the '80s. Chuck D booms on track six "House of the Rising Son," to a sample of The Who's "Won't Get Fooled Again."

And how can you rap about basketball without discussion of the athletic shoe. "Politics of the Sneaker Pimps" rips the manufacturers, rapping about the shoe-making sweatshops in Asia. With PE, nothing is sacred. They call basketball the new slave trade, proving that PE is still keeping it real after all these years.

Alfie's Wild Weekend
THURSDAY
FRIDAY
SATURDAY

GO UNDERGROUND

ALFIE'S PUB

ALFIE'S ONLINE

HTTP://WWW.AMS.QUEENSU.CA/ALFIES

the original CLARK live music pub

Every WEDNESDAY is

Roots Rock & Reggae

Jon Coakley
 in Bug Daddy and the Shack

Clever Hans

SMARTER & MORE ATTRACTIVE

Wednesday, May 27
 at

CLARK

Get Out There!

Movies:

Playing at the Capitol Theatre from Friday May 22 to Thursday May 28
 546-5395
 (Evening shows only on Monday, Wednesday, and Thursday)

The Horse Whisperer 8:00, 8:30
 Quest for Camelot 7:10
 Titanic 8:15
 Deep Impact 7:00, 7:30, 9:50, 10:10
 Good Will Hunting 9:30
 City of Angels 7:15, 10:00

Playing at the Catabaqui Cineplex from Friday, May 22 to Thursday, May 28
 389-7442

Sliding Doors 7:20, 9:40
 Bulworth (No Passes) 6:40, 9:10
 Godzilla (No Passes) 6:00, 6:30, 7:10, 7:50, 9:30, 10:10
 Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas (No Passes) 7:00, 10:00

Playing at the Princess Court Cinema from Friday, May 22 to Thursday, May 28:
 546-3456

No Looking Back 7:00, 9:00

Super Flicks and Food from Friday May 22 to Thursday May 28
 542-6080

Lost in Space 7:00
 The Big Hit 9:25

The Grand Theatre:
 530-2050

Kingston Dance Recital, Saturday, May 30 at 7:00 pm and Sunday, May 31 at 2:30 pm
 $10 for Adults
 $6 for Children

The Nylons perform on June 4 at 8:00 pm
 27.50 per person

Visual Art:

Edward Day Gallery
 253 Ontario St.
 547-0774

May 29 at 8:00pm
 One women show titled Emily Speaks

May 18 through June 7
 Display of the artwork of Lon Richards, Pierre Henry and Raymond Warren

Radio:

CFRC FM:
 545-2121

CFRC's new summer hours
 Weekdays: Noon-3am
 Weekends: 8:00 am -3am

The Waterloo Centre for Applied Linguistics Inc.

Certificate Program in Teaching English as a Second Language

(Part-time or Intensive)

Learn how to Teach ESL to Adults

- at community colleges and universities
- for school boards
- in community programs
- in business and industry
- overseas

For information:
 Janet Stubbs, TESL Program Director
 The Waterloo Centre for Applied Linguistics Inc.
 561 Sugarbush Crive, Waterloo, Ontario N2K 1Z9
 (519) 725-9070 fax (519) 725-3644

IN K-TOWN FOR THE SUMMER?

The Journal needs writers for News, Op-Ed, Sports, A&E, Features, MiSC. and now Science for its summer issues.

Call the Journal House at 545-2800

www.congratulations.on.your.recent.graduation

that after graduation you will move away from Kingston and be far from Queen's University and the Campus Bookstore. We would like to let you know that even if you are not around the corner anymore you can still drop by and visit us in just a minute or two, anytime of the year. Our award winning web site is open 24 hours a day, seven days a week. It has many great features that you might want to try.

Gifts And Clothing

At the Campus Bookstore we carry a wide variety of Queen's clothing and gifts, including T-shirts, sweatshirts, hats, jackets, school rings and many other items that make great gifts for graduates, friends and family. Many of these items are on our site with detailed descriptions and pictures.

Searchable Indexes Of All Titles In The Store:

If you are interested in a particular book you can find out if it is here at the store, and if so how much it might cost. Our database is searchable by title, author, publishers and ISBN. If we don't have it in stock we can get it for you at no extra charge. Once we receive the title we can ship it to you as quickly and cost effectively as possible.

Bestsellers Lists:

We regularly discount all the titles on the Globe And Mail bestsellers list by 25%. You can find the most recent list on our site.

Current And Upcoming Events:

Find out about special sales and events that will be happening at the store and on the site.

www.campusbookstore.com

owned and operated by students since 1909

Summer concert mania heating up

What's hot or not on the Canadian festival circuit

By STEFAN MURRAY

At this time of year we begin to witness the shedding of parkas, the return of our geese and an astounding influx of the thing that summer was created for, live music.

Yes, the big-wigs that organize and promote concerts realize we have been confined to our homes during the winter and are itching to break free of the cabin-fever. As a result, the four months that we can actually wear shorts in this country is so saturated with events and festivals that one could not physically or financially attend them all. So many choices, so little coin.

Loser: Aerosmith $50 a ticket! Gimmee a break.

Because of this it is only fair that the concert-goers are given a fair assessment of what to expect this summer, the losers to avoid, and the winners to flock to.

Winner: Edgfest. The current longest-running cross-Canada tour beefs itself up this summer with arguably its best line-up ever. The Foo Fighters and Green Day are scheduled to headline the event which will take place in Molson Park in Barrie on July 1st and in Ottawa's Lansdowne Park later in the month, both only a three hour drive from K-town. The festival also displays commendable Canadian content as Sloan, The Tea Party, and Moist will perform on the main stage. The best feature of Edgfest is the price. While some concerts will cost a fan insane prices for a single act, (see Aerosmith below) tickets for Edgfest, which has two stages and over 10 bands, run from 25 to 35 bucks.

Winner: Tibetan Freedom concert. Although the only scheduled date for this festival is in Washington D.C (a mere 12 hour drive), the concert boasts perhaps the greatest modern rock lineup in recent memory. RFK stadium will welcome Pearl Jam, R.E.M., Radiohead, Dave Matthews Band, The Wallflowers, and Beck as part of a 27-band, 2-day extravaganza. The festival is worthwhile not only for the impressive talent collected but also for its cause, which is to raise money to free Tibet from the Chinese dictatorship it is confined by. Overall, a winner.

Sloan's Chris Murphy will rock at the cross Canada Edgfest this summer.

PHOTO BY BRENT DAVIS

Winner: Lilith Fair. The all-female concert which made its debut last year and concentrates most of its show dates in the U.S., shows loyalty to its Canadian fans by scheduling two shows in Toronto's Molson Amphitheatre on August 15 and 16 as well as an Ottawa show in Lansdowne park on August 14. The festival includes some remarkable talent including Sarah McLachlan and Natalie Merchant, making the $30 ticket cost a bargain.

Winner: The Verve. They are one of the biggest summer winners for 3 reasons. 1) Urban Hymns hailed as one of the best albums of the year. 2) The band decided to forgo many higher-profile venues in Toronto for their only Ontario date, to display their talent in a stadium better suited for quality sound and live music; Hamilton's Copps Coliseum. 3) Tickets are only 25 bucks. Appearing with Massive Attack on July 31.

Loser: Vans Warped Tour. One of the most original and fun events to hit North American venues during the 1990s has confirmed punk two shows in Toronto's Molson Amphitheatre on August 15 and 16 as well as an Ottawa show in Lansdowne park on August 14. The festival includes some remarkable talent including Sarah McLachlan and Natalie Merchant, making the $30 ticket cost a bargain.

Loser: Aerosmith, $50 a ticket! Gimmee a break.

Loser: Lollapalooza. The music fan need not consider Lollapalooza this year because the icon of alternative music and culture was cancelled due to lack of interest. Bands refused to perform and many people felt lukewarm about the entire event. One of the best and most-anticipated summer festival simply could not make people care. Meanwhile, The Spice Girls sell out the Molson Amphitheatre in under an hour.

So there you have it. You now know what to throw your bucks at. But act fast. When the geese go south, the music follows.

ELECTROLYSIS
Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely. Experienced electrolysis. Recommended by Physicians.

HARRISON SALON
Kingston Since 1959
Free Consultation
Call 542-5595

City Sports
228 PRINCESS STREET (at Clergy), KINGSTON, ONT. Phone 542-4415
RACQUET & RUNNING SPECIALISTS

New arrivals of swimwear by Nike, Speedo, Tyr	Great selection of tennis racquets by Head Wilson
Queen's Russell shorts on sale	Clothing by Nike, Adidas, Fila, Umbro, Puma on sale
Golf Accessories: Gloves, balls, bags, putters, certs

TEAMS • FLOORS • CLUBS • FACILITIES
JACKETS • T-SHIRTS • RUGBY JERSEYS • GOLF SHIRTS • SWEATS
Baseball/Football/Hockey Jerseys • Custom Cresting at Very Special Prices!

DARBAR
Exotic Indian Cuisine

25% off STUDENTS ONLY
Please ask your server about details.

Expires June 30/98
Coupon is limited only for dine-in, a la carte menu

479 PRINCESS @ UNIVERSITY AVE. 548-7053

South Pacific Trailfinders

'Odyssey Travel is your South Pacific Travel Expert'

✓ Oz/Kiwi Experience	Long Reach $1959 via Europe, Asia
✓ VIP Backpackers	Coral Route $2099 via South Pacific
✓ YHA Cards	Boomerang $1809 via Asia
✓ Air passes	Circle Pacific $2499 via South Pacific, Asia
✓ Bus/Rail passes	Aussie Special $1499
✓ Computer visas
✓ Tours-Connections, Contiki, Trek

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
186 Princess St., Kingston (at Montreal)
Leisure Travel 549-3553 Long Haul/Group Travel 549-3561
Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

WINDMILLS CAFÉ RESTAURANT

Welcome Queen's grads and family

Kingston's Ultimate Casual Dining Experience

184 PRINCESS ST. Downtown Kingston! 544-3948

Maximum testosterone

Men's magazine delivers a masculine message

Magazine review

MAXIM
Dennis Publishers

By SARAH CROSBIE

Tanned, toned, glistening flesh. Tussled hair. Wild eyes and alluring lips. It's the image captured on every magazine cover in the summertime. Sex sells.

Which is probably the reason Maxim's magazine cover boasts a beautiful blonde bombshell. Except it wasn't the model who captured my eye as I strolled past rows of magazines, searching for something to peak my interest. It was two tiny words, "For Men."

Why for men? Magazines such as Cosmopolitan and Vogue don't have a "For Women" stamped across the front for a reason: both sexes read them. Males do read fashion magazines. They may not admit it, but it's a great source for advice, fashion and sexual reference and if nothing else, a quick peek at exposed erect body parts.

The restriction "For Men" is unfortunate because many women may pass this magazine by and never discover that it is full of intriguing, fun and interesting, obscure articles.

In the "Says Her" story, a female writer provides suggestions and personal insight on how to turn guys' threesome fantasies into realities.

Articles on the latest lip balm or hottest bathing suit styles are available everywhere, but where else will you find an article on, "Fun Things To Do After You Die"? Thinking a traditional burial isn't really your style? The article provides ideas and contact numbers on different ways to dispose of your remains. For those hunting lovers, unbelievably, you can have your ashes loaded into shotgun shells and fired at the wildlife of your choice, or perhaps if you're more of a computer lover, you can have a computer screen installed into your tombstone with 256 pages of pictures and text.

Another article, "Ask and Ye Shall Receive For Less," explores whether haggling tactics that tourists use in places like Mexico can also work in Starbucks coffee shops, McDonalds, Drug Stores, Hair Salons, and even in hospitals for hernia surgery.

Not every article is written by men either. In the "Says Her" story, a female writer provides suggestions and personal insight on how to turn guys' threesome fantasies into realities.

Maxim, "For Men" definitely has its stereotypical male components, however. The sultry blond on the cover is a good start, along with articles on the NBA's bad boys, the newest concept cars, Grill-Zilla, the best of best barbecues, and the male survivor of an alligator attack.

There is a definite male slant within the alligator article because after describing his fight, survival and healing from the physically and emotionally draining attack, the author states, "I certainly got some sympathy sex out of the story. I'm thinking of getting myself bitten by a shark next."

In my opinion, the "For Men" label is tacked on to let men know it's a manly magazine, presumably filled with testosterone. If the label doesn't attract the male readers, then perhaps the six words, framing the top of the magazine will: Sex, Sports, Beer, Gadgets, Clothes, Fitness.

Maxim won't be able to piece back together your relationship by expert column advice nor will it provide great fashion tips, but it does have interesting articles as well as small, unique features on the best summer blender beverages, strange foreign foods, pretend job profiles (which males can use to impress women), and how to deliver a baby.

The strength of Maxim is in the articles. Don't buy it if you're wondering what bathing suits are hot this season. Overall, it's a read-through magazine, not a flip-through magazine, with a definite male edge...but then again, it is "For Men."

A&E

in brief

COMMON DISASTER: Actor Charle Sheen was released from a California hospital on Friday, after overdosing on an undisclosed drug

I THINK I GAINES: Award winners in the Cannes Film Festival will be announced on Sunday. In all, 22 films are competing.

DINO-SOAR: Godzilla trampled the competition at the box-office this week. The giant lizard movie raked in 12.5 million dollars in its first two days of release

Need Food? We can help.

The AMS food bank is open Tuesdays and Fridays, 4-6 p.m. all summer.

272 Earl Street (between University and Division)
545-6972 • foodbank@ams.queensu.ca

June 28 to August 30 1998

Kingston Summer Festival

THE GRAND THEATRE

Holly Cole June 28
Barachois June 29
Imlanji KaNtu Choral Society of Sawela June 30
Leahy (with Bruce Guthra) July 2
Joe Sealy & Mally Johnson July 5
Theatre Smith-Gilmour: In the Wings of Eden July 8
Purit a Baroque: Bach Meets Cape Breton July 15
The Second City July 17
The King's Singers July 25
Gina Quilica July 28
A CHORUS LINE July 31 - August 16
Susan Aglukark August 7
Linda McRae August 19
Larne Elliott August 21
The Kingdom of the Saguenay August 27-30

BABY GRAND STUDIO
How To Eat Like A Child July 16-26
FROGBOG! August 5-15
Spinning Yarns August 5-15

FORT HENRY
Repercussion Theatre: Midsummer Night's Dream July 23
Macbeth July 24

Box Office: 530-2050
e-mail: kingfest@istar.ca
Web Site: kingstonfestival.com

Kingston Summer Festival at The Grand Theatre, 218 Princess Street, Kingston K7L 1B2

COMEDY • THEATRE • MUSIC

Kinnear d'Esterre

Lady's and Men's Queen's rings in 10kt gold, enameled die struck and hand engraved prices starting from $175.

Clip this advertisement and save $15.00 towards the purchase of your Queen's ring (one coupon per purchase)

168 Princess Street
Downtown Kingston 546-2261

See our Queen's rings on the Web...
<http://www.canlink.com/kde>

YOU START HERE

LOOKIN' AT THE BEGINNIN'

WONDER IF ANYONE remembers bad beginnings. Bad endings sure, everyone can name a few of those; the final episode of Seinfeld for instance. A ton of people went on about how it fell short of their expectations. Few remember the pilot though, which wasn't that great either. It seems that nobody cares how something starts so long as it ends well. Everyone loved The Exorcist because it had some classic moments like head-turning and vomiting, rosey language and peeing. Most importantly, people 'dug' it because it had a wicked ending. This, despite the fact the first half-hour consists entirely of some old man wondering around the middle east who gets frightened by a cart.

What in the hell my good friend, what in the hell!

Let's imagine, together, that when you get up in the morning the first thing you like to do is eat a big bowl of Lucky Charms. Let's also imagine that during the night your house-mate, in a fit of pure self-gratification, ate each and every tasty, brightly-coloured marshmallow in the box. You don't mention it, there's no time, you force yourself to down those ooty bitter bits and your day starts out on a bad note. Suppose the rest of the day goes really well: on unexpectedly high mark comes back (if you're at school), you make an unexpectedly high amount of tips (if you work), you successfully flirt with your good-looking classmate/professor/co-worker/employer, whatever. You go to bed thinking 'wow, what an altogether great day'. Now, stretching the limits of our fancy, let's imagine that the reverse happens: it rains, you have no umbrella and your attractive classmate/co-worker etc. refuses to allow you to share theirs, you make no tips, you fail an assignment, someone left toothpaste scum in the sink. You go to bed thinking 'what a completely horrible day, I wish my smug marshmallow-filled house-mate were dead.' The point being, nobody remembers a crappy beginning unless there's a crappy ending too. The Bible illustrates this point. Any good Christian who knows they're going to Heaven in the end undoubtedly thinks that God made all the right moves; but those who are pretty sure they're ending up in hell are only too quick to point out that all it took was a talking snake to permanently mess up the whole human race. It seems that as long as things end up okay, it doesn't really matter much how they begin. For example, everyone agrees that film is a pretty decent medium; there have been some great things done with it. How many people honestly care that the pornography industry was the driving force during the pioneering stages of its development? No one, that's who. Consider the future of virtual reality and the internet. In twenty or so years from now, will it matter that some of the earliest and most important advances in interactive technology were made by pornographers? Probably not.

THE SIGNIFICANCE of beginnings is so often negligible. It's like flicking on the T.V. and coming across a movie that's already half over. If it seems interesting enough, you leave it on. If it gets good, you watch it to the end. When you tell a friend you saw a great movie last night you're being totally sincere even though you never caught the beginning. Titanic could've been a lot shorter and far less expensive if James Cameron had just admitted to himself that because people were going to go to see a) the ship sink and/or b) Leonardo DiCaprio, neither of which appear at the beginning, he should scrap the entire first half-hour.

Consider all those snappy quotes from famous wits such as Oscar Wilde, whose last words - said on his deathbed in on poorly decorated hotel room - were: "either this wallpaper goes or I do." Nobody remembers any of the first few witty things he said. In fact, for all we know he might've started out in social circles as a dullard. Maybe it article, where the most interesting and thought-provoking stuff is supposed to go. And yet, if I hadn't written the beginning, nothing would've made sense and everyone would've hated it. It's seems to be a big ol' catch-22. But it doesn't have to be.

Give beginnings the love they deserve, you'll be glad that you did.

HERE'S THE SOLUTION: Let's all try to appreciate beginnings a little bit more. Think of the last good movie you saw or book that you read. What was the very first image the director tried to grab your with? What was the author's focus in that opening passage? If you can't remember how it all started, go out and rent or read it again. Or what about that song you keep hearing on the radio, the one you mumble or hum or just nod your head to until the chorus comes of which point you belt out those four lines like you knew the whole thing. Stop lying to yourself. Figure out how it starts. And a healthy appreciation for beginnings doesn't have to stop there. You might try to make paying attention to them one of your life philosophies. Don't just stop and smell the roses, watch them burst through the soil (being only a metaphor, chances are this would be a sucky activity). Anticipate and savour that first blast of whatever it is like the guy in those old Ocean Spray commercials. Trust me, you'll be just as refreshed.

By Ken Bulford

CRAP IN THE CORNER

Oprah's Current Recommended Read:

Breath, Eyes, Memory by Edwidge Danticat

Today's 'Peanuts' Punchline:

C.B.: I forgot to tell them to save me the last waltz.

Today's Charles Schultz Senility Rating:

4 (out of 10, 1 being funny-senile, 10 being creepy-senile)

Matt Damon Watch:

Current Girlfriend - Winona Ryder (ALLEGED)

Eyes - Still Blue

Number of Times 'Body Count' is Mentioned in the song 'Body Count' by 'Body Count' from the album 'Body Count':

how they

THE JOURNAL

EXTRA

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY

1873

TUESDAY, JUNE 2, 1998

Need Food? We can help. The AMS food bank is open Mondays and Thursdays, 4-6 pm all summer. 272 East Street • 545-6972 foodbank@ams-queensu.ca

Assault on campus

Queen's staff member assaulted, nearly abducted on her way to work

By LAURA MACINNIS

At 3:30 a.m. last Tuesday night, a Queen's staff member became a victim of assault and attempted abduction while walking across campus to her late-night custodial shift.

This is the account of the incident, as reported to The Journal by Louise Fish, director of Campus Security.

"God knows what his motivations were."

— Campus Security Director Louise Fish

A man approached the victim at the corner of Division Street and University Avenue, and asked her for directions to Kingston General Hospital, saying his brother had died. The victim stopped and told him how to get to the hospital, then kept walking on her way to a late-night shift at the Old Medical Building.

The man followed her down Campus Road, past Clark Hall Pub and Jackson Hall, and tried to engage her in conversation about his brother. When she got to the Old Medical Building, she turned to him and said, "alright, goodbye" and opened the door. He then pushed her inside the building and assaulted her.

He pulled out an orange club-like weapon which Fish believes may have been a large, heavy flashlight. The assailant waved the weapon over her head, threatening to knock her unconscious if she tried to scream or run away.

He grabbed her by the arm and marched her to his car, a small maroon or red vehicle, parked on Union Street in front of Jock Hartly Arena.

At the car, he told her to get in through the driver's side door and slide over to the passenger seat. He let go of her hand for a moment to let her into the car and she broke free from him, screaming loudly.

The assailant was very startled by her screaming, and became visibly shaken. He told her to run, then got into the car and drove away, leaving her alone on the street. The victim ran into the JDUC and called Campus Security on an emergency phone. Both Security and the Kingston Police department responded to her call.

The assailant remains unidentified, but is described as a 6'0" clean-shaven caucasian, 35 to 45 years old, with short light/greyish blond hair, clear complexion, slim-medium build, wearing a dark green cloth jacket, tan shorts and black sandals with no socks.

"As far as I know, she has not changed her working schedule."

— Campus Security spokesperson Sue Wagar

"We're trying to identify this fellow," said Fish. "Besides the description, which is quite a good one, there's not a lot to go on."

Kingston Police Constable Mike Schultz said investigators are very concerned about the incident. "It's being viewed as a very serious matter," he said. "It's got them quite concerned."

Campus Security spokesperson Sue Wagar said the nature of the crime is very troubling. "It's very difficult to tell if it's a stalking, where he had been purposely planning it, or if it is an individual who had done this on numerous occasions, and this is his motive," she said. "It's very scary for the community."

Fish said the man may have come to campus after one of the local bars closed. "He did smell of alcohol," she said. "God knows what his motivations were."

Security patrollers have been instructed to report any small red or maroon cars parked on or around campus late at night.

Fish does not plan to increase the frequencies of patrols in response to the incident. "Usually, the university is very, very quiet," she said. "We have patrols out every night."

"We're two buildings away from where it happened... we were able to respond very quickly," she added.

A student stands in the spot where a staff member narrowly escaped abduction last Tuesday night.

PHOTO BY JODY SUGRUE

Many Queen's staff members work night shifts. Fish said custodians often come into work in the early hours of the morning to clean campus buildings. Trades people and researchers also tend to work late into the night.

Wagar said the victim of the

"Usually, the university is very, very quiet."

— Campus Security Director Louise Fish

May 26 assault continues to work her night-time shifts. "As far as I know, she has not changed her working schedule," she said.

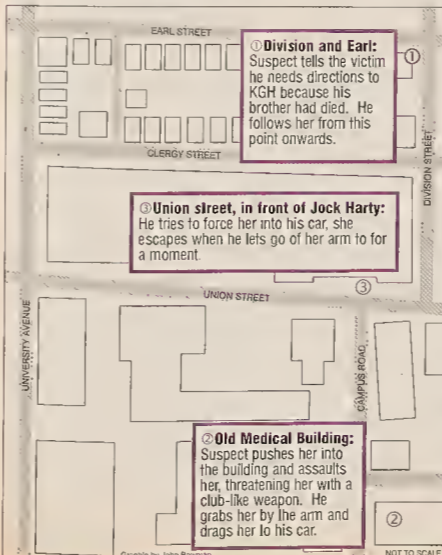

Both Fish and Wagar suggested that persons walking alone at night consider using the Walkhome service or the Campus Security escort service. "It's important for people to know that if they have to walk around campus late at night, say to get to their parked car, we will escort them," said Fish.

Fish also cited the Lone Employee Program as an option for people working alone at night. Employees working alone at night or on holidays and weekends can request to have Campus Security check in on them during their shifts and escort them to their car after work. "Give us a call, we'll drop by," she said.

"People need to know what the dangers are around here," said Fish. She urges anyone who sees someone matching the description of the assailant to contact Campus Security.

"Don't approach him — he's already threatened violence," she said. "But if you do see him, let us know."

Campus Security gets overhaul

New emphasis on communication designed to improve image

BY LAURA MACINNIS

Students wanting to know what's been happening on campus can now access detailed security reports and statistics on the Campus Security Web site.

Under the guidance of its new director, Louise Fish, Campus Security has started making incident reports public. The reports are posted on the Web, and major alerts are also posted up around campus.

Queen's security stats

Totals from November 1, 1997 to May 8, 1998

Phone calls made to Campus Security, in selected categories

Sexual assault	2
Common Assault	4
Intimidation	3
Uttering Threats	3
Harassment by Telephone	15
Criminal Harassment	3
Sexual Harassment	8
Hate Incident	9
Missing Person	13
Suspicious Person	123
Panic Phone	11

Campus Security Web site
www.queensu.ca/security/

"We post any item that we feel is of general interest to the Queen's community, especially those which pose a threat," said Fish. "We include as much information as we can without compromising people's personal privacy."

"We're getting the information out as well as we can," said Fish, who says she is committed to "letting people know what's going on, and what they can do to reduce the risks."

This is one of the many changes planned for Campus Security, a service which came under fire last year after an external review, initiated by Queen's Vice-Principal John Cowan, highlighted problems of accessibility, training, and public relations with staff and students. Fish came from Royal Military College to replace Tom Morrow as director of Campus Security on May 1. She is aware of the troubles plaguing Campus Security, and speaks candidly about the many projects in the works to renew the image and efficiency of the service. "We are certainly addressing it," she said.

The training program for patrol officers and supervisors is being re-vamped to include a focus on human rights and legal liability issues. Fish hopes the more intensive program will help officers "relate to visible minorities and other groups."

Efforts have also been made to strike a gender balance within the service. "The powers that be, John [Cowan, Queen's vice-principal] and Tom [Morrow, executive assistant to V-P Cowan], have made a conscious effort to hire women," said Fish.

She said five of the 12 full-time staff are women, and two of the five supervisors are women. Cowan has initiated a security advisory council, which will bring together students, staff and administration to discuss campus safety issues.

Fish said the council will help Campus Security "adjust ourselves to the needs of the Queen's community."

Fish also emphasized the use of Campus Security as a resource body. "It's more than just a break-up-the-fight kind of service," she said. "If you need any help, give us a call... Even if we're not the right people, we'll put you in touch with the right people."

Fish is pleased with the work Security patrollers are doing, striking "a nice balance between approachability and professionalism." She hopes changes to training and hiring practices plus a more public presence on campus will enhance the reputation and quality of the service.

Louise Fish, director of Queen's Campus Security.

"We're doing our best, and hopefully putting a fresh face on Security," she said.

Useful Phone Numbers

Campus Security	545-6733
AMS Walkhome Service	545-2662
Sexual Assault Crisis Centre	545-6424
Telephone Aid Line Kingston	544-1771
Human Rights Office	545-6886
Sexual Harassment Advisor	545-6095
Anti-Racism Respondent Advisor	545-6218
University Grievance Advisor	545-6095
Student Counselling Services	545-2893

Live life, act safe, pay attention

LILIAN KIM

"Hello, may I get a walk home please?"

A simple sentence uttered by many. It's highly uncomplicated. Just pick up the phone, dial the required number and wait for two kind students to take you to your destination. Easy.

But it's 12:30 a.m. and I'm tired. My day was painfully long, nothing went right and all I want to do is crash. I saunter down the hall with a heavy heart, oblivious to the several phones within my reach. My destination is home, and getting there quickly is key. So I leave alone.

K-town looks innocently calm at night. It's warm outside and a nice breeze curls around me, instigating sweet thoughts of deep sleep.

But then all of the sudden it becomes instantly cold. The breeze turns to a strong wind and catches my throat. My mind forgets about the hard day and focuses on the sudden threat. At this point, I wish I was sleeping. My eyes are wide and my heart is hammering in my ears. Everything is quick, the nanoseconds feel like years and I'm scared. I realize something is about to happen to me that I had only read about happening to other people.

As I breath heavily, I remember watching the news on channel three and thinking "thank god, that wasn't me!" and picking up the newspaper, tears welling in my eyes for Toronto's third assault victim of the new year. But now I feel as if I'm watching someone else live their life on television. I know it's different. The camera is really looking at me. The lights are too hot and I don't want to be here.

That's how I think I would feel if I were assaulted. I really don't know, because I can only read about what other people have gone through. It makes me sad and frightened. So many of us are reminded by housemates, boyfriends, friends, colleagues and even our parents: "Call Walkhome, okay?" But sometimes defiance overrules rationality. Hey, I can do it myself. I can get home without any problems. It's the '90s. We're at Queen's... it's safe.

But the recent campus incidents involving violent assault should make people stop and think. How could it happen at Queen's? It wasn't part of the university life package that was given to us when we chose to attend Queen's.

During my last year of high school, a very prestigious and well known politician spoke to my OAC class as part of a series of speeches to prepare us for our future endeavours. Although we expected the usual blah...blah about how "university changed my life" and the "go get 'em tigers" speech, we ended up getting something more than we bargained for.

The speaker's voice gradually became emotional, but with a controlled strength that could only come from years of understanding and self-reflexivity, she told us that as a young woman she had been violated. She explained that while the memories would always haunt her, she had also learned from the experience. It was hard, but she never gave up.

We could sit here and say damn to everything. We could blame the system, the establishment, someone, something at least. But it's difficult and sometimes it's therapeutic to forget. Blaming someone, however, won't ensure our safety in the future. Unfortunately, no one has the one definite answer that will stop every bad thing from happening again.

Generally we are compelled to feel safe here at Queen's. But people need to be aware of the dangers that do exist in our community. While picking up the phone can be a life-saving act, paying attention is just as crucial.

THE JOURNAL

1873

Looking for a great job?

Applications are still being accepted for:

Op-Ed Editor
Advertising Manager
Sales Representative

Applications are due on Friday, June 10, at 2 p.m. Application forms are available at 272 Earl Street. Those interested in applying are encouraged to call Tara or Keith, editors-in-chief, at 545-2800. Or drop us an email at journal@post.queensu.ca

APPLY NOW!

exchange
CDs Pubwear Texts Crafts Books & Stuff

2ND FLOOR JDUC 545-2120

open
11 - 4
All Summer

GET YOUR SUMMER TEXTS NOW!

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF Keith Gerlein Tara Mansbridge	ASSISTANT A&E EDITORS Sarah Crosbie Lillian Kim	GRAPHICS EDITOR Janice Chan
MANAGING EDITOR Laura MacInnis	FEATURES EDITOR Sean Springer	THE READER EDITOR Jesse Craig Belringer
NEWS EDITOR Fiona Stevenson	OP-ED EDITOR Vacant	SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT John Bowman
ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS Shawn Brimley Kristen Glazer Renée Huang	SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR Adam Kaminsky	MAGAZINE-SUPPLEMENT EDITORS Elizabeth Frogley Shandley McMurray
EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR Paul Heisler	EDITOR Robert MacNeil	PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS Alex Kronby James Terjanian
ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR Stefan Murray	MISC. EDITOR Ken Butland	WEB EDITOR Marco Lui

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER Claudia Kraft	ADVERTISING MANAGER Vacant	SYSTEMS MANAGER James Clarke
SALES REPRESENTATIVES Andrew Cooke Kristian Li Vacant	ADVERTISING DESIGNERS Katherine Colbourn Annie Ge

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL
Tuesday, June 2, 1998 • Extra • Volume 126

The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers. Contents © 1998 by the Queen's Journal; all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Goss Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Gananoque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions. Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2H8. Telephone—editorial: 613-545-2800 advertising: 613-545-6711 Fax: 613-545-6728 Email: journal@post.queensu.ca Internet: <http://www.journal.queensu.ca> Circulation 2,000 Issue 2 will be published on Tuesday, June 30, 1998.

WALKHOME IS OPEN!

9 P.M. - 1 A.M.

WALKHOME WILL BE OPEN EVERY NIGHT UNTIL THE END OF SUMMER COURSES! WE ARE LOCATED IN THE INFOBANK THROUGHOUT THE SUMMER, WHICH IS ON THE LOWER LEVEL OF THE JDUC. SO IF YOU WOULD LIKE A TEAM TO ACCOMPANY YOU ON A WALK BETWEEN ANY TWO POINTS WITHIN OUR BOUNDARIES, JUST GIVE US A CALL ANY TIME BETWEEN 9 P.M. - 1 A.M. AND WE'LL BE THERE WITH A SMILE!

545-2662

WE WOULD ALSO LIKE TO THANK OUR SPONSORS: TORDIFF COMMUNICATIONS FOR THEIR RADIO SUPPORT, AND CYCLEPATH FOR OUR SIX PEUGOT BICYCLES!

CYCLEPATH
239 PRINCE ST.
KINGSTON, ONTARIO K7L 1B7
549-1616

COLOUR COPIES
FAXING
DESIGN
milton

P&CC
MASTERS OF
ARTIFICIAL REPRODUCTION

Monday to Friday 10-4

Closed Weekends

545-6543

The centre of the lower JDUC

545-0350

City Sports
Racket and Running Specialists
289 Princess St. (at Clergy)
(813) 542-4415

THE JOURNAL

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
General Travel: 549-3553
Long Haul / Groups: 549-3561

SINCE 1873

For skateboarders Jeremy Payne (left) and Fernando Cordeiro the new signs on campus are a crime.

PHOTO BY PAUL HESLER

Skateboarders told to keep off campus

BY LAURA MACINNIS

Kingston skateboarders are no longer welcome to practice their tricks on Queen's property. New signs posted around campus give skaters a clear message: stay away.

"We just decided to post them because of the concern from staff and students," said Campus Security spokesperson Sue Wagar.

Wagar said skateboarders who lose control of their boards in the entrances, wheelchair ramps and stairs in front of Queen's buildings can be dangerous.

"It does pose a safety concern for the pedestrians," she said. "There have been some near-misses."

Wagar said another reason that Queen's hopes to keep away skateboarders is the property damage that skateboards cause to the limestone stairs around campus.

"It's making everything rounded," said Wagar. "They are doing damage to the property itself."

The signs do not represent a new policy on skateboarding, but simply a more public display of Queen's disapproval.

"We've always asked skateboarders not to skate on our property. This is just re-emphasizing that," she said.

Ryan Cooper, 11, said skaters should be allowed on campus after-hours. "They should let us skate there after 7 [p.m.] because there's no one there at night," he said, adding, "I think Queen's Security sucks."

Queen's Principal Bill Leggett joked that the "no skateboarding" message may not be enough to make an impact.

"I haven't seen [a sign] yet," Leggett said, adding, "As we speak three skateboarders are going by outside of my office, so they obviously haven't seen them either."

Fernando Cordeiro, 17, said the campus ban means skaters have few places to go to practice their moves. "There's not that many places to skateboard in Kingston beside Queen's," he said.

However, Wagar said a new skateboarding park is being made on Montreal Street which should provide an alternative place for skaters to hone their skills.

— With files from Tara Mansbridge and Sean Springer

Services end year with $88,179 loss

BY FIONA STEVENSON

The Alma Mater Society's Corporate Services lost $88,179 last year, almost $68,000 more than they anticipated in their preliminary budgets. The loss is up from a $62,806 loss in 1996-97 and a $19,866 loss the year before.

The UBS Exchange ran up the biggest deficit of all AMS services last year, with a net loss of $52,306. This figure is more than twice the loss the UBS anticipated in its original 1997-98 budget, and much higher than its 1996-97 loss.

"We weren't surprised when we lost money last year," said UBS manager Vanessa Gruben. "When the decision was made to move the UBS, they did so thinking the Exchange would lose money over the next three years."

Gruben emphasized the store's gross revenue increased substantially last year, adding, "We will be losing less next year."

"We're trying to even the business a bit over the year," Gruben explained. The store will be stocked with more merchandise and the fiction and reference books sections will be expanded.

The Publishing and Copy Centre was the biggest money-maker of the AMS services last year, gaining $23,455. However, this figure represents a significant drop from the previous year's $62,209 net gain.

P&CC's manager, Greg Blackett attributed last year's lower net gain to reduced prices for a number of the store's services. "We did more business than we ever did before, but because we reduced prices we made less money," he said.

"There's no magic formula that's been established by anyone for each service."

— Owen Minns, AMS media and services director

Blackett said the decision to reduce prices was based on meeting students' needs. "It was an attempt to say, 'Well, our prices are too high for students. Let's drop them a bit.'"

Prices are not expected to change for next year. "The most important change

Please see Service managers on page 4

Laptops not required

BY FIONA SCANNELL

Incoming Comm '02 students will not be required to lease laptops from Queen's, despite the decision last year to make laptops mandatory in Commerce.

The School of Business initially planned to implement the mandatory leasing of laptops on the condition that the extra $1,400 could be claimed by students as part of their tuition tax credit. To qualify for the credit, all students would have had to purchase the designated computers.

In order for students to receive tax breaks and use their computer purchases as deductibles, the computer fee would have been charged with tuition costs. However, as the Ministry of Education and Training has decided that Commerce is not a professional program and therefore its tuition cannot be deregulated to include the added cost.

However, the Commerce program is "highly recommending" that students use the laptops leased from Queen's, and is not abandoning plans for laptops to become mandatory in the near future.

Queen's is also giving the go-ahead to a number of technological changes to the Commerce Program.

Classrooms have been renovated to support laptop use, existing classroom computers have been rewired and web sites are being created for each course. Titled NetImp@ct, these changes are expected to keep Queen's at the forefront of university business programs.

By mid-summer, renovations on three selected classrooms are expected to be completed. With the capacity for video conferencing, the Commerce program should be able to function internationally. "There is no limit [to what Commerce students can access] when you have the technology," said Mike Kirkpatrick, technology coordinator of Queen's School of Business.

Kirkpatrick believes NetImp@ct is a pragmatic response to the direcnon the business world is taking. He said that if Queen's fails to offer state-of-the-art facilities, business students will choose another school that does.

Prior to the NetImp@ct alterations,

Please see Comm on page 4

index

Volume 126, Issue 2
www.journal.queensu.ca

News	1	Science	9
Features	5	A&E	11
Editorials	6	MISC.	15
Sports & Fitness	7

WEATHERWATCH

Today Details of weather: High 28°C, Low 18°C; POP 60%	Wednesday Details of weather: High 25°C, Low 19°C; POP 70%
Tuesday Details of weather: High 28°C, Low 18°C; POP 40%	Friday Details of weather: High 25°C, Low 18°C; POP 50%

Business slow for summer services

BY LAURA MACINNIS

Despite the $88,179 cumulative loss of the Alma Mater Society corporate services in the past year, few managers and directors are talking about cutting a not-so-profitable summer short.

AMS media and services director Owen Minns said the services are trying to capture some student business in the summer in order to help cover expenses such as rent, equipment depreciation and general maintenance.

"We wouldn't be able to operate in the year with this amount of business."

— P&CC manager Greg Blackett

"The services are open in the summer to recover some of their operating expenses, which are fixed," explained Minns.

The P&CC, the most profitable AMS service, is open weekdays this summer, with one staff member and two managers operating the store. Manager Greg Blackett says that although the copiers aren't always in use, the store is busy with high-volume orders. "We're getting a lot of larger orders from professors and groups around campus," he said.

Despite this added business, the P&CC is not turning a profit this summer.

"We do lose money in the summer," explained Blackett. "We wouldn't be able to operate in the year with this amount of business."

When asked if the P&CC considered closing for the summer, Blackett said, "we did sort of talk about it... but [the managers] have to be here regardless, and it is a good service to offer the students," he said. "A lot of people really appreciate it."

The UBS exchange is also keeping weekday hours, with two managers and four staff members on duty for the summer. Manager Vanessa Gruben says that although there are not many students in town, "it's actually quite busy... we're really pleased."

Minns said while the UBS may not be attracting a huge volume of student business over the summer, it is worthwhile to pay the extra staff because they are "sorting dropped-off books."

"The UBS is a more labour-intensive service," he said. "There are some days that what we've sold in the UBS hasn't covered the labour, but those people have been sorting books."

Alfie's Pub is now open only Thursday nights, with three managers on duty this summer. In May, the pub was open Thursday, Friday, and Saturday nights. Ben Bourke, Alfie's head manager, said the pub was busy in the spring term. "We had a better May than last year in terms of sales," he said.

Bourke said the pub was originally slotted to stay open Fridays and Saturdays all summer, and therefore both assistant managers were kept on for the entire summer term.

He said the pub's hours were reduced because it wasn't profitable to keep the pub open all weekend. "We were the only ones down there," he said.

"On Fridays and Saturdays we were losing money," affirmed AMS service manager Sarah Armstrong. "We were toying with the idea of closing for July and August... but rather than closing it completely, we decided to focus our attention on one night."

Minns said Alfie's hours were reduced because "it was anticipated that it would be a savings overall."

Armstrong said the extra costs of opening the pub, such as hiring a deejay and Student Constables, were not being covered by sales.

Alfie's will be closed in August for minor renovations and maintenance.

Queen's Pub manager Mark Picketts said that in May "the pub wasn't as busy as I would have liked... We did okay, but obviously there's not as many people around."

"It's really important that [the managers] are here in the summer, both to plan and to learn."

— Owen Minns, AMS media and services director

Picketts said keeping the pub open in May and June was a wise move, as "we don't hire any staff in the summer, so it doesn't cost us anything to open."

Armstrong said that although QP assistant managers have traditionally been employed for May and June only, this year they were kept on for four months because of the demands of the expansion project.

The pub is now closed for renovations until mid-August.

The Queen's Journal publishes three regular issues during the summer. Minns said The Journal has certain fixed costs, such as rent and equipment depreciation, similar to that of other AMS services. "If The Journal does nothing during the

"We were the only ones down there."

— Alfie's Pub head manager Ben Bourke summer, it will still lose money," he said.

Minns said that although The Journal's fixed costs "completely outweigh the revenue" in the summer, "the regular issues that have been printed so far have covered their own printing costs."

The co-editors-in-chief and the news editor are paid summer salary, all three of them interning at The Kingston Whig-Standard.

The Who's Where/What's Next is also operating this summer. Minns said the WWWN gets "the bulk of its work done in the summer," with its three editors working without any additional staff. WWWN editors are employed year-round.

Minns said that although the services tend to lose money during the summer, operating in the summer is still worthwhile.

"It's certainly valuable to have the managers here," he added. "It's really important that they be here in the summer, both to plan and to learn."

AMS rejects Starbucks bid

BY RENEE HUANG

For the second consecutive year, the Alma Mater Society executive has rejected a proposal that would bring a Starbucks coffee outlet to Stauffer Library. The proposal was resurrected by Queen's food services.

Dean of Student Affairs Bob Crawford consulted with Queen's management, including the AMS executive, John Deutch University Centre manager Jack Sinnott, Food Services Chair Bruce Griffiths and Vice-Principal (Academics) Dave Turpin, to review the possibility of bringing Starbucks into the foyer of

"Do you want the harbinger of corporate America in our library?"

— Tam Stanley, AMS president

Stauffer. "We felt basically the same as [the AMS executive] last year," said Tam Stanley, AMS president.

Stanley said the AMS executive questioned the proposal put forth by food services because they felt it would jeopardize the quality of education and the library's study environment.

"Do you want the harbinger of corporate America in our library?" Stanley asked. He said besides being a distraction to library patrons, the idea of bringing in the coffee megacorporation was "lacky."

"I don't know if you've ever had a frappuccino but it's a drink with a big chunk of ice that makes a lot of noise," he said. Starbucks would have been set up in the open area between the library foyer and Union art gallery. People studying near Stauffer's front doors would find it hard to concentrate because of the extra traffic the coffee stop would generate, Stanley predicted. "I don't think you can keep the [inner] doors closed because of fire regulations," he said.

The library already has problems restricting food and drink, Stanley continued, and Starbucks would provide further incentive to students to snack in the library. "The library is a wonderful building and does not need more traffic," he added.

Stanley said the JDUC, however, does need greater student traffic, but the contract with Tim Horton's would prevent Starbucks from setting up there.

Two weeks ago, Queen's administration decided to put the proposal on hold for another year, although they felt it was a profitable venture, explained Stanley.

"It's not a dead idea," said Crawford. "We've just decided it's not something to proceed with this summer."

"It's food services' job to look at it from a business sense," agreed Stanley. According to Stanley, they estimated a minimum of $50,000 a year to be generated by the

"It's not a dead idea...we've just decided it's not something to proceed with this summer."

— Bab Crawford, dean of student affairs presence of the coffee company in the library foyer.

"Part of the mandate of food services is to address needs on campus," Crawford said. He said results from a recent student questionnaire show that a premium coffee company would be well-received on campus. Stanley agreed, pointing out that many students, including Gord Moodie, AMS vice-president (operations) are "addicted to Starbucks."

"If they wanted to put it in the JDUC, we'd totally work with them in all regards," Stanley said.

Tallships engaged Fort Henry in a mock battle on Saturday. The battle was part of Fort Henry's 're-enactors weekend'. Celebrations for Fort Henry's 60th Anniversary continue with the return of the famous Sunset Ceremonies every Wednesday night.

PHOTO BY PAUL HELSER

SGPS supports Day of Action

BY JOCELYN LAPORTE

Members of the Society of Graduate and Professional Students were among participants at the Kingston Day of Action protest against the provincial government on June 8, and among speakers at the education rally in Ontario Park on June 4.

"The SGPS council endorsed it in a vote with more than 20 for participation and only three or four votes against," said Steve Kammerer, SGPS vice-president (communications).

The society was not able to secure support from the Senate, who voted 19-13 against a motion proposed by SGPS President Chris Hales, expressing support for the university community's participation in the event. However, the university administration did agree to provide a day off for staff to participate in the protest.

According to Kammerer, the event successfully provided an opportunity to raise awareness about key issues surrounding the Ontario government's restructuring policies.

Kammerer spoke regretfully about the local media's focus on the negative aspects of the rally. "I think the democratic message raised by one day of stores closing is worth it," Kammerer added that some people have lost more money as a result of the provincial government's cuts than was lost in one day of closure.

He also expressed dissatisfaction with the reactions of both bank managers and the Kingston police surrounding protests outside local banks.

television. Clinton's national security adviser, Samuel Berger said, "[the exchange] would have been unthinkable to happen even five years ago, perhaps even yesterday."

Fighting intensifies in Kosovo

Yugoslav army guns bombarded rebel positions and Serb civilians were airlifted from a besieged village Saturday in central Kosovo as a U.S. envoy warned "we are only a few steps away from a general war."

U.S. has public debate with China

U.S. president Bill Clinton and Chinese president Jiang Zemin exchanged opinions on the 1989 Tiananmen Square massacre. Clinton said that the American people believed that the use of force was wrong. Jiang believed that had force not been used, China would have become dangerously unstable. The unprecedented public debate on human rights was viewed live by hundreds of millions of Chinese on national Kammerer said targeting the banks was of particular importance because "some people are making profits off these cuts, salaries are going up... some people are benefitting while the rest lose."

He also said that many of the events centering around the banks were not targeted directly against bank employees, and that most rally participants were simply handing out pamphlets trying to raise awareness.

"Some people were not in the right spirit. The graffiti was not necessary and some cases could have been handled more diplomatically, but hopefully the right message got across," Kammerer said, when questioned about the various acts of vandalism and small accounts of aggression that occurred during the day.

Kammerer stressed that getting Premier Mike Harris's attention was not the aim of the rally. "[Harris] has said numerous times that he does not take notice of protests and rallies. The aim was more about raising awareness amongst voters," he explained.

Naomi Brunemeyer, AMS social issues commissioner said although the AMS was not involved in the education rally, the society endorsed a letter in support of Day of Action events, including the rally and the march, that was included in the assembly package. Brunemeyer was the only AMS council member that actually participated in the march.

Steve Kammerer, SGPS vice-president (communications)

Johnson gets pie in face

William Johnson, president of the anglophone rights group Alliance Quebec, got a pie in the face during the St. Jean-Baptiste day parade in Montreal. Johnson had requested to march along with Lucien Bouchard and other dignitaries. When he was refused, Johnson began marching with the public, and was harassed before being hit in the face with a cream pie. Johnson was escorted away from the parade by the police. Johnson said he believed that St. Jean-Baptiste day is a holiday for all Quebecers.

Irish politicians back peace accord

A majority of Catholic and Protestant politicians elected to Northern Ireland's new legislature back the Belfast peace accord, just enough to make their compromise government work, final election results showed Saturday.

Founding member of BQ dead at 62

Gilles Rocheleau, who co-founded the Bloc Quebecois with Lucien Bouchard in 1990, has died after a long battle with intestinal cancer. He was 62.

COME CHECK US OUT

Our chicken breast is 5oz. & marinated in lemon juice, served on a fresh patty, topped with lettuce, tomato and served with fries or onion rings.

JJ's Good Eats
We inspire eating!

Our burgers are 6 oz's with no fillers, preservatives or MSG added. Topped with lettuce, tomato and served on a Kaiser bun with fries or onion rings.

The Gourmet Burger & Grilled Chicken Specialists

A Variety of 19 "Mouth Watering" Burgers and 13 "To Die For" Grilled Chicken Sandwiches

GREAT PRICES BURGERS from $4.50-$6.25

GREAT PRICES CHICKENS from $5.25-$6.25

Also checkout ... JJ's

- Garlic Bread (5 kinds)
- Homemade Chili
- Nacho Dinners (5 kinds)
- Chicken Strip Dinner
- Chicken Caesar
- Cheesy Chili Fries

Don't forget our Desserts

- Cheesecakes (5 kinds)
- Sundaes (5 kinds) and our Old Fashioned Milkshakes

JJ's 409 Johnson Street at University Avenue Kingston, Ontario • Canada K7L 1Z1 (613) 547-3771

ATTENTION

FREE MONEY

Applications for the Summer Round of the AMS Board of Directors' Special Projects Grants are due by Friday July 17.

For project criteria go to the AMS front desk in the lower JDUC or call Alison Loat at 545-2729

ATTENTION

Service managers budget for loss

Continues from page 1

that we want to do is to improve customer service, and that's something you can't attach a dollar figure to," he said.

Both AMS pubs did significantly better in 1997-98 than the year before.

The Queen's Pub improved on its 1996-97 loss, with more than a $14,000 increase in gross revenue.

"We want to ... improve customer service, and that's something you can't attach a dollar figure to."

— Greg Blackett, P&CC manager

QF manager Mark Picketts said lower net loss last year was in large part due to the pub's decision to reduce the number of assistant managers from three to two. "That's something you just can't ignore, but at the same time you can't take anything away from [last year's management]. They did a fantastic job." Alfie's Pub suffered a $53,212 net loss in 1996-97, but finished 1997-98 with a net loss of only $8,710. This deficit was also much lower than Alfie's management anticipated, having predicted a $25,093 loss in the pub's original 1997-98 budget.

"I think initially it was budgeted to lose money because so much money had been lost the year before," explained Alfie's manager Ben Bourke. "It was unrealistic for them to budget to break even."

Bourke attributed the pub's deficit reduction to a successful second term. "I think it is quite realistic for Alfie's to come very close to breaking even this year and even making money," he said.

The Queen's Journal lost a substantial amount last year, with a deficit of $17,898. The figure represents an improvement over the $31,406 loss during the 1996-97 year.

"Last year's management made some difficult cuts and I think that's why our situation improved," said Co-editor-in-

ALMA MATER SOCIETY CORPORATE SERVICES REVENUE

AMS Service	1997-1998	1996-1997
Alfie's Pub	-$8,710	-$53,212
Publishing and Copy Centre	$23,455	$62,209
Queen's Entertainment Agency	-$4,861	-$460
Queen's Journal	-$17,898	-$31,406
Queen's Pub	-$7,829	-$15,008
Queen's Student Constables	-$3,873	-$6,792
Studio Q	-$10,243	-$3,732
UBS Exchange	-$52,306	-$9,760
Walkhome	-$13,076	-$10,008
Who's Where/What's Next	-$15,891	-$12,811

chief Keith Gerein. "But we're not satisfied yet — we want to get much closer to that break-even point."

"The goal for different services is different," explained Owen Minns, media and services director. "Retail operations like the P&CC and the UBS are looking long term towards making money that can be placed back into other services that don't make money, like Walkhome."

"The corporation as a whole looks to make a small amount of revenue towards future projects," Minns explained.

Minns said that many managers budget to lose money if their service lost money the year before. While most of this year's managers expect to reduce last year's loss, Minns admitted that "there's no magic formula that's been established by anyone for each service."

Comm program changed

Continued from page 1

Queen's Commerce students have fared well in international competitions. For two years in a row, they have taken first prize at the Electronic Data Systems Case Challenge competition. They also placed third overall in last year's International Business Challenge.

"We want to help Queen's students by offering them the best opportunities," Kirkpatrick explained. "By ensuring that they are computer literate upon graduation, they will require less training in the workplace."

Kirkpatrick also spoke strongly of the need for all Commerce students to be using the same laptops. All necessary software would be included, guaranteeing that students working with the computers would be on the "same platform."

As long as Queen's does not include the laptops in Commerce fees, he hopes that students wait until they get to Queen's before buying their computers.

Marjorie Peart, associate director of the Commerce program, added that there would be a "total support system" in place to deal with any problems if students used the same laptops.

"We want to help Queen's students by offering them the best opportunities."

— Mike Kirkpatrick, School of Business technology coordinator

There are also bursary funds earmarked for Commerce students who need assistance to purchase computers.

Peart confirmed that Queen's will ask again for government permission to make the leasing of laptops by first year Commerce students mandatory next year.

This Thursday Catch the Fever
The Olympic Fever Only At

WITH A CHANCE TO WIN $100 CASH!
EVERY THURSDAY NIGHT
IN JULY

ALFIE'S IS OPEN EVERY THURSDAY NIGHT IN JULY
- 9PM TILL CLOSE -

ALFIE'S ONLINE <http://www.alfies.queensu.ca/alfies>

June 28 to August 30 1998 Kingston Summer Festival

THE GRAND THEATRE

- Molly Cole June 28
- Barachois June 29
- Imilonji KaNtu Choral
- Society of Soweto June 30
- Leahy August 23
- Joe Sealy & Molly Johnson July 5
- Theatre Smith-Gilmour:
- In the Wings of Eden July 8
- Purit a Baroque:
- Bach Meets Cape Breton July 15
- The Second City July 17
- The King's Singers July 25
- Gino Quilico July 28
- A CHORUS LINE July 31 - August 16
- Susan Aglukark August 7
- Linda McRae August 19
- Lorne Elliott August 21
- The Kingdom of the Soguenay August 27-30

BABY GRAND STUDIO

- How To Eat Like A Child July 16-26
- FROGBOG! August 5-15
- Spinning Yarns August 5-15

FORT HENRY

- Repercussion Theatre:
- Midsummer Nights Dream July 23
- Macbeth July 24

Box Office: 530-2050
e-mail: kingfest@istar.ca
Web Site: kingstonfestival.com
Kingston Summer Festival
at The Grand Theatre,
218 Princess Street,
Kingston K7L 1B2

COMEDY • THEATRE • MUSIC

Fire down below

The United States has yet to drop its binoculars and confront the bloodshed from civilian firearms

By Eric Morris

WHEN 15-YEAR-OLD Kip Kinkel, standing in his Oregon high school cafeteria, pulled out a semiautomatic rifle and opened fire on his classmates last month, he became America's second student-turned-school-shooter in less than a week, and the eighth in the last 16 months. Students storming into school playgrounds, lunchrooms, gymnasiums and shooting classmates, teachers and principals have become a disturbing trend south of the border, leaving a grieving nation searching for answers.

Concerned Americans now want to know what can be done to prevent such crimes from occurring in the future. They ask: What can be done to prevent copycat student shooters, and what can be done to prevent students from bringing weapons to school? These questions, however, ignore the issue at hand by ignoring the warning signs that are so clear from American schools, streets, and morgues. Why are there so many firearms in America, and why does nobody seem to care?

African-Americans are disproportionately the victims of handgun fatalities, with such weapons serving as the leading cause of death for blacks ages 15-24.

Maybe it's merely a problem of semantics. When a weapon is characterized as one of mass destruction, world leaders, including those of the U.S., seem so adamant to rid the world of this device that they even manage to put aside national differences to work together. The U.S. is willing to put billions of dollars in trade on hold in order to slap countries like India and Pakistan on the wrist for flexing their nuclear muscle. Similarly, many countries, Canada

Firearm related facts:

- 1993 handgun fatalities
- Great Britain: 33 (0.00006% of population)
- Canada: 76 (0.00025% of population)
- United States: 40,000 (0.015% of population)
- Number of American federal safety standards regulating manufacture of teddy bears: 4
- Number of American federal safety standards regulating the manufacture of guns: 0

Graphic by Janice Chan

included, support the ongoing U.N. inspections of Iraq to ensure that nuclear, chemical and biological weapons remain out of the hands of a supposed rogue nation.

The Cold War proved that nations could amass thousands, even tens of thousands of these weapons, yet the likelihood of such weapons obliterating an enemy was extremely low because the nation under attack would respond with an equally devastating attack (the theory known as Mutually Assured Destruction). Even now, after the Soviet Union has collapsed and the global balance of power has shifted, that theory still applies. It's unlikely Pakistan would launch a nuclear attack against India, or Iraq would launch a similar attack on Israel, simply out of fear of the response.

Nevertheless, the attitude among the international community is that despite these deterrents, such weapons should be kept out of the hands of specific countries, just in case.

Many would interpret the term

- Leading cause of death among African Americans ages 15-24: shooting
- Americans killed in Korean War: 33,561
- Americans killed in Vietnam War: 47,634
- Americans killed in 1992 by firearms (including suicide, homicide and accidents): 37,502
- Sources: National Center for Health Statistics (U.S.); American Civil Liberties Union of Southern California; Health Statistics Division, Statistics Canada

example, apparently threatens more important things in North America, like commerce, industry and the aristocrats that matter in a capitalist economy judging by the amount of funding and attention given to this issue compared to young, middle-to lower-class citizens killing one another.

While Canadians see themselves as frigid Americans in many ways, attitudes toward guns are often cited a major point of difference. And to some extent that's justified. In 1993, there were 73 handgun fatalities in Canada, compared to about 40,000 in the U.S. While many Canadians probably look at it as about 39,000 less than the Americans, the attitude instead should be there were 73 too many in this country. Just as one nuclear attack in Asia or the Middle East would be seen as one too many, so too should handgun fatalities in this country.

In Canada, more people die annually as the result of firearms than AIDS. When diseases kill that many people, we spend billions of dollars in research to eradicate it. When handguns lead to just as many deaths, gun-advocacy groups maintain that it somehow serves democracy to have armed citizens.

In Canada, more people die annually as the result of firearms than AIDS.

The demerited fact that every other day a classroom of children die in the United States from firearms is not their problem. After all, guns don't kill people, people do.

There is, of course, some truth to that. While the relationship between guns circulating a country's populace and fatalities is not a clear-cut, positive relationship, the connection is by no means spurious either. There are factors other than the availability of guns in a society, such as class disparities, even TV violence, which inspire some members of society to kill others. Banning all firearms will not eliminate all crime, all homicides, or all suicides, but it's an important first step in reaching that goal.

IT SEEMS THAT no matter the tragedy, whether it be a shooting at a high school dance in Edinboro, Pennsylvania, or a university engineering class in Montreal, the issue has yet to be raised. It's time we apply the logic of our foreign policy to our domestic policy, by restricting the rights of some for the greater good of society and banning handguns outright.

Eric Morris is destined to become the new age Robin Hood — professional bank antagonist. He can be contacted at 4elm@qlink.queensu.ca.

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

The leader in student journalism for more than 125 years.

All Conrad's men

EVEN THOUGH IT HAS NOT YET BEEN named, and has not even printed one issue, we already know what Conrad Black's new national newspaper is desperately lacking: women and minorities in its management.

On June 15, Southam published the names and photos of the seven individuals who will form the management team of the new paper. From vice-president of sales to editor-in-chief, all were white and all were men. How can a publication that aspires to be Canada's national newspaper display such neglect in its hiring practices?

As even new editor-in-chief Ken Whyte has admitted, the editorial opinion of a newspaper is heavily influenced by advertising and other management concerns. Clearly then, the new national paper will be disproportionately influenced by white men.

While Conrad Black may have a penchant for running his newspaper empire like any other business, a newspaper has a moral obligation to report the news objectively. Its management, therefore, must also reflect this need. Running a newspaper requires a least a modicum of journalistic integrity and objectivity. The choice of such an unbalanced leadership calls into question Conrad Black and Southam's commitment to these principles.

How can a publication that aspires to be Canada's national newspaper display such neglect in its hiring practices?

Did no qualified women or minorities apply for any of these positions? Or were the hiring criteria more a question of membership in Southam's old boys network than of ability?

Moreover, how can we seriously expect to encourage more women to break through the glass-ceiling in such a male-dominated field as journalism, when the management has always been male? Unless something changes, the new paper seems destined to perpetuate the inequities that have kept women out of management for far too long. To paraphrase the old joke: what's white, male and re(a)id all over? Hopefully nor the new national newspaper.

Save the... who?

ONTARIO PREMIER MIKE HARRIS has never claimed to be an expert on numbers. Nonetheless, Harris demonstrated mathematical genius this week when he tried to convince the Ontario legislature that 70,000 signatures on a petition actually equals zero signatures. According to Harris, the 70,000 Kingston residents who signed a petition to keep the Hotel Dieu Hospital open were actually in favour of its closing.

Harris might have been trying out a new version of calculus when he answered a question from opposition leader Dalton McGuinty about the hospital closings. McGuinty used the example of Kingston when he asked how Harris could justify closing hospitals against a community's will. According to Harris, the 70,000 signatories were demonstrating their opposition to a Liberal plan.

This is not the first time that Harris has demonstrated that he suffers from selective memory loss. The premier seems unable to recollect that during the last election campaign he promised no hospitals would be closed. This latest example is particularly frustrating because Harris not only ignored but also misrepresented the opinion of so many in the Kingston community.

It is extremely disconcerting to learn that despite the effort that was put into collecting thousands of signatures and writing almost 2,000 letters of support for the hospital, the Conservative leader got the wrong message. Perhaps it is easier for Harris to govern when he thinks he understands the people better than they understand themselves.

Bons Mots: A newspaper's primary office is the gathering of news. At the peril of its soul it must see that the supply is not tainted.
— C.P. Scott

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF
Keith Gerein
Tara Mansbridge
MANAGING EDITOR
Laura MacInnis
NEWS EDITOR
Fiona Stevenson
ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS
Shawn Brimley
Renée Huang

EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
Paul Heiler
ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR
Stefan Murray
ASSISTANT ARTS EDITORS
Sarah Crosbie
Lilian Kim
FEATURES EDITOR
Sean Springer
OP-ED EDITOR
Todd Jackson

SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Adam Kaminsky
ASSISTANT SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Robert MacNeil
MSC EDITOR
Ken Butland
GRAPHICS EDITOR
Janice Chan
THE READER EDITOR
Jesse Craig Bellinger

SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT
John Bowman
SPECIAL PUBLICATIONS EDITORS
Elizabeth Frogley
Shandley McMurray
PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS
Alex Kronby
James Terjanian
WEB EDITOR
Marco Lui

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Kraft
SALES REPRESENTATIVES
Kari Britnell
Andrew Coole
Kristian Li
ADVERTISING MANAGER
Vacant
ADVERTISING DESIGNERS
Katherine Colbourn
Annie Ge
SYSTEMS MANAGER
James Clarke

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Tuesday, June 30, 1998 • Issue 2 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.
Contents © 1998 by the Queen's Journal; all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Goss Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Ganaroque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions.
Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year.
Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2H8
Telephone: editorial: 613-545-2800 advertising: 613-545-6711
Fax: 613-545-6728 Email: journal@post.queensu.ca
Internet: http://www.journal.queensu.ca
Circulation 3,000
Issue 3 will be published on Tuesday, July 28, 1998.

STEFAN MURRAY

Entertainment Inc.

THERE USED TO BE A TIME WHEN entertainment would speak to an audience, attempt to convey a message and maybe even enlighten the masses. It was a golden age when our most beloved songs were more than background music for beer commercials. It was a time when the Millennium Falcon didn't manoeuvre through asteroid belts with BMW license plates — an era when theme parks didn't dictate the movies we could see.

Well, it's a new world after all, and our friends at Disney, in a drive to open a new theme park in China, have just released an animated feature called Mulan. The film, which is based on the traditional Chinese legend, is extremely non-controversial and you can even buy authentic Mulan toys at McDonald's.

This release comes less than a year after the opening of the film Kundun. Set in Tibet, the film depicts the harsh reality of life after the Chinese invasion in 1950 and ongoing occupation.

Unfortunately, Kundun was seen by few people because of Chinese pressure on Disney not to promote the film. Of course, given the importance of bringing the Pirates of the Caribbean to Beijing, Disney chose to comply and basically shelved all promotion for the film.

On the other hand, the release of the China-friendly Mulan was promoted by Disney as an animation masterpiece. Disney is obviously becoming submissive to the whims of lucrative markets, however unfair they may be.

Unfortunately, movies are not the only medium to be bullied by commercial interests. Was the ABC sitcom "Ellen" really losing its comedic appeal, or were the sponsors too frightened by an honest portrayal of a lesbian character? I guess prejudice sells better than controversy.

Likewise, the musical heavyweights of the '90s have become the house bands for corporations like Pepsi and Labatt's.

Disney is unwittingly exposing the censorship that has become prevalent throughout the entire entertainment industry.

So what? Disney didn't invade Tibet and we can certainly listen to the Spice Girls without drinking Pepsi. The danger, however, is that with all of this corporate sponsorship of our movies, television and music, the image of the product will become more important than the message or the artform.

By giving in to the Chinese demand for censorship, Disney is unwittingly exposing the censorship that has become prevalent throughout the entire entertainment industry. The stifling of creativity by corporate interests prevents the public from appreciating a truly diverse range of ideas and opinions. As a result, the entertainment industry is unable to be the progressive voice that we need it to be.

SPORTS & FITNESS

The prohibition of road hockey Death of a Canadian institution?

The Peanut Gallery

WINGS CELEBRATE

With summer rapidly turning to fall, the Stanley Cup was decided as the boys from Motown swept the Washington Capitals to repeat as cup winners. In a series closer than the 4-0 result, the depth of the defending champs was on display. The Red Wings, led by captain and play-off MVP Steve Yzerman, celebrated the fourth consecutive Stanley Cup final sweep with particular vigour as they were joined by fallen comrades Vladimir Konstantinov and Sergei Mnatsakanov. The two, who were seriously injured in post-Stanley Cup celebrations last year, provided a touching moment when they were in Washington to receive the cup and participate in the post-game ceremony.

QUINN RETURNS TO TORONTO

Pat Quinn, former Coach of the Year for Philadelphia and Vancouver, was hired by Ken Dryden to take over the reins of the struggling Maple Leafs. Quinn, most recently coach and general manager of the Vancouver Canucks, started his playing career for Toronto, and returns to replace Mike Murphy who had been left hanging by the Leafs for weeks.

CLIPPERS TAKE A RISK

The Los Angeles Clippers picked first and selected unpolished Pacific University centre Michael Olowokandi. The Grizzlies followed by enlisting all-American point guard Mike Bibby, the consensus number one pick in the week leading up to the draft. Denver grabbed Raef LaFrentz, while Toronto and Golden State flipped former North Carolina stars, with Antawn Jamison heading to Oakland and Vince Carter coming North of the border. The steal of the draft was multi-talented Kansas guard, Paul Pierce, who went to 10th before being drafted by the Boston Celtics.

THE NEXT MARIO LEMIEUX?

The NHL was also restocked with young talent, starting with the Tampa Bay Lightning selecting Quebec Junior superstar, and Lemieux play-alike, Vincent LeCavalier. After a trade, the expansion Nashville Predators grabbed David Legwand, a talented American forward. Two defencemen followed with Brad Stuart heading to San Jose and Bryan Allen joining Mike Keenan in Vancouver. The remaining picks by Canadian teams were as follows: Calgary picked Rico Fata, Toronto selected Nikolai Andropov, Edmonton elected for Michael Heinrich, Ottawa reached for goalie Mathieu Chouinard and finally Montreal tabbed centre Eric Chouinard to round out the first-round for the Canadian entrants.

IF CHRISTMAS CAME EARLY...

• Nobody would watch the July 12 WCV pay-per-view match between Dennis Rodman and Karl Malone.
• The French riot police would elect to use real bullets rather than the rubber variety on the soccer hooligans.

• Alan Eagleson would be ostracized forever from the NHL community when he leaves prison on July 7.

ANALYSIS

By ROBERT MACNEIL

The other day, I was lounging on the back deck in the sun with a nice cigar and a cold beer trying to fathom why I would possibly sign up for a correspondence course. How I longed for the simple days of youth when I could relax and not concern with my McJob or my classes. The time when a group of friends would gather to play a game of road hockey on our quiet residential streets. Those were definitely the days — pretending to be our favourite stars, practicing breakaways. There were no contract hold-outs in those days; the highest demand from players was a cold drink.

This is the fault of overzealous community groups who have forgotten their youth...

After reminiscing, I skimmed the sports section of my local paper in search of a Stanley Cup schedule. Instead, I stumbled across a story on the prohibition of road hockey in Nepean. The Ottawa Citizen was reporting that Conn Smythe trophy winner Steve Yzerman's home suburb was outlawing the very game where he had once begun to hone his skills. Apparently young children playing in the streets were disrupting the calm of the neighbourhood.

What in the world is our society thinking? Slapping a $50 fine on an eight year-

Road Hockey: A Canadian Pastime
JOURNAL FILE PHOTO

old for participating in our national pastime? Do these people not remember the feeling of trying to break a 28-28 deadlock, when a car appeared on the horizon. The call "Car" broke up the epic struggle, but a joyous yell of "Game On" brought back the sense of exhilaration to the street. Is this really considered disruptive behaviour?

Do neighbours have nothing better to do than to pick on kids being kids? Would they rather that their school children spending all their time hanging out in shopping malls or playing video games all day?

The kids are just taking a ragged old tennis ball and pretending to be their heroes.

The kids are just taking a ragged old tennis ball and pretending to be their heroes. How can this be a bad thing? There appears to be no end to the lengths that some people will go to destroy what is left of a child's dreams. In a world that is getting so depressing, parents are scared to allow their kids to play outside. The children are unable to trust anyone, and now they can't even play in front of their own homes.

This is the fault of overzealous community groups who have forgotten their youth and have now made it their goal in life to suck any joy out of the lives of young children who are in the last years of their innocence. Parents should let kids have fun while they are kids, because it is only a matter of time before they are disillusioned and disappointed with the world their parents have passed on to them.

Riots overshadow World Cup

By ADAM KAMINSKY

With the preliminary round of the world's most widely viewed team sporting event coming to a close, all the eyes of the world continue to be fixed on France. With the festivities of the World Cup in full swing, even some of the less cultured American public has begun to take notice of France '98.

As always, the first two weeks of the Cup have featured as much excitement as Leonardo DiCaprio at a high school dance. With 32 of the most talented soccer teams in the world gathered together, the action on the pitch is only a tiny piece of the World Cup.

As always, the first two weeks of the Cup have featured as much excitement as Leonardo DiCaprio at a high school dance.

The reggae dancing fans from Jamaica, the loyal followers of the young Nigerian Super Eagles, the orange-clad Dutch and the samba-singing Brazilians, have all provided a great deal of entertainment in the stands. As per usual, most fans have created a festive atmosphere for players, visitors, and locals alike. However, this can't be said for all those who followed their team to the 'Land of Napoleon'.

Living up to their reputation as the foremost hooligans in sport, some of the English soccer "fans" tarnished an impressive week of celebration. With an

Jordan rules

By ADAM KAMINSKY

Nobody can stop a runaway Bull. Overcoming a fantastic effort by the Utah Jazz, Mike and his mates proved to be too much for the Western Conference Champs. The Chicago Bulls were able to complete their second three-peat by winning their sixth NBA championship in eight years with a defeat of the Jazz in six games for the second year in a row.

Despite a series that included the largest victory margin in NBA history, and the lowest scoring output in a single game — both in the lopsided Game Three won by Chicago — it was one of the most closely fought in recent history.

With a John Stockton-led Jazz overtime victory in Game One, Utah was able to hold home court advantage at the deafening Delta Centre. This lead was short lived as Chicago managed to come from behind to win Game Two. This sent the two teams to the United Centre tied at one game a piece.

Jordan provided the ending that everyone outside of Utah had hoped for.

After Utah's pathetic Game Three performance and another close Bulls victory in the next game, the Jazz, and their absent star Karl Malone, dug themselves into a seemingly insurmountable 3-1 deficit. At this juncture the Bulls looked to be in total command of the series due to superior defensive performances by the unsung Scottie Pippen, who made

Please See Brazil on page 8

Please See Utah page 8

Brazil repeats

Continued from page 7

match in Group F saw the "infidels" being beaten by Iran 2-1. This was inconsequential to the tournament as a whole, as it was Yugoslavia that joined Germany in the next round.

As the tournament continues towards the finals in St. Denis on July 12th, no team or player has truly placed their stamp on the tournament. With last cup's finalists Italy and Brazil still in the hunt, they must be considered favourites, but other teams are lurking. The Argentinians, Dutch, French and the Norwegians, who beat Brazil, all look to be getting stronger as the tournament progresses.

It remains to be seen which individual star will emerge from this cup as, apart from the rioters, no one has truly left their boot print on the tournament yet. It is the elimination round that truly decides the heroes.

As a tournament mired by riots and disturbances enters its most exciting phase, there is a good chance that the violence will be forgotten. When the vivacious fans become more exciting, so will the play on the field. Signs say that it will be most exciting for those from Brazil, as their national hero, Ronaldo, will most likely hoist the Cup at the Stade de France on July 12.

Stieb is back in the majors

Jays pitcher returns after five-year absence

BY ROBERT MACNEIL

On June 18th, Dave Stieb was called up from the Toronto Blue Jays Triple-A affiliate in Syracuse. With his appearance in Baltimore at Camden Yards, his return after five years away from major league baseball was complete. His journey began in March at the Toronto Blue Jays spring training facilities in Dunedin, Florida. The Blue Jays have always had a policy of using their former players as coaches. For this year's camp, they invited Stieb, George Bell, Lloyd Moseby, Rance Mulliniks and Ernie Whitt to coach. After a few weeks of teaching the younger players, however, Stieb realized that he was a better pitcher than those half his age. Now, at 41, Stieb decided to attempt a comeback.

After a few weeks of teaching the younger players, however, Stieb realized that he was a better pitcher than those half his age.

The results were very encouraging. In the games he pitched at the Jays' minor-league complex, the hitters were retired with relative ease. Furthermore, his velocity was around 87 mph and his famous slider still had its nasty bite. When Stieb retired in 1993, it was due to severe back pain. Now he has fully recovered and his arm still has its same strength. Many critics of Stieb's comeback feel it is because of the almighty dollar. Nowadays, players are making many more millions than Stieb ever did.

However, money is not the reason behind this comeback. During his playing career in the 1980s, Stieb's contracts called for a majority of his money to be deferred until after he retired. As a result, the Blue Jays are still paying Stieb $500,000 a year and will continue to do so for another ten years as part of a retirement package. With his return to the Blue Jays, Stieb now makes the major league minimum of $109,000.

While Stieb may not be able to return to his glory days as a starter for the Blue Jays, he can still be a very effective middle reliever. Make no mistake, Dave Stieb is not a stupid man. He will tell himself before anyone else does if this comeback is not going to work. At this point, however, he has absolutely nothing to lose, and absolutely everything to gain.

Utah comes up short

Continued from page 7

strides towards an NBA final MVP.

After two off-days and a trip to a truck weigh-station with a state trooper friend, Karl Malone returned to form with a huge Game Five performance. With 39 points, 11 boards and numerous hustle plays, the 35-year-old was able to carry his team back for a Game Six. By bringing the series back to the Delta Centre it not only elongated the finals, but brought a new-found confidence to the home-standing Jazz.

As Game Six unfolded, it seemed as though Utah was beginning to put the pressure back on the Bulls. With Pippen ailing due to a back injury and Jordan struggling to find his range, coupled with the fact that Malone was having his way with all of the Chicago defenders, things looked bleak for the champs. The Jazz led much of the game, but with the fourth quarter winding down, Utah could not find the knockout punch. This proved costly as Jordan, the unhuman wonder, took over the game. The Bull run culminated with 'his Airness' stealing the ball from Malone, casually undressing Bryon Russell and burying a 17-footer with just over six seconds left. After a desperate three-point attempt by Stockton, the clock ran out on the Utah dream.

With what was the last game played by the Chicago Bulls as we know them, Jordan provided the ending that everyone outside of Utah had hoped for. While head coach Phil Jackson is definitely moving on, the question of whether Jordan and Pippen will rejoin the team is still unanswered. Regardless of the outcome, this team was one of the great dynasties in NBA history, and the way that they won their sixth championship was fitting for the team of the '90s.

SCIENCE

The maple leaf forever

AS YOU ENJOY YOUR holiday tomorrow, consider the symbol on the bottle cap of the beer you just polished off, or perhaps on your friend's "Canada Kicks Ass" t-shirt. The maple leaf is as distinctive a symbol of Canada as any. But why is the maple leaf shaped like that in the first place, with its three lobes and multiple points? Surely evolution hasn't created this unusual shape just to give Canadians a cool graphic for our flags and corporate logos.

As it turns out, evolution has selected for this shape, in part, so that the leaves won't end up as tattered as some of the flags out there.

Watch a flag fluttering in a full wind and you're watching a textbook example of drag. As the wind moves across its wide, flat shape, swirls and vortices are created in the air which pull at the flag, eventually weakening and tearing the fabric. You've probably seen Canadian flags with the red bar on the free end nearly torn off. It's a simple problem to solve as fat as flags go: just replace them. It's not so easy for trees.

Leaves serve an important function for plants, namely, capturing energy from light to power the great electron shuffle we call photosynthesis. If leaves tore themselves apart in the wind the way flags do, plants wouldn't be able to gather solar energy, reduce carbon dioxide and water to sugar, grow, or produce seeds. This represents some pretty heavy evolutionary pressure to produce leaves that will hold up in a stiff breeze.

Now, if you presented this problem to an engineer, you'd probably end up with a very stiff structure, all I-beams and two-by-fours. Evolution has taken a different approach.

Watch a maple tree in a strong wind and you'll see something quite different from a flag. All the leaves together appear to flutter, just like the flag, but the air actually flows very smoothly over each individual leaf. The wind pulls on the sides of the leaf and rolls it into a cone, and the stronger the wind, the tighter the cone. By bending into this shape, instead of trying to stand up to the wind, the leaves can survive even in the strongest of gales.

An engineer would probably come up with a very stiff structure, all I-beams and two-by-fours. Evolution has taken a different approach.

Of course, aerodynamics isn't the only selective force on the shape of leaves; if it were they would all look like bike helmets or Jaguar XKRs.

The basic broad, flat shape of leaves is necessary to perform their primary function: energy collecting. (Pine needles and cactus spines are special adaptations to protect plants from water loss.) Of course, any broad, flat shape left out in the sun for a while will get very hot. One study showed that leaves on the sunlit side of an oak tree on a 28°C day can reach temperatures of up to 49°C. The dissipation of this excess heat is another factor influencing the shape of leaves.

How can leaves keep from overheating in the sun? Water can carry away heat as it evaporates from the surface of the leaf, but water can sometimes be scarce. Furthermore, by the time a leaf would reach a sufficient temperature to lose more heat by radiation than it is receiving from the sun, it would be nothing but a small pile of ashes. The most efficient way for a leaf to lose excess heat is by convection as air moves across its surface.

There are a couple of odd things about convection, though. As a gentle breeze flows over the flat surface of a leaf, the air touching it remains motionless and the air nearby moves only very slowly. This effect is known as a boundary layer. The layer starts off very thin on the leading edge of the leaf, but becomes thicker further away from this edge as the slow air "piles up" on itself. The larger the surface, then, the thicker the boundary layer can become. Now, a thick layer of motionless air, as you can imagine, does not conduct heat away very efficiently, so evolution has selected for leaves with deep grooves, thereby breaking up the surface and avoiding thick boundary layers.

So, the shape of the maple leaf is the result of a combination of pressures. It possesses the flexibility and lateral "wings" to bend into a smooth cone when the wind picks up, and its points and indents allow excess heat to be carried away in the breeze.

It seems that Pearson and Diefenbaker had the easy part in figuring out a design for our flag back in 1965. The real work was already being done over the past millions of years.

John Bowman will solve his own overheating problem on Canada Day with a tall margarita and a dip in Lake Ontario.

Science Spectrum

Science news from around the world and beyond

Neutrino knot untied in Japan

A team of international scientists at the Super Kamiokande Neutrino Observatory in Japan have answered one of those questions that changes that way we look at the universe from the smallest to the largest scale. Yes, Matilda, neutrinos do have mass. The discovery, which was announced earlier this month at a conference in Takayama, Japan, flies in the face of the Standard Model of particle physics. "Such deviations from simplicity in nature are usually a good sign that there is much more to be learned," said University of Washington Physics Research Professor Jeffrey Wilkes. The researchers observed neutrinos created in Earth's upper atmosphere and found fewer muon-neutrinos than expected, indicating that they are oscillating, or converting to another, as-yet-undetectable "flavour" of neutrino. This could only happen if neutrinos have mass. The Super-Kam device is similar in design to the Sudbury Neutrino Observatory, a project partially supported by Queen's.

Leftovers from the X-Files movie?

Scientists from Oregon State University have found bacteria living in just about the most inhospitable terrestrial habitat imaginable: two meters beneath the ice in Antarctica. The McMurdo Dry Valleys, the study site where the photosynthetic cyanobacteria were found, receive less than 100 mm of precipitation a year and boast an average annual temperature of -56°C. The researchers compare the climate to two other cold, dry spots — Europa, one of Jupiter's moons, and Mars — and speculate that similar organisms might exist there.

Wobbly star reveals distant planet.

Astronomers using the Keck I telescope in Hawaii have found evidence of yet another extra-solar planet, and it's a big one. The gas mega-giant, whose mass is 1.9 times greater than Jupiter's, orbits Gleise 876, a star with about one-third the mass of the sun. The planet's presence was deduced from the wobble of its star and is the twelfth planet discovered in this way. And at a mere 15 light-years away, it is also the closest yet found.

Feathered dinosaur is missing link

The fossilized remains of a turkey-sized dinosaur discovered in China are being described as the missing link in the evolution of modern-day birds from dinosaurs. Caudipteryx was covered in feathers very similar in structure to those of birds, but was flightless, its plumage serving as insulation or as a display for mating or warding off predators.

Canadians gave the world Cyber Punk, the Global Village, Generation X

What's Next?

McGILL-QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY PRESS

Clark Hall - Weekdays 9-6, Saturday 10-6
www.campusbookstore.com - 545-2955

Owned and Operated by Students Since 1909

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

Looking for a great job?

Applications are still being accepted for:

Assistant News Editor
Advertising Manager

Application forms are available at 272 Earl Street. Those interested in applying are encouraged to call Tara or Keith, editors-in-chief, at 545-2800. Or drop us an email at journal@post.queensu.ca

APPLY NOW!

Science needs writers

for the next summer issue and for the new school year.

Phone the Journal House at 545-2800

Email the Journal House at journal@post.queensu.ca

Visit the Journal Online at www.journal.queensu.ca

In Kingston for the summer?

Get a head start on next year and take a summer course.

Daytime Courses

CISC 121*	Introduction to Computing Science I	8-10:30am Mon/Wed
COMM 180*	Introduction to Industrial Relations	10:30am-1pm Mon/Wed
ENGL 280	Canadian Literature to Mid-Century	10:30am-1pm Mon/Tue/Wed/Thu
HIST 287*	England under the Tudors and Stuarts, 1500-1688	10:30am-1pm Tue/Thu
MATH 126	Differential and Integral Calculus	8-10:30am Mon/Tue/Wed/Thu
PHED 363*	Psychology of Coaching	10:30am-1pm Tue/Thu
PSYC 215*	Experimental Psychology: Perception	8-10:30am Mon/Wed
SOCY 343	Power and Change in Canada	10:30am-1pm Mon/Tue/Wed/Thu
WMNS 220*	Topics in Women's Studies	8-10:30am Mon/Wed

Evening Courses

BIOL 210*		6:30-9:30pm Mon/Wed
COMM 151*	Organizational Behaviour	6:30-9:30pm Tue/Thu
DRAM 212*	Theatre History II	7-9:30pm Mon/Wed
ECON 111*	Introductory Microeconomics	6:30-9:30pm Mon/Wed
FILM 230*	Media and Society	6:30-9:30pm Tue/Thu
GPHY 224*	Foundations of Historical-Cultural Geography	6:30-9:30pm Mon/Wed
PHIL 157*	Moral Issues	6:30-9:30pm Tue/Thu
WRIT 175*	Effective Writing II	6:30-9:30pm Tue/Thu

Classes run from July 2 to August 13. Last date to register is July 8. Late registration fee applies.

For more information or to register contact:

Continuing & Distance Studies
F1, Mackintosh-Corry Hall
545-2471

Faculty of Arts and Science
F2, Mackintosh-Corry Hall
545-2470

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Summer heats up Kingston

Kingston Summer Festival attracts all ages and cultures

Appearing at this year's festival (from left to right) In The Wings of Eden, Holly Cole, Barachois, and Joe Sealy

Festival Lineup

Joe Sealy Quartet & Molly Johnson
8pm July 5th, Grand Theatre. $21

The King Singers
8pm July 25th, Grand Theatre. $24

Gino Quilico
8pm July 28th, Grand Theatre. $24-30

Susan Aglukark
8pm August 7th, Grand Theatre. $24

Linda McRae
8pm August 17th, Grand Theatre $18

Lorne Elliot
8pm August 27-30 Grand Theatre $21

SUMMER OFFICIALLY BEGAN in Kingston last Sunday as jazz-artist Holly Cole opened the Kingston Summer Festival. Cole and her quartet entertained a sold-out audience at the Grand Theatre to kick off the longest mixed art festival in Canada. Beginning on June 28 and concluding on August 30, the festival will include 64 performances in 64 days, displaying a vast amount of vision and talent.

The Festival will also attempt to attract a diverse audience by providing a broad spectrum of theatre, music and comedy performances.

A lot of the credit for the organization of the festival must be allotted to artistic director Jim Garrard, who felt that the festival should reflect a community effort, as well as reaching as large an audience as possible.

"We felt we should be drawing more from community resources this year," said Garrard. "As well, we should be trying to do things for everyone."

Garrard and the festival has tapped community resources effectively, as the musical director of the musical A Chorus Line is Queen's student Greg Gibson. The musical will be running from July 31 to August 16 in the Regina Rosen Auditorium. As well, four members in the orchestra for A Chorus Line are Queen's students.

The Festival will also attempt to attract a diverse audience by providing a broad spectrum of theatre, music and comedy performances.

The performers themselves reflect a diverse cultural background, which is illustrated in acts such as the Acadian quartet Barachois, Imilonji Kantu — a 60 voice choir composed of South African aboriginal tribes — and Montreal's

Repercussion Theatre.

Now running in its sixth year, the festival has found success by offering audiences big-name talent as well as independent entertainment and serving up unique venues.

Along with Holly Cole, former Infidels singer Molly Johnson will perform with Susan Aglukark, a prominent Native-Canadian singer. On a less celebrated note, the Cantabile Choirs of Kingston will appear at the Grand Theatre at the end of August, while storyteller Stephen Guy-McGrath will perform a play with a musical flavour entitled, Spinning Yarns, running from August 5-8.

Performances will mainly take place at the Grand and Baby Grand Theatres. However, the Repercussion Theatre will host the only outdoor shows, bringing Macbeth and A Midsummer Night's Dream to Fort Henry on July 23 and 24.

The real strength of this particular festival is that most of the events and performers are suitable for all ages making it a family event.

The real strength of this particular festival is that most of the events and performers are suitable for all ages, making it a family event. The theatre, comedy and music involved is directed toward young audiences, and, with the exception of Macbeth, most children can handle the subject matter. The family element, coupled with the fact that ticket prices for most events are more than reasonable, the festival promises to attract many visitors.

So for the next 64 days, get out, sun and culture yourselves and check out an event unlike any other, which is unbelievably in your own backyard. The Kingston Summer Festival promises to treat you to a summer you'll never forget.

Clark vacation

A sweet summer breeze with Roots, Rock & Reggae

Wednesday evening's Roots, Rock & Reggae show at Clark Hall Pub.

Jon Coakley, a chemical engineering Masters student, served up his soulful mix of classic reggae with a jazzy twist, thanks to the accompaniment of talented saxophonist Sohrab Sbah. Coakley's bawaiian-style shirt, open-toe sandals and chin-length hair augment his island sound, which offers a sample of Caribbean charm to his folk style tunes. His acoustic guitar blends well with the classical saxophone melodies, resulting in alluring sounds that are both soulful and sultry.

His set included interpretations of Bob Marley, Ben Harper and others, among various self-composed songs. Coakley's penetrating personal compositions blend both his spiritual insight and intimate experience, expressing the connection between his heritage and the natural world. His song "Belt of Orion", details a spiritual episode during a visit to the Bahamas which illustrates the connection between himself and his cultural heritage. Coakley sings of his Bahamas connection because, "it is where I started, where I began."

Many of his songs incorporate similar spirituality, while others portray a more serious edge. Perhaps using his

Concert Review

By JOCELYN LAPORTE

Soft sounds and jazzy notes rang through the humid air amongst a modest-sized group of pub gatherers at Film in sight.

Review on page 12

Trashing Pumpkins.
CD review on page 14

Please see Coakley on page 13

THE PERFECT VIEW

Sodenburg's Out of Sight is a quick and slick flick

Out of the blue: ER's former resident Clooney puts away the scrabbies and gets clean with Jennifer Lopez in Out of Sight.

Film review

Out of Sight
Catarqui Cineplex Odeon

By SEAN SPRINGER

Smart, quick and slick are the elements Out of Sight wraps into a spicy fajita that sizzles and quakes in a provocative, cool and cruel world of criminals, cops and violence. Steven Sodenburg directs this clever satire adapted from Elmore Leonard's type-writer — in the same vein as the dark comedies Get Shorty and Jackie Brown, which are also Leonard's brain-child.

In the tradition of Get Shorty, Out of Sight elevates intrigue to heightened proportions through Leonard's brilliant characterization interpreted through a well-directed, resonant cast. Rather than creating the obvious partition for conflict between law enforcers and law abusers, Leonard entices the viewer with a battle of the minds between witty intellects and clueless degenerates.

The lives of George Clooney's character, Jack Foley, a notorious bank robber, and an FBI Marshall, Karen Sisco, played by Jennifer Lopez, collide just after Foley's semi-successful prison break.

Here commences the central element of fascination — the sexual tension between the two stars, which ensues in the back of a car trunk as Foley is forced to kidnap her with the help of his buddy, Buddy, played by the always-powerful and commanding Ving Rhames.

Foley and Sisco are the confident, sexy protagonists leading a pack of oddball personalities, including Oscar nominee Albert Brooks as a shady billionaire, each set against their morality, insecurity and eccentricity.

Returning from his award-winning performance as Ray Bones in Get Shorty, Dennis Farina brings back his astute sense of humour as Sisco's father, Marshall, who delivers one of the film's funniest scenes at the expense of Michael Keaton, playing a cameo role. Boogie Nights stars, Don Cheadle and Luis Guzman lead the airhead-criminal minds only to be outshone by Foley's naive, clueless and brilliantly hilarious henchman, played by Steve Zahn.

Zahn, along with a host of widely renowned actors, compliment the stars with offbeat antics while avoiding the common pitfall of portraying pointless violent genres by satirizing the macho, American image. Bodyguards, pompous hustlers and loan sharks appear irrational and silly — exposed by Foley and Sisco as the amateurs they truly are.

Relying on its characterization to the point that the plot becomes near trivial, Out of Sight is unable to bind its satire into a complete project and could have used a better resolution between Foley and Sisco. Still, it's hard not to fall in love with every character and become enraptured in the film.

Laden with funky beats from the '70s, slick urban cinematography and crisp editing, Out of Sight flows a smooth, yet sharp style that focuses on body language reverberated in clear, lucid dialogue.

Satirical wit, irony and hilarity scores through a film about characters rather than a film with characters.

Clooney and Lopez get ready for crime.

A Shot in the funny bone

Local bar has comedians roaring in on Thursdays

Heavy laughs: Host Peter Fulton warms up outside The Shot before Roaring Thursdays

PHOTO BY JEFF CHILD

By JEFF CHILD

Summer is finally here and no doubt you are already complaining about how much money you have spent desperately trying to entertain yourself at the many drinking establishments in downtown Kingston.

As you peel your hung over ass out of bed only to notice your rent money has literally gone down the drain again, you ask yourself, is this all summer has to offer? Fear not summer-fun seekers, The Shot Pool Pub has dared to offer you alternative entertainment all summer long. Combine one microphone, a few spotlights, large amounts of boisterous laughter and a seemingly endless supply of talent. What does this mix up to be? A venue which brings some of Canada's best stand up comedians to the City of Kingston, the Shot's Roaring Thursdays.

Every second Thursday, The Shot transforms into an authentic laugh machine where the atmosphere fits all expectations of what a comedy club should be. The cigarette smoke seems to hover around the microphone as eager fanatics anticipate the night of laughter that lies ahead. By the time the first comic takes the stage, the crowd is ready to sit back and howl their problems away.

The Shot is equipped not only with stellar comedians but also comes with its own resident heckler. With a cigar in hand, Don (a.k.a. heckler) resides like a sitting duck in the audience every Roaring Thursday, prepared to offer some of his own material which the comedians enjoy playing up.

While stand-up comedy has been on the fringes of live entertainment in Kingston for quite some time, The Shot, with the help of funny man Howard Dover, has brought performers of international and national recognition to our door step. Many of the comics that have appeared in The Shot's limelight perform regularly on the national circuit of Canada's only chain of comedy clubs, Yuk Yuk's. Kingstonsians no longer have to rely on reruns of Evening at the Improv to get their laughter fix.

As the laughter engine continues to pick up momentum, will we see The Shot trade in its pool tables to become Kingston's only permanent comedy club? According to the pub's co-owner Paul Scheib, "The Shot would love to expand to more comedy."

The cigarette smoke seems to hover around the microphone as eager fanatics anticipate the night of laughter that lies ahead.

However, sailing the comedy seas in Kingston are still uncharted and The Shot is not about to close down and re-open as a 24 hour-a-day laugh-till-you puke establishment. While The Shot has no plans on adding comedy to its line-up every night Scheib ensures that "[The Shot] will continue to offer professional calibre comedy to Kingston as the summer goes on and will also extend into the fall."

Each night The Shot offers a smorgesboard of comedic antics that will continue to offer an alternative to passing out to Pop-Up Video for the rest of the summer.

While the biggest draw of Roaring Thursdays is undoubtedly the line-up of professional entertainers who eagerly take the stage every second Thursday, The Shot also displays some of Kingston's home grown talent. Noteworthy is Peter Fulton, who is recognized as an accomplished local playwright and creator of the improvisational Spontaneous Combustion. Fulton generates as many chuckles as the professional laugh-makers.

Foremost, the greatest virtue of the shows is the unpredictability and the originality of the comics.

Each night The Shot offers a smorgesboard of comedic antics that will continue to offer an alternative to passing out to Pop-Up Video for the rest of the summer. Next Thursday look forward to local comedians Dave Hudson, Peter Fulton and Alan Park who are critically acclaimed both within Canada and on the international comedy circuit.

NEW COLLECTION SCHEDULE

GARBAGE

RECYCLING

Brought to you by the Municipal Affairs Commission of the AMS
FOR MORE INFORMATION CONTACT THE MAC
@ 545-6000 EXT.5178

MAC FACTS OF THE MONTH:

- 1) You could win $1000 designing a logo for the new City of Kingston.
- 2) The New Tenant Protection Act affects you!
- 3) The following positions are available in the MAC:
  - Student Employment Resource Manual Assistant Coordinator
  - High School Liaison Co-Chair
  - Housing Issues Taskforce Chair
  - Property Standards Taskforce Chair

Contact the MAC if these facts interest you!

WALKHOME

OPEN FROM 9 PM - 1 AM EVERY NIGHT!

Coakley croons crowd at Clark

Continued from page 11

scholastic perspective, Coakley rackets various social and political issues. His personal work illustrates strong ties to the Marley tradition, whom Coakley claims as an inspiration, presenting a range of serious topics within sexy, melodious tunes.

The show's tone took on a harsher edge later into the set with passionate songs, such as "Rejection Blues", delivering tales of rastafarian heritage and political justice. Coakley's sultry sound is presented naturally and relaxed in what he terms "a mix of folk, reggae and jazz."

The artist, who is both of Norwegian and Bahamian descent, claims his songs are not always soft, as with his band, Bug Daddy and the Shack, he delivers "a harder sound". Though obviously indebted to and impacted by his island roots, Coakley says he is not rastafarian, claiming, "I can relate to many rastafarian ideals, but I can also relate to Christian and other cultural ideals".

The Roots, Rock & Reggae show is a weekly venue held by Clark on Wednesday evenings. It will be continued throughout the school year, featuring live bands and artists in either the blues, rock or reggae categories. Coakley, who is seriously considering pursuing a music career after finishing his graduate studies at Queen's, can be seen throughout the upcoming year at both Clark Hall Pub and the Queen's Pub. His next venue will be the final Roots, Rock & Reggae program at Clark Hall on Wednesday, July 8.

If last week's show is any indication, the final summer show should draw a sizable crowd.

Resounding applause closed the show amongst a unanimously pleased audience. While expressions of enjoyment were shared, one happy pub-goer was enthusiastically exclaiming, "Jon is the sexiest man alive."

Aspiring artist, and perhaps one day a professional musician, Jon Coakley is a sure bet for an enjoyable evening of trendy, soulful tunes with an island feel.

in brief

Urban Trade: Canada's urban music makers, long snubbed by the industry at large, staged their own awards ceremony Saturday to honor the artists and personalities who create this country's best rap, hip-hop, R&B and reggae. Home Alone...no longer: Macaulay Culkin and Broadway actor Rachel Miner, both 17, married Sunday June 21 at an undisclosed location in Connecticut in front of family and friends. Culkin's film credits include Home Alone, My Girl, The Good Son and Richie Rich.

Dead Again: Grateful Dead guitarist Bob Weir is back on the road this summer with three other surviving members of the band that broke up in 1995 after Jerry Garcia's death.

Dylan directs: DreamWorks SKG has bought the feature film rights to the Sega arcade game,

The House of the Dead. Jesse Dylan, son of Bob Dylan, will direct and produce the feature version along with Jeff Rosen.

Intimate with Pupkins: On Sunday July 19, the day before their sold-out show at Massey Hall, Billy Corgan and company will perform live in the Much Music parking lot at 9p.m. and field questions from fans.

A Dead marriage: Bruce Willis and Demi Moore have decided to end their decade long marriage. Publicists have refused to say whether it is a separation or divorce. The couple married on November 21 1987 and have three daughters.

ARE YOU ALLERGIC TO RAGWEED?

(Runny, stuffy nose, sneezing, itchy eyes from mid-August to the frost)

The Allergy Unit at Kingston General Hospital is looking for volunteers to participate in an investigational drug study for the treatment of allergy (ragweed) symptoms. If you are between the ages of 16 and 65 with at least a 2 year history of ragweed allergy symptoms; you may be eligible to participate.

For More information, please call 546-5300 or 1-877-POLLEN5

Rotate This!

CD REVIEW

Smashing Pumpkins
Adore
Cinderful Music (BMI)

BY JEFF CHILD

Well it is certainly melancholy, but Smashing Pumpkins fans will likely be filled with infinite sadness if they expect that the Pumpkins' latest release Adore will match up to the Pennsylvania band's first two albums.

Once a heavy guitar driven band with fast beats and raging vocals, the Smashing Pumpkins have taken a path that appears to lead to the adult contemporary market.

Now, I'm not saying that lead singer Billy Corgan has adopted the sound of wheezing clarinets or grown long stringy hair like our favourite adult contemporary Kenny G, but as the Pumpkins emerge from their previous releases Sianese Dream and Melancholy and the Infinite Sadness, the band seems to be driven less by rage and hostility and more by the poetic nature of song-writing.

Overall, the Pumpkins seem to have emerged through the awkward stage of teen angst to define themselves in adulthood. The result is an album that plays it safe, which leaves the listener wishing that the Pumpkins never grew up.

Corgan has composed an album that depends less on distorted guitars and hammering drums, inserting more synthesizers and programmable drum machines. It almost seems as if Corgan has lost confidence in veteran bass player D'arcy and guitarist James Iha, although both played crucial roles in bringing the Pumpkins' music to life in the early 1990s.

It is quite evident that Adore is Billy Corgan's baby, having written and produced most of the songs.

Without the strong presence of Iha and D'arcy, Adore follows a slow predictable pace. Track 14, "For Martha" is accompanied by what sounds like Zamphire modeled pan-flutes. I mean, musically maturing is a virtue in the entertainment world, but trading your distortion pedal in for a couple of cheesy flutes is going right from the crib to the rocking chair.

However, whining aside, the Smashing Pumpkins have put together an album that is musically superior to any album that they have released before. The tracks are well composed and allow Corgan's artistic framework to finally shine through. The only problem is that many listeners will be waiting for the Pumpkins energetic musical rocket-ship to blast off, only to find out that they will have to board Adore's slower-paced and uneventful bandwagon.

Once a heavy guitar driven band with fast beats and raging vocals, the Smashing Pumpkins have taken a U-Turn, leaving their hard rock/alternative roots.

South Pacific Trailfinders

'Odyssey Travel is your South Pacific Travel Expert'

- ✓Oz/Kiwi Experience
- ✓VIP Backpackers
- ✓YHA Cards
- ✓Air passes
- ✓Bus/Rail passes
- ✓Computer visas
- ✓Tours-Connections, Contiki, Trek

- Long Reach $1959 via Europe, Asia
- Coral Route $2099 via South Pacific
- Boomerang $1809 via Asia
- Circle Pacific $2499 via South Pacific, Asia
- Aussie Special $1499

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
186 Princess St., Kingston (or Montreal)
L Leisure Travel 549-3553
L Long Haul Group Travel 549-3561
Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

Attention Advertisers!

The July '98 issue of THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL will be mailed out to all first year students. This is a great advertising opportunity at no extra cost, so please book your ads early.

Contact us!
Phone - (613) 545-6711
Email - journal@post.queensu.ca or visit us at 272 Earl St.

Get Out There!

Movies:

Playing at the Capitol Theatre from Tuesday, June 30 to Thursday, July 2: 546-5395

Dirty Work 7:25, 9:30
Deep Impact 1:00, 3:50, 7:10, 9:50

The Truman Show 1:30, 4:00, 7:00, 9:30

The Perfect Murder 1:20, 4:10, 7:20, 10:00

6 Days and 7 Nights 1:45, 4:20, 7:15, 9:45

The Horse Whisperer 1:10, 4:45, 7:15, 9:45

Mulan 12:30, 2:30, 4:40, 6:45, 8:45

Playing at the Capitol Theatre only on July 1 and July 2:

The Truman Show 1:30, 4:05, 7:10, 9:40

6 Days and 7 Nights 1:45, 4:20, 7:15, 9:45

Mulan 12:45, 2:45, 6:45, 8:45

The Perfect Murder 1:20, 4:00, 7:20, 10:00
Armageddon 12:30, 1:00, 3:45, 4:15, 7:00, 7:30, 10:15, 10:45

Playing at the Catarauqui Cineplex from Tuesday, June 30 to Thursday, July 2: 389-7442

Can't Hardly Wait 12:55, 3:05, 5:10, 7:20, 9:30
X Files 1:15, 1:30, 3:55, 4:25, 6:30, 7:00, 9:10, 9:40
Dr. Doolittle 12:45, 2:50, 4:50, 6:50, 9:00
Godzilla 1:05, 4:15, 7:10
Out of Sight 1:25, 4:05, 6:40, 9:20

Playing at the Princess Court Cinema until Wednesday July 2: 546-3456

La Promise 7:00
Fireworks 9:00

CFRC Radio

101.9 FM, Cable 90.9 Carruthers Hall

On-air Friday nights on CFRC!

6p.m. - 8p.m.: Hum & Soul Bother

8p.m. - 10p.m.: Orphalese Bend
10p.m. - midnight - Main Frame
Psychosis

Midnight - 3 a.m. - Unauthorized
Cranial Hookup

Video

Blockbuster Video
226 Queen St.

New Releases (Tuesday, June 30):
Half Baked, Wag the Dog, Police Story, Replacement Killers, Amistad

ELECTROLYSIS

Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely
Experienced electrolysis
Recommended by Physicians

HARRISON SALON

Kingston Since 1959
Free Consultation
Call 542-5595

THE HEART: where to go about finding it

Okay, sure. You know the drill: classes ended, some exams were written, and then everyone went home. Except us. Yes, despite playing out an entire year in Kingston, some of us decided to toss a summer into the pot, whether it be to take courses, find jobs, or a bit of both. For many, the first half of the summer has been a pleasant change from the school year: less stress, more sun. It's only natural, however, that at this point in the season you get tired of being in the same groove for so long, and start itching to get away for awhile.

That was my own desire a couple of weeks ago. Having finished my spring course without a hitch, and having several days off before my next shift at work I could feel it was time for a break, sort of a summer reading week. But where to go? Europe? Daytona? New York? Well, my bank account was really low, appearing to limit my options as far as all-inclusive resort destinations went. Just as I was giving up hope of escape, I remembered a quaint little resort that I've stayed at from time to time: a spacious three-bedroom bed and breakfast nestled amongst several sprawling acres of Ontario suburbia. This charming little home offers three meals a day, on site laundry facilities, and an (almost) unlimited use of the telephone, all at a very low price. Okay, in all honesty, I took a cheap alternative to a vacation and headed home. As most of you who have already gone home for a few days will agree, home is a really sweet place to go to from time to time. Despite the independence that living on your own brings, there's at least a little part in everyone that needs the comfort and security that only home can give.

A hometown, no matter the size, holds on to a piece of you when you leave. Returning home gives you that prodigal son or daughter feeling, and (for awhile) makes you feel whole again. And after months of cooking for yourself it can be a real treat to be able to sit back and enjoy some of mom's or dad's cooking. It's always tasty, often nutritious, and usually free. There are stories to hear, laughter to be had, old friends to see. It is, indeed, a non-alcoholic version of Cheers. Unfortunately, the consumption of more than a couple of beers in the course of an evening (a brief start for a lot of us) seems like the early stages of alcoholism to many parents. Therefore, except for the evenings out with hometown friends, returning home can be a bit of a dry spell (a wee bit more serious in the case of smokers). This is one of the ways in which students may find home a little less appealing than Kingston life. Others include, in varying capacities: intrusive and repetitive questioning about relationships, a 'slight' loss of privacy, and the slow realization that staying out past dawn is no longer seen as acceptable.

In spite of certain lifestyle changes, a trip home can be just the thing to provide much needed mental, physical and spiritual rest before the second half of the summer gets under way. Home: it's a nice place to visit, but I wouldn't want to live there ever again. Sorry mom.

BY JOHN MERRITT

Crap At A Glance

Days remaining until Armageddon: 9,981*

Days remaining until Armageddon (the movie) opens: 2

Days remaining until Armageddon (the movie) leaves: 14

Number of biographies in Stauffer Library: 27,285

Number of biographies on Culture Club: 1

Number of Herbs in Col. Sander's secret recipe: 12

Today's Peanuts Punchline: P.P.: Oh sure, you can't play Brahms on a canoe paddle. Huh?

Today's Charles S. Schultz Senility Rating: (On a scale of 1 to 10, 1 being amusing-grandfather-senile, 10 being scary-old-man-on-the-street-senile) 8

Number of 'Na's in Hey Jude: 229

Number of times the cat came back: 5

*Approximation of statistics required from John Denton, Bible Research & Investigation Co.

who knows how many more services we've added since this ad has been printed...

From simple black and white copies to high resolution colour imaging, Document binding, Course packet production, Web Design, Letterhead, Pamphlets, Booklets, Posters, the Publishing and Copy Centre is your one stop centre.

Call us at 1-613-545-6543 to see if we can do what you need...

We're not just copies anymore

P&C/C
The Publishing and Copy Centre

General Travel: 549-3553
Long Haul / Groups: 549-3561

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY THE JOURNAL

since 1873

TUESDAY, JULY 28, 1998

City Sports
Racket and Running Specialists
289 Princess St. (at Clergy)
(613) 542-4415

QP cost expands

By JOCELYN LAPORTE

Midway through renovations, the Queen's Pub expansion is costing the Alma Mater Society $70,000 more than anticipated in its preliminary budget.

"We are committed to turning this into a learning experience," said Gord Moodie, AMS vice-president (operations).

The original drawings and estimates projected the expansion of the pub would cost $130,000. These estimates were established over two years ago and the project "was already full steam ahead" when the current AMS council came into office, said AMS Services Director Sarah Armstrong.

Armstrong said the $130,000 figure was confirmed earlier this year. "Both the architect and the contractor felt it was a reasonable estimate," she said. The figure was also approved by the board of directors in April. "Everything seemed pretty much in line," she explained.

Then, the architect's bid a significantly higher cost than the original estimate, at which point, Jack Sinnott, director of the John Deutsch University Centre, contributed an extra $50,000 toward the project.

"He feels the expansion is a worthwhile venture for the University Centre," explained Moodie.

The project was tendered and several bids were submitted for the expansion, but all came in at higher costs than anticipated. After some restructuring, the expansion team determined another $20,000 would be required to complete the project, due to unanticipated costs that arose during the renovation process.

"[The JDUC] is an old building. There was some duct work discovered that was not planned for," said Armstrong. "The original estimates did not anticipate this extra cost."

Armstrong said the millwork sub-contractor's estimates for the expansion

A young Kingstonian and his friend enjoy a summer day in the park. For more commentary on summer, see page 9.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Campus thefts on the rise

By SHAWN BRIMLEY

The number of thefts and break-ins at Queen's is becoming a considerable problem. Since the beginning of January, there have been 133 incidents of theft under $5,000 reported to Queen's Security. The problem has grown in recent weeks as thefts on campus are occurring at unprecedented levels.

The Alma Mater Society offices in the John Deutsch University Centre have been hit by a string of surprisingly bold thefts. Starting around the end of May, a number of commissioners and members of the executive have had personal belongings stolen from their offices. In most instances, the thief entered the offices and left while the victims were only a few metres away.

Angela Pilas, AMS communications commissioner, had a number of personal possessions stolen, as well as a video camera belonging to Studio Q. "It appears as though the lock on my office was picked," said Pilas.

In most instances, the thief entered the offices and left while the victims were only a few metres away.

Academic Affairs Commissioner Milan Konopek had his wallet stolen from his office. "It's unfortunate," said Konopek, "as not having to close our doors all the time helped provide a nice, open atmosphere."

"The state of locks and keys is rather frustrating, as it's not sure how many master keys have been given out over the last few years," said AMS President Tom Stanley, who had his knapsack stolen while the office next to his was being used. Stanley raised the possibility that the theft of the Who's Where computer hardware last year resulted in a thief obtaining a master key.

"We're talking about different possibilities for improving the system of locks and keys for the student offices at Queen's. The AMS is definitely making a concerted effort to make sure that offices are secure as they can be," said Stanley.

"For now, all we can do is make more of a conscious attempt to close and lock our office doors every time we leave, even if just for a few minutes," Stanley explained.

Student death shocks Queen's

By KEITH GEREN

Two weeks ago, the student ghetto was unusually sombre in the glare of a sultry July sun as the sudden death of Mark Wilson stunned members of the Queen's University community.

Around Queen's, Mark was known as a positive force, a friendly and familiar face on campus, the kind of person who always smiled and always had a kind word to say.

"He was such a sweet, nice guy," said Robyn Barker, a fourth-year music student and Mark's housemate during the school year. "He was so involved, so proud to go to Queen's."

The fourth-year politics and geography medal was killed in a car accident in northeast Detroit during the early hours of the morning on July 12. Also killed were Mark's parents, Richard and Bonnie, his sister Alicia, and her three-year-old son Andrew.

The Wilsons lived in Courtright, a village 25 kilometres south of Sarnia, and were returning home from a wedding in Ohio when their Chevrolet Caprice was rear ended by a speeding sport-utility vehicle travelling in excess of 110 kilometres per hour.

The collision propelled the car 20 metres forward and caused the Caprice's gas tank to rupture.

The driver, a resident of Detroit who failed a breathalyser test, has been charged with five counts of second-degree murder.

Barker said acceptance of the tragedy has only begun to set in. "It still feels like Mark is on summer vacation," she said. "It probably won't really sink in until the fall when everyone comes back."

Barker added that it has been an especially painstaking process to go through Mark's belongings at the rented house they shared in Kingston.

"We've been looking through the boxes in the house, and every box of his that we open seems to have a different memory attached to it," she said.

Few people knew Mark better than his girlfriend, Lorraine Redekop, a third-year English and Politics medal.

"The best thing about him was that he always put others' needs ahead of his own," she said.

Redekop, who knew Mark for 10 months, also mentioned that he was

Please see Fond memories on page 5

Please see Extra costs on page 5

index

Volume 126, Issue 3
www.journal.queensu.ca

News	.1	Features	.9
Editorials	.6	A&E	.11
Op-Ed	.7	Sports & Fitness	.15
Science	.8	M&C	.19

WEATHERWATCH

Today
Mix of sun and cloud
High 25°C, Low 15°C;
POP 30%

Wednesday
Chance of scattered showers
High 24°C, Low 16°C;
POP 40%

Thursday
Sunny with cloudy
periods
High 25°C, Low 15°C;
POP 30%

Friday
Sunny with cloudy
periods
High 24°C, Low 13°C;
POP 30%

One-Hour Photo-Video-Digital Imaging

Our Downtown Store Open 7 Days !

Mon-Fri	9 to 9
Sat	9 to 5:30
Sun	11 to 5

FREE

2nd Set of Colour Prints
35mm or Advanced Photo
System at time of Development

See Store for Details

Camera Kingston
foto source™

114 Princess at Wellington 549-3747
650 Bath Road at Gardiners 384-3747

Stages

Monday Night
BEACH SLAM
Wacky Games!
Great prizes!

Thursday Night
Live to Air
with
106.7 FM The Border

Friday Night
FIESTA FRI!
We're having a fiesta
every Friday night!
Flaming Limbo!

FREE ADMISSION TILL 10:30 HALF PRICE TILL 11:00

For more information call 547-5553!

We are accepting applications!

Check out our web site on-line at: www.thehub-kingston.com

Education talk a disappointment

BY FIONA STEVENSON

The Alma Mater Society executive left disappointed after a meeting last Friday with the Ontario Minister of Education David Johnson, who they found uninformed of several of his own ministry's initiatives.

"For a person who is supposed to be the top man in education, he certainly wasn't the top man on education," said Milan Koponek, AMS academic affairs commissioner.

The AMS was the first student government to acquire a direct meeting with the Education Minister.

"In the past, the AMS has tried quite tirelessly to arrange a meeting," said AMS President Tom Stanley. "It seems to be quite a difficult thing to do."

Stanley, Vice-president (university affairs) Alison Loat, Vice-president (operations) Gord Moodie, and Koponek travelled to Queen's Park for the half-hour meeting to raise concerns about the government's failure to mitigate the effects of tuition increases and deregulated programs with an effective student assistance program.

"Each year when the province announces that tuition will rise yet again, it accompanies that announcement with a pledge to introduce a viable income contingent loan repayment plan (ICLRP) and other programs designed to lessen the financial onus on cash-strapped students. Unfortunately, while tuition fees do go up, almost invariably the desperately needed student assistance increases and innovations fail to materialize," Stanley said in a press release.

While the AMS officials hoped the meeting would be a fruitful discussion of the issues, they found the Minister to be poorly informed on student assistance issues and lacking an appreciation of the need to address student debt. "That was a barrier to good dialogue," Stanley said.

"We went into the meeting with a different anticipation of what his understanding would be about the issues," explained Moodie.

The Minister absorbed a significant portion of the time asking his assistant deputy minister and executive assistant to clarify and explain a number of the ministry's policies to him.

"It would have been nice to engage in more of a discussion and debate," said Loat.

However, the AMS representatives were able to deliver a message that Queen's students feel betrayed. "We certainly in no uncertain terms delivered the message that we're disappointed with all the broken promises," said Stanley.

The Minister did indicate that he hoped to see a framework for an ICLRP established this fall and a fully functional ICLRP operative by September, 1999. However, in light of the ministry's history of unfulfilled promises, the AMS remains sceptical.

"My fear is that... post-secondary education is the forsaken child of this government," Stanley said.

The 411 on the new Queen's Web site

BY LAURA MACINNIS

"It's a one-stop student life guide, on-line," said Mike Williams, describing his newly-designed Web page with pride and excitement.

Campus 411 Web site:
<http://www.campus411.com>

Campus 411, the brain-child of Williams and partners John P. Joseph and Steve Smith, is a Web site they decided to create earlier this summer to offer Queen's students a comprehensive campus life guide.

"There's this information that people need, but no one place where they can get it," explained Joseph.

Campus 411 offers tips on how to hook up utilities, date for under $10, and spend Thursday nights without drinking. The site includes jokes, recipes, horoscopes and games. It also features sections in entertainment, health and fashion, plus links to Queen's services, student governments and on-line media.

The classified section of Campus 411 is free to students, who can post items to buy or sell on the site.

Williams said the site is very thorough, and based on the collective experience of the design team. "We've been through it all," he explained. "It's information students will find useful."

Joseph said the information on Campus 411 is both "the facts plus our opinions on the facts."

"There's this information that people need, but no one place where they can get it."

— John P. Joseph, co-creator of Campus 411

The site is a project of Innovation Design Group, a company which Joseph, Williams and Smith started in Kingston. Innovation has done business with companies in Toronto, California and Australia and deals with "anything from pamphlets to Web interfacing... any facet of print or design media," Joseph said.

Joseph, Sci '97, was a 1997-98 Who's Where/What's Next co-editor. Williams, ArtSci '98, was the 1997-98 assistant manager for the Publishing and Copy Centre, and is currently advertising manager for the Queen's Pub. Smith, ArtSci '97, was a 1997-98 Alfie's assistant manager. The three will also appear as extras in the Christopher Walken film, Vendetta, being filmed in Kingston.

Joseph plans to expand the Campus 411 site to include price comparisons of various Kingston grocery stores and more personalized information for frequent visitors to the site. "I want to make it customized for individual students' interests," explained Joseph. "I'd like to make it more interactive."

Joseph and Williams said Campus 411 may design similar Web sites for other universities, depending on its trial run in the Queen's community. "If it works in Kingston, why wouldn't it work at any other university?" asked Williams, who predicts Campus 411 will become a fixture at Queen's. "This is here to stay," he said.

Williams (left) and Joseph have untangled the secrets of the Web.

PHOTO BY RENEE HUANG

Change in services

BY STEPHANIE CARVIN

This September, hungry members of the Queen's community will come back to a newly renovated Hill and Sidewalk Café. Both campus eating areas are undergoing a renovation that, according to Jim Fougere, general manager of Queen's food services, will improve the variety of food and the speed of service on campus.

At the Hill in Mackintosh-Corry Hall, Subway is being moved and expanded to offer two lanes of service. The new food service outlet will replace the area that sold soup and pastry items to patrons in the outside hallway. Coffee and snacks once available on the countertop are being relocated to the old Subway location.

At the Sidewalk Café, the renovation includes what food services calls an "action cooking station" that will feature a stir fry "cook to order format" with induction cookers, said Fougere.

"Students will be able to watch as their food is prepared fresh," he said. "Each day there will be a feature of a chicken, beef, pork, seafood, and vegetarian stir fry." The station, yet to be named, joins present venues Tim Horton's, Pizza Hut and the Fireside Grill. The seating capacity of both areas will remain the same.

"We are optimistic that [the action station] will be quite popular for lunch or a late snack," Fougere said. "It will be closer for a lot of students to a home cooked meal."

The renovations are being financed by the university and Marriott food services has been heavily involved in the design. According to Fougere, many of the ideas incorporated into the renovation came from extensive customer service surveys conducted by Marriott. He said 450 randomly selected Queen's staff and students were interviewed, ensuring that many of the changes meet the perceived needs of their customers.

The renovations are scheduled to be completed during the week of August 17. "Since classes are starting late this year, it will give us a chance to be running and have the bugs worked out before most of the students and staff arrive," Fougere said. "We will be ready to go."

What's Up with What's Next?

BY SHAWN BRIMLEY AND LAURA MACINNIS

For the first time, there is competition for What's Next as the agenda book of choice at Queen's. A new student publication called What's Up will be hitting campus this fall, and it has What's Next editors and some AMS officials worried.

Targeted primarily at science and engineering students, What's Up is being designed and marketed by Scott Seigler, Sci '99, Gary Kosinsky, Sci '99, and Karen Schaefer, Arts '99.

"It's an excellent science and engineering handbook," said Seigler.

The new agenda will include reference sections for each of the 10 science and engineering disciplines, as well as periodic and conversion tables. What's Up will also have a ruler which will clip in and out of the book.

The Queen's Engineering Society (EngSoc) will distribute the planners to first-year students for free, and the planners will be available in September at the Queen's bookstore for $2.50.

"We're giving them to EngSoc to distribute to the first-year students. In exchange, EngSoc is donating about $1,000 to a charity fund on our behalf," said Seigler.

He believes money will go towards the EngSoc Frosh Week Bursary Fund, a charity which provides money for those students who can not afford to pay the Frosh Week fee.

"[What's Up editors] are essentially using our built identity to market Kingston advertisers."

— Mike Beltzner, What's Next editor

Seigler and his partners have come under fire from some who believe that What's Up is too similar to the official Queen's student planner, What's Next.

Owen Minns, the Alma Mater Society's media and services director told The Journal that Seigler had applied to be the Who's Where/What's Next editor, but when he wasn't hired, "he decided he was going to work on his own."

"[What's Up] sounds very suspiciously similar to the What's Next," Minns added.

Mike Beltzner, What's Next editor, said he is not happy with the development of a new student planner because of the similarity between the publications' names and the fact that What's Up is taking advantage of the good reputation established by What's Next.

"It came as a very, very large surprise to us," said Beltzner. "They are essentially using our built identity to market Kingston advertisers."

The primary concern with What's Up, according to Minns and Beltzner, is the confusion that has been occurring when both publications seek local advertising dollars.

"The What's Next editors have found that when they have approached some advertisers, those advertisers had thought they had already advertised in the official student government publication," Minns said.

Seigler disagrees that What's Up is competing for the same advertising space as What's Next.

Most of the advertisers, Seigler said, "are almost exclusively corporate sponsors who are the businesses who not only have projects to sell, but will likely seek to hire science and engineering students down the road."

"It's not going to be a money-making venture."

— Scott Seigler, What's Up co-editor

Beltzner is concerned that competition with What's Up will lead to lower sales profits for What's Next this coming year.

"We use the revenues from the What's Next to cover the costs of the Who's Where," Beltzner said. "Whereas we don't make a profit from this, Scott [Seigler] is making a personal profit."

Seigler made a point of denying any personal gains from the creation of the new student planner. "It's not going to be a money-making venture at all. But we're not losing money either."

Seigler said What's Up could be something that EngSoc and the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society may wish to take over as a joint venture next year.

"If there is minor slush-money left over, that sort of thing would go into the business account which will be owned by whoever takes it over next year," Seigler said. "We're not making a cent."

Agnes Etherington Art Centre renovations (above) are expected to continue until the fall of 1999. The $6-million expansion will improve upon gallery space, create a new front entrance on University Avenue, and allow the art gallery's entire collection to be stored in climate-controlled conditions inside the centre. The temporary gallery is located at 218 Barrie St. for the next 16 months.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Cautious first year for Food Bank

BY FIONA SCANNELL

While most on-campus services lost money during the 1997-98 school year, the Alma Mater Society Food Bank hardly put a dent in its budget. Of the $3,000 budgeted last year for perishable food, only $200 was spent.

The new coordinator for the food bank, Eric Morris, attributed the difference between the budgeted amount and the actual expenditures to a 1996-97 budget designed with the intention of "playing it safe."

"Usually groups budget to break even," Morris explained. "In the case of the AMS Food Bank, they picked a large number and came in way under."

Morris said he could not comment on why the excess funds were not used to keep the Food Bank's shelves fully stocked throughout the 1997-98 year. He did suggest, however, that the people running the service last year were conservative in their spending, because it was the first time the AMS has funded a food bank and there were no clear guidelines on how much should have been spent.

"The AMS Food Bank... picked a large number and came in way under."

— Eric Morris, AMS Food Bank coordinator

Alison Loat, AMS vice-president (university affairs), said the 1997-98 AMS audit has just been completed and, therefore, she did not have any concrete figures available regarding the surplus Food Bank funds. However, she agreed with Morris that last year's coordinators were cautious with their spending.

Morris is currently working on the budget for the coming academic year, which Loat said should be ready by mid-August.

While there were talks last year about closing the Food Bank due to the low number of students using it, this is not a concern at the present time. "Word of mouth seems to be increasing business," Morris said. "The people coming to the food bank tend to know each other from similar services."

Approximately 12 to 15 students currently visit the AMS Food Bank each week. It is expected that, on average, one person takes home food for two to three people, and Morris estimates that 40 people a week rely on the AMS Food Bank. He sees new people come in every week, and said he will not be surprised if the Food Bank becomes even busier as students run out of money near the end of summer.

Students are not required to undergo reference checks or demonstrate financial need to use the Food Bank, contrary to standard food bank procedures. "If somebody comes in it's assumed they're there because they need it," Morris said.

"It's more informal. It seems less like a handout and more like a store where everything's free."

— Eric Morris, AMS Food Bank coordinator

The AMS Food Bank is also different from other local food banks because it allows patrons to choose which items are taken home.

Food banks typically portion food

Eric Morris, Food Bank coordinator. PHOTO BY PAUL HESLER

into hampers, taking the element of choice away from the customers. "It's more informal. It seems less like a handout and more like a store where everything's free," he said.

Morris said this system also reduces waste, by ensuring patrons are not given food they do not want.

Morris expects to spend about $500 of the Food Bank budget by the end of the summer, which is more than twice the amount spent on food during the Food Bank's first year in operation. There was a very successful food drive in April, but items such as canned fruit, milk, bread and cereal are always in demand, he said.

The AMS Food Bank accepts donations of both food and money at its 272 Earl St. location in the basement of The Journal house, and is open Mondays and Thursdays between 4 and 6 p.m.

Queen's Chinese Catholic Community
皇后大學天主教信仰生活團

HELLO! We are a group of Chinese Catholics and non-Catholics students. Our purpose is to deepen our faith in God through supporting and sharing with each other. Our daily activities include every Friday 7:30pm Newman House Cell Meeting and a weekly Bible-Study Session. Our first gathering will be:

Sept 13 Sun 11:00am Dunning Aud Mass
Sept 18 Fri 7:30pm Newman House Cell Meeting

If you are interested, please contact one of us:
Cecilia (Kingston) 416-546-5237 Jeremy (BR) 452-28733131
Paul (Toronto) 416-2981851 Scholastica (Vancouver) 604-276781

Hope to hear from you soon!
Please visit us at <http://www.ams-queensu.ca/qccc>

- Votre Nom - Sandwich - Notables -
- Jeanne Pierre - M - Tommy Hilfiger -
- Part Two Women's - North 44 -
- Matinique - Perry Ellis -
- Tommy Hilfiger Women's -

Sir Gawain
FOR MEN AND WOMEN
CLOTHING FOR THE CONTEMPORARY MIND

How to find us.

Sir Gawain
FOR MEN AND WOMEN
CLOTHING FOR THE CONTEMPORARY MIND

Roots Kingston
Princess Street across from the Grand Theatre

Sir Gawain Fashion Clothes
On the corner of Princess & Ontario

Welcome, Bienvenue, Wilkommen.

Visit Canada On Your Next Trip To Princess St.

Footwear, fine leather goods, and clothing made in Canada for the World.

ROOTS KINGSTON

229 Princess Street - 546-7668

Fondly remembered

Continued from page 1

known for his exuberant pride of being a Queen's student.

"The years he spent at Queen's were the happiest of his life, I'm quite certain of that," she said.

Redekop described Mark as someone with an infectious positive personality.

"The whole time I knew him, I saw him in a bad mood maybe twice," she explained.

When his friends, co-workers or professors spoke of Mark, all described him as an out-going and spirited individual, someone who was simply impossible to dislike.

"He was just a good decent person," said Mel McCague, Arts and Science

Undergraduate Society vice-president. "You'd never hear him say a bad word about anyone."

McCague said she got to know Mark last year due to his involvement with ASUS. Mark served both as a representative to the Alma Mater Society and as a coordinator of the departmental student council program.

"He did so much for us," she said. "He put so much time and energy into helping."

Greg Baker, who worked with Mark on the DSC program last year, said he has only fond memories of a person who continually emitted a positive aura.

"He was always smiling whenever you saw him," said Baker. "When he talked, people always listened because his contributions were consistently strong." "Mark was of the salt of the earth," said Rowland Tinline, a geography professor who taught Mark last fall. "He was one of those students who got along with everybody."

McCague and Barker were among several Queen's students who attended the Wilsons' funeral in Sarnia on July 16.

"It was really big, so in that sense it was overwhelming," said Barker. "But it was nice because I got to meet a lot of Mark's high school friends."

"But it also felt wrong," she added. "It felt like I should be meeting his friends for a totally different reason."

Due to the small number of students in Kingston during the summer, Queen's chaplain Rev. Brian Yealland plans to wait until the fall to hold a memorial service for Mark when students return.

The devastating loss of Mark Wilson shattered the illusion of a peaceful and carefree summer existence. He will be sadly missed by his friends, fellow students, and professors alike.

Mark Wilson, "a good decent person." PHOTO COURTESY OF ROBYN BARKER

Extra costs unforeseen

Queen's Pub renovations cost a small fortune. PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Continued from page 1

of pub woodwork also came in higher than the architects had originally estimated. The additional $20,000 required for this work was approved by the board of directors in July, increasing the board's contribution to $150,000.

Moodie confirmed that a lot of the extra costs were derived from continuation of the woodwork, however, he maintained the work was important. "It is an expensive atmosphere to create but it is also a good investment," he said.

To help avoid similar problems in the future, the AMS is providing the board of directors with a breakdown of the project at the next board meeting in August.

Moodie suggested that, in the future, more elaborate sketches be appraised. "Ours was a bit conceptual," he stated, also recommending that outside agents be hired to oversee large-scale ventures and keep costs low.

Moodie said similar incidents have occurred with past expansions and difficulties encountered by the QP expansion team will not put an end to future expansion projects by Queen's and the AMS.

The project completion date is also not expected to be significantly affected by the financial setbacks; the pub interior should be completed by mid-August and the exterior later that month. "It will be ready to go for September," said Armstrong.

Some of the new additions to the expanded pub include a hardwood bar top over 20 feet long, an increase of draft taps to 12, a pool area and larger food preparation areas.

"We hope to achieve a more fluid atmosphere in order to keep traffic moving through the pub," explained QP Manager Mark Picketts, who is already receiving booking requests for the new pub, and speculates the improvements will greatly increase the bar's patronage.

WALKHOME IS OPEN ALL SUMMER LONG!!!

545 - 2662

9 P.M. - 1 A.M. EVERY NIGHT!

THE AMS WALKHOME SERVICE IS PROVIDED FREE OF CHARGE TO ALL STUDENTS, STAFF AND FACULTY OF QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY IN ORDER TO PROVIDE THE OPTION OF BEING SAFELY AND COMFORTABLY ACCOMPANIED WHILE WALKING ON CAMPUS AND IN THE SURROUNDING AREA. SO, IF YOU WOULD LIKE A TEAM TO ACCOMPANY YOU ALONG YOUR WAY, JUST GIVE US A CALL!

WE WOULD ALSO LIKE TO THANK OUR SPONSORS: TORDIFF COMMUNICATIONS FOR THEIR RADIO SUPPORT, AND CYCLEPATH FOR OUR SIX PELGOT BIKYLEM CYCLEPATH

139 PRINCESS ST.
KINGSTON, ONTARIO K7L 1B7
542-3616

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

Squeegees reveal poverty

TORONTO MAYOR MEL LASTMAN seems to believe that the solution to urban poverty lies in low-cost housing or, more specifically, a warm jail cell.

Lastman and Toronto police Chief David Boothby are calling for tougher laws to rid the streets of squeegee kids. Lastman would have us believe that these squeegee brandishing youths are a menace and a danger to "motorists and women."

The only threat they really pose, however, is to our peace of mind. Whether we like it or not their presence forces us to acknowledge how widespread the problem of youth poverty has become. While they may be a nuisance to some motorists and pedestrians, cleaning windshields is hardly a threat to public safety.

Lastman's pledge to rid the city of this "blight" reflects how invisible the poor and homeless have become in Canada. Panhandlers are tolerated only as long as they remain unobtrusive and passive. Since the existence of squeegee kids cannot be easily ignored, they have become pariahs. To claim that they invade our privacy makes little sense in a society that allows corporations to call us at home unsolicited and sell us even better long distance plans. Squeegee kids often have little control over their choice of lifestyle. To label them as criminals and chase them off street corners is simply a band-aid solution as long as they have no better place to go.

Whether we like it or not their presence forces us to acknowledge how widespread the problem of youth poverty has become.

Perhaps Lastman would see this if he took the time to stop and talk to them, rather than just speeding by in his Mercedes. Squeegee kids may not actually leave our car windows any cleaner than before, but they do give us a view of our inability to deal with issue of youth poverty in Canada.

Free trade ties our hands

THE PERILS OF FREE TRADE BECAME more clear last week when a health risk in Canada was deemed less important than the interests of an American company. In order to comply with NAFTA, the Canadian government was forced to rescind a ban on MMT, a fuel additive once described by Prime Minister Jean Chrétien as an "insidious neurotoxin that could have truly horrific effects on Canadians."

We have compromised our right to choose domestic policies that are in the best interests of Canadians.

Moreover, Ottawa agreed to pay $13-million (U.S.) in damages to Ethyl Corp., the maker of MMT, due to a lack of scientific evidence that the substance is as harmful as the government claims. Regardless of the veracity of these claims, this case demonstrates a disturbing consequence of signing trade agreements such as NAFTA. In order to stay competitive in the global market, we have compromised our right to choose domestic policies that are in the best interests of Canadians. While it is necessary to surrender a degree of economic sovereignty in order to benefit from free trade, we have gone too far in giving foreign corporations the right to challenge our laws as if they are Canadian citizens.

Although our participation in other organizations, such as the United Nations, presupposes a commitment to a shared set of values, we still retain cultural and political distinctiveness. Likewise, being a member of NAFTA should not preclude our ability to set our own environmental and health standards. If we fail to protect this right, Canadian society will become more of a reflection of market forces than of our own principles.

Bons Mots: No nation was ever ruined by trade.
—Benjamin Franklin

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF
Keith Gerein
Tara Mansbridge

MANAGING EDITOR
Laura MacInnis

NEWS EDITOR
Fiona Stevenson

ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS
Shawn Brimley
Renée Huang
Vazant

EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
Paul Heiler

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR
Stefan Murray

ASSISTANT ARTS EDITORS
Sarah Crosbie
Lilian Kim

FEATURES EDITOR
Sean Springer

OP-ED EDITOR
Todd Jackson

SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Adam Kaminsky

ASSISTANT SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Robert MacNeil

MISC. EDITOR
Ken Butland

GRAPHICS EDITOR
Janice Chan

THE READER EDITOR
Jesse Craig Belringer

SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT
John Bowman

SPECIAL PUBLICATIONS EDITORS
Elizabeth Frogley
Shandley McMurray

PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS
Alex Kronby
James Terjanian

WEB EDITOR
Marco Lui

CONTRIBUTORS

Nicolet Brunetmeyer, Stephanie Carvin, Mark Johnson, Jocelyn Laporte, Fiona Scannell, Jody Suggs, Bernhard Wu.

ADAM KAMINSKY

Show me the McMoney

EACH YEAR, WITH EVERY NEW 10 per cent tuition hike comes 10 per cent less fun money and heck, everybody wants to have money for fun.

As I pondered the latest increase the other day, while mindlessly stuffing envelopes and inputting data so I could afford to pay tuition, I had a moment of clarity.

The solution came to me like a sign off in the distance. Actually it was a sign off in the distance. I was looking out my window and spotted a pair of oversized McDonald's arches.

Commerce students could take a glance into the future by going to classes at the Deloitte and Touche Dunning Hall.

Corporate sponsorship is the answer to all of our tuition problems, I thought.

With all of the complaints about there being no money in the university coffers, I am sure that Coke would be perfectly happy to add a little bit of cash to the university's account. That is, if the administration is willing to make Queen's a 'Coke only campus'. Similar deals have been made at other Canadian universities, and I can't imagine why students would complain. A cola monopoly on the university campus could not really hinder an individual's choice to the point of protest, especially if it increases the amount of money students have to spend at Alfie's or other favourite fun spots.

It would not have to stop with the products we consume on campus, all of the buildings could also change names. Why study at the Stauffer Library when the school could earn a few extra dollars by renaming it the Chapters Stauffer Library? Or commerce students could take a glance into the future by going to classes at the Deloitte and Touche Dunning Hall.

Who really needs to name a building after a province? Ontario Hall could be the first to go by becoming the Microsoft Study Centre. They would probably outfit the whole place with the latest in high technology gear, then the students would be the real winners.

Then there are the beer companies. They would certainly jump on the building-naming bandwagon by attaching their company's moniker to the various athletic facilities. The Molson Jock Hartly Arena, Labatts Richardson Stadium and Sleemans Bartlett Gym would all quickly become realities. The revenue from simply placing a name on a building reducing the painful, fun-draining tuition.

For those who feel that this is an oversimplification of a complex issue regarding the interference of 'big business' in university curriculum, the fact is that they already influence the way things are done, so we might as well get some beer money out of them while they are at it.

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Kraif

SALES REPRESENTATIVES
Kari Brintnell
Andrew Cooke
Kristian Li

ADVERTISING MANAGER
Nick DuPrey

ADVERTISING DESIGNERS
Katherine Colbourn
Annie Go

SYSTEMS MANAGER
James Clarke

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Tuesday, July 28, 1998 • Issue 3 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of The Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.

Contents ©1998 by the Queen's Journal; all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Goss Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Gananoque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions.

Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2H8
Telephone—editorial: 613-545-2800 advertising: 613-545-6711
Fax: 613-545-6728. Email: journal@post.queensu.ca
Internet: http://www.journal.queensu.ca
Circulation: 6,000
Issue 4 will be published on September 10, 1998.

OP-ED

OPINIONS AND COMMENTARY

University: To earn or to learn?

SO YOU WANT TO BE A SOMEBODY. There are stars in your eyes and sugarplums dancing all around. Not yet one class into post-secondary education and you're already answering the most frequently asked question: What will you do with that degree? "I'm gonna be a doctor, gonna be a lawyer, gonna be Bill Gates." These are lofty goals which will be hard to attain. Still, it's likely that you wouldn't have made it this far without them.

In the minds of most, a university degree is an entry pass into the job market. Skip go and collect a higher starting salary. A degree is a financial investment. As with stocks, a program of study is selected with a view to future profit. In an era of upwardly mobile tuition, potential graduates tote a growing list of concerns. The current burdens which are being placed upon students, be they right or wrong, will inevitably translate into demands for change. Like any public company, a university must decide whether to accommodate its shareholders or draw a line in the sand.

The relationship between education and employment has always been murky. Recently the Ontario government set up a fund to promote computer information technologies. This money is available to any computer sciences department that can double its intake. There is a need in the job market for programmers and the government has moved to address this need. Call it the Waterloo syndrome; there are many who endorse the view that the modern university is a job training centre. Industry directed education is not a bad thing in its proper place. As a society, however, we must decide whether that place is a university.

Post-secondary education is not for the faint of heart. In the ideal world a university challenges and expands the horizons of good and great minds, regardless of career aspirations. A diploma should indicate an ability to think in a constructive and original manner about complex issues in the arts and sciences. Undergraduates, however, are rarely called upon to test their limits. It often seems that serious discourse is reserved for the ranks of graduate studies. Employers are looking for task oriented skill sets and this is how many departments now market themselves. Here on the ground it looks like the shift away from academe has already begun.

The modern intellectual is being driven underground. A short time ago university students in this country were curious people. They asked questions and demanded answers. That was then. Now a simple trivia quiz on Canadian history is an ordeal. Even our academics are being pushed over to the soft shoulder. Without the word Prozac appearing in the title, intelligent literature rarely makes it to the best seller lists. This is the direction of progress, fewer moveable feasts and more chicken soup. I came to Queen's wanting to have "dinner with Andre", only to find that the tables were all booked for a technologies conference.

MARK JOHNSON,
ARTS '99

Industry directed education is not a bad thing in its proper place. As a society, however, we must decide whether that place is a university.

Letters to the editors

AIDS Misrepresented

Dear Editors:

While I respect and agree with The Journal's attempt to warn us as Canadians about the dangers of handguns, I was outraged as I read the article "Fire Down Below" (pg.5 Tuesday, June 30/98). In large bold print we read in column four: "In Canada, more people die annually as a result of firearms than AIDS." This is grossly inaccurate.

Eric Morris reports that the number of deaths due to firearms in 1993 in Canada was 76. If he had consulted the Laboratory for Disease Control, Health Canada, he would have known that in 1993 the number of reported deaths due to AIDS in Canada was 1,333. Health Canada adds, "it is important to mention that deaths among AIDS cases presented here are under counted." The two are hardly comparable.

As a pacifist I applaud Mr. Morris' effort to ban all firearms, but HIV/AIDS is every bit as much a bullet soaring through our land.

In bold type, highlighted in column one Mr. Morris points out that handgun fatalities are, "the leading cause of death for blacks ages 15-24." I would point out that in the United States, according to the Center for Disease Control, AIDS is not only the leading cause of death among African-Americans aged 25-44 but in fact the leading cause of death of ALL AMERICANS aged 25-44. In 1995 more than 71,000 new cases of AIDS were reported in the U.S., while over 216,000 Americans had to visit the hospital that year due to HIV-related illnesses.

As a pacifist I applaud Mr. Morris' effort to ban all firearms, but HIV/AIDS is every bit as much a bullet soaring through our land. The flippant attitude towards AIDS in this article, particularly the erroneous suggestion that Canada spends "billions of dollars to eradicate it" (we should be so lucky!!) is not worthy of a publication student money goes to support.

HENRY DYCK,
M.A.2

Kudos on Extra

Dear Editors:

Campus Security would like to commend The Queen's Journal for their account of the attempted abduction on campus. This extra edition was printed specifically to inform the Queen's community of this serious crime and to assist them in making more conscience decisions about their personal safety. Laura MacInnis wrote an excellent article and we look forward to the continuing community support of The Queen's Journal.

LOUISE FISH
DIRECTOR
CAMPUS SECURITY

SUE WAGAR
CAMPUS RELATIONS COORDINATOR
CAMPUS SECURITY

Write for Op-Ed

Do you support a position which needs to be talked about? Here's your chance to spark the discussion. Send your opinion of 500-600 words to The Queen's Journal and we'll send it to everyone else. Let your observations resonate through the community. Call Todd at 545-2800.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS POLICY

The Editors of The Journal want to hear from readers. All letters must include the writer's name, signature, and telephone number. Any letter that is legible, legal, and literate will be published if space permits. Those that are as brief and direct as possible will have a better chance of publication. Drop off letters to The Journal House, 272 Earl St., or e-mail them to journal@post.queensu.ca.

See You in Kingston!

- ✓ Student Class Fares
- ✓ Budget Fares
- ✓ Custom Long Haul Fares
- ✓ Rail Passes Worldwide
- ✓ Hostel Cards
- ✓ ISIC Cards
- ✓ SWAP

- ✓ Sun Groups
- ✓ Ski Groups
- ✓ City Escapes
- ✓ Travel Books
- ✓ Travel Insurance
- ..... and more!

A World of Student Travel
Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
186 Princess St., Kingston, Ont. K7L 1B1
General Travel 549-3553 Long Haul/Group Travel 549-3561
Email: Odyssey@odyssey-travel.com

SCIENCE

Frosh Embryology

Three science students reflect on the first-year experience

By JOHN BOWMAN

In September of 1993, I first stepped on to this campus as a Queen's science student, and, as such, I was as cocky a bastard as you're ever likely to meet.

I was registered as a biochemistry student, and so I separated from my frosh group for a moment to have my course selections approved by a faculty advisor housed in Bortrell Hall. It must have been a Wednesday, because I got perfectly lost following the fake campus map on the back of that morning's Golden Words (dumb frosh, I know). When I finally found Bortrell and the advisor's office, I tentatively walked through the doorway, my face decorated with Tricolour grease paint, my hands clutching my registration papers.

After an awkward introduction, I handed over the documents holding My Future, at least for the next year or five. The advisor looked down his nose and through his reading glasses at the form. After a moment, he pointed out that I had registered for both CHEM 116 and PHYS 105, both advanced level first-year courses, intended for students taking majors in those disciplines.

"Well," I replied as explanation, "I did pretty well in chemistry and physics in high school, so I thought I'd try it out."

He responded to this unadulterated arrogance by turning to me, his eyes peering over those glasses of his, and giving me a look that could be roughly translated as: "Wow, you just don't have a shadow of a ghost of a clue, do you?"

And then he signed the papers. Probably to teach me a lesson.

So, that's how I ended up in the Stirling Hall lecture theatre, along with 150 hard-core physics geeks, of the late, great Dr. Chau.

Dr. Chau was an excellent professor — brilliant, patient and funny. He memorized not only all of our names, but also where each of us sat in the lecture hall. But even having a talented teacher doesn't change the fact that physics is hard stuff. We struggled through more problems on rope-climbing monkeys, falling chains, Gaussian surfaces, and point charges than I care to remember. I don't even want to talk about the labs.

Our numbers in that lecture hall dwindled over the year, taking steep plunges immediately after mid-terms were returned. Those of us that remained, of course, took due pride in the fact. I mean, we had t-shirts made declaring "I survived PHYS 105." It was something of a tradition.

Personally, I think the point of all the required courses in first-year science and engineering, besides preparing you for what's to come, is to expose you to a variety of disciplines so that you'll know unequivocally what field you don't want to get into.

In fact, I did so poorly in PHYS 105 — I barely scraped through with a pass — that I had no choice but to transfer to a Biology and Physics medical program and take even more physics courses. Electromagnetism? Relativity and Quanta? Bring 'em on!

Maybe I should have registered in PSYC 100 in first year and taken a long, hard look at the chapter on masochism — maybe it would explain what's wrong with me.

By BERNHARD WU

Five years and 15 pounds ago, I started my undergraduate degree at Queen's. And just five pounds ago, I started my masters. My weight is not the only thing that has changed in that time.

As a stary-eyed frosh from the steel city, my first impression of Queen's was that it would be a perfect place for me to have a good time for a few years while learning some fascinating things.

During my first year, I quickly realized that my friends back home were foolish for being impressed by my meagre "genius." Mediocrity seemed to be the name of the game as a freshman. I no longer hoped for grades in the 90s, or even in the high 80s. Instead I was just hoping to be average and settling for a pass. However, I did do better than average in one respect that year; my final first year average plummeted 20 per cent from my high school marks instead of the prescribed 15 per cent.

The exams which gave rise to my less than spectacular marks were almost always a chaotic nightmare. I have vivid memories of one set of midterms where I had six exams in five days, not to mention two lab reports. The labs themselves were sometimes interesting but were led by grad students who often seemed indifferent — or perhaps just tired. Did they forget the madness they went through during their undergraduate studies?

Despite my lacklustre start, I ended up enjoying my studies in biology so much that I stayed on in the department to pursue a masters degree.

As a seasoned veteran of the academic game, I was shocked to discover the amount of responsibility and work that is involved in pursuing a masters. Research is definitely the primary focus of my studies, but it's tough to do essentially the same thing, altered slightly from one experiment to the next, over and over with the hopes of having a different result. I have discovered that balancing my research, course work, a limited social life, and lab demonstrations is not an easy task. Students expect to have all the answers spoon-fed to them and so many of them seem to lack initiative (or is it hours in a day?) Often when I work as a teaching assistant, I find myself reminded by a voice in the back of my mind screaming, "How soon we forget!"

Who knows how I'll feel in a few more years? If all works out as planned I will have spent six years at Queen's — all of which will be well spent.

By NAOMI BRUNEMEYER

It wasn't kitsch to be in the 'sciences' in first year. Every Friday before noon my Physics 107 assignment was due and every Thursday night, I would watch my friends leave for the allure and glow of DIPSO Thursdays at AJ's while I sat with my pencil and calculator in hand trying to grasp projectile motion.

The separation between Arts and Sciences becomes painfully clear as soon as you set foot on to campus for Orientation Week. One of the chants of the Commerce kids is "Hey, hey that's OK. You're going to work for me someday!" and the ArtScis respond with "Hey, hey that's OK. We don't have a class today!" Who were they kidding? I had over 25 hours of class a week in first year, with a miserable Friday afternoon chemistry lab.

The stereotype of science geeks is alive and well in first year. All people in science must have no social skills, hiding away from the real world in our laboratories to concoct the cure for our painful acne. We don't read literature, can't engage in intelligent political banter, are over-analytical and love photosynthesis. The flip side of this is that first-years in science often pull some superior high ground over arts students, believing our programs are harder and writing essays is so easy.

Even within the sciences there is dissension. We rank the sciences. The first year experience can attest to this. You can take 'I survived Physics 105 for suicides', 'Physics 106, the respectable Physics', or 'Physics 107 for the junior high variety of velocity, distance, and time.' We consider Physics to be the 'hardest', then Chemistry, then Biochemistry, and last Biology. Who can respect a department who reveres some butterfly-collecting Victorian like Charles Darwin, who had nothing better to do with his time than develop the theory of evolution?

The worst thing about the first-year science experience is the feeling that you aren't doing science. You sit at your labs that are computer generated, manipulating data that has previously been recorded. You begin to memorize equations, and you don't actually know why litmus paper changes colour anymore. And who cares if time can be a negative number in a physics assignment?

But it does get better and the wonder of science and life and the pursuit of knowledge are rejuvenated later on in your studies. You just need to get your 65 per cent and move on.

This ain't no high-school mind bender

The Miyagi Triangle

Coming to Science in September

THE PILOT HOUSE OF KINGSTON
A Friendly Neighbourhood Pub & Restaurant

Fish & Chips • Homemade Pies
Imported & Domestic Draught Beer

265 King Street East at Johnson • 542-0222

Expiry Date: Sep. 30, 1998
Not Available for takeout

50% off
on any menu item over $6.00
Buy one entree and receive the second entree of equal or lesser value at half price

ARE YOU ALLERGIC TO RAGWEED?

Study Starting Soon...CALL NOW!!!

If your symptoms include runny, stuffy nose, sneezing, itchy eyes from mid-August to the frost

The Allergy Unit at Kingston General Hospital is looking for volunteers to participate in an investigational drug study for the treatment of allergy (ragweed) symptoms. If you are between the ages of 16 and 65 with at least a 2 year history of ragweed allergy symptoms, you may be eligible to participate. For more information, please call 546-5300 or 1-877-POLLENS. Honorarium is provided.

Debunking the summertime: cottages & traffic, heat waves & air-conditioning, vacations & summer employment, beaches & Baywatch, healthy-looking skin & UV rays

Summer breeze, summer wheeze

By Sean Springer

"The city in summer floated like a daze that moved otherwise sensible people to repeat endlessly the brainless greeting 'Hot enough for ya? Ha-ha!' It was like the final joke before the meltdown of the world in a pool of sweat."

— Arthur Miller, "Before Air-Conditioning"

Summer optimism

IT WAS THREE months ago in some remote location just off the lovely campus of Queen's University when a student hoisted up his brandy glass overflowing with Purple Jesus and cried to a room full of students recuperating from post-exam trauma, "Here's to the finale of what was three weeks of shit, and what will be four months of fun, sun, and relaxation!" The toast was well-received by the clamour of cheers and whistles expressing delight for freedom from Jeffrey, Jackson, Miller, Douglas and — the ultimate thumbtack in the posterior — Joseph Stauffer. "Here, here," chirped one student. "Bravo and well-said," piped another.

The students at the bon voyage party thrived off the ecstasy that the theme of summer always promises to deliver: beautiful weather, refreshing dips in the lake, a cosy read on the beach with a nurturing, lazy wind to massage the skin, long weekends in the Muskokas, a warm hiatus from the pangs of post-secondary education, summer blockbusters and music festivals.

The pessimist's counterattack

In the corner, a cynical student burrowed with a bottle of rancid tequila and a handful of corn chips. He was dreaming up a brilliant rebuttal on "that phoney, that fraud, that poor excuse for a good time — that overrated summertime!"

Not that the student wasn't welcoming a four month vacation to cure body and mind chemistry, for he clearly was. The cynicism stemmed from the memory of another kind of summer. The summer that glues together all of those peachey memoirs.

We're all aware of the summer that induces a psychological spasm to raise the roof and liberate everyone's imprisoned mortal beast lurking within a space/time continuum spiralling into the big crunch.

Most of us, however, neglect the other summer, the summer of dread, full of ire and wrath. It's portrayed by sweaty palms wired with exhausted veins oozing fiery contempt for the summer's wild expectations that usually evolve into puerile pipe dreams, defective aphrodisiacs, and faded thrill rides.

Your car's black, plastic frying pan interior steams yesterday's breakfast and leaves lesions, boils, and lacerations on to your flesh and bones.

Few individuals actually recall the daily mile-long stretch of vehicles backed up along the Don Valley Parkway. In between lies a brutal minimum wage job at a truck depot. Claustrophobia leaches into your nervous system as fossil fuels release carbon monoxide through the exhaust, making their way in to your lungs, heart, and arteries. The air-conditioning gauge came out in your hand last week and your car's black, plastic frying pan interior steams yesterday's breakfast and cleaves lesions, boils, and lacerations on to your flesh and bones.

The media's stake in summer

LOFTY TUITION HIKES kill plans for weekend retreats into Muskoka. Rather, the closest contact to the beach is spent on the other side of your television on the sandy shores of Baywatch. Life is passed living vicariously through David Hasselhoff and/or Pamela Anderson Lee.

Hasselhoff, Anderson Lee, and the industry they represent are, in fact, partially to blame for the summer myth. As the leading perpetrator of false imagery with dishonest intentions, the media pumps a huge amount of promotion into the summertime as June, July, and August approach. Our perception is preoccupied with the feel-good film of the summer, "the world's most illustrious music extravaganza," and "the travel experience of a lifetime." What's generally omitted is: you must have the time and money (which most of us don't) to appreciate all of these fabulous things.

Adam Gopnik, a contributor for The New Yorker, admits in the June 22 issue that "Magazine editors love the idea of 'summer reading' because it implies that somebody out there is having a summer." His point is that the image of people enjoying themselves, and not necessarily ourselves, is a refreshing mental retreat from the DVP at rush hour or a serving job at the local greasy spoon.

What we're exposed to is a carefree couple clutching hands on a beach in the Virgin Islands, lightly jogging while laughing and kicking up sprinkles of sand. What we don't see is the same couple applying ointment to sun burns or prying sand and shards of glass out of their toes.

Censorship in the brain

Of course, the media wouldn't have been quite so successful at elevating the summer myth if it weren't for a human glitch that fails to redistribute summer sentiments of disgust in proportion with the cherished elements.

"Paramount" Canada's Wonderland, for example, was once, and in some bezerk part of me will always be, an inner passion. I always associate it with an insane amount of wild energy, blue and pink cotton candy, and a heap of good ol' fun. What I usually overlook is the cesspool of vomit splattered in my lap, which was curdled by the "Viking's rage" and "The Great Canadian Minebuster."

Check out National Lampoon's Vacation, starring the "lovable" Chevy Chase, for a rebellion against the family fantasy of summertime. This film, which is otherwise mediocre in taste, chronicles the Grizwald's dysfunctional trek from Chicago to "WallyWorld" as they discover what the effects of scorching summers can truly do to an individual's physical and mental constitution.

Climate control

Look not merely to the "brilliant" Chevy Chase for a stripdown of summer. Faster than you can heave a pant, heat waves are melting the inner fabric of the southern United States. As of Sunday, at least 140 people were believed to have perished in southern parts of the United States at the whims of record-setting global saunas.

BODY BY JAKE: Celeb fitness guru, Jake Steinfeld, offers a "brief" guide to keeping your cool.

We counter-balance the heat with monster air-conditioners, which release more heat and carbon products into the ecosystem, thus only creating temporary relief in a vicious cycle.

There's also that protective slit in atmosphere called an ozone layer, which is rapidly evolving into the decrepit layer. Some need not look beyond the widespread increase of malignant melanoma to become fearful of entering the summer outdoors.

So, perhaps the summer myth will solve itself by burning up under Mother Nature's unpredictable fluctuation.

Just surf

IT SEEMS THAT the summer soars only as far as your perspective. So, just chill out, play the optimiser, and wait for Santa Claus to rain an ice storm on your summer charade.

Sean Springer's summer has been spent trying to develop his shoddy frisbee toss. He can be emailed at 6sms3@qlink.queensu.ca.

The Tragically Hip Return To Alfie's Pub

SIZE DOES MATTER

Alfie's PUB

ALFIE'S PUB welcomes the class of 2002

LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER IN KINGSTON

ENQUIRER

$1.00 CANADA FROSH WEEK, 1998

Alfie's PUB LARGEST PUB AT QUEEN'S

- GREAT TUNES
- LIVE BANDS
- NEW FOOD MENU
- FOOSE & POOL TABLES
- $100 WEEKLY CASH PRIZES
- LOCATED AT THE LOWER JDUC

515-300-1111 http://WWW.ALFIES.QUEENS.CA/ALFIES

Many of today's young people venture off to University to sip from the Fountain of Knowledge...

WELL YOU'D BETTER BRING A BIG MUG CAUSE WE'VE GOT 12 ON TAP!

pub

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Ryan grazes a huge target

Spielberg's new World War II action-drama ambushed by poor dialogue, storyline

Film review
Saving Private Ryan
Capitol Famous Players

By Sean Springer

THE CREATIVE AND revolutionary genius of Steven Spielberg, the Oscar winning director of Schindler's List, and Jaws, has returned with yet another provocative cinematic analysis of World War II and its effects upon the human spirit. Only this time, the war is related through a U.S. Army Captain's struggle to lead a squad of eight recruits through the rugged interior of France. His mission is to retrieve Private James Ryan and return him to his mother, victimized by the loss of three of her four sons in the war.

The film wavers between dry, mundane dialogue and a robust display of gratuitous violence.

Slightly obscure in the message it tries to convey, the film wavers between dry, mundane dialogue and a robust display of gratuitous violence. Much of the realism hails from the abundance and unrelenting downpours of bullets, missiles, and grenades, which Spielberg captures in incredibly disturbing sequences. Decapitations, amputations, and even the screams of a soldier consumed in a blazing fire distinguish Saving Private Ryan as a truly brave and progressive film.

The opening sequence to Saving Private Ryan offers an intense portrayal of a World War II battlefield that is impressive for its realism, yet is dark and dreary for its staunch expose of the turmoil in savage fear. The infantry leaps from their American vessels on a murky sea on D-Day, June 6, 1944. Green with fear, the crew vomits and trembles. Little dialogue ensues, which makes Spielberg's task of retaining the audience's attention remarkably complex.

The lengthy scene never approaches tedium, enrapturing the viewer and setting an early pace to elevate itself as one of the greatest war flicks of all time.

There's little left for the film to exploit after this episode. The remainder of the running time is spent rummaging through idle chit chat, and failed attempts at subtle comedy. At three hours in length, one wonders how Spielberg could possibly attempt to weave a consistent flow.

His direction, for its documentary-style footage, is brilliant — he creates an excellent contrast between geography and the foreign soldiers, which signifies the clashing of the human spirit with a freakish mission in an alien country.

[Spielberg] creates an excellent contrast between geography and the foreign soldiers, which signifies the clashing of the human spirit with a freakish mission in an alien country.

Setting the grey mood is beautiful cinematography that accentuates the mud and grime of the beaches of Normandy, the lush vegetation sprouting throughout the countryside, the dreary, helpless expression of a dull, hallowed sky, and the calm rise of crimson from soldiers pierced with bullets under a sea of calamity.

However, the contrast sends incomparable impressions.

Please see Spielberg on page 14

Search Party: Edward Burns (left) and Giovanni Ribisi search for a lost private.

Rotate This!

Cherry Poppin' Daddies
Zoot Suit Riot
Mojo Records

BY SARAH CROSSIE

It's those crazy new GAP khakis advertisements. They've got all of North America back into swing music.

Everyone's talking about it. Okay, maybe not everyone, considering when I asked the guy at HMV for the location of the swing section, he promptly asked me what swing music was. I think I looked somewhat dumbfounded as he directed me to the Chart Topping Hits section. Somewhere in between the Armageddon soundtrack and N SYNC I found a curious little CD entitled, Zoot Suit Riot, the Swingin' Hits of the Cherry Poppin' Daddies. It was not the word, "swingin'" which got my attention. It was the name of the group. In my hometown (and I'm sure in others) for a male to "pop a cherry" is to manually break a female's hymen. A little crass for a swing band maybe, but the Cherry Poppin' Daddies are far from solely a swing band. The 14 tracks on their first major label debut includes songs from the band's previous three independent albums and four new tracks, including the title track, "Zoot Suit Riot," which is currently enjoying some radio play.

The Cherry Poppin' Daddies are not a swing band. Their sound fuses swing, ska and rock to produce a somewhat confusing style. Not that confusing isn't enjoyable. But while you expect lead singer Steve Perry to be singing of teenage love to match the instrumental swing accompaniment he's actually singing about sex, social problems, like alcoholic abusive fathers in "Drunk Daddy," sex and more sex. Ignoring the name, and focusing on the music, one can't help but love this album. One of its greatest features is that it uses lyrics that are catchy and rhyming, which in turn, accompanied by Steve Perry's sharp and enunciated singing style, make it an album that you will want to boogie to, as well as sing along to. The band has a great sound, incorporating wailing trumpets which at times utilize mutes successfully, as well as a strong, funky percussion section and a real string bass. The drums and bass are what give the Daddies their strong swing sound and feel. Add some great tempo changes within the songs, a little scatting and some snapping and you've got a fun, energetic CD.

If you're worried this album may be more suited to your grandmother's style because its sound isn't centered around electronic keyboards and guitars, or because you can't identify with the Swinging 60s at all, don't worry this is not an album you'll want to feature at your next family's swing dancing competition. With lyrics like, "He'll get sniffin' when your fish is gashed, He likes you best when your banana's mashed, He's only happy with your girlfriend's pie, And his bony fingers up your ass," it's an album geared toward a younger, twenty-something audience. At the same time, if you find that one verse crude and offensive, then the Daddies are definitely not for you. Although the instrumental music itself is great, vulgar lyrics are standard throughout the album. If you're not keen enough to buy the album, you'll surely be hearing tracks from this album on the radio. The Daddies are due for mainstream popularity considering their talented enough to break hymens and new musical territory all in one album.

Tripping Daisy
Jesus Hits Like The Atom Bomb Island Records

BY STEFAN MURRAY

Although the album is titled Jesus Hits Like the Atom Bomb, the impact of Tripping Daisy's follow-up album to I Am an Elastic Firecracker has the equivalent jolt of a snowball with a rock in it.

That's not to say that their newest release is boring, only that it is a far cry from the aggressive, power-pop charged songs of old. The instrumentation is different, emphasis is being transferred from obvious lyrics and chord progression to a more internal and scrutinized sound.

The band appears to be involved in a transition to musical confession, repenting their history of screaming guitars and aggressive lyrics and progressing into a more spiritual and personal outfit of musical forgiveness.

Tim DeLaughter's vocals stray too far into Parry Farrel territory, making him sound like a watered-down imposter.

For example, the fourth song on the album "Bandaids for Hire," is a definite example of musical maturity, focusing more on the layering of guitars and vocals, and the introduction of a melotron's lull.

As well, Jesus Hits Like the Atom Bomb does not have the defining songs that their earlier album possessed. Radio-friendly songs like "I got a girl"

Please see Atom on page 12

Good Vibrations

Greg Runions chimes and charms K-Town with Big Band

Feeling the Vibes: Greg Runions hard at play on the vibraphone.

Wheeler, a leader in improvised music who is in demand throughout Europe and North America. He will display his talents alongside Runions on Wednesday. Runions is very excited that Wheeler is coming and said that, "other musicians are excited to play with him because he is really respected in Canada and the opportunity to work with him is very rare."

The second concert will feature pianist, bassist and vibraphonist Don Thompson, who Runions stated, "is a musician of really high calibre", as well as rector saxophonist Mike Murley, flugelhornist Clyde Forsberg and trombonist Gene Smith. The concert will also be the premiere performance of compositions created by Runions and Thompson, who is noted as an outstanding composer.

Both concerts showcase many artists who reside in Kingston and have studied at Queen's. Yoon Sung Choi, a vocalist in the first concert is a graduate of Queen's, and Janet MacRae, a trumpeter in the second concert has also studied at Queen's.

Both concerts should be a big hit, as Greg Runions Big Band has generated a buzz for jazz music in Kingston over the past few years amongst fans and musicians. Runions believes that the, "Kingston community is very enthusiastic because the music is original."

In June 1995, the Greg Runions Big Band was formed to create an outlet for the composing and arranging skills of its leader. Since then, the band has featured many local and out of town artists, many of whom will be seen at both concerts. Tickets are available at the Grand Theatre Box Office or at the door for only $10 and $7 for seniors and students. Don't let this 'big' musical experience pass you by — it promises to be a 'big' hit!

Concert Preview

BY SARAH CROSSIE

If you missed the Tragically Hip's concert this past month — don't sweat it. Good things come to those who wait. Or is it big things? A Big Band is performing two concerts dates this summer. On July 29 and August 21, Greg Runions Big Band will be performing at Memorial Hall. Greg Runions is a composer, arranger and vibraphonist who performs in the Kingston Symphony and teaches at Queen's. In conjunction with the Canada Council and the Downtown Kingston B.I.A. office, Runions will be presenting two contemporary jazz concerts. The first concert will feature Canadian trumpeter and composer Kenny

A&E

in brief

Definitely not Zero: The Mask of Zorro starring Antonio Banderas and Anthony Hopkins secured the number one position on it's first weekend of July 17, earning $22.7 million. In second place was the highly entertaining Lethal Weapon 4, earning $21.2 million. Armageddon fell to third place scoring $16 million. Maybe Bruce Willis's and Ben Affleck's summer flick isn't the explosive movie it was supposed to be. Luckily BASEketball, starring the creators of South Park is soon to be released. This could be the Oscar sweeping movie of the year.

Saxing it up at the White House: Jazz Legend Lionel Hampton celebrated his 90th birthday last Thursday. The popular Bill Clinton and the understanding Hillary Rodham Clinton hosted a big bash at the White House in honour of the legend's birthday. Hampton is one of the last remaining jazz greats. He performed with the great Louis Armstrong and the Benny Goodman Quartet back in the 30s.

Daredevil Depardieu: Looks as if Gerard Depardieu is down $1,664. The endearing but often misplaced actor who famed with films such as Green Card and the recent Man In the Iron Mask (also starring pretty poster boy Leonardo DiCaprio), was slapped with a three month suspended sentence and a 15-month driving ban for a drunk-driving related incident back in May. Depardieu crashed his motorcycle while driving to a film set. Will someone please tell the actors what the stunt people are paid for.

The Nanny: Kim Tannahill, the former nanny for the children of beautiful ex-couple Demi Moore and Bruce Willis, has been denied the chance to pursue her legal bout against the famous duo. Tannahill filed a lawsuit against the couple last February. She claims that Willis and Moore refused her overtime pay and physically and mentally abused her while she took care of the couple's children. Willis and Moore accuse Tannahill of stealing money from the couple, and for breaching a confidentiality agreement.

Get Out There!

Movies:

Playing at the Capitol Theatre from Tuesday July 28 to Thursday, July 30:
546-5395

Armageddon 12, 12:45, 3:20, 4:00, 6:45, 7:30, 9:55, 10:40
Disturbing Behaviour 2:00, 4:15, 7:10, 9:30
Lethal Weapon 4 1:00, 4:10, 7:20, 10:20
Saving Private Ryan 1:30, 5:00, 8:30
6 Days and 7 Nights 9:00 (except July 25 9:45)
Mulan 12:10, 2:30, 4:30, 6:40 (except July 25 no 6:40 & July 26 no 12:30, 2:30 showings)
The Parent Trap July 25 7:00 July 26 1:30

Playing at the Catarqui Cineplex from Tuesday, July 28 to Thursday, July 30:
389-7442

Dr. Doolittle 1:00, 3:00, 5:00, 7:10, 9:10 (no 7:10 showing on July 25, instead a sneak preview of Ever After)
Something about Mary 12:50, 1:20, 3:45, 3:55, 4:40, 7:20, 9:20, 10:00
Mask of Zorro (no passes) 12:40, 1:10, 3:35, 4:05

6:30, 7:00, 9:30, 9:50
Madeline 12:30, 2:40, 4:45, 6:50
X-Files 9:00

Playing at the Princess Court Cinema from Tuesday, July 28 to Thursday, July 30:
546-3456

Spanish Prisoner 7:00
Opposite of Sex 9:15

Radio:
CFRC FM:
545-2121

Frying Friday nights!
6-8 Hum and Soul Bother
8-10 Orphalese Bend
10-12 Main Frame
Psychosis
12-3 Unauthorized Cranial Hookup

Video:

Blockbuster Video
226 Queen St.
547-3980

New Releases (July 28)

Great Expectations, Hard Rain, Are you ready for this folks — Jerry Springer: Too Hot for TV & the Best of Jerry Springer!

So tell us what you want...
What you really, really want...

...because we've got it!

- 2 Pubs
- Internet Lounge
- Billiards Lounge
- Bus Tickets
- Used Book Store
- Arcade
- Food Court
- Bank Machines
- Post Office
- Gift Shop
- Photocopy Centre
- Dry Cleaning
- Hairstyling Salon
- Student Meeting Rooms
- Convenience Store

Still have questions?
We've got the answers!

545-2794 infoctr@post.queensu.ca www.queensu.ca/infoctr
Upper Cellidh, John Deutsch University Centre

Professional skin and hair

...welcomes you to Queens University.
Take a well-earned break with a visit to Professional Skin & Hair.
Full service hair & esthetics for men & women
Student discount Monday to Wednesday
Aveda • Redken • Babor • M.A.C. make-up • K.M.S.

Specializing in foil hi-lites
Waxing • Permanent wave • Manicures
Pedicures • Advanced cutting techniques
Skin treatments & much more.

613-549-7546

115 Clarence St. Kingston, Ontario. K7L 5N6

Atom Bomb — a dud

Continued from page 11

and "Piranhas," have been replaced by a more fluid progression of decent, although forgettable, tunes.

The CD itself does seem like a step forward for the band, but under closer scrutiny the unique styles of notable musicians begin to surface much too frequently.

For example, song number two, "Waited a light year" is a bit too similar to Sonic Youth. Furthermore, song five, "Mechanical Breakdown", makes me believe Tripping Daisy's sound engineer broke into Dinosaur Jr's vault. And unfortunately, Tim DeLaughter's vocals stray too far into Parry Farrel territory, making him sound like a watered-down imposter.

Song number two, "Waited a light year" is a bit too similar to Sonic Youth.

The borrowing of a winning formula from these successful groups obviously makes for an entertaining listen, but one wishes the group would include some original and unheard of arrangements on the album.

Overall, Jesus Hits Like the Atom Bomb is an interesting journey, initially propelled by the cosmic backlash of experimental instruments, free-floating with enthusiastic guitar lines tempered with mariachi horns, and splashing down amidst honest and personal lyrics.

Unfortunately, Tripping Daisy appears to be embarking on this epic journey on borrowed wings — giving the audience an exciting adventure, but nonetheless one they have already experienced.

Check out CD reviews every issue in The Queen's Journal. Writers needed for the coming season. For more info, contact Stefan, Sarah or Lillian at 545-2800.

Athletic Information Night

Tuesday, September 15, 1998
5:00 until 7:00pm
Ross & Bartlett Gymnasia
Wicket Hours 10am until 8pm

Everything you wanted to know about Queen's Athletics and Recreation but didn't know who to ask!

Intramurals

- Fall Sports Sign-up, Team & Individual
- Tournament Details & Entry Information
- Meet Athletic Reps From Your Faculty
- Officials Needed (Earn Extra Money!)

Clubs

- Recreation Club Info & Sign-up
- Over 25 Clubs Available
- Club Activity Displays
- Meet Representatives

Special Wicket Hours

Opens: 10am - 8pm: Sept. 18, Sept. 25

Opens: 10am - 7pm: Sept. 10, Sept. 14, Sept. 16, Sept. 17, Sept. 21 thru Sept. 24

Opens: 9 - 11am: Sept. 26

for the purchase of Locker & Laundry service or ISS Program registration

Regular Hours: 10am - 5pm Mon. - Fri.

Instructional Sports Skills

- Learn a New Sport or Skill
- Over 200 Programs from which to choose
- ISS Brochure Available
- Queen's V.I.P. Fitness Club pamphlet available

Interuniversity

- Meet the Coaches
- Info on Men's & Women's Teams
- Practice Times & Try-outs
- Manager Positions Available
- 1998-99 Competitive Schedules

Employment Opportunities

There are a variety of part-time employment opportunities in the areas of security, intramurals, interuniversity, and facilities.

Information will be available at Athletic Information Night. Information and applications are also available at the wickets in the administration office, Physical Education Centre.

The Toucan & Kirkpatrick's

Kingston's Local Irish Pubs

Two great pubs under one roof with a colourful courtyard patio.

Serving pub fayre and super specials:

$2.49 sunday breakfast,
1/2 price wings* sun-tues,
1/2 price nachos* wed.
*with beverage purchase located downtown at 76 Princess St. 544-1966...www.thetoucan.com

Hey you!

Are you a former high school president / yearbook editor / valedictorian / something else 'important'? Now a current university nobody?

Choosing the Alternative

Alternative Press magazine goes beyond the glamour and explains the heat from the beat

Magazine Review

Alternative Press
Published by Alternative Press Inc.

By LILIAN KIM

I cringe every time I'm forced to label a sound as "alternative." Alternative to what? Maybe the alternative? It doesn't make any sense. But perhaps there is a solution for the ambiguity. Take the word "alternative", submerge it into an abbreviation, have Rancid on the outside and some Korn to go with it. What you produce is a product that is highly-effective and substantial to the music lover — one hundred and twenty eight pages of full-gloss bliss.

Alternative Press, or A.P., gets down to the nitty-gritty of "dis-pop" music.

On nary a page will one find a Backstreet boy or a sunny-head MMM-bopper. A.P.'s August issue boasts Liz Phair, the Beastie Boys and none other than the Karma Chameleon himself — Boy George.

While other magazines live on the predictable — the 5'10 lead singer of "Band" in his Gap khakis, who he's dating, what did he have for breakfast, who gives a fuck? — A.P. refrains from noticing any habitual eating habits or bed-mates. The magazine talks music — the end.

So, if you were one of the many who missed out on the summer festival bonanza across Canada due to blue collar duties, A.P. offers the low down on the bands who are lingering at the H.O.R.D.E festival and Vans Warped Tour. Even Tibetan Freedom Concert's devotee R.E.M. reminisces their beginnings in this issue.

What's cool about this zine's layout is the fact that everything that has to do with music or at least anything that could remotely be linked to music matters. A.P. takes a look at literature — the best reads on bands and musical moments. In this particular issue,

"Death Discs" goes under the microscope. The book's all about tragic musical fallouts and Milli Vanilli-like disappointments. Where is Jorjee, who was only five when he first won our hearts with his stunningly indifferent rap of "My name is Jorjee"? "Death Discs" will reveal all.

The difficult thing about drawing a comparison between the different music magazines is that the categories are pretty much the same. Launch Magazine went on the super-info highway bandwagon and started an entire campaign of CD-ROM issues. But amidst the pomp, the charts are there, the profile is written and the endless short-blurb reviews are always at the back. So what is key in making the scene different is the content. When A.P. says alternative, they mean alternative. We've all heard of Smashing Pumpkins and Pearl Jam, but what about Cotton Mather and Foehn. You'll find those names there and countless others. So what if they don't spin on MuchMusic, maybe there's a problem in that. Sometimes it's better to go to the alternative source.

Fastest Beaver! Lasting Beastie Boys stake it down this August in Alternative Press.

Spielberg film is ultra-violent

Continued from page 11

Saving Private Ryan cannot clearly relay a comprehensive thesis as its unrefreshing American perspective fails to critically review the problems with war and violence.

Saving Private Ryan seems to have duped Spielberg's genius and creative intensity.

Instead, the analysis falls down on the film's characterization. Spielberg assembles a dynamite cast that includes Tom Hanks, Edward Burns, Matt Damon, Dennis Farina, and Ted Danson. Hanks takes on the most challenging role, playing Captain John Miller, who acts as the hero undergoing developmental construction, improving his own function as a leader amongst a cast set against the whims of war.

A mundane storyline and dialogue, however, does not allow the characterization to flourish as the film staggers through a relatively predictable storyline deficient in the element of surprise.

Saving Private Ryan seems to have duped Spielberg's genius and creative intensity, for he focuses on grooming an image of war and presenting a realistic model for audiences to revere. He forgets to provide a critical commentary on the topic, which prevents a good film from climbing to the heights of epics with which Spielberg is none too familiar.

SPORTS & FITNESS

The Peanut Gallery

TOUR DE FARCE

With the arrest and indictment of the manager and trainer of the Tour de France super team, Festina, another sport was tarnished with the drug brush. The decision to expel the entire team, including team leader and one of the race favourites, Richard Virenique, was swift and undisputed. With the Festina expulsion, the route to victory for defending champion Jans Ullrich has become remarkably less bumpy. The German champion is leading after 12 stages by only one minute and eleven seconds over upstart American Bobby Julich, but as always, this year's edition of the Tour will be decided during the treacherous climbs in the Alps.

JAYS' STARS MAKE HISTORY

On July 5, Roger Clemens of the Toronto Blue Jays became the 11th member of baseball's exclusive 3,000 strikeout club. The historic strikeout came at SkyDome against the Tampa Bay Devil Rays and the fans rewarded Clemens with a standing ovation as he left the field. He rewarded their thunderous applause with a wave of his cap. A day earlier, Tony Fernandez surpassed Lloyd Moseby as the Blue Jays all-time hits leader with 1,120. Fernandez, in his third tour as a Jay, has lost quite a few steps defensively as a second baseman but has been able to maintain his hitting prowess.

BLOWING SMOKE

In the made-for-TV sports spectacle created by Ted Turner and excess patriotism, the re-emergence of American sprinting has been on display. The '98 Goodwill Games hosted by New York City saw a dichotomy of sporting events, but the most ballyhooed was the men's 100 metre dash, and 4x100 metre relay. All of the talk leading up to the race between American Maurice Greene, Trinidadian Ato Boldon and Canadian Donovan Bailey was simply hot air, as Maurice blew away the field as has been his habit this season. In the relay, the Canadian squad lost for the first time in a major competition since 1995, when Greene ran away and hid from Bailey. If Greene can run this fast while talking incessantly, imagine how fast he could go if he would just shut up.

SEE YOU IN SYDNEY

David Kantor, former Queen's volleyball star and winner of the Jenkins Trophy as outstanding graduating male athlete, has enjoyed continued athletic success. The Queen's graduate of class of '96 was recently named to the Canadian national volleyball team, and will be involved in the Calgary-based squad's attempt to qualify for the 2000 Olympic in Sydney.

IF CHRISTMAS CAME EARLY...

- The 'two Jerrys' in charge of the Chicago Bulls would admit that they want to tear apart one of sports great dynasties.
- New Mighty Ducks President Pierre Gauthier would keep his word.
- Tour de France cyclists would lose the vanity and wear helmets before they all die.

By ADAM KAMINSKY

As the chant rang through the Paris night, it became clear that a tournament which at first meant little to the local folk had become a symbol of national pride for a country ridiculed for always being second best.

With 1.5 billion people looking on world wide, the final whistle sounded on the 64th game of this venerable tournament and the scoreboard read 3-0 for France. The home team had done the unthinkable, not only beating the world champion Brazilians, but also embarrassing them. This victory culminated an unbelievable run by the French side, which saw them go undefeated through the tournament while allowing only one goal in regular play.

When the last Samba beat rang out at the Stade de France, the Brazilians quietly left the pitch with shoulders slumped and confidence gone. They had struggled through the tournament, losing to Norway in the opening round and having to go to penalty kicks to beat the Netherlands in the semi-final, but many felt they were just waiting to hit stride in the final. This was not the case, and with a controversy regarding the health of two-time footballer-of-the-year Ronaldo surrounding the team before kick-off, they never seemed to gain focus. Ronaldo, who is rumoured to have had every ailment known to medicine (including going to hospital for a seizure earlier in the day), was virtually invisible during the game. His teammates, said to have been openly fighting before the match about the viability of the young star playing, did not help the cause by coming out flatter than a three-day-old beer.

While it is easy to point at the bickering, underachieving, superbly talented team from South America, it does take two to tango, and the suffocating defence of the French must be credited. Led by defenders Marcel Desailly and Thuram and goalkeeper Fabien Barthez, 'les bleus' set up an impeccable back wall that even the vaunted Brazilian attack could not penetrate.

While the sensational defence of the host team was impressive, it was also expected. The question posed by most analysts going into the game was about where the French goals were going to come from. Early in the final this seemed like a valid question as superstar midfielder Zinedine Zidane twice set up striker Guiv'ar'ch for golden scoring opportunities, only to see the forward miss badly. This all changed in the 27th minute when Zidane took it upon himself to put France on the board by heading in a corner to score the only goal France would need. 'Zizou' continued his offensive attack with a second goal, also a header off of a corner kick in the 45th minute, to really put the pressure on the defending champs at the intermission. After Desailly picked up his second yellow card and was subsequently ejected in the 68th minute, it appeared the French would be forced to sit back and hold on to the lead. With offensive minded substitutes Denilson and Edmundo joining the two strikers Bebeto and Ronaldo for Brazil, it seemed that it was only a matter of time

Taking to the field to fight off the post-World Cup blues. PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Please see France on page 17

Chasing Roger Maris

By ROBERT MACNEIL

Thirty-seven years ago, in 1961, New York City was set on fire by fan-favourite Mickey Mantle. If anyone was going to break Babe Ruth's record of 60 home runs in one season, it was going to be the Yankees' star centre fielder Mantle faced surprising competition, though, from teammate Roger Maris and the two players were neck-and-neck in the race heading into September. The media were relentless in pursuing the two players and the fans favoured Mantle so much that they booed Maris every time he hit a home run. Mantle injured himself going into the final month and was out for the season, so the chase to eclipse Ruth's mark fell on the humble shoulders of Maris. The Kansas farm boy seemed an unlikely candidate to handle the pressures placed on him by both the fans and the media. On the last day of the season, with his hair falling out in clumps from the pressure, Maris blasted a pitch into the right field stands and wrote his name into the history books.

In 1998, baseball fans are coming to the ballpark a little earlier than usual because batting practice has become the hottest ticket in town. This is the summer in which Maris' record of 61 home runs is predicted to fall. There are three men currently poised to surpass his mark. While they are all receiving lots of media coverage, the demeanours of Mark McGwire and Sammy Sosa are quite different from those of Ken Griffey Jr.

The current leader in this race is McGwire of the St. Louis Cardinals. As of July 23 he had 43 home runs with 62 games to go. McGwire was traded to St. Louis last season from the Oakland Athletics and became an instant fan-favourite. This last winter, he became a free agent and was set to be made the highest paid player in baseball history. Instead, he took less money in order to stay close to his young son who moved to St. Louis with McGwire's ex-wife. Batting practice has taken on a new meaning since McGwire began his trek to demolish Maris' record. Fans sit back in their seats in awe of this towering individual who pounds baseballs into the far reaches of the stadium as if he were hitting golf balls.

Much like Maris, the Chicago Cubs' Sosa began the year an unlikely candidate to top 61 home runs in a season. However, when he set the new record for home runs in the month of June with 20, he jumped into the fray with a vengeance. Currently in third place with 37 home runs, this slugger has become Chicago's new favourite son and his generosity off the field has been put into the spotlight as well. When he was a child, his father passed away and Sosa had to go into the streets of the Dominican Republic and shine shoes to help pay for

Please see Race on page 17

Leafs sign saviour?

By ROBERT MACNEIL

On July 18, the Toronto Maple Leafs dove head first into the free agent sweepstakes by signing the premier goaltender available, Curtis Joseph. Cujo was signed to a four-year deal worth $24 million and becomes the Leafs latest hope to propel them into the playoffs for the first time in two seasons.

Joseph had a fairly strong regular season last year for the Edmonton Oilers, but he really earned his money when the playoffs started in April. He was phenomenal against the Colorado Avalanche and almost single-handedly won the seven-game series. It is in this area that the Leafs expect Joseph to provide the greatest improvement over Felix Potvin.

Cujo, however, is realistic about his situation in Toronto. He realizes their dismal record over the last two seasons but his positive attitude is unquestioned. "Being a Canadian kid it is exciting for me to play in Canada. I know it's going to be a challenge, the team has a little ways to go [in making the playoffs]. I can help in that regard" says Joseph.

Please see Free on page 16

"THE LEADING...WEDGE"

192 ONTARIO ST.

549-1812

Feel like using your talents for more than organising floor parties?

Free agent, big bucks

Continued from page 15

In analyzing his latest signing, Maple Leafs President and General Manager Ken Dryden referred to Joseph in glowing terms to the media assembled at Maple Leaf Gardens. "In looking at the free agents available this summer, we saw him as the best free agent available, in part because of his performance, in part because of his age, in part because as a goalie he is still in the midst of his peak years," articulated Dryden.

"In looking at free agents available... we saw him as the best."

— Ken Dryden, Leafs president and GM

What to do with current goaltender Felix Potvin now becomes the newest and most interesting question on the Toronto hockey scene. After hearing the news, Potvin made it clear he had to go. "I think it would be hard for both of us to play there." The next step is obviously a trade and there is no shortage of rumours as to where he may end up. The wildest rumour has Potvin packaged with Leafs Captain Mats Sundin, and sent to the Philadelphia Flyers for centre Eric Lindros. While many Leafs fans would be thrilled to see Lindros wearing the blue and white, Sundin is arguably just as good a player. More importantly, even though Lindros is stronger and more physical, some seasons he has spent more time in the trainer's room than on the ice. Other Potvin trade rumours include him heading to the Montreal Canadiens for high-scoring winger Mark Recchi or to the Vancouver Canucks for disgruntled 50 goal scorer Pavel Bure.

While hockey fans of the Edmonton Oilers will be shaking their heads and wondering how Joseph could betray them by signing for millions in Toronto, they can be content in the knowledge that many fans in other cities are experiencing the same pain. Brett Hull, who had played most of his NHL career with the St. Louis Blues, bolted his team and signed a three-year deal with the Dallas Stars for $17 million. The reason Hull gave for his defection was the decision by Blues management not to grant him a no-trade clause in his contract.

While it was widely known that Hull wished to stay in St. Louis, the savvy and aggressive Doug Gilmour did not have the same attachment to the New Jersey Devils. The Chicago Blackhawks lured the veteran with a ridiculous three-year, $18 million contract, hoping to improve on last season.

With all this money being spewed out like a slot machine at a Windsor casino, hockey fans in these cities will hope that the latest hired-guns can lead them to the promised land and a drink from Lord Stanley's Cup in the spring of 1999. As for those teams that can't afford to dish out expensive retirement contracts to talented, but aging hockey stars, they can always look to the Ottawa Senators for inspiration.

Old dog, new tricks

By ADAM KAMINSKY

When it rains, it pours.

After 18 years on the professional golf tour searching for a major win, Mark O'Meara has won two of those prized championships in one year. Exactly 100 days after winning the green jacket at the Masters, the 41-year-old Orlando native hoisted the Claret jug awarded to him for being the 127th British Open Champion.

During a time in which young golfers often reign supreme, it was the cagey veteran who tamed the Royal Birkdale course, with its tremendous winds and tricky par fours. Things were not easy for O'Meara, who was forced into a 4-hole playoff by little known American Brian Watts, before clinching victory. Watts, who plays his golf on the Japanese tour, was able to play consistent golf and made every shot that he had to during the first 72 holes, but he simply did not have enough in his bag to win the playoff against the consistent O'Meara.

As is always the case when playing at The Open Championship, the weather was the story of the tournament. The first round saw great conditions, and the scores were indicative of that, as there was a general assault on par led by Tiger Woods's and John Huston's 65s. The scoring bliss came to an abrupt end as the weather took a turn for the worse and the famous winds off the Irish Sea made themselves known. With winds that seemed to be more fitting for a Hollywood disaster movie than a major golf tournament, the final three rounds saw par become an ambitious goal. With the leaders after 72 holes holding steady at even par, and the field falling precipitously after that, it became clear that the old course had beaten the pros on this weekend.

While some of the pros were being made to look like Saturday afternoon hackers, the story of the tournament was 17 year-old English amateur Justin Rose. After scoring a 66 in the second round — the low score of the day and placing him second on the tournament leaderboard — he became the darling of the media and galleries alike. While many predicted a return to earth in the final two rounds, he continued to play a very mature game, and with his dramatic birdie chip on the 72nd hole, he strode off the Royal Birkdale course with confidence to spare and a two over score for the tournament. While his score tied him for fourth, his amateur status did not allow him to collect the $125,000 that he earned over the four days. This was quickly rectified as the future star decided after his most fruitful weekend to turn professional, and he will begin collecting cheques at the European tour stop in the Netherlands this weekend.

Coming into this golf season, it was the 'young pups' on the tour who were predicted to improve on their performance at the majors from last year and really dominate during this campaign. They have for the most part struggled and it has been the old dog who has been showing the most impressive tricks.

It is he who barks last, who barks loudest.

The race to 62

Continued from page 15

clothes and food. When he became a major-league star, he did not forget where he came from and his generous contributions matched his exorbitant salary. He provided clothes and food for hungry families in his hometown, bought computers for the local schools, and paid for hospital services for those who could not afford it. Also, he never forgot the woman that has mattered the most to him, his mother, for whom he has bought three houses.

Griffey Jr. of the Seattle Mariners is second in the quest with 40 home runs. He has enjoyed success throughout his career and received the most votes this year for the All-Star Game at Coors Field in Denver. After publicly refusing to take part in the home run hitting contest during the All-Star festivities, the press and the fans were vocal with their criticism. He chose not to take part in the contest because he argued that trying to hit home runs would disrupt his swing. When Junior said this, he instantly represented everything that is wrong with sports. Here was another over-priced athlete not wanting to participate in a contest for the very people that were paying his salary: the fans. Thankfully, Griffey Jr. recognized the depth of his insensitivity and at the last moment, and decided to participate in the contest which he eventually won, much to the delight of the fans.

These three men play in a different era than Roger Maris, an era of multi-million dollar contracts and endorsements. Players today feel that they should be left alone because they are normal people with careers like everyone else.

Wrong. When a person makes millions of dollars and people have to pay a ridiculous amount of money to see him "at work" then they are entitled to something extra. Fans are entitled to see their favourite players perform at the very game in which they choose the players. They shouldn't have to be faced with a whiny, spoiled brat like Griffey. Thankfully, there are players like McGwire and Sosa who love the game and decide where to play based on family concerns — players who never forget their roots when they become famous. These are the players that have the burden and responsibility to repair some of the damage that baseball has inflicted on itself over the last 15 years.

ELECTROLYSIS

Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely
Experienced electrolysis
Recommended by Physicians

HARRISON SALON

Kingston Since 1959
Free Consultation
Call 542-5595

France joins exclusive club

Continued from page 15

before they scored a man-up goal. This was not the case as the French continued their stellar defensive play, and in the 90th minute put the final nail in the coffin with mid-fielder Emmanuel Petit icing the game on a breakaway.

When belligerent Brits and Germans travel all the way to a World Cup to simply bash skulls, there is certainly a problem.

Despite the fact that the final did not score high on the entertainment meter, the tournament as a whole did not disappoint. There were as always highs and lows, surprises and disappointments in this soccer celebration.

The fans provided many of the highs of the month long party. From the neat and tidy Japanese, who cleaned up the stands after a game, to the wild and crazy Jamaicans, every game had a cultural flavour involved. It was the interest of the world in this tournament that never ceases to amaze. Businesses in Canada were closing for big games, and Canada has only made the Cup once, and that was back at Mexico '86.

While the fans provided the highs, they also provided the lows. As has been mentioned and discussed repeatedly, the hooliganism that reared its ugly head in France must be stopped. When belligerent Brits and Germans travel all the way to a World Cup to simply bash skulls, there is certainly a problem. Another low point of the tournament was the uneven officiating that will always be a problem, but seemed to be magnified this time around. The final was extremely well officiated, but the disparate use of red cards throughout the remainder of the tournament greatly affected a number of games — just ask David Beckham and the English.

The emergence of Croatia, and their run to the semi-final was the story of the tournament. Led by Golden Boot winner (most goals in tournament) David Suiker, the Croats beat the Germans handily in the quarter-final, only to lose 2-1 to the eventual champion. In their first World Cup, this young nation had a phenomenal run.

The early exit taken by the Spaniards and the controversial shoot-out loss by the English were the two major disappointments. The Spanish, picked by many to go deep into the brackets lost their first game to Nigeria and were never able to recover, leading them to an early exit in the first round. The English also enjoyed the fancy of many pre-tournament prognosticators and led by 18-year-old striker Michael Owen, looked to be on the right track. But with the 47th minute ejection of Beckham in their second-round game with Argentina they were forced to play down a man. Showing resilience, the English were able to bring the game to a shoot-out, but were beaten, thus dashing the dreams of the home island.

There were certainly some very exciting moments during the month long celebration of the world's most popular team sport, but no action on the pitch could match the scene of hundreds of thousands of supporters, French and foreign, surrounding the Arc de Triomphe on the Champs d'Elysees. These hordes of people, were all peacefully celebrating the most recent entry to the World Cup club, only the seventh country to be so honoured.

The next time that a joke is told with the punch line ridiculing the French tradition of second best, just smile and remember Zinedine Zidane and his World Cup champion teammates.

just wait 'til you see

Welcome Back '98 Student Magazine

Kingston's #1 student city guide for over 18 years is
YOURS ABSOLUTELY FREE!!

Look for Welcome Back in residence, or grab yours at the great big red & white CKLC radio on Union St. near University during Frosh Week!

READ ALL ABOUT IT!

Landlords & Tenants, Affordable Getaways, Your Money,
Wreck Diving, Internet Updates, and much more including Maps, Queen's Events & Important Dates, Sports & Rec, the Live Music Scene, Where to Eat, Sleep, and Find just about everything you need to have the best life in Kingston.

plus great value inserts and over $900 in coupons!!

Do you have any interests?
...Any at all?

The Waterloo Centre for Applied Linguistics Inc.

Certificate Program in Teaching English as a Second Language

Learn how to Teach ESL to Adults

- at community colleges and universities
- for school boards
- in community programs
- in business and industry
- overseas

For information:
Janet Stubbs, TESL Program Director
The Waterloo Centre for Applied Linguistics Inc.
561 Sugarbush Drive, Waterloo, Ontario N2K 1Z9
(519) 725-9070 fax (519) 725-3644
E-Mail - jstubbs@mgl.ca

INSURANCE 101 Major coverage Minor cost from DirectProtect

Protect Your Stuff.

For as low as $7.99 a month.

Bet you never thought you'd be screaming WOOLHO about insurance? Now you can!

Insurance 101 is the easy (and cheap) way to keep your valuables protected. Stuff like your computer, your bike, your leather jacket, your CD player. With Insurance 101, you get:

- $5,000 of coverage for just $7.99/month* — the only $5,000 plan of its kind, developed with students in mind. (You can get more coverage at a great price if you need it.)

Protect your car, too.

Insurance 101 also makes it easy (and real cheap) to keep your car protected. You can:

- reduce your premium by adjusting your deductible
- purchase extra coverage for roadside emergency service
- purchase extra coverage to protect the value of your new car for the first 30 months you own it

Whatever you choose to protect, with Insurance 101 from DirectProtect, you're always guaranteed a quick no-obligation quote, an easy-to-budget payment plan and major discounts of up to 30%.

Call DirectProtect today at 1-800-810-4990

Then the AMS wants you!

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
AMS
STUDENT GOVERNMENT

campus activities commission

Labour Express

academic affairs commission

exchange

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

social issues commission studio

SC

queen's pub

communications commission

Alfie's PUB

The Publishing and Copy Cent

internal affairs commission

Skulight Lounge

municipal affairs commission

Are you into it?  Sound interesting?
Then don't be shy, call us or email us.

phone • 545 • 2725

email • feedback@ams.queensu.ca

www • www.ams.queensu.ca

MISC

LOVING YOUR PE(S)T

PICTURE YOURSELF ON A HOT summer night. The heat is so unbelievably unbearable that, despite having a jet propeller sized fan going full blast, you're forced to leave your unscreened bedroom window wide open. Now, given the choice, what ghetto pest would you rather find yourself snuggling with when the morning came? Raccoons are big and ill-tempered, so they'd probably hog the bed. A groggy skunk might respond unfavourably if you startled it out of its sleep. A mouse, delighted with its new-found environment, could conceivably burrow itself permanently in your room without you ever noticing, coming out only for Cheetos and Brita. Squirrels, on the other hand, aren't too big, too cheeky or too smelly, and they can't easily get by unnoticed. In fact, most are happy, furry little guys who make cute little noises and will gladly dispose of some of your garbage for you.

I don't understand why some people hate them so much. They have so many redeeming qualities. Their potential to favourably alter one's emotional state is a prime example. The sight of an overjoyed squirrel munching away on an acorn, his little squirrel cheeks puffed and stuffed, never fails to put a smile on my face no matter how bad my day has been. Carrying on a frenzied chase with one through the park is a great stress-reliever. Also, having a squirrel leap out at you from inside a garbage can is a far cheaper jump start than a cup of coffee, and its all-natural to boot. All in all, I can't think of another more useful wild animal.

It confuses me even more that anyone could hate squirrels after having grown up with Chip and Dale, during the pre- and post-Rescue Rangers eras. In early Disney cartoons, they were time and time again the reluctant participants in ongoing conflicts with Donald Duck and his tourette's-esque tendencies. They just wanted him to mind his own beeswax, for God's sake, but Donnie always had some sick plan to do them in, usually involving a fate worse than any given roadrunner scenario. They refused to be victims, that's all. The hate toward squirrels I see in people's eyes reminds me of that crazed-ferret look Donald Duck got when- ever he prepared a trap for poor little Chip and the pitiable Dale. It really scares me. I mean, how can people still harbour any disdain for squirrels after Chip and Dale's network triumph as the virtuous Rescue Rangers? If episode after episode of heroic deeds can do nothing to soften the squirrel-hater's sour heart, then society has a problem that goes far deeper than pest control.

How is it that species discrimination still exists after the legacy of Alvin, Simon and Theodore? Not only did they speak as articulately as Chip and Dale, they were also fully domesticated — beyond domesticated in fact. They clothed themselves, went to school, and were virtually indistinguishable from the average youth in every way, other than their physical appearance and the fact that they are international pop superstars. Although Dave got furious at them for their wacky teenage interests to be identified with a moderately good-looking and successful songwriter rather than a ranting, half-naked waterfowl whose high-stress lifestyle will inevitably cost him his life. Likely, our worst offense is the tendency to forget that if it weren't for loggers chopping down all the trees to build houses and streets, squirrels wouldn't be pests at all. I'm sure that your average neighbourhood rodent chum would much rather be harvesting the bounty from some lush forest glen than getting his hands on your half-eaten, week-old hordog wiener. So the next time you pass one of those dirty, hungry, funny-smelling little guys, try to remember this: they aren't about to plug you for change, squeegee your car, or cut their lawn at seven-thirty in the morning. They just want a little space, a bit of respect, a pinch of tolerance, and maybe a mop of curly hair to nestle up in once in a while.

* Note that chipmunks are just smaller, less uniformly-coloured squirrels. Please believe me, I looked it up.

Until age 13, Ken Butland was under the impression he was being raised by a colony of squirrels. Turns out his family is just weird.

MISCELLANEOUS SQUIRREL FACTS

- Taxonomy: Sciuridae (the rodent family)
- Speed: Clocked at speeds of up to 20 mph
- Leaping Potential: Up to 6 feet (horizontally)
- Life Expectancy: 5 to 6 years in the wild, up to 20 in captivity
- Size of Territory: 1 to 7 square acres
- Squirrel Capital of the World: Washington, D.C.
- Onomatopoeic Approximation of Squirrel Noises: 'tchrr'
- Largest Squirrel: The Rafuta squirrel of Asia, approx. 3 feet in length
- Interesting Diet Facts:
  - Salted peanuts are actually harmful to squirrels
  - Squirrels don't like meat all that much, they'll only eat it if they can't find anything else
  - Their chief preference is the sunflower seed

THE GRIZZLY GRILL

Interesting appetizers, a variety of pasta dishes, grilled meats, fresh fish, gourmet pizza from our wood burning oven.

SUNDAY BRUNCH
A wonderful brunch served every Sunday from 11 am - 3 pm!

FIRESIDE FOLK
Enjoy some of the area's finest musicians Live in the Lodge every Wednesday night!
Call us for other entertainment listings including live comedy!

Redefining Casual Dining. Exceptional Value.
395 Princess Street Reservations: 544-7566

EDDY'S

A TOUCH OF NEW ORLEANS IN DOWNTOWN KINGSTON!

FEATURING FRESH SEAFOOD & CAJUN CUISINE AND A WHOLE LOT MORE!

393 Princess Street (beside The Grizzly Grill) 531-9770

COLOUR, COPIES
FAXING
DESIGN

P&CC

MASTERS OF ARTIFICIAL REPRODUCTION

☎ 545-6543

The centre of the lower JDUC

☎ 545-0350

A special publication of
QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

Queen's University
1998 - 99
Welcome to Queen's

CLASSES of 1920, 1930

TSM 98

Oh, the places you'll go...

course load. There is also the fact that I kind of like it here, and am in no great rush to face the "Real World." The Real World is filled with life-long careers, mortgages, responsibility, and small children, all of which I would rather avoid for the present.

Moving far away from my parents has taught me two eternal truths:

- 1) My mom was right. This applies to every disagreement I ever had with my mother, from "No, I won't be home-sick," to "I can stay out till 3 a.m. and get my homework done." Nor likely.
- 2) Cooking for yourself really sucks. If it weren't for bagels, I would starve.

THAT'S ME IN FROSH WEEK. I'm the one on the left with "Queen's" written on her forehead. It's been over four years since I decided to come to Queen's, guided by some inexplicable desire to move very far away from my parents and strike out on my own.

I can remember frosh week vividly — introducing myself to floormates who became good friends, meeting people I haven't spoken to since frosh week — and yet somehow four years of my life have vanished since then.

Now, anyone with basic math skills will realize that since an honours Bachelor of Arts theoretically takes four years to finish, I should have left Queen's by now. I'm not still here because I'm doing graduate work, it's because I, like so many others, am on the extended plan. Yes, the "five year plan," the "victory lap" — whatever you want to call my extended academic career, it means a little more time devoted to that undergraduate degree. In my case, the extra year became a necessity after I switched majors for about the sixth time and became too involved in extra-curricular activities to take a full

Most of you will also be living away from home while at Queen's, and will probably realize similar things. After all, you are here to learn. That doesn't just mean classes (although they are sometimes informative), it means getting involved in one of the thousands of clubs or volunteer groups, it means meeting people, and mostly it means being willing to take chances. Sure, you'll occasionally look like a fool when you try something new — be it karate or ballroom dancing — but even if you don't succeed right away, you'll have a funny story to tell your new friends.

liz frogley

Elizabeth Frogley
Special Publications Editor 1998-99

ON SEPTEMBER 1, 1996, I found myself crammed into the back seat of a van that was overflowing with every belonging I felt I could not live without during my first year away from home.

On this particular Labour Day, my parents and I drove along the crowded 401, passing hundreds of low riding cars packed to the max with frosh bound for Queen's. Guided on our way by signs which read "Turn back now frosh and save yourselves," "Thank you fathers for your daughters" and "It's all over frosh, it's too late to go back. Ha! Ha!" it was a relatively short and painless trip to Kingston.

As we neared K-town, however, I felt my heart begin to pound and my stomach churn while visions of horrific, sadistic and degrading frosh rituals rushed through my mind.

Before I knew it, we were approaching the first set of lights off the Sir John A. MacDonald exit. To my absolute horror, there was an effervescent group of purple, mohawk-headed students, armed with baseball bats. They were awaiting the next influx of frosh-laden automobiles to be trapped at the traffic lights.

The light turned red just as we approached the intersection, leaving me in the hands of God's mercy to save me from these vicious-looking purple people. I slid down in my seat, hoping to be overlooked by the freakish rogues who were checking each car for frosh.

"Who's got frosh?" one of them yelled to the traffic.

Everyone was silent. A second later, to my trepidation, someone screamed, "There's one right here in the back seat."

It was my father. My entire body froze and my life flashed before my eyes as a group of five violet-coloured men came at our car, waving baseball bats in the air and smashing leather jackets on the ground.

"We're gonna get you frosh," they screamed. "We're going to eat you up." Just as I envisioned them dragging me out of the car by my hair, forks and pepper shakers in hand, the light turned green.

"Thank God," I thought to myself. After that experience, frosh week seemed pretty tame. Sliding through mud on my stomach, being squashed by a human rolling pin and doing an oil thigh in the middle of Lake Ontario clad in my overalls only added to the excitement I felt at my new-found freedom. Although I bawled my eyes out the moment my parents left, it was pretty exciting to finally be on my own, especially when I was surrounded by hundreds of people who wanted to party 24 hours a day.

Where else can you stagger home at 5 a.m. to find, not a grounding, but another drunken university fest? Where else can you stay out all night without a worry about the midterm you have to write in four hours? Where else can you be broke and starving because you spent your last $20 at Alfie's Pub?

On a more serious note, I know how frightening it can be to move away from home to a new environment where you don't know anyone. To ease your minds, let me assure you that Queen's students are extremely approachable. As long as you don't lock yourself in your room and refuse to participate, you won't have any problems meeting new people. That's what frosh week is all about. Everyone's in the same position as you are.

My most important piece of advice for all of you frosh is: become involved in everything you can. The only way you're going to meet people is if you go out and make an effort. There are so many great clubs, teams and organizations at Queen's that you'll be sure to find your own niche somewhere.

I will now leave you to make your own memories in frosh week and discover your individual impressions of the purple people eaters. As my sister advised me before I first left home: be yourself, have fun, and buy as many pairs of underwear as you can so you don't have to do your laundry very often.

Shandley McMurray

Shandley McMurray
Special Publications Editor 1998-99

The meaning of life, the university and everything

Some advice to frosh from grads and profs

BY DUFF WALLIS

Like sex, religion and the Spice Girls, university means something different to everyone. Just think of its root word — "universe." That covers a lot of territory. And if you're just beginning your time at universe-ity, it can be easy to feel, um, lost in space.

But while everyone's experience of university is different, it can also be said that there are some, well, universals — general principles of success for a "higher" education. With that thought in mind, The Journal solicited advice from those who have been through the ups, downs, and upside-downs of university life at Queen's.

We polled professors, administrators, and recent graduates on three very general, but important, questions:

1. If you could read just one book at university, what would it be?
2. If you could do just one thing before leaving Queen's, what would it be?
3. What is university about?

The following is a list of the best answers.

If you could read just one book at university, read...

A dictionary. Affan Qadir, Arts '96, was one of many who pointed out that a university education requires reading as many different books as possible. Qadir mused "if you read one book as an undergrad, you've got a problem." The distaste for reading just one book was overwhelming. Once everyone embraced the hypothetical of having only one book, however, the consensus was to read something you normally wouldn't; a book that rattles your cage, so to speak. As Matt McPherson, Arts '98, said, "Read a book about something you know absolutely nothing about." Another respondent, Andrea Syrtash, Arts '97, took a different tack, claiming it's better to read "anything for pleasure. [It] doesn't happen enough when you have readings to do for classes."

Some suggestions:

- Ulysses, James Joyce
- Zen and the Art of Motorcycle Maintenance, Robert M. Pirsig
- Catch 22, Joseph Heller
- Das Kapital, Karl Marx
- Atlas Shrugged, Ayn Rand
- All of Shakespeare

- The politics of reality: Essays in Feminist Theory, Marilyn Frye
- Le Deuxieme Sexe, Simone de Beauvoir
- Darkness at Noon, Arthur Koestler
- Things Fall Apart, Chinua Achebe
- Invisible Man, Ralph Ellison
- In the Shadow of War: the United States since the 1930's, Michael Sherry
- Moo, Jane Smiley
- The Bible

If you do just one thing before you leave Queen's...

Doubt. That is, challenge your own thoughts and values. This was the common tone of answers for the 'what to do' question. Qadir expressed it best, urging students to "cause a rupture in your world view. It'll be bad for your soul at first, but, in the end, you'll turn out not too badly."

Greg Frankson, Arts '97, was more direct, saying "If the challenges of university haven't forced you to look beyond your previous confines and confront what you've learned, then what the hell are you doing here? Get involved and carve your niche." McPherson added: "Do something outside of school besides boozing. The most valuable professional and life skills I learned were while working at The Journal and the Queen's Pub."

Other suggestions:

- take part in a revolution
- when faced with a choice, take the challenging alternative
- learn about another culture (preferably by travelling abroad)
- learn how to write vigorous prose, understand and use computers, and develop skills of resilience
- be a tourist — Kingston has some wonderful sights and attractions
- live in the student ghetto to experience Queen's at its most festive
- go see the African-Caribbean Culture Show and other similar shows at least once a year

University is about...

Learning... well, a lot of stuff. This final question was the source of our panel's greatest inspiration, and frustration. As Dean of Arts and Science Bob Silverman said, "This is the strangest question of all and results in the strangest answers." Some answers were very general ("learning and changing") while others were quite specific. History professor Geoff Smith said university is about "Learning to think critically, learning from mistakes, and developing tolerance and empathy."

The only common thread was the term 'learning', but what came after it varied considerably.

So, University is about learning:

- to do things at the last minute
- to change — socially, emotionally, and intellectually
- who you are
- to try everything once "except illicit drugs and skydiving"
- to question everything, including one's university education

Qadir, for one, still questions whether he got it right. "I couldn't possibly tell you what university is about,"

he said. "I still think about all that money I pumped into my education and wonder: why didn't I just get a couple of friends together, rent a house, and start up our own little university? Cheaper tuitions, no deadlines, classes whenever. We could bring drinks to class, which would be our living room, and we'd talk about this and that. We'd read and read. We'd read and write. And we'd be just as educated as you."

"Unless, of course, you go into the sciences. Then, you'd be smarter in terms of lab work. Cause we couldn't possibly afford a modern-day laboratory. Perhaps a crude one in the bathroom, for experiments on the effects of different drugs and shit like that."

Qadir concluded with his advice to students: "Go to university, attend the lectures, but don't pay. No one will ever know."

The student housing area is a learning experience all to itself.

PHOTO BY JODY SUGRUE

HEY!
ARTS & SCIENCE FROSH
Welcome to Queen's

ASUS (Arts & Science Undergraduate Society) warmly welcomes you to your new home. Just so you know, if you're on Arts & Science student you are already a member! No qualifying, no special meetings, just instant membership with all the fringe benefits.

Phone 545-6278 or Fax 545-6475 us with any questions that you may have. Better yet, just stop by! We are located at The Care (183 University Ave.) - just North of the JDUC.

You are going to be working hard for the next 3-4 years, so this is the place to play hard! Come check us out and get involved!

ASUS

The largest faculty society at Queen's!

REMEMBER: SIZE DOES MATTER!!

WELCOME TO QUEEN'S

Tuesday, July 28, 1998 • Volume 126

EDITORS
Elizabeth Frogley
Shandley McMurray
EDITORS-AT-LARGE
Keith Gerlein
Tara Mansbridge
MANAGING EDITOR
Laura MacInnis
PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS
Alex Kronby
James Terjanian
TECHNICAL CONSULTANT
John Bowman
BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Kraft
ADVERTISING MANAGER
Nick DuPray

Welcome to Queen's is published by The Queen's Journal, an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Contents ©1998 by The Queen's Journal; all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. Welcome to Queen's was printed on a Goss Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Gananoque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions.

Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2H8
Telephone editorial: 613-545-2800 advertising: 613-545-6711
fax: 613-545-6728

Circulation: 6,000

CONTRIBUTORS: April Bord, Geoff Ashenhurst, Alex Green, Lilian Kim, Timothy Scott, Sean Springer, Jody Sugrue, Duff Wallis

TOP TEN PLACES TO BRING A DATE IN KINGSTON

10. Princess Court Cinema for a flick
9. The Laundry Café for cheesecake
8. The Boiler Room for wall-climbing antics
7. Ban Righ Cafeteria for ice cream
6. Fort Henry: a great picnicking spot
5. On a Haunted Walk for a ghostly tour
4. Biking by the lake
3. Victoria park for a game of ultimate
2. Ice skating at Jock Harty Arena
1. Vic Hall first floor common room for Party of Five

The Laundry Cafe.

Fresh food.
The best desserts and history.

Missing home? Have your mom sign this ad and bring it in before Thanksgiving for a bowl of homemade soup.

Mom signs here:

Open daily 10 a.m. - 1 a.m.
Non-smoking
Located at 291 Princess (at Clergy)
542-2282

291 Princess @ Clergy Str.

Studying at Queen's A lot more than you bargained for

By LAURA MACINNIS

If you think that Orientation Week will be the last time you'll see your fellow first-year students all together, you're probably not familiar with the nuances of "study week" at Queen's.

The week-long break between classes and exams is a reunion of sorts, a time when everyone is thrown back together in a crash-course in exam survival. No matter if you've been diligent in your readings or you still can't figure out where your classes are being held, you'll be reunited with fellow frosh in a somewhat colder, more stressful, but just as social sequel to frosh week.

This week off has so much potential, you may as well start planning for it now.

Make friends with the library early. You may not visit it often, but at least you'll know where it is.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

It's a "vacation" from classes, professors, TA's, and the regular routine. Think of it as a break from the ordinary, a chance to find yourself, and a great opportunity to fall in love.

Studying, while a little stressful, is a great ice-breaker. It gives you a good excuse to approach that cutie you've never spoken with in your Biology lab, or the intriguing character in the back row of your English lecture.

Some key exam-time conversation starters:

- When's your first exam?
- This is going to be a killer!
- I can't believe how behind I am!
- Want to grab a coffee with me?

Everyone's game for a little exam-time dating antics. Distractions from studying are most appealing at this time of year, and days in the library get a little draw without some shameless flirting.

Now, I don't want to suggest that exam-time studying is all fun and games. For all you slackers and sleepy-heads out there, study week can be a rude awakening of sorts. Those pages, chapters and books you skipped over in favour of a nap or an afternoon at Clark are enough to bury you. Those early morning classes you slept through have created a large void in your notebook where lecture notes should be. You long to befriend those keeners who you snickered at during class. They, on the other hand, are snickering at you as you slam your head against your desk.

But there is hope. The great thing about a week off from class is that you can manipulate it to fit your lifestyle perfectly.

You can choose to sleep in and stay up late; you can choose to eat eight meals a day (donuts become a staple of everyone's diet), all guilt-free. You can ignore all social norms and dedicate seven days towards the academic equivalent of an emergency rescue mission.

The decision of where to study should be contingent on your propensity to flirt. If you can't resist the potential of Stauffer Library, opt for a study room or your residence room, cushioned by a 22-hour quiet rule.

It's also advisable to try to avoid places thick with nervous-energy, and to keep a safe distance from any friends who are in a state of panic — they'll just stress you out more.

You could also take the easy way out and spend your pre-exam time at coffee shops and/or pubs, putting your mind at ease over a hot cocoa or a pint.

Nothing you can't handle

The key to surviving your exams is not to let the stress get to you. Here are a few tips from a seasoned slacker on how to make it through with a smile:

1. Get your ZZZs. No matter how much material you have to cover or how stressed out your roommate is, it is imperative that you stay well rested. Sleep in until you feel refreshed; you'll be more on-the-ball, and that's the best start you can get.

2. Avoid coffee if you're stressed. Caffeine, especially java, will set in anxiety if you're feeling on the edge. Try some juice or herbal tea instead, or grab

Sweet, life-giving coffee may pull you through a late night of studying, but it won't help your focus or your nerves.

JOURNAL FILE PHOTO

some candy to tide you through the late nights.

3. Don't forget to eat. Seems simple enough, but so many students forget to get some square meals in during exam-time. Treat yourself; a salad or hot meal will sit much better than anything you'll find in the vending machines at this time of year.

4. Call home. A LOT. Your parents and friends at home are the ideal audience for your exam-time woes. They're not stressed out like your roommate, floormates, and all your friends. Let it all out; your family can provide a caring shoulder to lean on.

5. Go for long walks. Take a stroll around campus or at least meander around the library every once in a while. Even if it's awful outside, a little fresh air and some exercise will help you clear your mind and get a good night's sleep at the end of the day.

The truth about roommates Toto, I don't think we're in Kamloops anymore

By SEAN SPRINGER

You're about to embark on your first year, gripped by fears of what classes will be like, whether everyone will be cooler than you and, most importantly, where you'll live. The most pertinent thing though, is not the building you are forced to reside in, but whose smiling face you'll see as you awaken each morning. Yes, the truth is the roommate you have may determine the course of your year, your university career, and even your life. To allay your fears or prepare you for the worst, here is the uncensored truth about roommates.

In relation to roommates, there are three species of residence frosh.

1. Those who boldly enter some random roommate lottery while well aware of an incredible potential for fun, terror and lunacy.

2. Those who shrewdly ride the coattails of a high school acquaintance into a common space. They've now found security in avoiding a lottery of mediocre odds, however, the year exposes everyone's true colours. The potential for fun, terror and lunacy loom equally as large — usually even larger.

3. Those who like to walk the path to a secure asylum realizing that a roommate — lottery or no lottery — is a loaded risk for unlimited fun, terror and lunacy, which lies on a scale too suspicious for luck. These people make the cozy request for a table for one, increasing the grounds for exile to the desert isle of West Campus.

So, because we're talking about roommates, I'll focus on number one and how to interpret the results of the panicky lottery. And where does the ball roll? Well, when two identical sub-species collide, congratulations, it's gonna be a great year. If your roommate is your antithesis, my apologies, it's gonna be a year from hell.

Here we go through the tunnel of darkness and up into the light. Let's size up our cast and check out the following wildly exaggerated list of characteristics outlining the bulk of the kooks, clowns and rock stars residence has to offer. Keep in mind that some sub-species can crossover. For example, Party Lunatic can easily be Casanova and Spirit Squadron Leader can also be I-Want-Somebody-To-Love.

PARTY LUNATIC

This frosh is here for half the experience — partying. Whom most would dub "a bad influence," he will stop at nothing to have a good time, which usually isn't all that bad except when exams are in session, it's 5 a.m. and he's blaring Trooper. In this case, the ship (the roommate) usually ends up going down with the captain. He's also usually the first to contaminate High School Deprived Frosh Waiting to Exhale.

WANNABE PARTY LUNATIC

The most common of first years, this frosh will spend most of the first week drinking like a fish. After he's proved himself, the fear of failing will force this frosh to miserably flounder between the nightlife and Stauffer library. Observe sparse flashes of Party Lunatic in Wannabe Party Lunatic leading to broken furniture, heavy fines and unhappy neighbours.

I-WANT-SOMEBODY-TO-LOVE

This creature is majoring in "how-to-get-married-and-become-financially-stable." Beware.

CASANOVA

The most exciting and provocative of the residence frosh, this individual will bring a new companion home nightly — usually to

HIGH SCHOOL DEPRIVED FROSH STILL INHALING

The twin sister of the aforementioned frosh had a similar high school life, but

I FORGOT TO STUDY — HELP ME

Strong advice to hard-working frosh: avoid the "I Forgot To Study — Help Me" frosh. Powerful parents propelled this character into Queen's and now, they need help. Defer them to I-Want-Somebody-To-Love and watch the love doctor go to work.

So, roommate control is out of your hands, right? Basically — yes. However, one can slightly deviate a few degrees from "A Nightmare On Queen's Crescent" by following this intensely researched guide of DO's & DON'T's for roommates.

DO let your roommate know your inner self right off the bat. Reveal all your peculiar vices. If you smoke dope, invite her to share in a hash-oil joint right after the parents scurry home. If you're the conservative, serious type, write out a list of rules, i.e. lights out at 10 p.m., no loud music, room must be tidied and vacuumed every three days.

DON'T have sex in the presence of your roommate — even if she's completely passed out.

DO establish a mutual appreciation for music. I ran into this problem with my roommate, Darren. My passion for acid jazz, disco and trip hop became a potent toxin when brewed with Darren's love for Garth Brooks. Eventually, we shook hands on Frank Zappa, but the musical tension never did resolve itself.

DON'T claim ownership to a bed until after fair negotiations with the roommate. A roommate disgruntled with his choice of bed can spark a postal strike.

DO share your belongings. Not only is a possessive roommate annoying, but he's also a miser and a tight-ass.

DON'T mistake your room for the floor common room. Friends are good. Groupies are not.

DO apply for a new roommate if things don't quite work out. Party Lunatic and Spirit Squadron Leader should definitely search for separate dugouts.

DON'T leave your shit on your roommate's bed, particularly food. In fact, have an understanding for cleanliness. In my case, Darren was more of a slob than I was so I could relax.

Above all, be honest with your roommate. If Casanova has obviously been too active in your bed — ask him to do it elsewhere. Be relaxed. Keep an open mind, and your ship will sail smoothly into a clear second year in the student ghetto — where the real madness begins.

Need food

Canada Computer & Electronics Inc.
350 Princess Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 1B6
Tel: 613-542-8467 Fax: 613-542-5709

For 8 years we have been serving the computing needs of Queens University, both Staff and Students alike. Queen's chose us because our service, and OUR PRICES ARE...

Simply the Best!!

We offer a wide variety of Personal Computers in Pentium I and II. Laptops, Custom built machines, Printers and Peripherals to fill your every need.

Receive Free!

With this Ad and your Queen's Student ID you receive:

• Free Box of 3.5" Diskettes with any in store purchase

With the purchase of a new Computer System you get:
*** Free High Quality Word Processor & other assorted Software
*** Free Power Bar

With every Printer Purchase receive a pack of paper and a Printer Cable.

All Prices listed are cash only discounted — 5 years labor, 2 years parts, CD=1 year
This offer expires October 31st, 1998 * See us on the NET at www.canadacomputers.com

The Boiler Room Climbing Gym

Over 30 routes
Highest Indoor Climb in Canada!
10 min. walk from downtown
Groups and Parties
Lessons

549-0520

www.boiler-room-gym.com

2 for 1 Coupon

Includes all equipment

$19.80 value. New customers only!

Expires Dec 31, 1998. Not valid with other discounts. (limit 1 per customer)

The Campus Bookstore

"Get Connected"

Three Step Approach (or "How I Saved Time And Money When Buying My Textbooks At The Campus Bookstore").

#1 Point your browser to www.campusbookstore.com at home and use our Textbook Search Engine to find out what books you will need before you get to the store.

#2 Come to the store during our extended evening hours if possible. The store will be less busy and you will be able to shop with less hassles.

#3 Make sure that if you plan to pay by cheque that you preapprove it here at the store before you pick out your books. Other options include Visa, Mastercard, debit card, bookstore card, and cash.

Clark Hall • Weekdays 9-8, Saturday 10-8
www.campusbookstore.com • 545-2955
 Owned and Operated by Students Since 1909
www.campusbookstore.com

101 ways to amuse yourself in Kingston

Here are some suggestions for those of you who are looking to do more than just sit around and read about Marx

BY LILIAN KIM

Your life changes for good once you settle into Queen's. Far from the secure haven of high school, university presents everyone with new challenges. But one thing definitely stays the same no matter how many new compadres you meet at the lunch line in the Ban Righ cafeteria — homework will always stink. So the solution: distraction. All around campus and K-Town, you'll find various outlets for a cool flick, sweet sounds, or whatever excites your palette.

Live at Queen's

Here are some suggestions for the live music junkie in all of us. All the pubs on campus showcase musical talent at various times throughout the year. Check out Clark for RootsRock&Reggae open mic every Wednesday night or swing by on Friday afternoon for Ritual with its incredible spins and sounds. Ritual is a time-honoured tradition particularly popular with engineering students but fun for all, and involves showing up at Clark when the doors open at noon, drinking till dinner and then coming back for more. Clark also offers great live music. It houses impressive line ups like DJ Kid Koala, The Gandharvas and the rising Jon Coakley, to name a few.

All around campus and K-Town, you'll find various outlets for a cool flick, sweet sounds, or whatever excites your palette.

Alfie's is the proud parent of the star-making Battle of the Bands. This event takes place in the second semester and is a great opportunity to watch your musician friends, next-door neighbours or classmates shine in the spotlight.

If you decide to opt-out on blasting speakers and vibrating floors, mosey on over to The Queen's Pub to settle on the comfy

The Philosopher Kings are just one of many great bands that perform in Kingston during the school year.

PHOTO BY APRIL BOND

Sherwin Tija's Cheshire Women.

JOURNAL FILE PHOTO

couches and listen to some relaxing tunes. Songsters like the brilliant Ron Sexsmith were part of last year's QP atmosphere, making the scene a very pleasant one. The QP will be expanding over the summer, and will offer a bigger bar, cosier couches, and a pool table by the time you arrive in September.

Of course, the university also has more hidden gems. The music department holds choir and instrumental ensembles that showcase the talent within the Queen's community. From Bach to Gershwin, you'll find what you're looking for.

And for the frosh, you'll get your first taste of what Queen's has to offer in the live music department during orientation week. The annual frosh concert is brought to you by the Queen's Entertainment Agency, and though the identity of the band that will play is top-secret, in past years 54-40 and Moist have played, so it's definitely worth attending.

Celluloid Central

Sometimes $8.50 for a flick can be painful for our wallets, so there are alternatives to satisfy the Kubrick in you without stretching the coin.

You'll notice that Arts and Science Undergraduate Society presents movie nights throughout the year. For a low, low price, you can catch "big hit" flicks. Last year's Scream 2 presentation was, well, a scream. A nice way to spend a Sunday night before Monday morning throats us with 8:30 classes.

The Student Film Society offers their share of movies. From classics to the contemporary, the offerings are irresistible. And speaking of student film, the Queen's Film Department holds screenings for its various production courses at the end of the year. Who knows, the film major who lives in the room next door may be the next James Cameron.

Missed an artsy cool flick at one of the first-run theatres? Don't despair, Princess Court Cinemas screens the deep, dark and beautiful of the cinematic world. The place has an old-fashioned look which adds to the classic movie-going experience.

To be or not to be...

All the world's a stage. And here at Queen's the stage is set and the play is ready to proceed.

Queen's Drama Department offers outstanding stage performances. The cast and crew are primarily made up of students. All thespians at heart are encouraged to get involved with the many productions or at least go out and watch.

Queen's Musical Theatre's yearly production calls on all who are interested to put on their dancing shoes and sing from the diaphragm.

And if that's not enough for you, then "Sing!" — as Queen's Players like to encourage. The singing comedy troupe parodies pop-culture with your favourite '80s tunes. You can catch the act each semester at the different pubs and junctions around campus.

The Grand and Baby Grand Theatres on Princess Street house everything from the great William Shakespeare to productions created by local artists and Queen's students. And not only does the Grand host live theatre, but it also presents concerts like the Blue Rodeo gig this past May.

The Domino Theatre on King Street is a bit farther from campus, but presents an interesting selection of plays year-round, and is well worth the walk.

In the eyes of the beholder

For your Picasso fix, head on over to the Agnes Etherington Art Centre. The exhibitions are diverse and change regularly. From Canadian paintings to African masks, the Agnes explores culture at its best. The gallery is currently undergoing major renonovations, but its temporary home can be found at 218 Barrie St.

Students perform in one of the drama department's many productions.

PHOTO BY ALEX GREEN

And while you're studying like mad in Stauffer Library and the talking elevators are testing your nerves, why not break and check out the Union Gallery on the ground floor. The Union exhibits student works with various themes. Cool sculptures and intriguing photos are also part of the Union's schema.

Around campus, especially in the Fine Art Department's home base in Ontario Hall, exhibitions are constantly going on. Watch for postings to see what's going on there.

Boredom is rare here at Queen's. On those days when studying doesn't seem like such a good idea there are a multitude of alternatives. There's a huge supply of entertainment to be had, so get out there and find your own favourite way to spend a weekend.

The AMS food bank is open Mondays and Thursdays, 4-6 p.m.
 There's no application, no hassles, just free food.
 basement entrance
 (between University and Division)
 545-6972
 food bank@ams.queensu.ca
 272 East Street

Coming out at Queen's

Some thoughts and resources for the queer or queer-curious*

BY TARA MANSBRIDGE

There are a lot of things to worry about when you first come to Queen's regardless if you're straight, queer or uncertain. Questions will range from, "Where the hell is the cafeteria?" to "How does OSAP really work?" and everything in between. You'll probably feel the conflicting pressures of friends, school and extracurriculars, but it's important to know that if one of your particular pressures comes from deciding whether or not to come out at Queen's you are not alone.

The first and foremost thing to remember about coming out at Queen's is that how, when and where disclose your sexual orientation is your decision. There is no right or wrong way to come out — it's all about your personal style and comfort level. And while Queen's may seem, at times, to be a difficult campus to come out at, there are lots of people and organizations here which want to help.

Indeed, there are a good number of resources and organizations in the Queen's and Kingston communities which can provide information and support for you, whether you are deciding if you're going to come out or you are simply interested.

For example:

1. Resource Materials: There's an amazing little guide known colloquially as the Queer Guide and officially "Your Queer Community." It has all the relevant policies, groups, and history that you will want and need to know about Queer Queen's and Queer Kingston. An absolutely amazing resource, it points to everything from good resource libraries to queer-friendly coffee shops around town. It also contains a number of definitions of terms which may or may not be confusing for you, such as transsexual,

A few important numbers

Community Crisis Centre	544-4357
Kingston Lesbian Gay Bisexual Information PhoneLine	531-8981
Kingston District Community Information Centre	542-1001
Telephone Aid Line Kingston	544-1771
KFL&A Health Unit	549-1232
Queen's Student Counselling Service	545-2893

two-spirited, transphobia and drag queen, just to name a few. It can be purchased at the Social Issues Commission of the AMS ($45-48.16) for $3.

2. Queerorientation Week '98: Evenings of the first week of class in September are events with a queer focus. Watch for an ad in The Journal which will provide more details.

3. Discussion groups: The Coming Out Discussion Group meets biweekly on Wednesday evenings in the Grey House. These meetings start on the first week of classes, during Queerorientation Week. This is an evening to share experiences and ask questions about coming out in a new environment.

4. Groups and organizations: There are various organizations which you can get involved in to promote awareness and acceptance of gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgendered people. These include the Kingston Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual Association located in the Grey House; the Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual Issues Committee of the AMS; the Queen's Law Bisexuals, Lesbians and Gays; and the Equity Issues Committees in both the Commerce and Engineering Societies.

5. Social events: There are a variety of social events and locations to meet people who can support you and share their experiences. Club 477 at 477 Princess St. is the place to go to dance, play pool, and meet other queer friends in an atmosphere that you will feel comfortable in.

The Club is queer-friendly, but not queer-exclusive; it welcomes everyone: straight, queer or undetermined. The staff at Club 477 are sensitive to your needs and are more than happy to entertain any questions you may have.

Other queer social places/events include the LGBA socials on Friday nights, activities during Rainbow Week, and, of course, Queerorientation.

5. Just to talk: There are also resources if you just need to talk to someone one to one. Not only will your don or floor senior be happy to help, Health, Counselling and Disability Services have counselors available to listen. Finally, there is a lesbian, gay, bisexual peer support and information phone line that you can access for support when you need it.

Queen's can be a scary place for a number of reasons, but it doesn't always have to be. It's also important to recognize that all these resources aren't exclusive to queer people, or people thinking of coming out. You can access them to learn more about yourself, your straight, indeterminate, or queer friends, as well as learning about the different processes of coming out, all without pressure to be anything less or more than you want to be.

*In all cases, the word queer is used in this article as a term of pride that includes lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgendered individuals.

The great Golden Gael mystery

What to do and who to watch in the Queen's athletics scene

BY ADAM KAMINSKY

Amongst the anxieties of long-distance relationships, class schedules and potential roommates are the three most basic questions of incoming students: Where are the campus pubs? Do we have to go to class? And, What the <ensored> is a Golden Gael?

Well, it won't take long on the campus tour to come across the pubs and you don't have to go to class (however, since you are spending the money you might as well attend at least a few). And as for a Golden Gael, it's an old name for a Gaelic warrior, but more importantly, it's the nickname of the various Queen's athletic teams.

When dealing with a school that has more varsity teams than Dennis Rodman has hair colours, it would be impossible to adequately introduce all aspects of the varsity program. Instead, it will suffice to give you a sampling of various teams and events that will enhance university life.

The first sport that most incoming 'froshies' will get a taste of is football. Queen's has a rich tradition of success on the gridiron, and the last three years have not strayed from that storied past.

Coach Bob Howes has cajoled his squad to three consecutive playoff berths. Last year the Gaels won the conference regular season, only to come up short in the Dunsmore Cup, losing to the hated Ottawa Gee-Gees. Last year also boasted some impressive attendance and, with the core of the team coming back, this season should be as good as the last.

So get ready to rise early on Saturday, drink a little "grape juice," and head out to Richardson Field on West Campus and cheer wildly for the boys in blue and gold.

If the football team has a tradition of success, then the men's rugby squad has one of domination. In the last 12 years, the team has won ten Ontario titles. Year after year, this squad has been able to maintain not only a competitive team, but one that wins and does so in an entertaining fashion.

In a year in which the World Cup has taken centre stage in France, soccer has reached new levels of popularity. With both the men's and women's squads finishing in the top 10 in the country last year, the Golden Gaels should again field exciting teams on the "football" pitch this fall.

Other teams that attract a large audience include the extremely competitive women's basketball team, which is looking for a provincial championship, and an improving men's squad.

On the ice, both the men and women's hockey team have suffered through some tough seasons, but both are young and rebuilding.

While the aforementioned teams have had various levels of success, the most dominant varsity unit has been the women's squash team. The Chicago Bulls of the Ontario circuit have won six consecutive championships, and are followed closely by the four-time consecutive champion figure skating squad.

The five other 1997-98 champions are men's golf, men's tennis, badminton, women's synchro and men's curling.

In total there are 39 varsity teams, in addition to five competitive club teams, that play under the Queen's banner. There is a sport to suit all interests whether it be track and field, rowing, baseball, lacrosse, fencing, ultimate, nordic ski, field hockey, swimming, water polo and more — the list seems never ending.

For those who intend on playing at the varsity level, it is safe to assume that coaches have been contacted and try-out schedules have been investigated. If not, you better get to it quick.

For those who like to play sports, but don't want to make the commitment required of a varsity athlete, participation is certainly not out of the question. With the huge number of recreational and intramural sports offered by the athletic department, just about every athletic activity is accommodated at Queen's (regrettably, luge and bobsled excepted). The recreational and intramural sports are well organized and all-inclusive.

The Golden Gaels continue to be a source of spirit at Queen's. JOURNAL FILE PHOTO

From the innovative wallyball and inner-tube water polo (that's right, a rousing game of water polo played while floating instead of swimming) to ballroom dancing and martial arts lessons, there is a little bit of something for everyone at the Physical Education Centre. You can even work out for free and take free fitness classes at the PEC.

As you will soon discover, Queen's provides a good number of sports for not only the player, but also the observer. There is a great deal of pride that can be taken from successful teams and the school spirit they generate.

It's important that during your time here you go out and support a team, any team. If you're really adventurous, paint your face tricolour, learn all the words to the oil thigh (it's the Queen's song, so don't let your imagination run wild) and dance in the aisles. Whatever you do, enjoy the Golden Gaels, they are something to be proud of.

CLASS OF '02

WELCOME TO CAREER SERVICES

For admission it's IQ
For your sustenance try DQ
For your future's sake discover CQ

Don't flounder in a first-year fog.
Get help and find direction at Career Services.

WE CAN

Help you discover who you are
Help you explore the worlds of education and work
Teach you how to market yourself.

SO YOU CAN

Apply yourself wisely
Stretch yourself in everything you do
Know when to keep trying and when to seek help

Use all your talents
Savour these years for they will be like no others

CAREER SERVICES is located on the Ground floor of the St. Lawrence Building, across the street from Victoria Hall.

We are open 8:30 - 5:00 September to April and 8:30 - 4:30 May to August.

COME SEE US IN SEPTEMBER!

WE HAVE

- Career/job search counselling
- Part-time, summer and long term employment opportunities
- Workshops to sharpen your job search skills
- Print & a/v resources on employers, graduate & professional programs as well as the world of work
- Outreach events - Careers Day, Summer Job Fair, Education, MBA & Grad School Forums
- Our URL is <http://careers.queensu.ca>

Looking for a long distance plan designed especially for students??

ACC has the plan just for you!

Keep in touch for as little as

5 cents

per minute!

Separate your calls from your roommate's on your long distance bill...

No more highlighting your phone bill at the end of the month!

Family and friends are eligible for this great savings plan too!

Support the AMS!

Watch for ACC on-campus in September!!

S&R Department Store, where customer service means something more!

If we don't have it, you don't need it!

and this is how to find it

SHOP S&R FIRST for BIG SAVINGS on your Back to Campus needs!

We have all your dorm room, house or apartment needs. Let S&R make your home away from home more comfortable while you save some bucks. So, you are moving in, do you need:

Good People. Great Prices. everyday

Brand Names at Discount Prices!

- |   |   |   |   |
|---|---|---|---|
| <input type="checkbox"/> Telephones           | <input type="checkbox"/> Laundry Baskets        | <input type="checkbox"/> Heaters                  | <input type="checkbox"/> Garbage Bags     |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Clock Radios         | <input type="checkbox"/> Storage Containers     | <input type="checkbox"/> Water Filters            | <input type="checkbox"/> Incense          |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Toasters             | <input type="checkbox"/> Drinking Glasses       | <input type="checkbox"/> Bedding                  | <input type="checkbox"/> Candles          |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Toaster Ovens        | <input type="checkbox"/> Dinnerware and cutlery | <input type="checkbox"/> Curtains                 | <input type="checkbox"/> Shoes            |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Hot Pots and Kettles | <input type="checkbox"/> Microwave Ovens        | <input type="checkbox"/> Pillows                  | <input type="checkbox"/> Athletic wear    |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Coffee Makers        | <input type="checkbox"/> Mactac                 | <input type="checkbox"/> Home Decor               | <input type="checkbox"/> Sandals          |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Mini Stereos         | <input type="checkbox"/> Kettles                | <input type="checkbox"/> School Supplies          | <input type="checkbox"/> Boots            |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Audio Accessories    | <input type="checkbox"/> Kitchen Gadgets        | <input type="checkbox"/> Paper                    | <input type="checkbox"/> Work Boots       |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Video Tapes          | <input type="checkbox"/> Thermos® Containers    | <input type="checkbox"/> Pens                     | <input type="checkbox"/> Menswear         |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Audio Tapes          | <input type="checkbox"/> Electric Shavers       | <input type="checkbox"/> Knapsacks                | <input type="checkbox"/> Ladieswear       |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Bookcases            | <input type="checkbox"/> Hand Tools             | <input type="checkbox"/> Toys and Games           | <input type="checkbox"/> Licensed Apparel |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Student Desks        | <input type="checkbox"/> Paint                  | <input type="checkbox"/> Craft and Hobby Supplies | <input type="checkbox"/> Jeans            |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Lamps/Flashlights    | <input type="checkbox"/> Paint Accessories      | <input type="checkbox"/> Videos                   |   |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Mirrors              | <input type="checkbox"/> Mops                   | <input type="checkbox"/> CD's                     |   |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Framed Prints        | <input type="checkbox"/> Brooms                 | <input type="checkbox"/> Cleaning Supplies        |   |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Hot Plates           | <input type="checkbox"/> Brushes                | <input type="checkbox"/> Toiletries               |   |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Locks                | <input type="checkbox"/> Pots, Pans             | <input type="checkbox"/> Soap                     |   |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Batteries            | <input type="checkbox"/> Bakeware               |   |   |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Key Cutting          | <input type="checkbox"/> Housewares             |   |   |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Bathroom Accessories | <input type="checkbox"/> Fireworks              |   |   |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Picture Hooks        | <input type="checkbox"/> Camping Supplies       |   |   |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Shelving             | <input type="checkbox"/> BBQ's and Supplies     |   |   |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Closet Organizers    | <input type="checkbox"/> Fishing Supplies       |   |   |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Hangers              | <input type="checkbox"/> Electrical Supplies    |   |   |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Light Bulbs          | <input type="checkbox"/> Plumbing Supplies      |   |   |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Extension Cords      | <input type="checkbox"/> Potting Soil           |   |   |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Power Bars           | <input type="checkbox"/> Plant Pots             |   |   |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Glue and Tape        | <input type="checkbox"/> Fans                   |   |   |

... and Kingston's Best place for Snacks and Grocery items to make a happy and complete home
SHOP S&R First

YOUR OFFICAL S&R COUPON SAVE 15% OFF

any regular yellow ticketed Footwear or Apparel Item of your Choice.

Limit one coupon per customer. Not valid in conjunction with any other special offer. Offer Expires: November 30, 1998

27 Princess Street • Right in the Heart of Downtown Kingston
Store Hours: 9:30 to 9pm • Saturday 9:30 to 6pm • Sunday 10:30 to 5pm

Meet your student government leaders

TOM STANLEY
Alma Mater Society
PRESIDENT

Job description: Tom is the representative of undergraduate students at Queen's and the external representative to all levels of government. Tom is also a link between the university administration and the two major governing bodies at Queen's, the Assembly and the Senate.

Favourite aspect of the job: Learning about all the student services at Queen's, making progress on tuition and funding battles.

Hometown: Mississauga, Ont.

Program at Queen's: History

Hobbies: Reading, listening to music (alterno-pop), sports, including basketball and mountain biking

Favourite band: The (now defunct) Grapes of Wrath

Favourite book: Polaroids from the Dead by Douglas Copeland

Favourite meal: Chicken fingers and fries, a nice tender filet mignon

Favourite non-alcoholic drink: Coca-cola

Favourite alcoholic drink: Whiskey sour/Beer

Favourite bar: The newly expanded Queen's Pub

Favourite non-alcoholic establishment: Mekong Restaurant

First-year residence: Brockington House

Memories of the cafeteria: "The cafeteria was awesome, really fun... We had a floormate who would eat everything."

Advice to first-year students: "Take the time to see what's going on... It sure is a bit of a whirlwind... There's no need to join 20 clubs in first year... Give everything it's due time, school work included."

ALISON LOAT
Alma Mater Society
VICE-PRESIDENT (UNIVERSITY AFFAIRS)

Job description: Alison handles issues internal to the university, represents students at various levels of administration and government, and sits on numerous committees.

Favourite aspect of the job: "I really enjoy the chance to work with a lot of students... I really like undertaking a project and finishing it."

Hometown: St. Catharines, Ont.

Program at Queen's: Politics

Hobbies: Sports, including field hockey, swimming, tennis and soccer, reading, singing. "I have my own karaoke machine... It's a big hit at parties!"

Favourite band: Indigo Girls/Van Morrison

Favourite book: The Bell Jar by Sylvia Plath

Favourite meal: Grilled cheese sandwich with processed cheese

Favourite non-alcoholic drink: Chocolate milk

Favourite alcoholic drink: Diet coke and rum with no fruit and lots of ice in a tall glass

Favourite bar: "For location and availability you can't beat the QP and Alie's!"

Favourite non-alcoholic establishment: My porch

First-year residence: Victoria Hall

Memories of the cafeteria: "The cafeteria was good for socializing but less good for eating... I had many more good experiences than good meals."

Advice to first-year students: "Don't stress yourself about the school part of it. It all comes together. You'll learn to play the academic game.... Don't be shy."

GORD MOODIE
Alma Mater Society
VICE-PRESIDENT (OPERATIONS)

Job description: Gord is responsible for operational and financial matters of the AMS. He coordinates the 12 services with the directors and managers, as well as services including affinity programs, like ACC Long Distance and the AMS Student Health Plan.

Favourite aspect of the job: "I kind of like the whole job... The people who I'm working with — it wouldn't be a fun job if I didn't like the people I'm working with."

Hometown: Vancouver, B.C.

Program at Queen's: Commerce

Hobbies: Sports, including skiing, golf and windsurfing, and going to Alie's.

Favourite book: A Fine Balance by Rohinton Mistry

Favourite band: Massive Attack

Favourite meal: Sushi

Favourite non-alcoholic drink: Freshly squeezed orange juice

Favourite alcoholic drink: Amaretto sours

Favourite bar: "I hope my favourite pub is the extended QP"

Favourite non-alcoholic establishment: Wooden-head's.

First-year residence: Victoria Hall (Third floor, B wing stairwell)

Cafeteria: "Now I think the cafeteria's pretty good... I have memories of poor food."

Advice to first-year students: "I think I was overwhelmed by professors in first year telling me how badly I would do academically. Don't get intimidated too much, with academics, classes and for getting involved... You only regret the things you don't do."

Pick up, tune in, turn on A brief introduction to Queen's media

BY JOHN BOWMAN

The Empress

The Empress is the campus Chinese/English bilingual publication. The format for last year featured English and Chinese articles all based on a common theme: fashion, culture, whatever. The English section appears in the front half of the paper, the Chinese in the back, and both are full of articles, personal ads and news from the various Asian cultural clubs on campus.

Recently, The Empress established an opt-outable student fee; that is, an optional fee that students can "opt out" of on the QCARD electronic registration system. With this new cash source, we should all expect great things from The Empress.

The Queen's Journal

The Journal, the paper you're holding right now, just celebrated its 125th anniversary, making it one of the oldest student newspapers in North America.

Of all the campus newspapers, The Journal looks most like a mainstream publication, its information presented in familiar newspaper sections: news, editorials, opinions, sports, features, arts & entertainment and classifieds.

The Journal prides itself on the fact that everything you see and read in its pages is produced by members of the community it serves. And because not everything on the minds of Queen's students fits neatly into the sections listed above, The Journal has a MISG section, appearing at the back of every issue, to catch all the eccentricities that might otherwise fall through the cracks.

New this year to The Journal is a weekly science section, and a national magazine which will focus on the issues and events most pertinent to university students. As well, there is a monthly literary publication, The Reader, containing essays, reviews, short stories and poetry from some of the most creative minds on campus.

The Journal publishes twice a week, on Tuesdays and Fridays, during most of the school year. But, as exams draw near, only the Friday issue is produced. Hey, we all have to study — even us Journal staff.

Golden Words

To some, Golden Words is the only thing that makes life at this university interesting, an antidote to the rigid and sometimes stifling campus routine. To a great number of us, it is seen as a paper that relaxes the tight pucker of the collective Queen's demeanour and allows us to laugh a little.

To others, GW is a pox on the university, an embarrassment to its students, a throw-back to the days when prejudice of all kinds was considered funny. (Editor's note: These people usually end up in the pages of GW at some point.)

To the rest of us, though, GW is the humour paper, produced by the engineering society. The members of its editorial board work their asses off in their woefully tiny offices in Clark Hall to produce a paper that appears every Wednesday (which they have re-dubbed Wordsday) and often makes good in-lecture reading.

Surface

Published by the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society (ASUS), Surface strives to bring an alternative media voice to Queen's University. It speaks very frankly about subjects ranging from sex and sexuality to racism to politics, campus and elsewhere. However, its frankness sometimes gets it into trouble, and its past is riddled with run-ins with angry students, faculty and administrators. For example, Surface has, in its history, featured on its cover a collage of male genitalia, statistics on Holocaust denial and two men frolicking with proctology equipment.

Simply put, Surface is not shy. Surface has faced extinction more than once, but it's still around. It is produced monthly.

Ultraviolet

Ultraviolet, or UV, is Queen's newest campus publication. It is a magazine of original student writing and photography, produced twice last year. This magazine is arguably the most beautifully produced venue for the Queen's creative voice on campus, and great place for a writer's first poems and short stories to be published. Why not, with writers like Michael Ondaatje as Queen's alums?

There are differences of opinion about the value of a publication in direct competition to other creative writing venues on campus, such as The Feminist Review, The Anti-Racism Review, The Queen's Journal Reader, and The Arts & Science Undergraduate Review. There is also a hint of nasty politics surrounding publication selections, but there will always be opponents to things new and different — UV has only been around for two years. All in all, a great campus publication.

Studio Q

Okay, pop quiz, hot shot. You're producing the only student-run television program to come out of a university without a journalism school. The ratings of your campus-news-oriented show are sagging and GW is making fun of your production values on a regular basis. Then, suddenly, the mandatory student fee for your show is yanked in a campus wide referendum, stripping you of half your budget. What do you do? What do you do?

Give up? Hardly. Shoot the hostage? What are you talking about?

Well, in the case of Studio Q, you start over again. From scratch.

When $4,000 of video equipment was demolished in a car accident, an incident during which Lindsay Steenberg, co-anchor of Studio Q, suffered bruised ribs and a sprained wrist and ankle, Studio Q continued, displaying the ultimate "the show must go on" attitude. When the computer that generated the credits for the show crashed, the creators wrote them out on toilet paper and scrolled them in front of the camera. And in the end, it all paid off.

By the end of the first term, Studio Q had residence rooms packed to watch the show (despite its rotten time slot: opposite ER, with repeats on Friday night) and, in the final chapter of the come-back story, Studio Q had its funding restored and increased in the same referendum they lost a year previous.

Studio Q airs on cable 13, on Thursdays and Fridays at 10 p.m.

CFRC-FM

"Eclectic" is an understatement and "varied" is laughably inadequate to describe CFRC, Queen's campus radio.

Tune in to 101.9 FM and you'll hear music ranging from classical to folk, Celtic to punk, industrial to hip hop and RPM. But it doesn't stop there. You'll probably hear magazine shows too, covering a broad range of topics and in about a dozen different languages.

As well, CFRC broadcasts play-by-plays of Golden Gaels home games for those of us too lazy to make the trek out to Richardson Stadium or Jock Hardy Arena, as well as away games for those who want to keep track of our teams on the road.

One caveat, though. I'd advise that you pick up a CFRC schedule or you'll literally never know what you'll hear when you tune in.

Principal Leggett reveals the 'fun-loving' guy beneath the suit and tie

BY LAURA MACINNIS

Most students will become familiar with the official persona of Queen's Principal Bill Leggett in their first year. He can be spotted at most Queen's ceremonies and events, sporting a gown and a smile.

But there's more to Bill Leggett than first meets the eye. Away from the office, our principal is an easy-going and sometimes quirky guy who describes himself as "fun-loving."

Leggett grew up in the small town of Monoville, Ontario, and attended high school in Orangeville. His university education started at Wilfrid Laurier University, where he pursued a bachelor's degree in the humanities.

However, Bill's academic path took an abrupt turn in his fourth year, when he took an elective in biology and decided to change course. "I found biology very exciting," he says.

He completed his degree at Laurier, then went to University of Waterloo and completed a masters degree in zoology. After that, Leggett went on to McGill University, where he received a Ph.D. in zoology.

Leggett then embarked on his research career, gaining expertise on the effect of biological and physical processes of the sea on marine fish. Leggett believes his taste of different academic subjects helped enrich his education, and hopes students will try out different options before settling on one thing. "Get as broad an education as you can get," he advises.

He urges students to make their university experience as diverse as possible, as education is "an opportunity to grow, to learn, and develop self-confidence in life and leadership skills."

Leggett hopes first-year students will become involved in the extra-curricular life at Queen's, whether in clubs, teams, student government, research projects, or campus life.

"Become involved, take full advantage of that extra dimension," he urges. "Do it, and be active in it."

"Success in life, many times, is the ability to see opportunities and seize them," Leggett says.

The principal speaks very highly of his two sons, David and John, and his wife, Claire. David is a post-doctorate fellow in biochemistry, and John works in the printing and computer graphics industry in Toronto. While he admitted that he is anxious to become a grandfather, he said simply, "there are no grandchildren... yet."

Bill Leggett has now been principal and professor of biology at Queen's for four years, an experience which he describes as "the best experience I've ever had in my life."

"Queen's really is unique in its quality, and beyond that in the opportunity it provides for students," he said. "There's a real community within a community."

"There's such a sense of belonging and dedication," he added. "It's just amazing... there is an intense feeling of belonging."

More facts about Bill

Favourite book: Leggett said he couldn't pick one favourite, but as a history fan he would choose one about "the early history of North America, something from that broad area."

Favourite weekend newspaper: "I'm a great Globe and Mail fan," said Leggett, who enjoys the Globe's coverage of international affairs.

Most embarrassing moment at Queen's: Apparently, Leggett couldn't figure out the parking rules around campus when he first came to Queen's, so Campus Security was on his case. "In my first few weeks at Queen's, I was towed and ticketed quite a lot," he admitted.

Favourite restaurant: Leggett wouldn't name a Kingston establishment, but said the Le Caveau in Montreal was his favourite place to dine with his wife, Claire.

Favourite snack: "I have a big weakness for Oh Henry bars!"

Favourite movie: As Good as It Gets. "I'm hooked on Jack Nicholson!"

Favourite TV show: Seinfeld

The Principal addresses student protesters at a rally against tuition hikes.

PHOTO BY JAMES TERJANTIAN

Hobbies: Wood-working, cabinet-making, carpentry. "I like doing things with my hands, making things," Leggett says.

Nervous habits: "My wife tells me I jingle my change." He also admits to eating lots of Oh! Henry bars in times of stress.

Dream vacation: "A two-week horse-backing trip through the Rockies with my wife Claire... one day we'll get to it."

A beginner's guide to off campus dining

BY TIMOTHY SCOTT

While veterans of residence food from a few years back will say that things have gotten better in recent years, there is no doubt that after a month or two the cafeteria can get a bit monotonous.

To solve this problem, frosh can seek out one of several dozen restaurants and fast-food outlets that are a convenient walk from campus. Since the fast food should be familiar to most, here are some of the other restaurants you will come to know and love during your time at Queen's.

Greek Cuisine

Downtown Kingston features two excellent Greek restaurants for your dining pleasure. Located on Ontario St. near Princess St., Minos offers the nicest ambience of the two, but it is also more expensive.

Just a few blocks north of Minos on Princess, you'll find the other Greek eatery, Grecos.

This is definitely the better of the two. Their superb seafood and delicious soups set them apart from their nearby competition. While unsuited for large groups, Grecos is just right for a romantic dinner for two.

Typically, a dinner for two at one of these restaurants will cost between about $25 and $50, depending on your tastes and the volume of wine you consume.

Vietnamese and Thai

If you are looking for affordable, tasty Vietnamese or Thai cuisine, Kingston is the place to be. There are currently no less than seven such restaurants in the downtown core alone.

Opinion is certainly divided over which of these restaurants is the best. My own personal favourites are Mekong, Saigon Delights and the Wok-In.

Little more than a hole in the wall on Montreal St. near Princess, the Wok-In gives you a fast, healthy meal and an excellent bang for your buck.

Found at Division St. and Princess,

Mekong provides a more varied menu and seating for larger groups. Needless to say, if you are heading out with half your floor for dinner on Sunday, this would be the place to go. When you make your trip there, you'll be treated to the most eclectic background music of any restaurant in Kingston.

Considerably cheaper than the Greek eateries, dinner for two at these restaurants can be had for less than $20.

Grilled and Fried

Looking for a burger and fries but eager to avoid the fast food atmosphere? If so, there are a handful of local restaurants ready to serve up some deep-fried gastronomic satisfaction.

Serving up some well-done meals is the Copper Penny. Found on Princess near Sydenham St., the Penny makes a good sandwich and fries but their pasta should be avoided.

Closer to campus you will find JJ's and Stooley's. At the corner of Johnson St. and University Ave., JJ's is just five minutes from Stauffer Library. While neither of these restaurants feature high cuisine, JJ's makes the mundane look exciting. Down the street at Johnson and Division, is the unfortunately named Stooley's Cafe. Name aside, the anemic service at Stooley's is compensated by its convenient location and diverse menu of burgers, sandwiches and other reasonably priced meals.

A meal can be had at any of these diners for under $10.

The 'Hub'

Located near Division and Princess, Hoppin' Eddy's and the Grizzly Grill fill some obvious gaps in the downtown restaurant scene.

Little more than a will thank you.

The All-Nighters

Whether through necessity, drunken revelry or just bald-faced stupidity, just about every Queen's student will stay up all night at some point during their stay at Queen's. When you do this, you will need sustenance, so here's where you should go -- Lino's. Don't let the odd-looking Marco Polo lounge worry you. While the place can be a bit scary at times, at 4 a.m. you haven't got much choice in the matter.

Any questions? If so, too bad. This place must be seen to be fully understood. If you need directions, ask anybody.

If you've made it to 6 a.m. and you want an old fashioned breakfast to start (or end) your day, the place for you is Morrison's. Found on Wellington St. near Brock St., this diner is a throwback to a bygone era. Bacon, eggs and toast serve as the holy trinity of breakfast here. It may not be good for you, but it damn well tastes good.

If you get up at a more reasonable hour and are looking for a change for breakfast, The Toucan and The Brass both offer bargain priced breakfasts that will get your day started right. Both are located on Princess and offer similar breakfast deals including eggs, bacon, etc. which are worth the walk.

There are innumerable other restaurants in Kingston, including fabulous cafes like Windmills, the Laundry Cafe, Bukamaranga and the Sleepless Goat that are great places to have a slice of cheesecake, a late night glass of wine, or tea with a friend.

In general, Kingston cuisine ranges from the outstanding to the indigestible, and this selection is but a sampling of what you can expect to find. Restaurants open (and close) every year, so no matter how long it takes you to finish your degree, there will always be a new place to check out.

Chez Kingston

Menu

Bon Appetit

1.50
2.99
.99
1.00
.00
.50
.99
1.00

souped-up steakhouse, the Grizzly Grill offers a few odd twists like alligator and interesting pizzas but otherwise doesn't have much to write home about, aside from a surprisingly good wine list.

Hoppin' Eddy's offers a taste of New Orleans with a cajun inspired menu of Po' Boys and jambalaya. More innovative than its older neighbour, Eddy's may put a hole in your pocket but your stomach

Participation — the name of the game

A small suggestion of what you should do during your stay at Queen's

BY TARA MANSBRIDGE

Over the past year or so, I have been asked to give advice to cousins, friends and friends of friends about university life. They have asked me what to expect, what to do, what not to do and everything in between. While the advice I give often varies from person to person, according to their specific circumstances, one sentiment remains the same, and always will:

Get involved.

If I have one regret after four years of university, it's that I didn't become involved in the various clubs, events and organizations on campus sooner.

I like to rationalize my early reluctance to participate by saying that I was shy or unsure of myself in my first year. And it's true, I was a timid person, although I had a reasonably active social life. But I missed out on more than I realized by not having the bravery to walk into a club office, the student government office or The Journal office to get involved in an activity I believed in.

To other frosh it probably seemed silly to commit to a club or group when they were dealing with being in a new town, at a new school, with new friends and new academic challenges. So, they didn't get involved either.

But, believe me, the majority of your education in university will come, not in the classroom, but from the people that surround you. The best way to get in touch with those people, to educate yourself and to explore your own strengths and weaknesses, is to get involved in something you enjoy.

When I joined the Queen's Choral

The majority of your education in university will come, not in the classroom, but from the people that surround you.

Ensemble (not just for music students) and began participating in both The Queen's Journal and Queen's Model Parliament, I was exposed to people and activities that would never occur in the lecture hall or on my residence floor. I learned to push myself and try new things. For the first time I got up in front of 300 other students and spoke my mind about something I cared deeply about. I also learned how to interview someone, how to get pertinent information and how to write a good news story.

In becoming knowledgeable about these things, I was also learning how much more I was capable of, and what wonderful, interesting people surrounded me at Queen's.

The classroom, admittedly, is an important part of our lives here at this university. But it is struggling towards a goal with your fellow students, whether it be putting on a charity ball, improving the lighting in the student housing area or putting out a newspaper, that truly teaches you who you are and what potential you have. It shows you companionship and it helps you to clarify your goals. It can transform a vague interest in student government to a discovery that your real passion in life, and your ultimate career path, lies in the direction of fundraising, communications, event organizing or graphic design.

In some ways it sounds impossible that a membership in the Curling Club or participation in Model Parliament could change your perspective on who you are. Yet, I look back at the person I was four years ago and I am amazed at how far I've come. I've gone from a shy, nerdy woman intent on impressing others and succeeding in my new school, to a confident, (sometimes too) opinionated person who knows who she is and what she wants; someone intent on succeeding in life, wherever it leads.

Yes, school helped. The classes, however painful those all-nighters were, helped too. But what really brought on my transformation was my participation in the things I soon learned that I really do love: journalism, debate, women's rights, exercise and working with others to achieve a goal.

It may be frightening walking through the door of a club office and asking to join, but, take my word for it, clubs adore having frosh join their ranks. You may join certain clubs and find that you hate them — try again. And if you find that you really don't enjoy group participation at all, even if it involves a topic or activity you love, then at least you've learned that much about yourself.

All in all, I have to say, and I will say over and over and over again, the clubs and organizations at Queen's are one of the most important ways that you can explore yourself and expand your knowledge during your time at university. And that's why you're here in the first place, isn't it?

Get involved.

All packed up...
Registered for classes...
Minimum tuition paid...
Map of Kingston close at hand...
That nervous feeling in your gut...

What's Next?

Student Organizer

Classes, going out with friends, clubs, sports, entertainment, work...

There's a lot to do at Queen's, and without a copy of the What's Next student organizer, you could miss out. Designed with the Queen's student in mind with schedules, campus hours, prices, puzzles and plenty of writing space, it is the best way to keep track of What's Next in your busy schedule. Best of all, it costs less than five dollars.

Get a copy during Frosh Week at any of these locations...

- Frosh Week Sidewalk Sale
- The Campus Bookstore
- UBS Exchange (upper JDUC)
- Publishing and Copy Center

AMS

(yes, exams at Queen's actually look like this)

Ban Righ Centre 545-2977

The Ban Righ Centre's mandate is to support women who are adjusting to student life while returning to university after an absence. The centre is located at 32 Queen's Crescent.

Campus Security 545-2552

Call in case of emergency, or if you want a walk home after Walkhome's hours are over.

Computing Information Centre 545-6666

The centre's staff can help you with computer problems and provides some free software to students. The office is on the first floor of Stauffer Library, and is an invaluable source of help for the computer semi-literate.

Food Bank 545-6972

Queen's food bank can be found in the basement of the Journal house at 272 Earl. The food bank was opened last year to help students in financial difficulty. Food hampers or information on nutrition and budgeting can be picked up during the week.

International Centre 545-2604

Found in the upper level of the John Deutsch University Centre, just down the hall from the Queen's Pub, the International Centre is a resource centre for international or Canadian students.

French Centre/ Le Centre Francophone 545-2534

Francophone students or those who are interested in learning French can drop in for conversation groups or go to movies, readings and other social events.

Health, Counselling and Disability Services 545-2506

This department is the result of the amalgamation of Student Health, Student Counselling and Special Needs Offices. Each has its own location and services, but it's all served under one phone number and directory.

The health part of the group is pretty self-explanatory. If you're feeling ill, make an appointment, and visit Health Services in the St. Lawrence Building, across from Victoria Hall. All services are free, but be warned — if you miss an appointment without cancelling you'll be charged $20.

The student counselling part of the group is located in the St. Lawrence Building, across from Victoria Hall. Any student can make a free appointment to meet with a counselor about any problems with school, personal life, or anything else.

17 PHONE NUMBERS YOU SHOULD KNOW BEFORE YOU GET HERE

The Disability Services office is located at 72 Queen's Crescent, across the street from Victoria Hall. Students with disabilities can find assistance here. Services include special exam arrangements, note-taking, referrals, counselling and assessments. Students who have learning disabilities, chronic illness, physical disabilities, or other disabilities should definitely stop by. The staff are welcoming and always willing to help.

Legal Aid 545-2102

Hopefully, you'll never need legal assistance, but if you do, this is the place to go. The office is located in room 211 of MacDonald Hall, which is across the street from Stauffer Library.

Lesbian Gay and Bisexual Association 545-2960

The LGBA provides support to students who identify themselves as lesbian, gay, bisexual or transgendered. They have regular social events, a library, and meetings to help students become a part of Queen's queer community. The office is on the second floor of the Grey House, and there are regular office hours during the school year.

Student Awards Office 545-2216

The Student Awards Office can be found on the third floor of the Victoria School Building, at the corner of Union St. and Alfred St. The office is there to help students in financial difficulty, so don't hesitate to drop in. Applications for general bursaries are generally due December 1, with varying deadlines for other bursaries or scholarships. Queen's loans can be obtained if needed at any time during the year.

Used Book Store 545-2120

The cost of textbooks adds up really quickly, so it's a good idea to get used books if you can. The UBS can be found on the upper level of the John Deutsch University Centre. They also sell CDs, tickets for QEA events and bus tickets for the cut-rate Tricolour Express.

Walkhome 545-2662

The Walkhome service is available from 6 p.m. until 2 a.m. (3 a.m. on weekends). The office is located in the lower level of the JDUC, but Walkhome staff will pick you up from anywhere in the Queen's area to escort you home.

Registrar's Office 545-2022

Any questions about tuition payment, fees or transcripts should be directed here. Call or stop by the office at 103 Richardson Hall.

Sexual Assault Crisis Centre 544-6424

The 24-hour crisis line is staffed by trained volunteers and can refer you to other services if necessary.

Sexual Health Resource Centre 545-2959

This is the best place to get birth control, as it's sold at cost. The office, on the second floor of the Grey House, next to Victoria Hall is open during the day. They also have all sorts of information on sexual health and well-informed volunteers, so don't be afraid to stop by.

Women's Centre 545-2963

The Women's Centre is located on the second floor of the Grey House (next to Victoria Hall). The centre is women-only, and holds regular social events for women in the Queen's community, and acts as a referral service.

Writing Centre 545-6315

The Writing Centre can be found at 140 Stuart St., at the bottom of University Avenue. You can make an appointment to have a tutor help you out or look at your essays, which can help you avoid the shocking drop in marks many student experience.

Rum, scotch, tequila on the rocks...

A short tour of Kingston's watering holes

BY KEITH GEREN

If dancing is not your style, the upstairs bar has pool tables and lots of chairs to sit and chat with friends.

Stages

At first glance, Stages seems like your parents' worst nightmare: loud, dark, and filled with people wearing clothing two sizes too small. But if you've got the need to get a groove on, this is one of the best places to go. It features two levels, a large dance floor, and enough flashing lights and lasers to blind you to the point of nausea. For a really wild time, check out Beachslam on Monday nights.

The Cocamo

The Cocamo doesn't have an in-house butcher, but it's still the proverbial meat market. It offers cheap drinks and patrons looking for even cheaper thrills. If you can stand being constantly hit-on and checked-out, you might just enjoy checking out the Cocamo. And this bar does have one advantage: free transportation aboard the Cocamobile.

Let's face it, part of being at university is letting your hair down once in a while. Studying is great, but if you don't take time to have fun, you'll quickly develop a nasty ulcer problem. You certainly don't have to drink to have a good time, but many Queen's students like to unwind at a favourite local watering hole. Sometimes it's helpful to down a few pints to let off some stress about exams, your boyfriend/girlfriend, or that prof that seems to have it in for you.

All I ask is that you drink in a responsible manner. As much fun as it is to get blitzed, it's not worth it to wake up in a stranger's bed, waste hours picking vomit out of your hair, or go to your 8:30 a.m. class with the mother of all hangovers. And as much as you probably don't want to be reminded of it, the legal drinking age in Ontario is 19.

So, for those that solemnly promise to drink responsibly, we at The Queen's Journal proudly present our guide to Kingston's bars, pubs, taverns, nightclubs, and boites. Our editors have put in many hours of exhaustive research to bring you this guide. Trust me, it was hard work.

Campus Bars*Alfie's Pub

Located in the basement of the JDUC, Alfie's invites patrons to "Go Underground." The music is stale to say the least, and, due to the lack of waitstaff, you'll have to get in a scum at the bar to get a drink. But while every Queen's student complains about these things, many of us will spend more time at Alfie's than anywhere else. Why? The drinks are reasonably cheap, you'll always see someone you know, and due to its spacious interior, Alfie's is definitely the best place to hang with a large group of friends. Be sure to get there early on Thursday nights or you might find yourself in a long line-up.

Clark Hall Pub

Clark is run by the engineering society and you can tell when you walk in. Like most engineers, it doesn't have a lot of decorative charm, but more than makes up for it in spirit. This place also reeks of mouldy beer, but strangely, many of its patrons actually find this to be an enticing aroma. Clark is definitely not a relaxing place, but it's great if you want to let off steam, have a pitcher or three, and jive to some of the loudest, most in-your-face music around. Make sure to check out Ritual, starting every Friday at noon — an event that truly defies description or sanity.

The Queen's Pub

At the QP you can take a study break and drink one as well. The mix of coffee, hot chocolate and Bailey's is just one of the amazing speciality drinks this place serves up. Newly renovated this year, the QP now offers plenty of space to go with its wood-paneled ambience. Bring some friends and mellow out for a while on Tuesday trivia nights or come for lunch and grab a pita. You can also watch your favourite TV shows and movies on the big-screen television.

Downtown Bars*AJ's Hangar

With room to suspend two airplanes from its ceiling, AJ's is one of the biggest bars in town. This popular student hangout has a preppy, jock feel to it, and chances are you'll meet several members of the Queen's football team among its many patrons. The music is uninspiring, but the drinks are pretty cheap and they are served promptly by the most attractive waitstaff and barstaff in town. There is plenty of room to shake your booty, but

The Shot

An upscale pub where neither the alcohol nor the use of a pool table comes cheap, The Shot is one of the best spots to check out local musical and comedic talent. The problem is that the cigarette smoke is often so thick you can't see the performers. The place is often jam packed well past fire regulations, making it nearly impossible to navigate your way to the bathroom, which is too bad, because The Shot has the coolest bathrooms in Kingston, featuring black lights so you can watch your urine glow in the dark.

The Palace

Queen's students who are brave enough to enter this dark, foreboding establishment should be well versed in the culture of angst-ridden, underage Kingston high-schoolers, because The Palace seems to attract this clientele like a magnet. What else can you say about a place where the biggest question on its patrons' minds is "Will I get lucky tonight?"

The Brass

It's not exactly the Ritz Carlton, but you could do worse than to spend an evening at The Brass. It doesn't have the rich ambience of the small pubs, but it doesn't have the rich prices either. The food is decent, and there are plenty of big tables for large groups.

Portsmouth Pub

Located near West Campus, the Ports takes a little longer to get to, but it's worth the trip, especially after a Queen's football game. This favourite hangout of the raucous Queen's Bands features fuchsia-coloured walls, and a big jar of pickled eggs. What else do you need?

Tir Nan Og

Another in a seemingly endless list of old-style pubs, this bar with the odd name is perhaps one of the best. It is certainly one of the largest, located on the ground floor of the historic Prince George Hotel. The food is pretty good too, and you'll often see a few of your profs enjoying a cold one in the corner.

The Toucan

Small and intimate, The Toucan provides the ambience of an old-style pub with new-style prices. The staff aren't particularly friendly either, but this is one of the best places to spot some of Kingston's celebrities such as The Tragically Hip and Dan Aykroyd.

Trasheteria

With a dark, hot, and near claustrophobia-inducing interior, "the Trash" is certainly the best place to spend Halloween, especially when members of the Goth community show up. It can be a refreshing change from the mainstream Alfie's/AJ's scene, but Kingston's only "alternative" bar is pretty mainstream itself, once you get past the gloomy packaging.

Grizzly Grill

A restaurant by day, the Grizzly turns into a swinging retro cabin party by night. The comforting smell of pine surrounds you as you boogie to Abba, Michael Jackson, and REO Speedwagon. You can also play pool or indulge in some tasty snacks, including alligator! But be careful — spending an evening at the Grizzly will put a considerable dent in your wallet.

Iron Horse Saloon

Yee-ha! Git your boots on, and mosey on over to the Iron Horse for the best country and western entertainment in Kingston. You'll need a good pair of boots too, as this bar is a long walk from campus. It's one of the largest bars in Kingston and features more cover bands, amateur talent contests, and line-dancing than a sheep-hound has fleas. Knowhutmeean?

The Plaza Hotel

This is Kingston's only strip bar (and not a very good one from what I've heard). Enough said.

Club 477

It's not just Kingston's only gay bar, it's actually a cool place to chill out regardless of your sexual orientation. Located a couple of blocks away from the glitz of the AJ's/Stages madhouse, Club 477 provides a relaxed, intimate atmosphere for people to be themselves.

The Wellington

Good times flow at "the Welly" as smoothly as the beer from its taps. Drop by this Irish pub on Friday and Saturday nights to sing along with local folk hero Gerry O'Kane. It's the same set he performed last week, and the week before that, but everyone is enjoying themselves too much to care.

The Brew Pub

If you like beer, good food and a chance to talk without being pre-empted by blaring music, the Brew Pub is your kind of place. The staff is very friendly, and the Brew Pub offers a stellar selection of ales, lagers and stouts on draught, many of them brewed right on the premises. And don't forget to try the Brew Pub's dragon wings — the best in town.

Did you know that Queen's has one of the largest & most successful Intramural Programs in the country?

Don't get left behind.
Sign-up for Intramural Sports at Athletic Information Night
Tuesday, Sept 15
5-7 p.m. Bartlett Gym

For more information about the Intramural Program, visit our web site at: <http://www.phe.queensu.ca/athletics>

Are YOU interested in:

- ★ earning extra $$$$$
- ★ meeting people
- ★ having fun

Then come to the
All Officials Information Meeting
Wednesday, Sept. 16 Room 205 PEC
6:30 - 8:30pm

- + flexible hours
- + no experience needed

?... Stop by the Intramural Office (Room 201a, PEC) or drop by the Officials table at Athletic Information Night (Tues. Sept 15, Bartlett Gym between 5-7 p.m.)

getting home.

It's easier than you thought...
...with the

Tricolour Express!

Convenient
weekly on-campus
pickup and drop-off
no need to pay for a taxi to the station

Economical
one-way fares
Ottawa $18, Toronto $23
Montreal $25

Super Six-Pack Savings

Pre-purchase six tickets for the price of five,
Ottawa $90, Toronto $115, Montreal $125
See the mail-in coupon below.

Tickets available on campus exclusively at the UBS Exchange in the upper JDUC • phone 545-2120

Always your best ticket home.

Cut out and mail in this coupon for Tricolour Six-pack savings.

Student's Name  Phone

Mailing Address

Destination  Number of Six-Packs

Program & Year

Mail to the UBS Exchange, JDUC, Queen's University, Kingston, ON, K7L 3N6. Cheques payable to the UBS Exchange

It's A Fact!
The Queen Bookstore has been buying and selling used books for over 20 years.
Campus Bookstore • 1140 Main St. • Kingston, ON • 545-2120

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY THE JOURNAL

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
General Travel: 549-3553
Long Haul / Groups: 549-3561

1873

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1998

Student's move-in marred by car theft

BY LAURA MACINNIS

A first-year Queen's student was left with nothing after her family car, a Plymouth Acclaim loaded up with all her gear, was stolen from the Comfort Inn on Sunday night.

The student, who asked not to be named, moved into residence with only a few toiletries bought at a downtown store. She has been told by her insurance provider that she will have to wait 30 days to be reimbursed for her losses.

Kingston Police spokesperson Mike Schultz said there were at least two other similar thefts leading up to this year's residence move-in day. On Sunday evening, a car was stolen from the Holiday Inn and a minivan was stolen from Elliot Street. The vehicles were full of clothing, stereo equipment, computers and personal belongings of students eager to move in to residence.

"It seems that someone was looking specifically for them," said Schultz. Thieves "know it's time for people to move in — they're not stupid," he said.

All three vehicles were Chrysler products, a make of car Schultz said is frequently broken into or stolen. The minivan was later recovered by the police, but both cars are still missing.

While Schultz said auto theft is common, the nature of these crimes is disturbing. "I don't know if you would call that a rash of them or if it's just coincidental bad luck," he said. "When you get three of them all on the same day, it's quite a coincidence."

The victims of the break-ins came from Owen Sound, Peterborough, and Kingston Mills.

In a swirl of tricolour, two gaels express the spirit of Orientation Week '98. PHOTO BY PAUL HESLER

Queen's may choose Pepsi or Coke

BY LAURA MACINNIS

Queen's University is weighing the costs and benefits of signing an exclusive campus deal for Coca-Cola or Pepsi.

Dean of Student Affairs Bob Crawford confirmed that Queen's is pushing ahead with preliminary plans to sign one company.

"We have signed with Spectrum Marketing Company as our agents," he said. "What we've agreed to is an assessment phase."

The marketing group will study the campus and report to the university on the potential gains from a single cola deal, weighed against potential aesthetic and moral issues from over-franchising.

Crawford said consultation is needed with "the various stakeholders" in the deal, including the university administration, the Alma Mater Society, the Tuck Shoppe, Marriott Food Services, and holders of vending machines on campus. Spectrum will specify how money acquired from the deal would be distrib-

Please see Offers on page 4

New QP ready to roll

BY TARA MANSBRIDGE

Right on schedule, the newly renovated Queen's Pub opened its doors for the first time on Tuesday night and there was none who criticized the extra room, extra pool table or extra beers on tap.

The new and improved Queen's Pub hosted an opening reception for those involved in the expansion of the facility, and officially opened to the public at 8 p.m.

"There's been just a fantastic frosh response," said pub manager Mark Picketts, who explained that most tours of campus have involved students peering through the pub windows at the new pool table and 20-foot hardwood bar.

After a full summer of construction and budget revisions, the employees at the expanded pub were more than eager to welcome someone other than staff into the hardwood paneled room, said Picketts.

The renovations include an expansion that almost doubles the capacity of the pub, the addition of four beer lines to the existing eight, and an expanded pub menu. The changes have cost the Alma Mater Society $200,000, $70,000 more than originally projected in the budget.

Mid-way through renovations, the pub management was forced to ask the Alma Mater Society Board of Directors for an extra $20,000 to cover unexpected costs, such as replacing aging duct work and installing wood panelling to maintain the decor from the old Queen's Pub. The additional $50,000 was furnished by Jack Sinnott, director of the John Deutsch University Centre.

"We're more than confident that they'll make the cost back in the next seven years," said Services Director Sarah Armstrong.

With double the capacity, an expanded menu and a more knowledgeable staff, Picketts has projected a 66 per cent jump in sales over the course of the year.

"It's a big number, you can't lie about that," said Picketts, who expressed confidence that the pub's competitive prices and expanded service will draw customers.

Part of that expanded service is the extensive training that pub staff have undergone in order to be able to offer quality service to patrons, said Armstrong.

"We have an intensive training compared to other services," said Picketts. The pub manager maintains the staff are trained to answer any question customers pose about the quality and

Please see Changes on page 7

Ghetto renamed

BY FIONA STEVENSON

The Alma Mater Society has officially renamed the area commonly referred to as the ghetto to the Student Village, and is encouraging students to adopt the new moniker.

The new name, chosen by Municipal Affairs Commissioner Sarah Corman, is a result of discussions with students, the administration, Kingston city officials and the AMS council.

"It's been policy since '91 not to use the term ghetto and the alternative was Student Housing Area," Corman said. "[Student housing area] is not catchy. It hasn't caught on at all."

Some of the names considered by AMS councils in past years include the Q-Zone and SHAQ, an acronym for Student Housing at Queen's.

"It's really important to get away from ghetto... It's totally inaccurate. We certainly don't live in a ghetto," Corman said. By referring to the area as a ghetto "we license landlords and tenants both to treat the area as if it were a real ghetto," she added.

Corman predicts a name with more

Please see Village on page 7

index

Volume 126, Issue 4
www.journal.queensu.ca

News	1	Sports & Fitness	17
Editorials	8	A&E	21
Opinions	9	Classifieds	30
Science	11	Crossword	31
Features	13	MISC	32

WEATHERWATCH

Today

Sunny
High 19°C; Low 13°C;
POP 0%

Friday
Sunny with clouds
High 22°C; Low 9°C;
POP 10%

Saturday

Sunny with chance of rain
High 24°C; Low 11°C;
POP 40%

Sunday

Sunny with chance of rain
High 24°C; Low 11°C;
POP 40%

New Town-Gown head keen on Queen's

BY FIONA SCANNELL

Patrick McNeill may be the new face of Town-Gown Relations, but he is no stranger to Kingston. Although he lived here only briefly as a child, Kingston-born McNeill considers the city his hometown.

As the new Town-Gown Relations coordinator, McNeill replaces Nancy Tatham, who is on a one-year leave of absence from the position.

The Town-Gown Relations Office was founded in 1991 to better address issues arising between Queen's University students and full-time Kingston residents.

The coordinator is quite familiar with the experiences of Queen's students. Last year he worked within Queen's residences as the acting associate director, administration. Before that, McNeill spent two years with the Graduate Student Society (now known as the School of Graduate and Professional Studies). Previous to his employment at Queen's, McNeill was executive director of a planning institute in Toronto.

"All my best friends went to Queen's," McNeill said. "I came up for the Homecoming football games, especially the weekends when Queen's played against Western."

As a member of the Senate Orientation Activities Review Board, the liaison between the different faculty orientation groups, and a link to the Kingston police, McNeill has been kept busy this week.

McNeill said he respects the Queen's University Orientation Week because it continues the "really great traditions." He admires the way people are welcomed as part of the Queen's family. "It's very inclusive, fun and safe," he commented, allowing new students to learn about resources at Queen's.

"The number of events and the logistics of the orientation is remarkable," said McNeill, "and it is all done by students, for students."

McNeill's advice for improving and maintaining the positive relations between students and the Kingston community is for students to respect the needs of their neighbours.

McNeill said he looks forward to "getting up to speed with the proper information" regarding students-landlord relationships. He will be working with the Municipal Affairs Committee and legal aid to update pamphlets on the "New Tenant Protection Act." McNeill has an open-door policy, encouraging students to drop into his office to brainstorm and use creative ideas for problem-solving.

McNeill is in the Town-Gown Relations Office in the upper level of the John Deutch University Centre, room 124, from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday to Thursday. Messages can be left for him at 545-6745. A drop-in information centre has been added to the office.

Success for solar car

BY LAURA MACINNIS

The designers of "the electric brain" of the Queen's solar car have won a continent-wide engineering contest, bringing back $50,000 (U.S.) worth of engineering equipment prizes to benefit their faculty.

Milos Popovic and Ken Koo, both Sci '99, beat out competitors from the United States, Mexico and Canada to take home first place in the 1998 Motorola University Design Contest.

The pair are members of the Queen's solar car team who work on the electronic systems of the car.

Popovic called their project "an electronic brain for the car," controlling the motor, collecting data and telling the solar car how fast to go. "It basically just takes over."

The contest asked participants to make the best use of a Motorola micro-processor. Popovic and Koo used the hardware as a computer control system for a solar car. Naraig Manjikian, their faculty advisor, explained that the hardware allows the driver to see the car's battery charge, temperature and speed.

The winning team was chosen by judges at Motorola, who ranked the projects on the basis of written reports and photographs of the hardware.

The students were awarded a $5,000 (U.S.) cash prize, and $50,000 (U.S.) in Motorola tools and equipment has been donated to the department of Electrical and Computer Engineering.

Manjikian said the materials will be used to "enhance the educational experience" for other electrical engineering students. "It will certainly be used in a lab setting," he said.

The electronic brain was tested on the Dawn Treader, the 1996-97 Queen's solar car. It will be installed in the newest solar car, which will be unveiled in the spring of 1999.

Milos Popovic (left), Naraig Manjikian, their faculty advisor, and Ken Koo won the 1998 Motorola University Design Contest.

PHOTO COURTESY OF MILOS POPOVIC

There is always something happening at

Indigo

Live Jazz every Friday Night from 9:00-10:30
Our Café is fully licensed to serve beer and wine
Kingston's Largest selection of Newspapers and Magazines
The finest selection of Classical, Pop, Blues and Jazz CD's in town
Save 30% all year around on our top 50 bestselling book titles

Indigo Art of Listening:

The Life of Bob Marley with Roger Steffens

The Evening of Saturday, September 12 - 7:30-9:00

Roger Steffens was born in Brooklyn, lives in Los Angeles and owns the worlds largest collection of Bob Marley music and memorabilia, comprising over 9,000 records and 11,000 cassettes. He has presented lectures at Cleveland's Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, Harvard, and the New York Public Library. He is the acknowledged expert in all things pertaining to Bob Marley's career. Join us at Indigo for what promises to be one of the highlights of our "Art of Listening Series"

Join the Indigo Circle

- individual memberships are just $15.00
- 10% off all regularly priced books and audio cassettes
- 10% off all special order books
- Members-only, VIP mid-night madness sales

Proud to be 100% Canadian

Indigo

Books Music & Café
259 Princess Street

Castle enrolment lower than expected

BY RENEE HUANG

About 110 students arrived Wednesday at Herstmonceux Castle, Queen's International Study Centre, 70 students shy of the centre's registration goal.

"In terms of first years, it's on target," said Greg Lessard, the new academic director of the ISC. "In terms of upper years, it's not."

"I get the impression that people think that because the castle's old, the programs are also old. It's actually in it's infancy."

— Greg Lessard, ISC academic director

This year marks the first anniversary of the First Year Option which allows students to complete their first year of university abroad at the castle.

Just under 90 first years are presently enrolled for a full academic year at the castle, said Sandy Montgomery, operations director at the castle. He described the upper-year enrolment of 20 students for the 1998 fall term as "a little bit disappointing."

"I would've liked to see 40 upper years here," he said.

"We're aiming at moving towards capacity here in the order of 180 students," said Lessard. "Ideally we'd have a 50-50 mix [of first years and upper years]."

"We're really optimistic that we'll have the place full," said V-P (Academics) Dave Turpin. "The first-year program has been a tremendous success" and the revised upper-year program will be introduced next fall.

But Lessard acknowledged that it will take some time and effort to boost enrolment.

Traditionally, winter terms have higher rates of upper-year enrolment than fall terms because international business courses offered during the winter cater towards Commerce students, Lessard explained. "Arts and Science is a much larger faculty and it's harder to justify [the international experience]."

Improved scholarships and bursaries may also help students who lack the finances to go to the ISC, said Lessard.

Talk of closing the castle in previous years may have dissuaded potential students from registering, Montgomery speculated. Also, recent recruiting efforts were geared heavily towards catching first-year students' interests as opposed to upper years during the trial run of the first-year study abroad program.

Montgomery said the ISC marketing team is currently looking at a more aggressive recruiting strategy to spark the interest and commitment of upper-year students. He said several pamphlets aimed at next year's program are being designed to target student audiences from different years and programs.

"I don't think we put out a very good idea of what people who go here get of the experience," Lessard explained. "We still have a way to go convincing students that an international experience is one to have."

According to Lessard, there is still time to make the necessary improve-

Please see Hopes on page 5

Fewer frosh in temporary res rooms

BY JOCELYN LAPORTE

Most students living in Queen's University residences this year received their lifestyle accommodation choice, with significantly fewer students placed in temporary rooms than last year.

Eighty-one per cent of students who requested co-ed residence accommodations were assigned these rooms. Ninety per cent of double room requests and 91 per cent of single room requests were met. All requests for west campus accommodations were satisfied.

Economy double rooms, introduced last year, were expanded from 37 rooms to 148 rooms this year, and all requests for these rooms were met. The economy double is a small double room, newly carpeted and painted, and furnished with steel furniture designed to utilize space efficiently.

Rooms are fully furnished and include either bunk beds or loft-desk arrangements.

A double economy room with full meal plan costs almost $1,300 less than a single room with full meal plan. "This is an option for people who want to save on living expenses or budget their money for other areas," said Director of Residence Services Graham Brown.

Approximately 2,635 students have been accepted into Queen's residences, however, said Brown. "The numbers change every few hours... People drop in looking for a place to live and we receive some cancellations."

About 65 of these students, compared with 100 last year, have been assigned to temporary spaces in residence floor common rooms and large double rooms set up as triples. "This allows these students regular involvement from day one," explained Brown. "We do not want them to feel isolated from the normal activities so we get them into temporary spaces on the floors as much as we can."

Based on previous years, residence services expects approximately 50 first-year students to either not show up to university or to elect to leave within the first month. About another two dozen students usually leave university between October and December, Brown explained. "This is more than enough to handle the temporary students," he said. "Between no shows and early attrition, we can take care of them."

In the past, students temporarily lodged in triple room accommodations were paid a small per diem rebate. However, upon inquiry by residence services, many of these students expressed a preference for proper furnishing and Internet access over a cash refund.

In response to these concerns, "There is no rebate [this year] but more services so we think we have managed it better," Brown said. A Don has also been assigned to temporary triple rooms.

Approximately 2,700 first-year residents gathered on Leonard Field Monday night for a giant Oil Thigh under a spectacular sky.

PHOTO COURTESY OF TRICOLOUR YEARBOOK

Off-campus students have a FYNIR time

BY FIONA STEVENSON

While hundreds of first-year students began their adjustment to residence life Monday and Tuesday, 75 first-year students not in residence (FYNIRS) participated in games, social activities and discussions intended to introduce them to Queen's University's resources and to each other.

FYNIRS was established in 1993 after people realized that for the first two days of orientation week, first-year students who had elected not to stay in residence were just sitting around, said FYNIRS co-chair Juan Vu Bui.

As a former FYNIR himself, Bui was motivated to get involved with the organization because of the key role it played in his own university experience. "My time with FYNIRS was as fun as my time with engineering," he recalled.

FYNIRS represent about 15 per cent of the first-year class each year, although only 75 of these students generally participate in FYNIRS orientation. Bui attributes the discrepancy between the figures to misconceptions about FYNIRS. "We try to correct these year-in and year-out," he said.

Bui and past FYNIRS volunteers have received a great deal of positive feedback regarding the program. "Some students last year told us that at the beginning of the faculty stuff, they knew all the cheers," he said. "They started on a bang."

"I think FYNIRS is good because I've gotten to meet people already," said Bernadette O'Connor, a first-year student living at her home in nearby Amherstview this year.

Approximately 15 student volunteers, called Landlords, organized and ran the two-day program and coordinate monthly activities that continue through the year.

Bui emphasized that FYNIRS is not confrontational with the students in residence.

The two groups came together for a number of orientation activities including dances, coffee houses and the Existere IV theatre performance.

According to Bui, the main message FYNIRS attempts to convey is that "residence life is certainly an integral part of the university experience... but living in residence is not for everyone."

First-year ArtSci student Mark Breesee saw a significant advantage to living outside Kingston this year rather than staying in residence. "I still get to stay at home and everything's free."

ArtSci students Cory Genge and Justin Sharp decided to team up with another friend from home and rent an apartment in downtown Kingston this year.

"I feel that apartment life is really a lot freer than residence life," Genge said.

Sharp said he appreciates living with fewer people because "we share a bathroom with three people instead of a whole floor."

Some students admitted to fears of meeting less people or missing out by not living in residence.

"When you kind of see the groups of residence people, you kind of feel like they're having a bit more fun," Genge said.

Municipal Affairs Commissioner Sarah Corman made a point of talking to the FYNIRS during their orientation days. "I think it's really important for me to talk to them because a lot of them are living on their own for the first time."

Corman said it is also important for FYNIRS to know about the resources that exist at Queen's and to encourage them to become involved in campus life. "A lot of FYNIRS feel not quite as involved... I think it's really great what they do in orientation week."

Walkhome Is Open!

8 p.m. - 2 a.m. Sun - Wed
8 p.m. - 3 a.m. Thurs - Sat

The AMS Walkhome service is provided free of charge to all students, staff and faculty of Queen's University in order to provide the option of being safely and comfortably accompanied while walking on campus and in the surrounding area.

So, if you would like a team to accompany you along your way, just give us a call!

Check out our webpage at <http://www.ams.queensu.ca/ams/walkhome/> to find out more about the Walkhome Service!

We would also like to thank our sponsors: Tordiff Communications for their radio support, and Cyclepath for our six Peugeot Bicycles!

339 Princess St.
Kingston, Ontario K7L 1B7

Campus Community

Queerientation Week '98

Sponsored by the Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual Issues committee, Queerientation Week '98 kicks off Monday. For information about the week's activities ending Friday, September 18, call the Social Issues Commission at 545-6000, ext. 4816.

AIDS Walk

On Sunday, September 27, the local community will hold AIDS Walk Kingston along with more than 55 Canadian communities. Every dollar raised in the event helps someone in the community who is dealing with HIV/AIDS. For more information or to register, visit the office at 844A Princess St., or call 545-3698.

Local volunteer opportunities

The Community Volunteer Centre is looking for volunteers. Volunteer opportunities available this week are at Frontenac Food Sharing Project, Hotel Dieu Hospital, Kingston Internal House, and The Boys and Girls' Club of Greater Kingston. Call 545-8512 for more information.

Information Expo

A Public Information Display entitled "Helping People and Connecting with the Kingston Community" will be held on Saturday, September 12, between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. at Thompson Drill Hall.

Candlelighting ceremony

First-year women are invited to a candlelighting ceremony Monday afternoon at 3:30 p.m. inside Grant Hall.

No formal cola offers yet

Continued from page 1

used among these groups. Cola companies will likely offer Queen's a multi-million dollar deal for exclusive rights on campus. The money received from the deal would be distributed between campus groups affected by the change.

AMS President Tom Stanley said he is interested in investigating the impact of a solo cola deal on student life, as well as the possible use of revenue from the franchise.

He referred to the University of Alberta, which will receive $4.5 million over ten years from Coca-Cola for exclusive rights. This revenue has been designated for student union and student programming funds, and Coca-Cola has donated $100,000 for scholarships and bursaries at the university.

"It's something that could make a lot of sense for students," he said.

No formal offers have been made by either company, but Crawford anticipates spokespeople from Coca-Cola and Pepsi will be on campus in September.

Director of Food Services Bruce Griffiths said the final report from Spectrum is expected in October.

Willys shocks public

BY RENEE HUANG

Last week's graphic front window display at Willys clothing store on Princess Street, showing mannequins dressed as students taking part in drunken debauchery, sparked angry response from media and consumers.

One mannequin was posed with its head over a toilet bowl while another sat upright, passed out and covered in its own vomit. Two other mannequins on the left of the display were engaged in above-the-clothing foreplay. T-shirts boasting "Queen's Kicks Ass" hung in the background.

Stephanie Prior, one of the employees who helped create the display, said she never intended to send a message of condoning alcohol abuse and sexual abuse — it was intended as a tongue-in-cheek reflection of university life.

Prior and her co-workers were not prepared for the barrage of publicity in response to the display, she said. Kingston's local news station CKWS first addressed the provocative window display in a newscast last Wednesday, prompting articles in The Kingston Whig-Standard and The Globe and Mail, both of which are taped to the front window.

"I think a lot of people are uptight," said Prior, who was interviewed on CBC Radio Toronto Monday, with Willys store manager Lara Robinson.

"We thought people would think it was in poor taste but not be offended," explained Prior, who also said the store has received praise from independent downtown store merchants in addition to the complaints. "This is a front window and that's art."

Patrick McNeill, Queen's Town-Gown Relations, said the display was disappointing.

"Certainly it's not a positive image of students," McNeill said. "I don't know why a store would do it."

Prior, a Queen's student finishing her final year of a French degree, denies that students are misrepresented by the actions depicted in the store front. She said Willys' entire staff is composed of Queen's students and alumni. "The fact that Queen's people party and these things happen is a fact," said Prior. "You can't sweep it under the rug."

"I'm not saying all Queen's students are alcoholics," she continued, but "it's a big part of welcome back."

"I thought it was a very unfortunate choice on their part to put that display on," said Dean of Student Affairs Bob Crawford. "We're aware that students drink too much."

Crawford is concerned Willys is sending students and other members of the public a message that overindulgent drinking is normal. "If you're marketing with that message, is that a safe drinking message?"

Prior said Willys received most criticism from people who did not understand that a controversial message was completely unintended. "We never made it out to be okay to take advantage of someone," she insisted.

"I think the thing that upset us the most was the [misinterpreted] date rape scenario," said Prior. Originally, one mannequin was positioned with a hand inside the open jeans of another passed out mannequin.

Prior said after the complaints and negative publicity, Willys staff affixed a sign on the reading, "I consent." "Me too," read the female mannequin's sign.

On Sunday, staff members replaced the signs with warnings taped to the window, one of which read: "Attention: All mannequins are over the age of 21 and fully consent to the events depicted here."

Prior said because sales normally improve with the return of students in September, it's hard to say whether or not sales have increased due to the media coverage. "The type of people who are offended wouldn't shop here anyway."

Employee John Gianniotis said a local women's group that would not identify itself told them if the display was not changed by Tuesday, the group would stage a protest outside the store with petitions. Robinson said the group did not show. But Prior said Willys changes the front display on a weekly basis, a cycle that was not disrupted by the recent publicity.

Controversial window display at Willys attracts attention.

PHOTO BY PAUL HEISLER

High hopes for the castle

Continued from page 3

ments to an international study centre that is still very much in its fledgling stage.

"It's a very young place," said Lessard of the castle, which was given to Queen's University in 1994 by alumnus Alfred Bader. "I get the impression that people think that because the castle's old, the programs are also old. It's actually in its infancy."

In the meantime,

Montgomery said an enrolment 40 per cent lower than the target of 180 students will not affect the castle's operating budget. "We've got a much better budget this year," he said. "We should break even this year and profit next."

Last year, the Canadian University Study Abroad Program was created to allow University of Western Ontario, University of Toronto and University of British Columbia to join Queen's as owners of the castle. This year, Dalhousie University also joined the partnership.

The commercial side of the study centre, Herstoncoex Castle Enterprises, contributes to the main income of the castle, which is based primarily on student fees. HC Enterprises also rents the castle out for special events during the summer.

"Overall, I'm pleased with the way things are going... Everything's slipped into place this year," Montgomery said.

WELCOME BACK!

	SUN	MON	TUES	WED	THURS	FRI	SAT
SEPTEMBER '98	Singing FROG	NFL FOOTBALL	RETRO DAZE	LIVE!	DIPSO!	FRIDAY ROCKIN' AUCTION! NO COVER!	GRAND SLAM SATURDAY WIN $1000
	PARTY IN "THE FROG!"		LIGHT ALL NIGHT!	THE TRAVOLTAS LIVE!			WIN $1000 ORIENTATION '98 LEADER PARTY PART I
	ROAD APPLES! Best of THE HIP! LIVE!	D.J. TUNES RETRO DRAFT! 10c WINGS!	BIG SHINY 80'S TUNES!	FROSH WELCOMING BASH! D.J. DANCE PARTY!		LITE NIGHT ALL NIGHT EVERY FRI! NO COVER!	WIN $1000 ORIENTATION '98 LEADER PARTY PART II
	LIVE JAM SESSION! Every SUNDAY NIGHT	10c WINGS!	THE BORDER HIT MUSIC 192.7 LIVE! AIR! Every TUESDAY	KILLJOYS LIVE!		NURSING '99 SMOKER GONE LOONEY!	WIN $1000 D.J. DANCE PARTY every SAT!
	NFL SUNDAY NIGHT GAME Big Screen!	BIG WRECK LAMINATE PARTY LIVE!	OLD SCHOOL BLACK LIGHTS	Rusty LIVE!		ROCKIN' AUCTION EVERY FRI. NO COVER!	HOMECOMING PARTY-OPEN ALL DAY! Q'S FOOTBALL KILL MCGILL!
	PLAY POOL & NTN!	RETRO DRAFT! BIG SCREENS! PLAY QBI & NTN! 10c WINGS!	PARTY LIKE IT'S 1989!	ECONOLINE CRUSH LIVE!	OCT 1 DIPSO! SUPER LITE ALL NIGHT!	OCT 2 COLLECT! CONVERT! CASH-IN!	WIN $1000 D.J. DANCE PARTY every SAT!

A.J.'s HANGAR
...FAVOURITE NIGHT SPOT FOR... THE BEST LIVE BANDS!
HUGE GIVE-AWAYS!
THE BIGGEST CASH AWARDS!
5 POOL TABLES!
3 BIG SCREENS!
D.J. DANCE PARTYS!

TO BOOK A SMOKER or PARTY
CALL - 531-5300
INFO LINE - 531-5025
www.thehub-kingston.com

Honorary degree nominations sought

The Senate Committee on Honorary Degrees in inviting nominations for the award of honorary degree at the 1999 Convocations.

The following information about each nominee should be provided:

- name in full
- permanent address
- a brief biological outline, including education and employment reasons for recommending the award of an honorary degree

Nominations must be submitted to reach the Secretary of the University by Friday, November 13, 1998.

Please send to: University Secretariat
Secretary - Senate Committee on Honorary Degrees
Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 3N6

date
Sept. 14-16

place
J.D.U.C - Lower Ceilidh

hours
9-8

last day
9-5

► FINE ART FANTASY ◀

WILDLIFE ◀

► GIANT-SIZED POSTERS

► MUSIC

FRAMES & HANGERS ◀

► PHOTOGRAPHY

► 1000s of POSTERS

THE IMAGINUS POSTER SALE

☎ 545-6543

☎ 545-0350

The Publishing and Copy Centre

Faxing
Binding
Transparencies
Laser Printing

New this year!
Custom-made,
digitally produced
T-shirts and mousepads

2 Self Serve Copies for the price of two!

(Hey.. they're

6¢

that's cheap enough already.

The Publishing and Copy Centre
We're Honest Folk.

NEED SOME EXTRA SPENDING MONEY???

OSAP RUN OUT FOUR MONTHS
TOO EARLY???

QUEENS' UNIVERSITY FOOD SERVICES
MAY BE ABLE TO HELP!!!

WE ARE CURRENTLY LOOKING FOR PART-TIME EMPLOYEES FOR BARTENDERS, CATERING WAIT STAFF, AND GENERAL RETAIL. FLEXIBLE WORK SCHEDULES, AND DAYTIME AVAILABILITY IS AN ASSET.

IF INTERESTED, PLEASE DROP OFF YOUR RESUME AND APPLICATION AT OUR MAIN OFFICE, IN THE JDUC ACROSS FROM THE QUEEN'S PUB.

QP changes a welcome improvement

Continued from page 1

taste of the beers and scotches served at the bar. If a customer wants to try something new, or match a taste that he or she enjoyed in another beer, the staff will be able to recommend a brew that should meet or exceed expectations.

"We want to help expand [parron's] taste buds," said Picketts.

To add to the culture of taste and choice cultivated by the pub, Armstrong pointed out that the pub has maintained the decor from the older section of the establishment, including the couches and the big screen TV. The newer section features higher chairs and tables, more space and a lone pool table.

"There are really two options for anyone who's interested," explained Armstrong.

Anyone who's interested will also be greeted by the addition of a Queen's Student Constable on Tuesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights. But, according to Picketts, the new security presence will add to, not detract from, the pub's easy-going, social atmosphere.

"We've asked them to dress in semi-formal attire when they come to work, rather than the regular rugby shirts," said Picketts. The constable on duty will mainly be there for checking I.D. during the evening hours and dealing with any other incidents that arise.

The expanded lunch menu will include deli items such as baguette sandwiches and hummus, as well as the ever-popular selections from the auto-fry.

"It's a good lunch option," said Armstrong. "You can eat a good lunch for five dollars or less." The new lunch menu will start being served on Monday, September 14.

The consensus among members of the AMS who were present at the opening is that the menu changes and renovations are a welcome improvement both for the pub and for the students.

"I really hope that students like it as a space for students to spend time in," said Tom Stanley, AMS president. "Before any business concerns that's what I'm concerned about."

Picketts said the pub is booked solid with corporate and other group events through the month of September, and that management receive two to three calls a day from people interested in arranging events in the pub.

"There's a lot of options, a lot of things you can do [with the space]," said Armstrong.

Most of all, those involved in the project are excited and nervous to see how students react to the new facility.

"I'm really excited to get people in here," said Picketts. "We really want to lose the stigma of being an upper-year bar."

Picketts is also interested to see how people will react to the mix of old and new, and whether they will gravitate to one side or the other of the renovated space.

"It's been quite a learning process," said Armstrong. "It's hard to believe how quickly you can make it happen when you have to."

"Village people?"

Continued from page 1

positive connotations will bolster lobbying efforts for improvements to student housing and promote an image of a healthy sense of community and co-operation.

"I think it's a wonderful idea, long overdue," said Patrick McNeill, Town-Gown Relations.

McNeill said referring to the area as the Student Village will foster images of a distinct area within a larger community. "The students have to empower themselves with this word," he added.

However, some students are less enthusiastic about the name change.

Said George Reinblat, ArtSci '99: "The Student Village? What would that make us — the village people? I get to be the cowboy."

"I never really thought [ghetto] was that bad of a name to begin with," said Erin Kelly, ArtSci '01. "I think [student village] is too long to say."

Some students see benefits to the name change. "[The Student Village] is kind of a cute name," said Katherine Waller, ArtSci '01.

"We're not really living in a ghetto," said Wes Newton, ArtSci '01. Newton said the name change will likely ease tension between students and local residents, however, he predicted that students will always call it the ghetto.

"I think it's just an unnecessary formality. As far as I go, I'm probably going to end up saying ghetto," said Peter Calveley, ArtSci '01.

"It's not going to catch on with everyone this year," Corman acknowledged. "It's going to take at least four years."

"It has to be a concentrated effort on everyone's part," said McNeill.

"By no way is it the ultimate solution... It's part of our overall campaign to improve the quality of housing for students," Corman explained.

The Class of '02 makes a great impression on day one of Orientation Week.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

WELCOME!

Now that you're back in school, it's time to plan your escape! Travel CUTS can help.

Whether you're heading home or across Canada, travelling to Europe or around the world, Travel CUTS is the student travel expert.

Started in 1974 by students for students, Travel CUTS serves over 200,000 students a year, saving them millions of dollars. Travel CUTS negotiates special airfares and student discounts, then passes the savings on to you.

Once you've settled, drop by your local Travel CUTS office to check out the amazing travel deals and meet the friendly, knowledgeable staff.

- Student and Budget Airfares
- Rail and Bus Passes
- Spring Break/Reading Week Getaways
- Student Work Abroad Programme (SWAP)
- International Student Identity Cards (ISIC)
- Travel Insurance
- Adventure Travel
- Tour Packages
- Language Courses

TRAVEL CUTS

1-800-387-2887

www.travelcuts.com

Owned and operated by the Canadian Federation of Students

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

Orientation weak?

CONTRARY TO MCGILL'S slanderous claims, few sheep are abused at Queen's — at least not an official 'Frosh Week' activity.

Some traditional activities in the past, however, did transgress acceptable norms of behaviour, such as in 1984 when over 40 engineering students were sent to the hospital during the grease pole event.

Excessive drinking and other acts of hooliganism in the 1980s led to the creation of the Senate Orientation Activities Review Board. While SOARB's success at de-fanging 'frosh week' of its more offensive rituals has allowed the event to continue, some of its recommendations could, if taken too far, leave us with a watered-down version of what is now known as Orientation Week.

Nevertheless, orientation is a valuable opportunity to educate and expose incoming students to other views. Making incoming students aware and sensitive to a diverse range of lifestyles must remain an important objective of Orientation Week. Although SOARB's efforts to make the event safe and non-offensive are commendable, a continuing shift away from the week's traditional social dimension to an emphasis on lectures and colloquia about student life could turn frosh week in a rather staid event.

Some of [SOARB's] recommendations could, if taken too far, leave us with a watered-down version of what is now known as Orientation Week.

SOARB should not confuse the need to have a safe and effective orientation with the overly parental attitude that we must be sheltered from all of the drunken excesses of university life. Although some rituals, especially those involving sheep entrails, are better left in the past, the administration should not be afraid to let students get their feet muddy from time to time.

No more Monica

THIS IS NOT AN EDITORIAL ABOUT Monica Lewinsky. The barrage of zipper-gate related stories on the airwaves and in the print media has exhausted this editorial board's appetite for presidential sex scandals.

The rest of the mainstream media, however, seems eager to add to the glut of trivial and often subjective coverage of a story that has dominated the American moral landscape for too long. By obsessing over titillating rumours instead of facts, the media has glossed over the real story: a sitting president may have committed perjury or obstruction of justice. Instead of waiting for Ken Starr's report, the focus has been on speculation and analysis of issues, such as the semen-stained dress, that seem less intended to inform than to entertain.

If after five years of adultery stories, the question of Bill Clinton's marital fidelity is still front-page material then there is a serious dearth of hard news in America. Moreover, it is questionable that despite poll after poll showing waning interest in the story, the media continues to respond to zipper-gate as breaking news.

Rather than leave unfounded speculation to trashy tabloids and late-night TV, the mainstream media has jumped on any opportunity to scrutinize the private life of the president. While the institution of the presidency should not be insulated from the public eye, clearly the degree of scrutiny in this case has reached an inappropriate level. Since this type of coverage will no doubt continue, we can only plead: no more Monica please!

TARA MANSBRIDGE

Of cowardice and privacy

PRUDITS AND POLLSTERS HAVE remarked repeatedly over the last decade that the public has become excessively interested in the private lives of our political leaders and entertainers (who are, ironically, sometimes one and the same.) Strong are the legions that deplore such rapid talk shows as Jenny Jones or Jerry Springer, but foot-soldiers from those same ranks continually turn on Entertainment Tonight or open up People magazine to learn the intimate details of the private lives of their favourite celebrities.

Putting aside for now the issues surrounding the privacy of those in political power, weighty and important though they may be, this fascination we have with exposing and divulging has more than bordered on the obscene — it has become a colony.

The question I think that we must ask ourselves is not why we are so fascinated with these juicy tidbits of scandal and sexuality, but what is it that justifies the satisfaction of this lurid rubber-necking on the information highway. As we move more and more towards a society in which we are virtually required to purge our emotions to one another, whether it be on a therapist's couch or elbowing up to the bar with a friend, we have to ask what this penchant for delving into the details is really about.

What need do we really have to know the sexual orientation of actors or talk show hosts? What point does it serve to nose into the fertility issues faced by our favourite rock diva or root through the refuse left behind in the wake of a celebrity break up?

The interest we show speaks to our own weakness of character. Too often we look for faults in our icons to justify our own lack of conviction and purpose. Too often we fail to analyze why we need to talk about or notice the things that we do.

The fact is, analysing others without undergoing self-analysis is cowardly.

For example, perhaps our interest in the sexuality of a particular celebrity, who, quite rightly, wishes his or her sexuality to remain private, indicates that we ourselves are frightened of issues surrounding sexuality. Perhaps our interest in the minutia of a music diva's life illustrates that we are leading uninteresting lives that lack morals or purpose, that our interest in the cereal of the stars shows how truly trivial we have become.

The fact is, analysing others without undergoing self-analysis is cowardly. Spewing out our life stories and personal problems to the closest set of ears that will hear doesn't remedy the problem, it only perpetuates a cycle of invasion of privacy and proliferation of information without knowledge or wisdom. Until we can reconcile our desire for detail with a mature interest in self-discovery we should keep our curiosity to ourselves.

OPINIONS

Oil thigh forever!

SO HERE YOU ARE. You've finally arrived at the humble beginnings of post secondary education. Already settled all snug and comfy in your residence room, you've most likely passed through the gauntlet of highway signs, purple people and the massive traffic jams obscuring the simplest points of entry into your residence. You've already had a small taste of Queen's spirit through your residence activities and the rest of "Frosh Week" lies ahead (or for the p.c. inclined "Orientation Week").

Queen's spirit isn't just mindless worshipping of the "limestone gods".

So now you're faced with the question: do I participate or not? Do cool kids paint their face? Am I compromising my ideals if I let these people inject Queen's spirit into my arm so it's all I live and breathe for the next week? In my opinion go with it. You're not losing your identity or buying into any name brand ideals if you participate. I like to think that once you put on the frosh t-shirt you are on an even playing field, and that Queen's spirit is the unifying factor. At this point it doesn't matter who you are or where you're from; everyone here has one guaranteed thing in common, you all chose Queen's.

I can assume that for a lot of people Queen's wasn't exactly "last-chance-U." Academically, Queen's is a top-ranked university. Queen's also has excellent extracurricular activities. From the largest Interuniversity sports program in Canada, an all-encompassing intramural program (inner-tube water polo anyone?) and dozens of clubs there is something to cater to your every whim and fancy. In short, that is much to be proud of.

This is an opportunity to meet people and to basically have a great time. Queen's spirit isn't just mindless worshipping of the "limestone gods." It's more of a means to an end. Life, after all, is what you make of it and your level of spirit can be to your advantage. Who knows who you might meet or what interests you will be able to develop.

Frosh week happens to be one of my fondest memories at Queen's. I still have my framed frosh group picture on the wall. To some it may seem like a shameless ad, but as I look at those tricoloured stained faces I realize how much I actually like doing the "Oil Thigh" and supporting Queen's. Heck, it's been four years and I still remember my frosh group's cheer.

I had a great time basically because I realized that nobody really cared about image. Queen's spirit isn't uncool. Nobody is going to put you down for having a good time.

I never understand how people can criticize something before they actually try. So go out there, learn the cheers and give it all a chance. I believe it was Oscar Wilde who astutely noted "It's the cynical man who knows the price of everything but the value of nothing." So whether you are a glass is half-full or half empty kind of person, go out there lose your voice, degrade other faculties, paint your coveralls, drink purple "juice", and see if you see the value of "frosh week" and Queen's spirit. Once you give it a try I'll be willing to listen to any criticism.

EMMA RITCHIE,
ARTS '98, LAW '00

Just a little respect

PRIDE /prid/ (n.): inordinate self-esteem.

Every September, I stroll through campus, watching tammed and covered frosh stomping around campus yelling "Yes! Yes! Yes, we do! We've got spirit, how 'bout you?" There are crests freshly painted, glistening in the morning sun and aggravating hangovers. There are purple people with mohawks following anti-Artsci slogans. There are full-grown adults walking crab-like or with their hands between each other's knees. Any outside observers would take a look at this scene and think they had happened onto a cult inculcation ceremony. I wonder why more people participating don't think the same thing.

Be glad that you can afford an education. Be glad that you lived long enough and were smart enough to get to university. Be glad to crawl on your belly through who-knows-what in the mud around the pole. I think not. Pride has limits. What is the point of taking adults, putting them in odd clothing, feeding them several shots of some thick, blue Mexican liquor (everyone else is; so if you don't, you'll stand out, which is even more of a sin than pride itself) and telling them that walking on their hands and feet, belly to the sky, is a good thing? That's not pride. That's the biggest practical joke I've ever seen. How can frosh be proud of Queen's when they have only been here for 96 hours?

There are better ways to show your pride. Donate money in Queen's name to a charity, refuse to litter campus with Dipso tickets and purple dye, work hard in school and don't make the citizens of Kingston dread each and every September. Another meaning of pride is great satisfaction. Be satisfied that you're going to learn more about the world (and yourself) than you ever thought possible.

Any outside observers would take a look at this scene and think they had happened onto a cult inculcation ceremony.

Pride is about more than silly hats and hiding that mickey of rum in your coveralls at the homecoming game. Pride is also about respect. Respect this place, because it will change your life, if you let it. Respect each other: don't link alcohol tolerance, an expensive pair of boots or being from "just outside Toronto" with social acceptability. And above all, respect yourselves.

You want to show the world that Queen's is the best university — try respect. It beats the pole, it beats Vaseline in your hair, and it sure beats acting like misled sheep.

DANIEL EVANS,
ARTS '99

Write for Opinions

Do you support a position which needs to be talked about? Here's your chance to spark the discussion. Send your opinion of 500-600 words to The Queen's Journal and we'll send it to everyone else. Let your observations resonate through the community. Call Todd at 545-2800 or journal@post.queensu.ca.

Bons Mots: Once the toothpaste is out of the tube, it is awfully hard to get it back in.
—H. R. Haldeman

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF Keith Gerein Tara Mansbridge	EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR Paul Heisler	SPORTS &amp; FITNESS EDITOR Adam Kaminsky	SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT John Bowman
MANAGING EDITOR Laura MacInnis	ARTS &amp; ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR Stefan Murray	ASSISTANT SPORTS &amp; FITNESS EDITOR Robert MacNeil	SPECIAL PUBLICATIONS EDITORS Elizabeth Frogley Shandley McMurray
NEWS EDITOR Fiona Stevenson	ASSISTANT A&amp;E EDITORS Sarah Crosbie Lilian Kim	MISC EDITOR Ken Burland	PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS Alex Kronby James Terjanian
ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS Shawn Brinley Renee Huang	FEATURES EDITOR Sean Springer	GRAPHICS EDITOR Janice Chan	WEB EDITOR Marzo Lui
	OPINIONS EDITOR Todd Jackson	THE READER EDITOR Jesse Craig Bellringer

CONTRIBUTORS

Robert De Bellefeuille, Daniel Evans, Tim Evans, Jocelyn Laporte, Samantha Morris, Giorgio "Cowboy" Reinblatt, Emma Ritchie, Fiona Scamell, Rachelle Villanova, Adria Vuksinic

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Kraft

SALES REPRESENTATIVES
Kari Brintnell
Andrew Cooke
Kristian Li

ADVERTISING MANAGER
Nicholas du Prey

ADVERTISING DESIGNERS
Katherine Colbourn
Anlie Ge

SYSTEMS MANAGER
James Clarke

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Thursday, September 10, 1998 • Issue 4 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.
Copyright © 1998 by The Queen's Journal; all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Goss Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Queen's, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions.
Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 East Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2H8
Telephone—editorial: 613-545-2800 advertising: 613-545-6711 Fax: 613-545-6728 Email: journal@post.queensu.ca Internet: <http://www.journal.queensu.ca>
Circulation 9,000
Issue 5 will be published on Tuesday, September 15, 1998.

talking

HEADS

What is your favorite part of Orientation Week?

"The girls."
BEN PETERSON
ARTS '00

"What's Orientation Week?"
CAMERON BRETT
ARTS '02

"Slimming my jacket."
JENI THOMAS
ENG '99

"I don't remember."
STEVE CUMMING
ARTS '01

Letters to the Editors

AMS Unimpressed

Dear Editors,

On July 23, 1998, the executive of the Alma Mater Society had the opportunity to meet with the Honorable David Johnson, Minister of Education and Training. The focus of this meeting was on student aid, and specifically, the Ontario government's failure to live up to their continual promises for reform.

Given the severity of the student debt problem in Ontario, we expected far more from our meeting with Minister Johnson. His lack of knowledge of the issues and empty answers to our inquiries were unpleasant surprises to us, and certainly not what we expected from the minister.

Given the severity of the student debt problem in Ontario, we expected far more from our meeting with Minister Johnson.

The provincial government's routine is a worrisome one for students. Year after year, the government announces that it will allow tuition to rise, but also announces that it will bring in the much needed student aid program. Year after year, however, tuition skyrockets, programs are deregulated, and student aid reform is put off until the following year.

Consider the following realities. Last year, over 80 per cent of Ontario's student assistance budget went to administrative costs, including loan defaults. This means that less than one-fifth of the assistance dollars ever made it into the hands of students. The Ontario Student Assistance Program (OSAP) has been slowly dismantled, making it more difficult for students to get government loans, while part-time students have been cut out of the program all together. This summer's cancellation of the Merit Scholarship, a program to give money to the top students in Ontario, was announced without a single cent ever reaching a student.

Students are graduating with unprecedented levels of debt, which will have real ramifications on the Ontario economy, and on these students' standard of living. The situation will only worsen as tuition increases, and as the echo generation enters university at the turn of the century.

It is very discouraging to have a Minister of Education that is seemingly so out of touch with the needs of students in the province of Ontario. The issues are ones that affect us all, and all future generations of students.

Sincerely,

Tom Stanley
AMS President
Arts '99

Alison Loat
VP University Affairs
Arts '99

Gord Moodie
VP Operations
Comm '99

Julie Datke,
Anti-Heterosexism
Coordinator
Human Rights Office

Letters To the Editors Policy

THE EDITORS OF THE JOURNAL WANT TO HEAR FROM READERS. ALL LETTERS MUST INCLUDE THE WRITER'S NAME, SIGNATURE, AND TELEPHONE NUMBER. ANY LETTER THAT IS LEGIBLE, LEGAL, AND LITERATE WILL BE PUBLISHED IF SPACE PERMITS. THOSE THAT ARE AS BRIEF AND DIRECT AS POSSIBLE WILL HAVE A BETTER CHANCE OF PUBLICATION. DROP OFF LETTERS TO THE JOURNAL HOUSE, 272 EARL ST., OR E-MAIL THEM TO JOURNAL@POST.QUEENSU.CA.

"Coming Out" Article Incomplete

Dear Editors:

It was a pleasure to see the article titled, "Coming out at Queen's" in the "Welcome to Queen's" supplement (July 28th); however, I feel compelled to add the Human Rights Office as an important resource for queer students, staff and faculty. In addition to dealing with complaints of heterosexism/homophobia, we offer workshops and maintain a good resource library. For more information, please call 545-6886 or drop by our office.

Chalmers United Church
212 Barrie Street (at Clergy)
546-3263

A Caring Community,
a Questioning Faith,
a Guided Hope

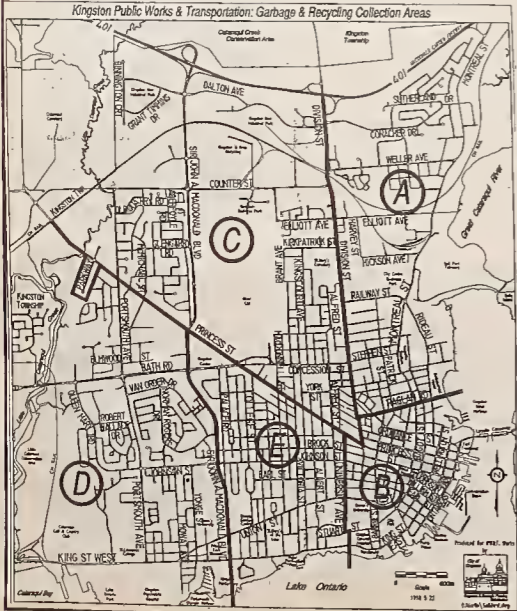

Worship every Sunday, 10:30 a.m.

We welcome Students,
Faculty, and Staff!
Join us, in person or by radio
960 AM (CFEX)

Visit our web site: <http://web.canlink.com.uce/kingston/chalmers>

LIVING IN THE STUDENT VILLAGE?

Blue Boxes for recycling are available at the two-Gown relations office, Rm. 124 — JDUC (upper level)
Call 545-6745

Cardboard Boxes: Slice em', dice em', then tie em up and stick them out with your Blue Box.

Hazardous Waste: Bring batteries, pain and propane cylinders to K.A.R.C. at 70 Lappan's Lane. Disposal is free. (see "B" on above map).

Used Furniture/Large Items: Take it to the Laidlaw transfer station at 62 St. Remy place (see "A" on above map). Free until Sept. 12 for students. Proof of residency required (i.e. copy of lease)

Call K.A.R.C. (546-8523) for more information.

Brought to you by:

SCIENCE

Chemists can communicate

Accessible science coverage means encouraging scientists to speak

Whether it's cloning mice in Hawaii or bouncing robotic balloons off Mars, spectacular science stories make headlines on a near-daily basis.

At the turn of the millennium, our lives have become so entwined with our technology — our hardware, agrifood, biotech, doc-com, palmtop world — that it's not surprising to see a proliferation of sections in papers and segments on the news dealing with health, computers, our effect on the environment and other scientific topics.

It's a start, but we have a long way to go.

In science, as in other fields, our problem is no longer a lack of information. The sheer number of articles published in academic journals each year is staggering.

Now, our problem is a lack of communication. The more complex, less sensational science stories are overlooked or dumbed down. There are two, possibly sinister, reasons for this.

First, it could be that media outlets believe we as a public are too ignorant to understand the background of a complex scientific issue. If this is the case, then the media have forgotten their obligation to inform the public of important events, the issues surrounding them and the background when necessary.

A second reason may be that there is a shortage of writers who are able to both understand the science and to communicate it effectively and cogently to the reader. The fact that scientists are told from the beginning of their studies that they can't communicate only compounds the problem.

Let's face it, the prevailing opinion around campus is that science students, to put it mildly, aren't the best writers on the planet. Better to say that most people think that a chemistry major couldn't pick a simile out of a line-up and that the average engineer could probably express himself better in PERL than in prose.

It is not surprising that the stereotype persists. It is perpetuated on this campus in the traditional inter-faculty rivalry during frosh week and throughout the year in other venues.

The university itself is not blameless in keeping the lie alive. The phrase "Point form acceptable" sums up the university's lack of commitment to producing effective communicators of science.

I've had the pleasure of getting to know several engineers and science students and not one of them is as narrow in their interests as the stereotype would lead us to believe. They've included poets, vocalists, musicians, history and politics buffs, graphic artists, dancers and even the odd writer — some odder than others.

There are scientists and students of science out there with the ability to communicate complex ideas to the general public, although many might lack the confidence, experience or opportunity to do it. What is needed is a medium for scientific ideas expressed for the public without glossing over the details.

Student journalism is a great place to start, and so there is The Queen's Journal Science section. As with every other section of The Journal, Science is open to everyone in the Queen's and Kingston communities, whatever their background (it's no more true that a history major can't get science than it is that a physics major can't write about it).

And if you think that you don't need to be able to write clearly or you don't need to be able to understand the physical world because it doesn't fit with your major, just remember the (literally) immortal words of Lazarus Long:

"A human being should be able to change a diaper, plan an invasion, butcher a hog, conn a ship, design a building, write a sonnet, balance accounts, build a wall, set a bone, comfort the dying, take orders, give orders, cooperate, act alone, solve equations, analyze a new problem, pitch manure, program a computer, cook a tasty meal, fight efficiently, die gallantly. Specialization is for insects."

—Robert A. Heinlein, from "The Notebooks of Lazarus Long"

John Bowman just wants you to write for Science. Is that so wrong?

Science Spectrum

Science news from around the world and beyond

Through rose-coloured glasses

Computer technology developed in Hungary may be able to help millions of people who are colour-deficient and can't accurately see colours in their natural intensity. Custom-made glasses can make up for what the eye lacks. The Coloryte technology, now available in Hungary, will be in the United States in about a year.

Humans came close to extinction

A new hypothesis about recent human evolution suggests that humans came close to extinction because of a "volcanic winter" that occurred 71,000 years ago. Some scientists estimate that there may have been as few as 15,000 humans alive at one time. The volcanic winter lasted about six years. It was followed by 1,000 years of the coldest ice age on record. It brought widespread famine and death to human populations around the world. The sudden decrease in population, known as a "bottleneck", affected human evolution, bringing about rapid "differentiation" — or genetic divergence — of the surviving populations.

More 'alien' microbes found

Scientists at Oregon State University have discovered evidence of rock-eating microbes living nearly a mile beneath the ocean floor in conditions which suggests similar life could exist in Mars or other planets. Microbial fossils were found in abundant quantities in core samples taken in the Pacific, Atlantic, and Indian oceans. The rocks have the basic elements for life including carbon, phosphorous and nitrogen, and needed only water to complete the formula. "Under these conditions, microbes could live beneath any rocky planet," said Martin R. Fisk, an associate professor of oceanography at OSU. "It would be no problem to have life inside of Mars, or within a moon of Jupiter, or even on a comet ... that gets warmed up when [it] passes by the sun."

Black hole at galactic centre confirmed

An enormous black hole in the centre of our galaxy has been detected by Andrea Ghez of the National Science Foundation. Black holes are formed from the remnants of collapsed stars. A black hole consists of a large mass compacted so densely that not even light can escape its force of gravity. Since Ghez could not directly see a black hole, she inferred its presence by searching for the gravitational influence it imposes on nearby objects she could see, namely stars.

The Miyagi Triangle

Solve the puzzle — Choose your prize!

A $50 gift certificate at one of the following businesses. You choose!

- Smee's Games and Comics
- Digital Gamer
- Novel Idea

How are they related?

THE MIYAGI TRIANGLE is a Japanese mathematical problem known for its simple elegance. The problem requires no more than high school geometry to solve, but don't be dissuaded if it takes you longer than your average grade nine geometry proof. The Miyagi Triangle problem was written in Japan's Miyagi Prefecture on a tablet dated 1913. The right-angle triangle as shown contains three large squares, and three circles which are tangent to one square and the triangle in which they are contained. The problem is this: How are the radii of the three circles, shown in this illustration as grey spheres, related?

Answers for this problem can be submitted to The Queen's Journal by delivery, fax or e-mail. All entries must be marked clearly with your name, faculty, address and phone number and must have Science Contest as a title. Entries will be accepted until noon on Friday, October 3, 1998. The prize will be awarded to one randomly selected entrant from all correct answers received. And just like in your assignments, to be considered correct you must SHOW YOUR WORK!

The Journal House — 272 Earl Street
Fax — 545-6711
E-mail — journal@post.queensu.ca

Features

Montreal International Jazz Festival: much more than music

By Sean Springer

MOST OF US TRY TO LIVE the kind of life that will churn the special brand of butter the world can spread and smooth over their fears. Often we ignore the sugar fields of tooth decay that can sprinkle some zip into a life uninvolved with things that are even remotely, let's spell it out, F-U-N.

Now, we're all at this really fine Canadian university that's supposed to be preparing us to churn some really rich butter for our parents and friends to smear up and down their bloated, back-bacon bellies. At the same time, we're on this planet to indulge some of the finer sweets available at and beyond our local drug stores.

So, when the summer deck dealt a last-minute opportunity to crash at a buddy's pad in downtown Montreal during the final four days of the Montreal International Jazz Festival, I decided my correspondence English course would have to resolve itself while the city grooved to la musique fantastique — oui? Where on every corner a drug dealer and a dépanneur stocked fully in alcoholic supplements towered over our strongest will to stay lucid, the three of us, Adam, Corey and I, watched as the jazz festival energized the city of Montreal and created a heavy setting for a lurid weekend of booze, beats, frisbee golf, and really good weed.

We were clueless, speaking little French beyond a grade three level, and initially there only to absorb the festival's excellent array of jazz and jazz derivatives. However, somewhere along the line, our pack lost itself in a whirlwind of inebriation, and the "jazz" in Montreal International Jazz Festival became rather a metaphor describing the loose lifestyle emerging on the streets and in the bars of Montreal. Montreal was the party, the festival was merely a great excuse to have some live bands to add a little atmosphere and populate the show. Perhaps, even that's what jazz music really is — happy music for happy times.

Thursday

THE FOUR HOUR EXPRESS from Toronto's Union Station to Gare Centrale was carrying us swiftly into the proper neck of the woods as we all started the event with some VIA Rail beers. While my pals chatted about Frank Zappa, medical accessibility and New England with a chap named Jerry Freeland, I sat across the way with an experienced Montreal native discussing a jazz fest game plan.

The city of Montreal is really the event — a city screaming and gusto.

After finding our way off the train and paying $12 for a cabbie to drive a distance of two kilometres to our resting pad on Rue Hotel-de-Ville, we primed a wee bit more after making a trip to the nearby dépanneur.

It was Thursday night, and the scene was the best club concert I've ever born witness to. At the Foutounes Electriques on Rue St-Catherine, Ninja Tune's The Herbaliser, drove a packed bar full of three hundred people over the edge of extreme hoopla with the help of his DJ, and funky orchestra. We all let loose to the acid jazz madness, shared a fat spill with surrounding dancers, and poured large drafts down the esophagus. Adam split off from the group to chat with Eric San — Montrealer DJ Kid Koala of Bullfrog — watching the show from across the way. Corey split off to grab some pints leaving myself to enjoy a claustrophobic, yet euphoric dance floor.

After the Herbaliser teased us with two encores then booked the scene for Toronto, where he played the following night at Harbourfront, the three of us called for another round of drinks. When our strategies to pick up Montreal women fell flat on the language barrier, the imaginary producer of our nightlife was reeling the curtains up for our grand finale and, taking our cue, we parted for drunken slumbers.

On our way out, we noticed a tall, lanky fellow selling off dimebags of pot ($10 worth) to a flock of late night travellers and we figured that we could benefit from a little herbal stimulation. Again, the "jazz" was weaving its way through Montreal. As Adam was the group's secure ambassador to the foreign bud marketplace, he approached the man, slotted ten bucks and received a stash of pot sufficient to fuel one joint, or maybe two, for the night's end. (A sweet way to live the sound.)

Friday

A TRIP TO THE DÉPANNEUR for some baguettes, delectables and beers jugan started our appetites as we began our daily salute to the smoke and wondered just what we would do before Charlie Hunter & Pound for Pound played that evening at the Spectrum.

Anyone for Frisbee golf, they asked. Sounds like something, I replied, but what is it? Well, imagine a golf course where the pins are replaced with baskets — large enough for a full Frisbee to drop neatly inside. And instead of a ball, there's a Frisbee. And instead of clubs, there's your hand, which tries to flick the Frisbee into the basket. The object of the game is to hurl the disc into the basket in the least number of shots.

We hiked to Square Dorchester in downtown Montreal, which doesn't offer baskets, or even an actual course to guide the Frisbee golfer, so, we had to invent our own set of 18. We did that by substituting fire hydrants, statues, and garbage cans for baskets while tossing discs all over Montreal and marching from one hole to the next with discreet canned beers. As everything in Montreal is in easy walking distance, we later moved the party to the Spectrum

Tibetan Freedom Concert: 27 bands and electrical storm smoke benefit show

By Sean Springer

I'M SURE IT DIDN'T QUITE reach the same level of madness that occurred in '69 at Max Yasgur's remote farming patch in Bethel, New York. As of this weekend in June of '98, Hendrix and Joplin were on permanent sabbatical. There wasn't a million of us, rather about 66,000, the brown acid wasn't so much of a problem as it was for the Woodstock folk and you can forget the vast expanse of farming land. This was the Tibetan Freedom Concert — a non-alcoholic benefit show crammed into tiny Robert F. Kennedy Memorial Stadium, located at the corner of Independence Avenue and 22nd Street, in urban Washington D.C.

Now, while there was some variance in the two shows, the persistence of time could not transcend two critically important similarities. The first is the grand exalted lineup of the sublime — artists most would pay $30+ to see in separate venues. This time frame offered 27 bands on the cutting edge of contemporary beats — slated to roll through two consecutive days of hip hop, alternative rock, and jazz. Familiar with the Beastie Boys, A Tribe Called Quest, Beck, Pearl Jam? Or how about the Red Hot Chili Peppers, Radiohead, KRS-One, R.E.M.?

The second similarity is the promotion of love, peace and compassion through the agent of music festivals. On a mission to promote non-violence, the Tibetan Freedom Concert has traveled coast to coast first dropping its anchor in San Francisco in '96 followed by its venue in Randall's Island, New York City in '97. This spiritual symphony, a benefit concert generating proceeds towards non-violence and the cause to free Tibet, a country currently occupied by China, is the second-largest benefit concert ever, surpassed only by 1985's Live Aid, which supported famine victims in Africa.

As giddy youths north of its border, a trio of naive foreigners pursuing the natural high gushing from the forehead of popular rock artists, my companions and I anticipated not a weekend of insane partying, but rather a relaxing two days under a flaming hot sun with the best in modern music at our ear lobes.

A minivan with Ontario plates holding Stefan, Kathy and myself pulled into the stadium lot Saturday morning at 6 a.m., only to be disturbed from fleeting slumbers four hours later at 10:00 with the wild clamour of the capacity-filled parking area, strewn with partygoers warming up for the concert of a lifetime. The life forms appeared to be American Earthlings, traipsing in and out of camping tents, cranking car stereos and slamming back paper-bag covered booze. I slid wide the minivan door to a sight of four rate rowdy beasts from Kitchener, Ontario, who had taken notice of our Ontario license plates and warmly invited us to share in a round of Heinekens and a cheap hash-oil joint.

The Washington police eventually rode by in a golf cart and shooed the degenerate Canadians towards the gates. After I disposed of two extra tickets to a loitering scalper, we entered, decided to abandon our obstructed view seats and sneak our way onto the rubber flooring. 66,000 fans followed suit — bustling to the dense end of the stadium on a muggy, cloudy afternoon with sparse drizzle.

As we laid on our backs in the middle of RFK, I inhaled the good vibrations from the stadium setting. Where everyone gathered stood two powerful, titanic stages fixed side by side divided by a partition adorned with a gorgeous banner inscribed "Tibetan Freedom Concert." Each stage furnished a black backdrop hanging the concert logo, Red, blue, and yellow artistically designed trimming decorated the stage's perimeter. Two jumbotrons, on the far left and right sides, offered intimate MTV broadcasts of the show. You could stride through stadium tents, which sold hemp products, t-shirts, necklaces, and other concert paraphernalia. After signing postcards addressed to the White House urging President Clinton to negotiate human rights issues with the Chinese government,

Continued on next page

Please see Rap on page 15

Spectrums de Montréal - 318 S. SPO6130
FESTIVAL INTERNATIONAL DE JAZZ 6 29.50
Jazz Club du Mouton
CHARLIE HUPCA
& POUND FOR POUND
VENDREDI 10 JUILLET 1998 543x

Foutounes Electriques - 87 Ste-Catherine
R.F.K. STADIUM
RAIN OR SHINE/NO CAMPING
A BENEFIT FOR MILAREPA
TIBETAN FREEDOM CONCERT
JULIET 1998

Foutounes Electriques - 87 Ste-Catherine
R.F.K. STADIUM
RAIN OR SHINE/NO CAMPING
A BENEFIT FOR MILAREPA
TIBETAN FREEDOM CONCERT
JULIET 1998

Foutounes Electriques - 87 Ste-Catherine
R.F.K. STADIUM
RAIN OR SHINE/NO CAMPING
A BENEFIT FOR MILAREPA
TIBETAN FREEDOM CONCERT
JULIET 1998

FEATURES

2 CENTS

by: Rochelle Villanueva

It's always good to attend musical events because besides the "Kool Toons" to enjoy, people get the impression that you're a cultured, hip'nin individual.

But what's MOST fun is

PEOPLE WATCHING
So here's a CROSS section of interesting people WHO FREQUENT concerts by yours truly...

THE FAN
QUIET RIOT! QUIET RIOT! has tattoo on back
Having the most paraphernalia of the featured band, he sees other fans as competition. Will headbang harder than you. Will MOSH 'til bloody.

THE OLDIE (but Goddie)
Though jarringly out of place, this lone trooper is a brave soul who defies the concert-going age bracket. Will even bob (albeit awkwardly) to the music better than some young'uns!
PROPS to the OLDIE!!

THE TAKEN TALKERS
HE'S HAD ONE TOO MANY. HE'S GOT IT SHOWING!
GOOD FOR A SNICKER, BUT NOT IF HE'S YOUR EYE HOME.

THE PRINCESS
Mashpits do not defer this diva from wearing a sexy dress & heels to the concert. EASY to spot. She's usually MORE entertaining to look at than the BAND.

NORMAL FOLK
Photo
People who came for the $5 and seem like they have better things to do than people watch... but we ALL know what they do during the opening act.

Continued from last page

located in the heart of the festival where swarms of people congested the festivities. Stages of free shows sang out to thousands everywhere — some sat and watched, many simply absorbed the aura. Pounding cans on the way in the streets didn't seem to annoy the law enforcers and since it agreed with our game plan, we played city drunks the rest of the weekend.

We enjoyed a hoist of fine herbs just before entering Charlie Hunter's awesome performance of sweet, stirring jazz. Hunter played the eight-string guitar, which meant nothing to me, until parway through the show when I couldn't figure out who was playing the bass line. His band Pound for Pound was comprised of a stellar vibe player who stroked six sticks onto a set of vibes, a drummer, but no bass player. This is the essence of an eight-string guitar. Hunter was playing wild guitar solos while scaling a complex bass line on the same guitar. Incredible!

Our cloudy state of mind made the rapid two-hour show travel like a time warp through a musical rhapsody. When it was all over, we figured a trip back to the Foutounes to see a jungle band we had never heard of, Jaz Klash, would set things right.

The plan was to spark something inside of the show and a bathroom rolling session seemed harmless and convenient. Tiny mistake. Adam slinked into a conspicuous stall, and was soon escorted promptly by a bouncer out onto the street.

Figuring Adam had already headed inside of the concert area, we handed our Jaz Klash tickets over and followed suit. But, Adam was nowhere to be found.

About 10 minutes into their set of mediocre drum 'n bass, Adam, who had switched t-shirts to sneak back into the bar, found us. Well, that was settled, but the new problem facing us was the thirty tunes that Jaz Klash was pumping by our eardrums, which was rectified by first, leaving, then playing some more urban Frisbee golf on the sloping streets of Montreal.

Saturday & Sunday

MANY OF US THAT ATTENDED the festival were intent on appreciating the best in modern jazzy tunes. Yet, at the jazz festival, we realize that the city of Montreal is really the event — a city screaming personality and gusto.

So, by Saturday, we didn't really care about the great music the festival was offering. We woke up much later, scarfed down some dried pasta, scurried to the dépanneur, relaxed with alcohol, got high, then cycled Square Dorchester on another Frisbee golf tour. Funds had become quite low, so we saved on paying shows by attending the free spots, and dumped the rest of our flow into booze, pot and then some. A debatable call, for the free show we saw at the festival that evening was buried under the crap de la crap. Some awful band called Cosoul, flatterer themselves as the new era's answer to George Clinton, played cheesy top-40 tunes. Shitsoul, the new era's answer to shitty soul music, ushered us onto more revealing parts of the streets to find some herbs. But, we didn't care — we were there for a party, and parties were everywhere.

An anonymous freelance busker helps new friends fiddle for coins in Montreal.

Our first pickup was definitely a first for all of us — something that you'd never see in good ole' Burlington (that's where we're from). Adam walked up to a burking bloke on the street and inquired about a possible exchange of money for a buzz. We watched 10 yards away as Adam followed him into a marijuana flea market operating as a variety store.

Our second, and most dangerous buy, occurred outside of the festival on a grassy square surrounded by buildings where, about five minutes after Adam had scored, police stealthed onto the scene on bicycles catching everyone off guard and made a couple of arrests. Luckily, we were three lurkballs watching the bust from a fair enough distance for us to toss our cans, pocket the herb, and book it for safer waters.

So, we swam to "Groove Society," a dark and dank dance club too flashy for us. More shors and large drafts came our way and we later tore to the quieter underground, sat on a devil-red couch to puff away in peace. An American joined us in privacy and shortly thereafter, the club's owner walked by and stuck his golden retriever snoot in the air and glowed, like the couch, a beat-red bolt of fury at our presence. "What are you doing," he screamed, "smoking a joint in my place?!"

At this point, we had stretched the "jazz" so far that it snapped right in our faces. Again, it was the brave and unlucky Adam with the bud in his hands. As Corey and I tried to appear incognizant to the shady goings, Adam dropped his jaw — speechless, waved his head, and closed his eyes in naivete. "Put that out on the floor!"

He did just that. The American consoled us with a "that's harsh," we bowed our heads, and sulked onto the street. The night was shot at that point. The anti-depressants had vanished — every dépanneur was closed and while urinating in a bush, the rest of the buds had fallen out of Adam's pocket.

We woke up even later on Sunday, just in time for some showers, and our express back to Toronto. This time, we did it right. We bought some beers for the train and concealed their presence from the VIA employees.

Just before midnight back in Burlington, like all chronics would, we reclined with some home-grown herbs, and savoured the transient thrill of being 20.

In 40 years, we'll still be heading back to Montreal for the "jazz," — not the jazz. And this time, the beer will be jello, the pot will be viagra, and the new generation will mock us as we busk for change with fiddles and fidoras.

Sean Springer believes that all they play in Heaven is that pure "country and western."

"Give the finger to the rock 'n roll singer"

The first time I saw Beck was at the Opera House on Queen Street in Toronto, a two-level dance cave with about a 1,000 person limit. To give an idea of the era in which this event took place, the initial price of admission was just $12.50. Melloté Gold had just been released and the "Loser" single was just scratching the surface of radio play.

The opener that evening was a whacked-out acoustic guru who simply sat on the edge of the stage buskin' tunes and wiping sweat from the brim of his John Deere cap. When Beck proceeded to hit the stage sporting a three-piece blood red suit and fur cap, he shed nothing but climactic vibes, a crazy glare and an "away we go." Thus, he sparked a straight-up set of acoustic and electric improvisational gems as well as his now-famed foot stompin' harp solo. Beck then stunned the crowd by capping the evening with the timeless classic, "Mother Fucker," while he trashed the set and I survived a pit of insanity.

Etching a permanent image in my mind of a fully hard-core musician, Beck quickly became an icon for a generation of burned-out, strung-out and fed-up individuals so torn between society's "norm" and their own personal brain candy that his madness made perfect sense. Beck's unique ability to shape the most twisted thoughts into a tune we could relate to gave a new sense of pride to fellow warped minds around the world. Conscious or not — we felt it! Zappa descendants and Ween freaks alike have welcomed this new-school-folk bloke to the bizarre realm with open arms and a fat hit of nitrous.

Fucking with my head...? Odelay? Well, Beck's got a new album, a new suit and a clever new doo. It's a good album and everybody ate it up, especially the videos. I suppose there was too much talent to slip past the mainstream.

So, I swallowed my pride and made my way to this spring's teeny boppin' honanza at the Molson's Armpit-theatre. Four years had passed, and I now found myself dodging and weaving amongst a barrage of thirty-something office geeks who were jumping off the deep end in "going to see that Beck character get funky." But, that's only if you were carrying the $40 tickets to get within Frisbee distance of the stage. Oh yes, the stage was adorned with ramps on either side of the drum kit for those slick sliding dance moves Beck has gotten down to a choreographed science, just like in the videos kids! No worries if you were an unfortunate seat holder — there were giant TVs with a constant close-up of the new and commercialized Beck! Isn't he cute?

The actual performance wasn't bad, just the scene was out of band, no open floor — just seats and bobbing, bubbly chumps. The new pollution of Beck fans stunk up what used to be a perfectly filthy atmosphere so, please, move on and latch yourself back onto either Lynyrd Skynyrd, Steve Miller or all of your previous top-40 stunkers.

Get a job!

The Alma Mater Society of Queen's University fills dozens of positions every autumn. If you were unable to apply in the winter term last year (e.g., you were on exchange, or you are now frosh, etc.), then you are eligible.

Applications are available at the AMS in the lower JDUC, and are due back at the AMS Front Desk by 16:00 on Friday, September 25

Positions available include: two customer service staff at the UBS Exchange, more than a dozen walkers at the Walkhome Service, a handful of customer service positions at the Publishing & Copy Centre, a computer systems manager job at the Queen's Journal, and several behind-the-bar and waitstaff positions at Alfie's Pub.

The AMS is committed to employment equity. Positions are open to all AMS members in good academic standing in ASUS, COMM, CON-ED, ED, ENG, MEDS, NURSING, PHYS-ED, REHAB.

Assistant manager

The AMS Publishing & Copy Centre needs an assistant manager to help with daily operations, execute marketing plans, and oversee various project and staff activities.

The Queen's Journal is looking for an Assistant News Editor to work as a member of the News team, helping to produce the section twice weekly and supervising contributors.

Assistant news editor

Many volunteer positions within the AMS are also available.

Bring your résumé!

From Saturday, October 3, you'll only have 212 days to

get a job

after graduation. So why not come to IBM's career fair and get a head start?

open house

On Saturday, October 3, you're invited to IBM's headquarters to learn about the exciting opportunities open to you in almost all areas of the company.

Mark the date on your calendar. You don't want to miss this opportunity to get a sense of the buzz that comes from creating the stuff that will change the world. Reps from various areas of IBM, along with the leading-edge technology being used by business today, will be on hand so you can get a first-person look at the kind of energy, inventiveness and breakthrough thinking that make IBM a great place to work.

Opportunities abound for computer engineering, business and arts students in all areas of IBM - from our leading software lab to IBM Corp. to our IBM Global Services team. So stop by. Who knows, you could find yourself working on some of the coolest and most innovative projects in the industry - in just 212 days.

location

Date: Saturday, October 3, 1998

Location: IBM
3600 Steeles Avenue East
Markham, Ontario

transportation

To make travelling to our career fair a bit easier, we've arranged for you to be picked up and dropped off by coach.

Time: 8:30 a.m.
Location: Mackintosh-Coxey Hall

register today!

Web: www.can.ibm.com/hr
Call: 1-800-IBM-CALL (1-800-426-2255), Ext. 740

Solutions for a small planet®

IBM and Solutions for a small planet are registered trademarks of International Business Machines Corporation and are used under licence by IBM Canada Ltd. 1998 IBM Corp. All rights reserved.

SPORTS & FITNESS

The Peanut Gallery

LITTLE MAN PLAYS BIG
Six-time CFL most outstanding player and former Heisman Trophy winner Doug Flutie has made a move south to Buffalo and wasted no time fitting in. The diminutive quarterback came on in relief of starter Rob Johnson in the Bills season opener against the Chargers. Flutie threw for 158 yards on two touchdowns and led the team to a 38-yard field goal attempt for the win. Unfortunately Steve Christie missed the kick, leaving Buffalo with a 16-14 loss. Regardless of the result, Flutie showed that there is a place for all five foot eight inches of him in the NFL.

PASSING MARIS

With one mighty swing of his big bat, Mark McGwire joined the ranks of the baseball immortals. In his second at-bat of the 145th game of the season, Big Mac blasted his 62nd home run of the year down the left field line, breaking Roger Maris' 37 year old record. As he reached home plate, the big tedhead wrapped his huge arms around the bat boy, his son Matt. In a moment that captures what is right about sport, McGwire climbed in the stands and hugged the Maris family. The extremely valuable home run ball never reached the stands and was recovered by a member of the grounds crew, avoiding chaos.

JAYS ON CRUISE CONTROL

The Toronto Blue Jays continue to roll after dumping millions in salary at the trading deadline in July. As of September 8, the Jays had won 11 games in a row and had moved to within five games of the Boston Red Sox. The Red Sox, who currently hold down the wild-card spot, fell victim to the Blue Jay juggernaut as they were swept in four straight games at SkyDome. With three consecutive shutouts, Roger Clemens has propelled himself into Cy Young contention as he leads the league in four categories. Even if they do not catch the Red Sox, the Jays are finally playing the kind of baseball that hasn't been seen in these parts since 1993.

IF CHRISTMAS CAME EARLY

Mark McGwire would set an unattainable homerun standard.
The critics of baseball's wild-card format would wake up and realize that these are the only pennant races left.
The NBA would learn from baseball and avoid a work stoppage at all cost.

Jim Aru (left) and Nathan Box (right) spent most of the game chasing down Concordia quarterback Sean Hoas.

PHOTO BY KEITH GEREN

Correale leads Gael charge

By ADAM KAMINSKY

He's baaaack!

It must seem like a bad horror movie to coaches all over the Ontario-Quebec Intercollegiate Football Conference as they watch the tape of the Golden Gaels' first game of the season. It is clear that Queen's running back Paul Correale is back and better than ever.

Coming off a season which ended early due to a bruised spleen, the speedy Correale had a huge day running the ball in the first game of the new campaign for the Gaels. Behind the 215-yard, two touchdown performance of the fourth-year Phys Ed student, the 10th ranked Queen's defeated the 7th rated Concordia Stingers 32-11 at Richardson Stadium.

In a game that was delayed 45 minutes due to the Concordia team bus breaking down, both teams were able to get off to a fast start.

Concordia drew first blood when their all-Canadian kicker, Dave Miller-Johnston inexplicably missed a 23-yard field goal attempt, staking the Stingers to a 1-0 lead midway throughout the first quarter. The Tricolor answered quickly with a 11-yard touchdown reception by James MacLean on the ensuing possession. The point parade continued when Concordia effectively matched down the field using an option attack and nailed a 41-yard field goal to narrow the margin to three points. The Gaels charged back when Paul Correale concluded an impressive drive by ripping off a 21-yard touchdown run.

Queen's	32
Concordia	11

Concordia narrowed the lead one more time with just 58 seconds before half-time when backup quarterback Jon Kronmeyer led them down the field and took it in himself from three yards out. The two key moments of this drive were an interception by nickel back Mike Middlebro' that was negated by a penalty and a 52-yard bomb by Kronmeyer on his first pass of the game.

Possessing a mere 14-11 lead, and a momentum which favoured the Stingers, the Gael defense had to make a statement early in the second half. The defense certainly rose to the challenge, and Concordia were pushed back onto their heels.

After an early interception by Max Turner, which he returned 47 yards deep into the Stingers end of the field, Paul Correale took it in from nine yards out and took away any momentum enjoyed by the visitors.

Only a minute later, the Queen's defense forced a Concordia punt from deep in their own zone. The snap on the punt was errant and travelled into the end zone, where it was promptly recovered by Max Turner, to stake Queen's to a 28-11 lead and blow the game open.

Any hopes of a comeback by the Montreals were snuffed out by a brilliant play on the defensive side of the ball by the Gaels. The option was shut down by the front seven, while the secondary was able to snag four interceptions on the day, including two by Andy Miners.

Defensive coordinator Bob Mullen was very proud of the defensive effort put forth by his team. "We made a whole lot of adjustments during half-time, and the guys were able to shut them down," he said.

While the defense held down the fort, the combination of Paul Correale and Chris Robyn rounded out with a field goal by kicker Ken Radcliffe and a punt single by Beau Howes.

Offensive coordinator Steve Yovetich, who was ecstatic about the 303 yards of rushing offense, was quick to distribute the praise to the offensive line. "Paul had a great game, but the blocking by the offensive line was phenomenal," Yovetich explained.

Correale also had a lot of good things to say about the offensive line, but he was mainly enthusiastic about contributing. "It was frustrating being out for most of last season, but I am glad that I am back."

There is little doubt that everybody involved with the Gaels shares his glee.

O-QUE FOOTBALL	G	W	L	F	A	P
Bishop's	1	0	4	1	2	2
Laval	1	0	2	2	2	2
Queen's	1	1	0	2	1	2
McGill	2	1	1	2	4	2
Ottawa	1	0	1	7	2	0
Concordia	1	0	1	1	3	0
Calton	1	0	1	1	5	4

Aerobics now free at the PEC

By ROBERT MACNEIL

Queen's students that are feeling lethargic and out of shape have finally run out of excuses. Thanks to a referendum held last spring, aerobic classes are now included in the athletic fees portion of the tuition.

Starting this September, there will be 47 different aerobic classes held each week at the Physical Education Center. Golden Gaels men's volleyball head coach Brenda Willis feels that now that the aerobic classes are included as a part of the athletic fees, students will be more motivated to take part in the new programs. Willis was particularly excited about the new facilities that the aerobic classes will be taught in. "We will be holding these classes in the upstairs and downstairs dance studios. The downstairs studio is air-conditioned, and there is new electronic fitness machines that were received last winter"

FREE CLASSES AT THE PEC

Cardio
Step
Step-Low
Hi-Lo
Strength and Tone
Boxaerobics
Funkaerobics
Beginner Classes and select Aquafitness programs.

Please see Step-up on page 18

Step-up to free aerobics

continued from page 17

said Willis. Adding to the ambiance, the walls are now painted in tricolour.

These aerobic classes will further the Physical Education goal to improve overall student fitness.

Although the aerobic classes are already paid for, students cannot drop by whenever they wish. Starting on September 8th, students must drop by the PEC to fill out a liability waiver and answer general demographic question as well as when they are most likely to attend the classes. This is meant to provide a smooth transition and prevent unnecessary overcrowding. Students also must bring their student card when they appear to register into the program. Interested students will receive a pass that will allow them to attend the classes.

These aerobic classes will further the Physical Education department's goal to improve overall student fitness.

Gaels break camp confident

By ADAM KAMINSKY

After winning the O-QIFC conference regular season title last season and then coming up short in the play-offs, the Queen's Golden Gaels know exactly where they want to be when it is all said and done—the Vanier Cup.

While the start of the season brings that expectation from all teams, the '98 edition of the Tricolor have reason for optimism. Despite losses of key players due to graduation, a good recruiting class and improved play from last season's understudies have given players and coaches a reason to be excited.

OFFENSE

Backs: The offensive backfield sees a complete package of returning players and will be the focal point of the offense. All-conference quarterback Beau Howes comes back with a year more experience and a bucketload of confidence. Running back and Hec Creighton candidate Paul Corrales comes back after an injury shortened season. The 1995 O-QIFC Rookie of the Year bruised his spleen in the third game of the season and was held out for the rest of the year as a precautionary measure, and is now in the best shape of his life. Corrales' task will be made easier by returning fullback Chris Robyn, who does some serious damage with his blocking, punning and pass catching. This is the best backfield in the O-QIFC.

Receivers: This unit was the hardest hit by graduation with all-conference players Chris Gear, Jonathan Taylor and Matt Carlyle moving on to greener pastures. While this could be devastating, the coaches feel that they have a group of players that will be able to emerge out of their immense shadow. Converted defensive back James MacLean and veteran Ken Radcliffe will fill the slotback position, while speedy Colin Campbell and Jason Wimmer will be lining up out wide. For this group to be successful, someone has to emerge as a go-to-guy for Beau Howes.

Line: With the graduation of veterans Garth Scott and Al Hull, there were many question marks at the start of camp, but most have been answered. With five huge new rookies in the fold, including starter and Kingston native John Landon, the future looks promising. The return of versatile veteran Rob Chalmers has helped the coaches mold the line into a cohesive unit. The key to the success of this group will be the growth of the rookies, and the continued improvement of this relatively inexperienced group. If these goals aren't met, the offense could be in big trouble.

DEFENSE

Secondary: The deep five in the Gaels' defense look very impressive coming out of training camp. Andy Minets, an all-conference player in 1996, returns at full strength from a knee injury and is joined at converted linebacker and leading tackler Derek Spronck, huge defensive tackle Dave Lavey and another surprise returner, Matt Rasmussen. The depth of this group was hurt by the loss of Ramsey Iida, who was having a great camp before tearing his achilles tendon. The line has to do a good job against the run while the linebackers gain experience, or the early season run defense could be problematic.

Special Teams: With the loss of punter/kicker Dan Coderre, Queen's kicking game will be interesting, to say the least. Various different players will be filling Coderre's kicking shoes, so this will be something to watch. The return game will be stronger this season, as Paul Corrales will be returning kick-offs and James MacLean will be deep for punts. It will be the play of the coverage teams, which are always strong here in Kingston, that will have to make up for the potentially erratic kicking.

Prognosis: The backfield tandem of Corrales and Robyn, coupled with the expected strong play of the defensive line and secondary that will make this team very competitive. Head coach Bob Howes predicts that six wins will win the O-QIFC, if nothing goes terribly wrong, those six wins will come.

Linebacker: The most pressing questions going in to the season is about the linebacking position. This unit lacks experience with Scott Dewar and Greg Wetmore being the focal point of the group. The unexpected return of veteran Nate Box has helped, but it will be the development of Wetmore and Dewar that is essential to the success of defensive coordinator Bob Mullen's group.

Line: Once Jim 'the sack guru' Aru and James 'Ozzie' Osborne decided to give the Vanier Cup another try, the defensive line became awesome. These former all-Canadians are joined by converted linebacker and leading tackler Derek Spronck, huge defensive tackle Dave Lavey and another surprise returner, Matt Rasmussen. The depth of this group was hurt by the loss of Ramsey Iida, who was having a great camp before tearing his achilles tendon. The line has to do a good job against the run while the linebackers gain experience, or the early season run defense could be problematic.

The Gaels know exactly where they want to be when it is all said and done—the Vanier Cup

Linebacker: The most pressing questions going in to the season is about the linebacking position. This unit lacks experience with Scott Dewar and Greg Wetmore being the focal point of the group. The unexpected return of veteran Nate Box has helped, but it will be the development of Wetmore and Dewar that is essential to the success of defensive coordinator Bob Mullen's group.

Prognosis: The backfield tandem of Corrales and Robyn, coupled with the expected strong play of the defensive line and secondary that will make this team very competitive. Head coach Bob Howes predicts that six wins will win the O-QIFC, if nothing goes terribly wrong, those six wins will come.

Line: Once Jim 'the sack guru' Aru and James 'Ozzie' Osborne decided to give the Vanier Cup another try, the

No manager, no problem

By ADAM KAMINSKY

The Queen's baseball team enters its fourth season with a look that is not familiar to baseball fans at any level — they have no manager. The resignation of the only manager Queen's baseball has known, Randy Casford, because of financial constraints, left the team to search over the summer.

After a fruitless effort, the team elected to go with the road less travelled and manage themselves. This task will be made easier by the fact that 16 players return from last year's third-place squad. This number includes veteran captain and third baseman, Matt Hook, who will be filling out the lineup card this season.

"As long as our relief holds up, we can compete with anyone in the country."

— Aaron Collins, Queen's Catcher

While this will be a challenge, 'captain Hook' is up to the task. "Everybody is contributing and we have played together for three years, so the closeness of the group helps avoid conflict," said the player/coach. "As far as my play, I have been spending a little more time as designated hitter, but I don't feel that it will hinder my production," he continued.

Help in the coaching department has come from Perry Contad, who will be assisting with practice and some on-field decisions.

"He knows his baseball and he will be somebody who will remain with the team for a long time and help us attain varsity status," said Hook.

While things seem tumultuous off the field, the players are very excited about what may transpire between the lines. With team MVP Aaron Collins, most improved player Henry Shiau, Chris Cartile and pitching ace Phil Darling all returning for another campaign, their excitement is understandable.

"We will definitely be an improved team from our 10-10 record last season," said Collins. "As long as our relief holds up, we can compete with anyone in the country."

With four proven starters, it will be the four game weekends, which is standard at this level of play, that will really put the team to the test.

"Last season we lost a lot of one-run ball games, but this season we have improved defence so more of those should come our way," predicted the captain.

If the pitching depth does not become a problem and the defense continues to play at a high level, divisional rivals York and University of Toronto will find themselves chasing Queen's for the league crown.

ACCIDENT WITNESSES SOUGHT

On March 12, 1997, a fatal accident occurred on Division Street at Elliott Avenue in the City of Kingston. The accident resulted in the death of a Kingston resident, Philip Quattrocchi. The province's Special Investigations Unit (SIU) is conducting an investigation into the accident. Investigators have information that one or more Queens University female students may have witnessed the incident or know the identity of someone who has. If so, we would like to speak with you.

Anyone with information please call Bruce Potts, at the SIU: 1-800-787-8529 or 416-314-2915

SCUBA Diving Courses for certification of "OPEN WATER DIVER" by the Professional Association of Diving Instructors (P. A. D. I.), the World's Largest and Most Recognized Training Agency, will begin on Tuesday 15, Wednesday 16, & Friday 18 SEP. 98 at the Kingston Diving Centre, P.A.D.I. Facility No. 4379. A student discount is available for Queen's University Students. For information and registration call 6-DIVING (634-8464)

SCUBA DIVING

Final destination: Victoria

By ADAM KAMINSKY

Excitement reigns supreme on the West Campus soccer pitch, and it's more than residual enthusiasm from the 1998 World Cup. The buzz you hear is about the Queen's women's soccer team, which comes into this season loaded and ready to go.

"With so many versatile players, we continue to tinker with various different formations that will bring out the best in the talent we have."

— Head coach Dave McDowell

Returning twelve players from a third place squad would be exciting to any coach, but for Head Coach Dave McDowell, that is just the beginning. In addition to those players, he welcomes back 1996 All-Canadian Judith Trepanier, who sat out last year with a knee injury, and transfer student Raelen Dunn, who was also honoured with All-Canadian status in '96 while playing for Acadia. With these two joining 1997 All-Canadian Jen 'Birdie' Sarginson, the Gaels have an experienced base to build from.

Along with all of this star power, Queen's has a core of young players that have shown promise in the past and look to explode in the coming season. Starting keeper Amanda Foran emerges from a summer of fighting fires and his promptly put in the hot seat as the last line of defense.

While Foran will be minding the goal, the two leading scorers from last season, Joanna Hackett (10 goals) and Angie Crockford (eight goals) will be looking to cash in a few more this season.

With this embarrassment of riches, coach McDowell is still looking for a place to put all of his players on the field.

"With so many versatile players, we continue to tinker with various different formations that will bring out the best in the talent we have," said the 10th-year head man.

With the wealth of returning players, whether there are any rookies to contribute remains a question. "If we even have one or two that make a difference, that would be great, but if none emerge, we will be fine," said assistant coach Matco Giacomello.

Along with the high talent level, the coaching staff is excited about the level of fitness that the players returned with.

"The girls all worked very hard over the summer and came into camp in great shape," continued McDowell. "That doesn't mean that we will not try and increase that level of fitness," added the coach with a smirk.

The main competition within the OUA East this year for the Gaels comes from familiar places, as the two teams that finished ahead of them, University of Ottawa and York, look to be strong. The dominant Gee-Gees have lost 10 of 11 starters, so they are a mystery, but due to their dominance in the past two seasons they must be respected.

While winning the OUA East is a goal, coach McDowell is looking towards the CIAU Championships in Victoria as the final destination.

"We would like to make an impact on the national level," he said.

With talent like the Gaels have, this idea is not far fetched.

Long distance Across Canada. Any time. Any day!

As low as 4¢ a minute

Residential Rates

5 hour North American Plan $24.95 Anywhere in North America, Any time	10 hour North American Plan $44.95 Anywhere in North America, Any time
--	---

Why wait for evenings or weekends to Save?

- Call any time, any day of the week.
- As low as 3.1¢ a minute in Canada.
- As low as 12¢ a minute to the U.S.
- One low predictable monthly bill.
- Free Reverse Calling.
- No cost to join, no activation fees.

4 Ways To Save.

40 hour North American Plan $94.95 Anywhere in North America, Any time	40 hour Canadian Plan $74.95 All low rate 3.1¢ a minute Across Canada, Any time
---	---

LONDON TELECOM NETWORK

Canada's Flat Rate Long Distance Company

* Some restrictions. Certain restrictions may apply. USA calling time on a higher time zone and varies per plan. Unavailable in regions not served by Bell, BCE/Tel, TELUS Communications Inc., MTS, N Sask, Bell Tel, NEWTEL Communications Inc., Island Telecom Inc. or MTI&T London Telecom (a wholly Canadian owned company, USA calling including Alaska & Hawaii).

† 11 "ON NET" core coverage area only

• It's Simple! • No switching Companies • No Activation Fee

Toll Free 1-800-387-5684

Contact Gregory Roach, Authorized Dealer

BIG SCREENS - QB1 - 5 POOL TABLES - LIVE BANDS! - www.thehub-kingston.com INFO LINE 531-5025 TO BOOK A SMOKER OR PARTY CALL 531-5300

More to Queen's than books

OPINION

BY ROBERT MACNEIL

Queen's University has a reputation as the finest academic institution in Canada and this reputation continues to thrive because of the high academic standards that are expected of the incoming class of 2002. While classes are an important part of the Queen's experience, they are not what will define your stay here. It is imperative to have a well-rounded university experience, and this means being involved in extra-curricular activities such as sports. Queen's University Alumni members Greg Stone and Brad Greenwood, the current head coach of men's rugby, look back fondly on their experiences with sports at Queen's.

Athletics are very important because they provide the foundation for a healthy lifestyle. Promoting physical fitness amongst first-year students is now one of the goals of the Physical Education faculty here at Queen's. Stone was a member of the Gaels varsity basketball championship team in 1956 and is now a 61-year old grandfather. This year he competed in, and won, the Ontario Senior 60-years and over Racquetball Championships in Windsor, Ontario. This illustrates that the habits and interests which evolve during a university experience stay with us for life.

Stone's experiences with sports also helped prepare him for the business world. There was intense bonding involved with being a member of a team sport. "With sports [in general], you live together in cramped quarters, and you are showering, eating and travelling together," said Stone. The discipline that one learns through sports related well to the business world which he found himself in shortly after graduating from Queen's in 1959. In describing himself and his colleagues, Stone articulated that "most of us feel the business world is a mirror of the sports world, [because] it is important to work in teams."

"[These students] are truly fortunate to have the opportunity to go to a place like Queen's and they should make the most of it."

— Greg Stone, Former Queen's basketball player

The close life-long bonds that students establish at Queen's is never more evident than at homecoming. In Stone's opinion, homecoming weekend is the "complete demonstration" of the unity known only as "Queen's spirit." This is the time of year in which the leaves begin to change colour, the air gets a bit cooler and all the alumni come back to relive their university years with the next generation. It is a chance for students, both young and old, to fathom all that they have experienced and to celebrate their membership in the Queen's family.

Brad Greenwood felt that when he participated as a student on the men's rugby team he really became a part of the school itself and not just someone running from class to class. "You really feel part of the university when you're pulling the Queen's jersey on a Saturday afternoon. It's quite something," recalled Greenwood.

Greenwood also points out that the returning players on the rugby team take it upon themselves to pass on the traditions to the new players.

It has been forty years since he graduated from the university, but Stone feels that the most important lessons that he learned at Queen's can still be applied to the class of 2002. "These students are truly fortunate to have the opportunity to go to a place like Queen's and they should make the most of it. Dive into campus life and make a strong effort to participate over and above going to classes."

Coach Greenwood remem-

Greg Stone attributes his business success to Queen's athletics.

PHOTO COURTESY OF GREG STONE

bers fondly that participating on the rugby team was "a great way to meet 50 people at once." More importantly he found it was "a nice release from the day-to-day pressures from class." Being on the rugby team also helped him become a better student academically. With the pressure of balancing both his studies and his team obligations, found himself to be more organized. As Greenwood articulated, it may be a wonderful cure for those who find themselves to be "organizationally challenged."

It is important to attend the majority of your classes, but it is even more crucial to sample from all the kegs that are found in the beer garden known as Queen's University at Kingston. Sports is a great way to accomplish this goal. However, if you do not play on a varsity team, there are also intramural sports teams which provide a lot of fun and act as great stress relievers. Congratulations on being accepted to the Queen's community. These next four years of your life will be the most enjoyable, entertaining, humorous, infuriating, tiring, and confusing times that you will ever experience. Be sure to take in all the sights and smells because it will all be happening in a flash and the friends and memories that are made will be treasured forever.

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

No rest for the musically wicked Lounge Act embarks on cross-Canada tour

Band Interview

BY SARAH CROSBIE

The members of Lounge Act, one of Kingston's most featured local bands, describe themselves as, "a funk-ass outfit (who) encourage their followers to spend their time idly, while digging the grooves." Lounge Act itself is an oxymoron, in that "lounging" is the furthest thing from the minds of the three members of the group. Beginning this September, Lounge Act, composed of vocalist and guitarist Tim Sheffield, bassist Jordan Zylstra and percussionist Mark Agnew will commence their Canadian tour.

Lounge Act released their first CD, user friendly grooves, last February and since that time have been performing continuously both in and outside Kingston.

Sheffield and Zylstra, both members of the group at the time the CD was released, were recently joined by percussionist Agnew after the original drummer left. Agnew came to the band when he was persuaded to play the congas during the recording of the CD. He was lured in by the promise of "a hot dog and a beer" and continued to play with Lounge Act when the group was in the Kingston area. When the original drummer left, Agnew said, "the natural thing to do was to slide into Lounge Act."

Lounge Act will begin their tour by playing at the Queen's Pub this Saturday and AJ's this Sunday. After their Kingston gigs they're off to perform in Thunder Bay, Winnipeg, Sault Ste. Marie, and in Western Canada in Winnipeg, Edmonton, Vancouver and Banff. Lounge Act isn't worried about leaving the comfort of their Kingston fan base and venturing into new territory because, user friendly grooves has enjoyed above extensive radio play in the West. Sheffield stated that, "the tour is simply based on the CD itself and the reason why it's doing well out West is because it's targeted towards the windsurfers and the snow and skate boarders."

Joking about their hectic fall schedule, Sheffield laughed, "it's all about peace and love."

The band's name may convey the image of three greasy lounge lizards tickling the ivories and crooning love ballads, but Lounge Act's music is anything but tunes you would find in a smoky cigar bar. The band's music is quite diverse as they can play "full funk or play acoustic and be laid back or we can turn it up really fucking loud and blow your head off...[we] have to be sensitive to who we're playing to."

It's Lounge Act's music which initially hooks people because it is, "groove and beat oriented", but the lyrics are also important. Sheffield writes the lyrics and said that, "the first CD is very personal. It was a form to vent." Sheffield is also the composer of the group's music, but all three members work on their own section. Agnew said that, "[he likes to] throw latin and jazz influences in just to complicate things." The band's music is further developed by experimenting with sampling and DJ's.

The band's name may convey the image of three greasy lounge lizards tickling the ivories and crooning love ballads, but Lounge Act's music is anything but.

Although Lounge Act currently has enough new music to make at least another full CD, the group's focus right now is the Canadian tour. In discussing his hopes for the tour, Sheffield said, "the tour is about visiting and spending time with friends. It's not about money."

Joking about their hectic fall schedule, Sheffield laughed, "it's all about peace and love" and Agnew quickly added, "[but] we're all going to die." The tour may be about socializing, love and peace, but doubtfully death. If the success of the CD and the demand for the band in concert is any indication, the tour is more likely about life — life ahead in the Canadian music scene for Lounge Act. Lounging doesn't look like an option for these three guys anywhere in the near future.

Canada Computer & Electronics Inc.
350 Princess Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 1B6 2-411 Telson Rd., Markham, Ontario, L3R 1E7
Tel: (613) 542-8467 Fax: (613) 542-6709 Tel: (905) 946-9688 Fax: (905) 946-9732

PENTIUM II ASUS PC-100 SYSTEM
ASUS P2B Intel BX Mainboard
64 MB PC-100 SDRAM Memory
6.4GB IDE Hard Drive
Panasonic 1.44MB Floppy Drive
Panasonic 32x IDE CD-ROM
Full Tower Case w/300 W ATX Power
Matrox G200 8 MB AGP Video Card
Creative AWE 64
15" SVGA Monitor 28mm
104 Key Keypunch Keyboard PS/2
2-Button Mouse PS/2
Alloc. Loading ACS 45 Speakers w/Sub.
FREE Thrustmaster Joystick!

Intel Celeron Pentium II 266 $1488
Intel Celeron Pentium II 300 $1509
Intel Celeron Pentium II 300A $1635

Intel Pentium II 266 $1688
Intel Pentium II 300 $1748
Intel Pentium II 333 $1748
Intel Pentium II 350 $1948
Intel Pentium II 400 $2098

MMX VALUE SYSTEM
Intel Pentium II 300 $1748
Intel Pentium II 333 $1748
Intel Pentium II 350 $1948
Intel Pentium II 400 $2098

MMX SYSTEM
Intel Pentium II 300 $1748
Intel Pentium II 333 $1748
Intel Pentium II 350 $1948
Intel Pentium II 400 $2098

PENTIUM II VALUE SYSTEM
Intel Pentium II 266 $1488
Intel Pentium II 300 $1509
Intel Pentium II 300A $1635
Intel Pentium II 333 $1748
Intel Pentium II 350 $1948
Intel Pentium II 400 $2098

PENTIUM II SYSTEM
Intel Pentium II 266 $1488
Intel Pentium II 300 $1509
Intel Pentium II 300A $1635
Intel Pentium II 333 $1748
Intel Pentium II 350 $1948
Intel Pentium II 400 $2098

Multideas Promotions
Screen Print and Embroidery.
In house Graphic Design.
More than 300,000
Promotional Products to choose from!

Wide range of in-stock or customized SPORTSWEAR.
Want to promote your TEAM? Leave it to US!

Make '98 the year to remember.
Make an impression at your conference.

Quality merchandise at very competitive prices.

Come and visit our showroom
We are licensed for the Queen's logo.
530 Barnsley Cres. Kingston, ON
Tel: (613) 634-2437 Fax: (613) 634-2505
www.multideas.com
mult@adan.kingston.net

Rotate this!

Liz Phair
Whitechocolatespaceegg
Matador Records

BY SAMANTHA MORRIS

The grrl who once had a thorn in her side has safely tucked away her battered Doc Martins and brash lyrical honesty in favour of family life and a new repertoire of light, experimental songs. With the release Whitechocolatespaceegg, Liz Phair has wandered down a similar path to fellow ex-grunge queen Courtney Love. The emotional turmoil at the core of Phair's and Love's feminist driven rock has faded away, leaving a carefree and elusive sound to rise to the surface.

While the lyrics found on Whitechocolatespaceegg are sure to disappoint hardcore fans of Phair's earlier material, they are catchy and witty enough to appeal new listeners. No overarching musical theme can be found on Whitechocolatespaceegg, as Phair leaves behind her days of rock and chooses to explore different musical genres.

"Headache" is a synth-pop tune that brings back memories of Depeche Mode and OMD, and title track "Whitechocolatespaceegg" mirrors Madonna's ill-fated tinkering with electronica. In "Baby Got Going", Phair takes a rockabilly approach, and the result is a combo of early Elvis Presley and Nancy Sinatra's "These Boots Were Made for Walkin'". Phair is at her best when she stays away from such sketchy experimentation. The acoustic "Perfect World" is touching and raw and "Johnny Feelgood" is reminiscent of Phair's early concentration on the treachery of boy-girl relationships. "What Makes You Happy" and "Love is Nothing" are cheerful cookie-cutter pop songs, and "Uncle Alvarez" is a mini-symphony of impressionistic piano and colourful textures. While Whitechocolatespaceegg is very diverse, it lacks a sense of cohesiveness. Whitechocolatespaceegg reveals Phair to be in a transitional phase, rather than a new dimension, and like any transitional phase, there are growing pains and there are successes. Whitechocolatespaceegg, while triumphant at times, is for the most part slightly confused — a good album by most standards, but for Liz Phair, a slightly disappointing one.

Big Sugar
Heated
A&M

BY ROBERT DE BELLEFUEILLE

Big Sugar is a Canadian band that has established a successful cult following, though has been relegated to performing at a certain Hub bar. The band fuses an eclectic mix of blues-rock with a dash of reggae. The frontman and nucleus of the group is Gordie Johnson, a guitarist who isn't frugal with his riffs and tireless solos. On Heated, Johnson's guitar proficiency resonates throughout the entire album. Although demonstrating his virtuoso skill, occasionally it begins to teeter on the verge of exhibition. Johnson can play the guitar at the same rate Squeeze kids converge on an expensive new automobile: warp speed.

The first single released, "The Scene", is an up-tempo rock ditty that has enjoyed success. Other tracks destined for notoriety are "Cop a Plea" and "Kickin' Stones", a laid back dole tune that helps to diversify the record. Johnson's lyrics are amiable but do not expect any Dylanesque, voice of a nation social commentaries. The lyric "While I'm counting my regrets, I'm gonna smoke one hundred cigarettes" is a prime example. Mysteriously absent from Heated are the perfunctory "Skip Songs" that are prevalent on the majority of new releases. For example, you're on the couch and chilling with the tunes cranked and you say to your fellow comrade, homeboy or significant other, "would you be an absolute dove and press skip on the CD player for me... NOW." That won't happen with this disc. On a number of the tracks there is a bluesy-ska beat that creates a catchy melodic quality. Among the 12 songs there are a variety of gems to be marvelled at, fraught with musical craftsmanship.

Just as the yams of pirates have a direct simplicity, Heated possesses a consistent cadence that is bound to delight Sugar

Bob Mould
The Last Dog and Pony Show
Granny Music

BY TIM EVANS

The Last Dog and Pony Show is an appropriate title for Bob Mould's latest and what may be his last tour of duty. This album is a public statement (with an interview disc included), that Mould, "the twelve string electric rock wonder", who spearheaded such groups as Husker Du and Sugar, will no longer be touring his rock shows. While The Last Dog and Pony Show does not break any new ground, there are some gems to be found in the no longer rough talent of Mould. Songs such as "Vaporub," and "New #1" give us a peak into the

Grizzly bears wild comedy

New City Improv troupe titillates comedy lovers

Comedy Improv Review

By ADRIA VUKSINIC

There is no greater power to heal than laughter. Sitting in the Grizzly Grill lounge on a Sunday night, laughter is exactly what you can expect from the featured improv troupe New City Improv. Starting September 13, New City will perform two hours of live improv comedy at the Grizzly Grill every other Sunday night at 9:30 p.m. Shows are aimed toward adult audiences and include a lot of audience participation. For improv performers Jay Molleson, Scott Stoness, Mike Bullert and Mike Payne, shows work best if they have an audience that participates in the show and gives them plenty of suggestions to work with.

Performing on a stage on the Grizzly Grill's dance floor, New City uses an assortment of traditional improv games. Those familiar with the television show

Whose Line Is It Anyway? will recognize games such as "Person in Motion," which involves audience members moving actors around the stage during a scene, forcing the comedians to react to their body positions, and "Party Quirks," during which the host of a party must guess the various idiosyncrasies of his guests, one of whom is Satan.

The comedy troupe also incorporated local politics and events... such as the controversial display in the window of Willys.

Due to the comedians' quick thinking and improv talent some of the games produced screaming laughter throughout the evening. The comedy troupe also incorporated local politics and events in the show, such as the controversial display in the window of Willys, frosh week and Kingston's prisons. The evening, however, did not always run smoothly for the improv team. Some patrons of the lounge who were sitting in the front continuously heckled the comics. Although the performers took the comments in stride, there were moments of nervous silence in the audience as the hecklers shouted obscene comments.

All the performers come from a strong drama background and interact well together in anticipation of what the other comics will say and do. The group which has only been together since last March, say they have received a good response to their show since it began.

Auditions to join the troop are being held on September 16. Through the auditions the troupe hopes to diversify the company and build a strong base of comedy actors.

"[This year] we want to get into the Queen's environment" said Stoness, one of three founding members of the group.

The show, which is free, is a great way for students to spend a Sunday night. After Sunday dinner, one should head down to the Grizzly Grill lounge and laugh at the improvisational stylings of New City Improv.

Mike Payne, Scott Stoness and Jay Molleson laugh it up at the Grizzly.

PHOTO BY SARAH CROSBIE

YOU ARE INVITED TO THE

109TH ANNUAL CANDLELIGHTING CEREMONY

13 September 1998
3:30 - 4:30 p.m.
Grant Hall

Guest Speaker
Stephanie Black, Arts'89
Host, Style File, Global TV

A long standing tradition at Queen's, to welcome new women to the university community. Candlelighting provides an opportunity to interact with older students, alumni and a special guest speaker.

ATHLETIC INFORMATION NIGHT

Fall Sign-up for ISS, Fitness Classes & Intramural Teams
Meet Interuniversity Coaches
Check-out our Recreational & Tricolour Competitive Clubs
STUDENT EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES!!!
Tuesday, Sept 15th 5 - 7 PM Bartlett & Ross Gyms

JOIN THE BANDS!

A GENERAL MEETIN FOR ALL STUDENTS INTERESTED IN JOINING THE QUEEN'S BANDS WILL BE HELD MONDAY SEPT. 14 AT 6:00 PM IN GRANT HALL. COME OUT AND SHOW YOUR QUEEN'S SPIRIT AND SIGN UP FOR AN AUDITION TIME.

WETHER YOU ARE A COMMERCE, ENGINEER, ARTS, NURSING, RHAB OR ANY OTHER DISCIPLINE,

WE WANT YOU!!!

A&E in brief

She's No Angel: Tori Spelling recently shocked her TV-mogul father Aaron Spelling with her recent responses to Playboy's "20 Questions." In the October issue, Tori reveals she's had sex in the restroom of a Europe-bound plane. She also discusses her fantasies about three-ways, oral sex and male masturbation. She also admires strippers, saying, "I think I would be a great stripper."

Boxo-fied Success: Music group U2 just signed a $50 million deal with Polygram for three "best of" albums, starting with an album featuring material from 1980-1990, due out November 2. U2 has sold more than 87 million records worldwide.

Out, but Not About: George Michael has backed out of his world tour because he's trying to cope with personal traumas. The tour, his first in eight years, was scheduled to open this March. Michael had to make a public apology after being arrested in Los Angeles for lewd behavior. He also acknowledged publicly he was gay. Michael is said to also be coping with the death of his mother.

On the Road Again: CHiPs, the hit show about two highway patrol officers is making a comeback. Larry Wilcox and Erik Estrada have just finished working on CHiPs '99, a cable TV movie that has the old pair reprising their roles as Jon Baker and "Ponch." Fantasy Island and Love Boat are also making a comeback this year.

Sein-ing the Cheque: According to Forbes magazine, the creators of "Seinfeld" became the highest paid entertainers after selling the show into syndication. Creators Jerry Seinfeld and Larry David made $225 and $200 million respectively. Coming in third was Steven Spielberg with $175 million and Oprah Winfrey and James Cameron rounded out the list coming fourth and fifth.

Would Rather Miss the Thing: According to Billboard, Aerosmith's current hit, "Don't Want to Miss A Thing" from the movie Armageddon is the current number one single on the billboard charts.

THE KINGSTON ROWING CLUB

QUEEN'S FALL ROWING 1998

LEARN TO ROW	STARTS SEPT 21 4 WEEKS 2 TIMES PER WEEK COST...$90.00 NOW ON TUES & THURS OR WED & FRI
REC. ROWING	STARTS SEPT 21 4 WEEKS 2 TIMES PER WEEK COST...$90.00 NOW ON TUES & THURS OR WED & FRI
VARSIY DEVELOPMENT	STARTS SEPT 14 7 WEEKS 3 TIMES PER WEEK COST...$190.00 NOW ON MON, WED & FRI OR TUES, THURS & SAT

TO REGISTER: VARSITY DEVELOPMENT ROOM 205 QUEEN'S PHYS. ED CENTRE THURSDAY SEPT 10 OR FRIDAY SEPT 11 @ 6:00 PM
REC & LTR...ATHLETIC & CLUBS INFORMATION NIGHT @ QUEEN'S PHYS. ED CENTRE SEPT 15 5:00 - 7:00PM
OTHERWISE CONTACT A MANAGER AT 592-4767 E-MAIL ROWING@POST.QUEEN'S.CA

Back by Popular Demand! Teach English Overseas

ESL/EFL TEACHER TRAINING CERTIFICATION COURSE

- * Teaching Materials
- * Job Resources
- * Language, Grammar, Pronunciation Skills
- * Teaching Practicum included

Mondays & Wednesdays 6:00 - 9:00 p.m.
September 23 - November 4, 1998
Practicum Saturday October 24 & 31
10:30 a.m. - 3:00 p.m.

REGISTER BY SEPT. 14 & RECEIVE 5% DISCOUNT

$349.00
Queen's Campus Location
REGISTRATION: Phone 384-6194

We can't do it without you!

The Queen's Journal needs contributors, and that means you. Contributing to The Journal means great experience, fun people and FREE FOOD.

What could be better?

We need reporters, writers, reviewers, photographers and graphics designers, but most of all we need you. Your creativity. Your enthusiasm. Your talent.

Stop by The Journal House at 272 Earl St., call 545-2800, check our website at www.journal.queensu.ca or e-mail us at journal@post.queensu.ca. We'd love to hear from you!

Return Policies FOR BEGINNERS

Why Print The Return Policy?

Here at the Campus Bookstore we would like you to be aware of our Return Policy so that you can make the best choices when buying your textbooks. We hope that you will take a moment and look it over.

Please note that we cannot accept returns during the first three days of classes, Monday September 14th until Wednesday September 16th. This is due to the fact that the store is extremely busy during that time. We would also suggest that you try to come during our evening hours. We are open until 8 PM every night, Monday through Saturday. Finally we would like to encourage you to look up your books before you come to the store if at all possible. Visit our website at www.campusbookstore.com. You will need your course codes, numbers, sections and terms in order to find out what textbooks you will need for each course.

Our Return Policy: General Books, Gifts And Clothing

General reading books, insignia items and clothing items may be returned within two weeks of purchase. Merchandise must be in new and unused condition and accompanied by a sales receipt. If you have defective merchandise please return it as soon as possible so we may offer a replacement.

Textbooks

We regret that our textbook policy cannot be as liberal as our general return policy. We will be happy to offer a full refund so long as: you have your sales receipt, the book is in new and unused condition with no wear or markings, shrinkwrapped items are returned unopened.

Returns must be made on or before the following term deadlines, or within one week of dropping a course:

- Fall Term * October 5, 1998
- Winter Term * January 22, 1999
- Spring Term * May 10, 1999
- Summer Term * July 12, 1999

We cannot accept used textbooks purchased at the Campus Bookstore as returns. Please keep this in mind when considering the purchase of used books.

Finally, much of our textbook return policy is dictated by policies set by textbook publishers. If one of these policies is affecting your return and is beyond our control, we will be happy to provide you with the publisher's phone number.

Finally look for our new Return Policy Bookmarks. They include a coupon for 20% off any of the Icon Books "For Beginners" series and any of our Schaum's Study Aids or Problem Solver Books.

Clark Hall • Weekdays 9-8, Saturday 10-8
545-2955 • After January 1st 533-2955
Owned and Operated by Students Since 1909

www.campusbookstore.com

Out of the Hub Mid-town Manor provides fresh venue for students

Bar Preview
The Midtown Manor
506 Princess St.

BY SARAH CROSSBIE

Every Queen's student will encounter it. Many will love it and many will loathe it. It will become a bane of existence in every Queen's student life. It is both students' lifeline and their demise. It is Princess Street.

Princess between Division and Ontario Street is a staple for students. It provides shopping, food and, most notably, the Hub, the area which quenches most students' thirst for entertainment. It is not often that students voluntarily cross the Division Street boundary for alcohol induced merriment; however, in the following months, students may find themselves wandering a couple more blocks to drink, dance and socialize at Kingston's newest major addition to the bar scene, the Mid-town Manor.

Located beside The Beer Store at Princess and University, Mid-town Manor opened its doors to the public on June 17. The Manor is located in the building which used to be Aykroyd's Ghetto House Café. Perhaps to some peoples dismay, the police cruiser is no longer part of the decor.

Mid-town Manor claims to have Kingston's, "Best [and] Biggest Patio" which is not a far stretch from the truth, as the Manor has more than 10 patio tables complete with umbrellas, situated in a rock garden type atmosphere. There's an outside bar to accompany the patio and drinks like Bahama Mamas, Purple People Eaters and Velvet Hammers are commonly ordered, not to mention the standard favorite beer. The Manor intends to keep the patio open well into fall or until the weather simply disagrees.

Inside the main floor is a mix of tables and bar stools. It just may be the barstools which attracts the most clientele as they are motorcycle bike seats. If that isn't enough, there is also a seat made from the back-half of a motorcycle to sit on while you sip your drink of choice. The main floor offers a casual atmosphere, which is large enough to hobnob with all your friends.

PHOTO BY JAMES TERANIAN

The bottom floor of the Midtown Manor is a sports den complete with fire-place, darts and pool tables — a good place for a boys night out. The third floor, which has a more lounge type atmosphere, won't open until the patio closes.

Students may also be attracted to the Manor because there is no cover, unless a band is playing and the walls between the different floors are decorated with celebrity murals. The Manor also offers a limited menu, mainly focusing on appetizers, pizza, burgers and wings — standard pub food.

Mid-town Manor has the potential to become the favorite sit-down-and-have-a-beer bar, taking away the title from one of the current favourites, The Brass. It could also become the home to motorcycle loving Kingston residents and have Queen's students vetoing the bar. Mid-town Manor's future depends on whether students are ready to take the plunge and cross over that crazy boundary known as Division Street.

Sunday Pasta Night

Salad, Pasta & Focaccia
$4.95

We Are Hiring

Assistant News Editor

• As assistant news editor, you will be a member of the news team. You will be involved with writing and editing news, and designing the news section.

Computer Systems Manager

• As systems manager, you will be an on-call computer resource for The Journal, assisting with maintenance and trouble-shooting.

Journal House Cleaner

• We are looking for someone to clean the Journal house on a weekly basis.

If you are interested in working at The Journal or would like more information, please contact Tara or Keith, co-editors-in-chief, at 545-2800, send us an e-mail at journal@post.queensu.ca, or stop by and see us at 272 Earl Street (between University and Division).

Application deadline: Monday, September 21 at 5:00 p.m.

Take part in YOUR student newspaper.

The Journal Board of Directors is seeking new members for the 1998-99 year

Two students-at-large

• The student-at-large positions are open to any Queen's students, and will be appointed by the editors-in-chief.

One student contributor/staff

• The student contributor/staff position is open to anyone who has contributed to The Journal a minimum of two times in writing, graphic design, website design or photography. The student contributor/staff will be elected in late September.

Those chosen will sit as a voting member on the Journal Board of Directors, or J-board. As a member of J-board, you will attend a meeting once every two weeks and help guide the operations of The Journal.

If you are interested in sitting on J-Board or would like more information, please contact Laura at 545-2800 or via email at journal@post.queensu.ca.

ZAP RECORDS
PRESENTS KINGSTON'S 8TH ANNUAL
RECORD SHOW & SALE

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 1998
10 A.M. - 5 P.M.

LOCATION:
GREEK ORTHODOX HALL
121 JOHNSON ST., KINGSTON
(Across from Library)

COLLECTIBLE RECORDS, CDS, TAPES, VIDEOS, MEMORABILIA RELATED ITEMS UNAVAILABLE IN REGULAR RETAIL STORES

ADMISSION $ 2.00

ZAP RECORDS
77A PRINCESS ST
KINGSTON, ONT.
(613) 547-9949

OPT-OUTS

▶ WHAT ▶ WHEN ▶ HOW

STUDENT INTEREST FEES

Every student has paid a slate of student interest fees. This money is distributed in varying amounts to a variety of worthwhile campus and community causes.

Until September 25, you have the retroactive choice of not donating this money to a particular cause. This process is called "opting-out".

Opt-outs are done online via QCARD (see the Blue Book for details), except for the AMS Health Plan...

AMS HEALTH PLAN

You can choose not to be covered by the AMS Health Plan if you can provide proof of comparable coverage.

Proof is limited to

- ▶ a letter from your insurer or your parent's employer showing coverage
- ▶ a subscriber card indicating coverage for YOU
- ▶ a photocopy of a receipt from a recent claim clearly indicating current coverage

Proof must be brought in person to the AMS offices in the lower JDUC weekdays from Sept 14-23, 10:00 am to 4:00 pm, and Sept 24, 25 from 10:00 am to 7:00 pm

SEPT 8-25 * QCARD OPT OUTS
SEPT 14-25 * AMS HEALTH PLAN

* There are no exceptions.

Sensational sleaze

Magazine uses cartoons and celebrities to shock

Magazine Review

Weird Magazine
Paradox Press

BY STEFAN MURRAY

Not so much weird as dull. The newest wannabe, cutting-edge shock magazine goes to great lengths in mocking the public perception and media craze of celebrity scandal in its 1998 summer issue. But how does the newest member of the low-humour genre hope to turn the corner on an already overblown topic? With cartoons of course.

The explicit drawings of Jane Mansfield's naked torso and Soon-Yi spread eagled in a bathtub are obviously intended for pure shock.

Yes, in a strikingly similar fashion to MAD magazine, Weird takes advantage of its crack illustrators to produce stunning likenesses to O.J Simpson, Michael Jackson and Elvis Presley, retelling each celebrity's respective scandal. I suppose the weeks of colour photos and the painstaking scandal details in hundreds of tabloid magazines weren't enough for the public. Weird suggests that we will absorb some new meaning with pencil drawings. The illustrations do nothing that the existing coverage of these incidents hasn't already, besides

ALL OF WHICH CULMINATED WHEN SHE WAS MOBBED IN RIO DE JANEIRO, STRIPPED TO THE WAIST, AND NEARLY TORN TO PIECES BY HER 'FANS'.

AS FOR O.J.: I VOW TO DEVOTE MY LIFE TO FINDING THE REAL KILLERS, FOLK!

ONE OF THE BOYS SAID THAT MICHAEL HAD TOLD HIM!

YOU KNOW MASTURBATION IS A WONDERFUL THING

The scandal issue is so sloppy that it even lacks the tact to include segments that are still in the public eye.

adding a touch of humour, which seems inconsequential when compared to even the most mediocre political cartoon.

The scandal issue is so sloppy that it even lacks the tact to include segments that are still in the public eye. Besides the O.J trial, Weird opens the vault to re-open such memories as the Woody Allen-Soon-Yi and Milli Vanilli fiascoes.

Even more amazing is the fact that a piece on Bill Clinton's alleged infidelity is included, but I suppose that a Monica Lewinsky item would be too current for those at Weird. Clinton's affair with Gennifer Flowers (does anyone remember much less care about her?) is highlighted, as well as remarks about his details of oral sex.

Furthermore, the explicit drawings of Jane Mansfield's naked torso and Soon-Yi spread eagled in a bathtub are obviously intended for pure shock, or to render some sort of visceral reaction from a stupefied audience.

They also stock a number of pieces destined for the who-cares files. For example, Weird reveals that jazz singer Billy Tipton (ever hear of him?) was actually a woman masquerading as a man. Stories such as this make one wonder who the magazine is intended for. If you want to appeal to young alternative audiences, references to '30s jazz singers and country music heroes like Spade Cooley are not moves in the right direction. Overall, Weird is treading the dangerous line between satire and sensationalism, and although it aspires to be a provocative and entertaining magazine, it bottoms out, barely able to provide even the cheapest of laughs. In fact, the only audience that would find humour in the magazine is probably unable to read the cartoon-bubbled narrative.

Cartoons courtesy of Weird Magazine

DISCIPLINE BARS & PASS CREST

Have your bars and crest sewn on your Queen's jacket at Quick Sew

Same day service

DISCIPLINE BARS: $3/ea
PASS CREST: $4/ea

10% Off with this ad

Quick Sew
329 1/2 Barrie Street
(behind Phase 2) 546-9811

The Toucan

www.thetoucan.com

SPECIALS

1/2 price WINGS* sun-tues	1/2 price NACHOS* wed	$2.49 sunday BREAKY
------------------------------	--------------------------	----------------------------

*with beverage purchase after 2pm

live music
Saturday Sept 12

Cadillac Bill

Kirkpatrick's

76 Princess st. 544-1966

Queen's Alumni Association

SPECIAL PROJECT FUNDING

The Alumni Association has set aside a small fund to help groups from Queen's introduce innovative programs. Awards from the fund normally range in the low hundreds of dollars. Application forms can be picked up at the Department of Alumni Affairs in the west wing of Summerhill. Applications are reviewed twice each year. To be considered for the next review, applications must be completed and returned to the Department of Alumni Affairs by Wednesday, September 30, 1998.

Procter & Gamble Inc

Sir Edmund Hillary was the first person to reach the peak of Mount Everest. Who was the second?

Speaking of firsts, did you know Procter & Gamble Inc. was the first company to introduce toothpaste with fluoride (Crest), and to combine shampoo and conditioner (Pant Plus) into one product? So check us out. There are still some mountains to climb.

Changing Our World Through Dedicated People and Innovative Products

Procter & Gamble will be on campus on the following days:

- September 22, 1998 Full Time/Summer Interns Information Session (University Club) @ 2:30 p.m. and 6:00 p.m.
- October 1, 1998 Interview Workshop (Dunning Hall Room 14) @ 5:30 p.m.

Come and talk to us regarding career opportunities at P&G.

P&G is an active member of the Corporate Social Opportunity Group. Industry representatives concerned with human rights and employment equity.

Mould mellowos

Continued from page 21
acoustic world that we should expect from Mould in the future. "Classified" brings me back to Sugar's Copper Blue album, probably the golden age for Mould. Unfortunately, the rest of album fails to grab me, it's just a repeat offence of his last effort, HubCap album. Mould's lyrics seem forced, as if he is trying to create a metaphor for every subject he sings about. He is definitely sharing his life with his fans, but does anyone really care to know? Essentially, The Last Dog and Pony Show runs on similar ground to former Mould albums Sugar, Copper Blue and Beaster but seems to be just a basic re-hashing of those successes. Overall, I'm looking forward to Mould's future acoustic efforts. Getting away from his past haunts will be his saving grace.

Social Distortion
Live at the Roxy
Time Bomb Recordings

STEFAN MURRAY

Although some might say that punk rock has lost its edge since its musicians began learning to play their instruments,

Social Distortion's Live at the Roxy displays the ferocity of one of punk's longest running bands.

After the debut song the CD does drag slightly through some unpolished tracks capped by a punk cover of "Under My Thumb."

Social Distortion has been rocking since the early days of punk and this live album compiles songs written between 1983 and 1996. The CD opens wonderfully with the track "Story of my Life," which as far as punk goes is one of the more poignant I've heard. The sentiment, of course, is filtered through raw vocals and a pounding Piccolo snare.

After the debut song the CD does drag slightly through some unpolished tracks capped by a punk cover of "Under My Thumb" (a song clearly not intended for a punk rendition).

However, the cool melodic element on "Prison Bound" brings the album up to speed.

"Mommy's Little Monster," written in 1983, has a definite period sound, fusing a Cultish rock guitar into the mix.

Fundamentally, most of the better tracks from the album are borrowed from the band's self-titled 1990 album.

The highlight of the album has to be the cover of Johnny Cash's country classic "Ring of Fire" (a song definitely intended for a punk rendition.) The band injects enormous energy throughout, elevating the sheer soul of the original.

Social Distortion brings many elements and album highlights to this live compilation, insisting that punk ain't going nowhere.

Get Out There!

Movies:

Playing at the Capitol Theatre until Thursday, September 10:

- 546-5395
- Parent Trap 1:10, 4:10, 7:05
- Why Do Fools Fall in Love 9:50
- Armageddon 12:55, 3:50, 6:45, 9:45
- Titanic 1:45, 7:30
- Mulan 1:40
- Snake Eyes 4:00, 7:30, 9:45
- Saving Private Ryan 1:30, 4:45, 8:30
- AirBud 2: Golden Receiver 1:20
- Dead Man On Campus 3:45, 7:00, 9:30
- The Negotiator 1:15, 4:05, 6:55, 9:40

Playing at the Catarax Cineplex until Thursday, September 10:

- 389-7442
- Strike 7:05
- Dance With Me 9:20
- 54 7:25, 9:40
- Ever After 6:45
- Mask of Zorro 9:10
- Blade 7:15, 9:50
- There's Something About Mary 6:55, 9:30

Playing at the Princess Court Cinema until Thursday, September 10:

- 546-3456
- BASEketball 7:00, 9:00
- Starting Friday September 11:
- Wilde 7:00, 9:15

New Video Releases:

Released Tuesday September, 8:

- Wild Things
- Primary Colours

Book Fair:

On Wednesday, September 16 from 5-9 p.m. and Thursday, 17 and Friday, 18 from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. and on Saturday, 19 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Sunday the 20 from noon to 4 p.m., the Symphony Book Fair will open its' doors for the opportunity to purchase 15,000 books and pieces of sheet music. Admission is free.

Theatre:

On Saturday, September 12, Grand Theatre presents Stardust, a compilation of Broadway songs. Show time is 8 p.m., in the Regina Rosen Auditorium at the Grand Theatre. Tickets are $18, $15 for seniors and students and $12 for children under the age of 13.

Visual Art:

The Edward Day Gallery
547-0774
On September 10: Novel Idea Book Launch, hosted by Mary Cameron.
From August 31 to September 20: Exhibits by Simon Andrew.
From September 21 to October 18: Exhibits by Catherine Dolcini.
From October 19 to November 15: Exhibits by Bill Irish.

Rhodes Scholarship Applications Due

11 Rhodes Scholarships, worth approximately $20,000 each, are available to Canadian students who are between the ages of 18 and 24, and preferably in their final year of undergraduate studies. Winners are to continue their studies at Oxford University, England.

While proven intellectual and academic attainment of high standard is the first quality required of applicants, students must also show integrity of character, interest in and respect for their fellow beings, the ability to lead and the energy to use their talents to the full.

Applications are available at the Student Awards Office at 110 Alfred Street. Completed application forms and supplementary documents must be submitted to the Associate University Registrar (Student Awards) by October 15, 1998.

Welcome to Kingston!

- ✓ Student Class Fares
- ✓ Budget Fares
- ✓ Custom Long Haul Fares
- ✓ Rail Passes Worldwide
- ✓ Hostel Cards
- ✓ ISIC Cards
- ✓ SWAP

- ✓ Sun Groups
- ✓ Ski Groups
- ✓ City Escapes
- ✓ Travel Books
- ✓ Travel Insurance
- ..... and more!

A World of Student Travel

Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

ODYSSEY TRAVEL

186 Princess St., Kingston, Ont. K7L 1B1

Leisure Travel
549-3553

Long Haul/Group Travel
549-3561

E-mail: odyssey@odyssey-travel.com

ATTENTION! WEEK END WARRIORS!

PRO-ACTIVE
INJURY REHABILITATION CENTRE

ADVANCED SPORTS PHYSIOTHERAPY
TO RESOLVE YOUR ACHES AND PAINS
"JUST DO IT"

7 AM TO 7 PM 549 4393

800 PRINCESS ST. SUITE 400

SERVICES COVERED BY STUDENT HEALTH PLANS PRIVATE HEALTH INS.

Teach English Overseas

ESL/EFL TEACHER TRAINING
CERTIFICATION COURSE

- * Teaching Materials
- * Job Resources
- * Language, Grammar, Pronunciation Skills
- * Teaching Practicum included

Mondays & Wednesdays 6:00 - 9:00 p.m.
September 23 - November 4, 1998
Practicum Saturday October 24 & 31
10:30 a.m. - 3:00 p.m.

REGISTER BY SEPT. 14 & RECEIVE 5% DISCOUNT

$349.00
Queen's Campus Location
REGISTRATION: Phone 384-6194

The lowest daytime rate in Canada.

As low as 4¢ a minute
Any Time!

Friends Call FREE!

- Friends and Family can call you FREE!
- Pay just one low monthly Flat Rate.
- Call anywhere in Canada and the U.S.
- Call any time, any day of the week.
- Great International rates.
- Flexible payment options for students.

LONDON TELECOM NETWORK

Call today!
1-888-216-6609
www.ltn.com

18398 4023. London Telecommunications may apply. Unavailable in regions not served by BNL, BCTEL, TELUS Communications Inc., MTS NetComm, NBTel, NEWTEL Communications Inc., and 1800.com Inc. or MTS. London Telecom Network Inc. is a subsidiary of The London Telecom Group Inc.

Classifieds

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WONDERING ABOUT RELATIONSHIPS, career etc? Seeking direction? Experience greater self-awareness with Tarot, palmistry, runes, and more. Clients say my readings are inspirational and very accurate. I also offer classes in meditation, Tarot, etc. For more information phone Kellye at 544-1909. Also available Fridays and Saturdays at "Harmony", 93 Princess St. Walk in or pre-book at 544-7897. Tape included.

PROFESSIONAL TUTORING and Editing. Are you achieving the grades you deserve? Improve your essay skills, editing, research and writing. E.S.L. a specialty. Phone 416 280-6113, fax 416 960-0240.

PRIMA COMPUTER BOOKS: The most important peripherals you'll ever own. Ask in the Campus Bookstore. Fast and easy; In A Weekend; Admin Guides and more...

PARENT FINDERS KINGSTON is holding it's monthly meeting on September 10th at 7:00 p.m. at the Ongwanada Resource Centre, 191 Portsmouth Avenue, Kingston. The meetings focus on searching for Birth-Parents, Birth-Children, and members of the Birth-Family, preparing for reunions, and support for the time after reunion. Adoptees, Birth-Parents, and Adoptive Parents are welcome. Parent Finders Kingston is a non-profit organization offering support for all members of the Adoption Circle. For further information, please contact Cathy Smith at 542-0892.

THE QUEEN'S INTER-FAITH CELEBRATION, sponsored by the Queen's Inter-Faith Council, will be held on Friday September 11, 1998 at 10:00 a.m. in the Sesquicentennial Court located between the John Deutsch University Centre and the Physical and Health Education Centre.

Everyone is welcome. For more information on the Celebration or on the Inter-Faith Council, please call the University Chaplain's Office at 545-2186.

GRADLINK is a service linking graduate students for mutual support. Call Student Counselling service for more information at 545-2893.

MARVELOUS MENU STUDENT MEAL PLAN Home cooked nutritious meals delivered to you for under $5.00 per meal. Meals made to your specifications, ready for the microwave or oven. Student specials are available. For more information call Kathy Monday to Friday at 531-4265.

FOR SALE/FOR RENT PIANO FOR SALE: An up-right piano for sale. No reasonable offer refused. Please call Gabriele King at 545-6711 for details.

LOOKING FOR A FUTON FRAME? Queen size frame bought from Shamand Decorating Centre - no mattress. Excellent condition - like new. Asking $100.00 negotiable. Must pick up. Please call 634-7657 evenings.

FOR RENT: 4 bedrooms left in large house, freshly painted, clean; kitchen with dishwasher, separate dining room. 2 large fridges - washer, dryer; fireplace, large yard. 3 full bathrooms. Serious students only - $300. Call 389-0145.

FOR RENT: Off street parking. 2 blocks from Phys Ed Centre. $35 per month. Call 544-0894.

HELP WANTED HEBREW Language teachers wanted to teach Sunday School to the children of Congregation IyrHa Melech. Contact Karen Grossman at 549-3110.

HELEN TUFTS TUTORIAL/FRIENDSHIP PROGRAM orientation at Sydenham United Church, second floor, corner of William and Sydenham Streets. Monday, September 14th or Thursday, September 17th at 6:30 p.m. We need volunteer tutors to help children develop their Academic and social skills. Call 547-2683.

WOULD YOU LIKE to work with children in the Kingston Community? Please come to an orientation session at Sydenham United Church, Sydenham and William Streets on Monday, September 14th or Thursday, September 17th at 6:30 p.m. or call 547-2683.

VOLUNTEER to help an immigrant or refugee adjust to life in Canada while expanding your own horizons. All it takes is a couple hours a week! Call Helene at Kingston and District Immigrant Services at 548-3302.

PART-TIME NANNY NEEDED Nanny to look after a 9,8, and 2 year old. Must be able to travel to the United States. Must be able to swim. Working primarily on some week nights and Saturday and Sundays. Require references and job experiences. Send resume to Gregg Rosen at P.O. Box 300 Kingston, ON K7L 4W1 or call 544-1822 Monday-Friday, 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

LOST AND FOUND

FOUND: At the Campus Bookstore an envelope containing wedding photos. Thompson from Walmart. Can be picked up at the Customer Service desk.

PERSONALS

HAPPY CAMPER: I like you.

THE JOURNAL CROSSWORD

Canadian Criss Cross by Walter D. Feener

- |  |                               |                          |
|--|-------------------------------|--------------------------|
| ACROSS                              | 45. Classifieds               | 23. Legume               |
| 1. Cushion                                 |                               | 24. Dance in triple time |
| 4. Lions and tigers                        | DOWN                   | 25. Foremost             |
| 8. Byron poem                              | 1. Almost worthless           | 26. Make unkempt         |
| 9. Wood pigeon                             | 2. Curved shape               | 27. Old Testament book   |
| 11. Punish with a fine                     | 3. Palm fruit                 | 28. Welcomes with cheers |
| 12. Hamlet's beloved                       | 4. 16 tablespoons             | 29. Extinct bird         |
| 14. Divine songs                           | 5. Hardwood                   | 30. Small amount         |
| 16. Annoy                                  | 6. Definite article           | 35. Cronus' wife         |
| 17. Roofing material                       | 7. Tray                       | 36. Canasta play         |
| 18. Electric unit wacky next-door neighbor | 8. Of the moon                | 38. Trim trees           |
| 20. Nothing more than                      | 9. Jerry Seinfeld's character | 39. Female sheep         |
| 21. Endeavor                               | 22. Tit for                   | 40. Golf ball holder     |
| 22. Cavalry horses                         |                               |                          |
| 24. Lacking skill                          | 10. Layers                    |                          |
| 25. Standards of judgment                  | 11. Actor Dillon              |                          |
| 27. Academic degree                        | 13. Wood splitter             |                          |
| 30. Gengster                               | 15. Mime Merceau              |                          |
| 31. Resinous substance                     | 19. Part of RCMP              |                          |
| 32. Miguel                                 | 20. "Little Women" character  |                          |
| 33. Point a weapon                         |                               |                          |
| 34. Legendary sea-creature                 |                               |                          |
| 37. Use up gradually                       |                               |                          |
| 41. Telephone greeting                     |                               |                          |
| 42. "Bambi" character                      |                               |                          |
| 43. Shade trees                            |                               |                          |
| 44. Fencing sword                          |                               |                          |

Solutions to appear in Tuesday's issue of The Journal.

ELECTROLYSIS
Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely. Experienced electrolysisists. Recommended by Physicians.

HARRISON SALON
Kingston Since 1959
Free Consultation
Call 542-5595

DOFASCO
Our product is steel. Our strength is people.

Career Opportunities

Dofasco is one of North America's most productive and profitable steel-makers. Using the latest Basic Oxygen and Electric Arc Steelmaking Processes, we produce a full range of flat rolled steels for our customers in the Automotive, Energy, Pipe and Tube, Appliance, Container, and Steel Distribution Industries.

We are a company that provides our customers with steel solutions to meet their changing needs. As such, we're committed to exciting strategies for long-term economic growth, including investment in new technologies and the recruitment of exceptional graduates and undergraduates who can share our vision for the future.

We will have representatives from our company at your Career Fair to discuss your future with us.

For more information about Dofasco, visit our website: www.dofasco.ca.

Dofasco is an equal opportunity employer.

STAR
STUDENT TEAM ON ALUMNI RELATIONS
Queen's University, Canada

Queen's Survival Kits wish to thank:

Welcome Back To The Hood

Roots KINGSTON

The Roots Kangaroo Hoodie

229 Princess Street - 546-7668 - Open Sundays

COME CHECK US OUT

Our burgers are 6 oz's with no fillers, preservatives or MSG added. Topped with lettuce, tomato and served on a Kaiser bun with fries or onion rings.

Our chicken breast is 5oz. & marinated in lemon juice, served on a fresh bun, topped with lettuce, tomato and served with fries or onion rings.

The Gourmet Burger & Grilled Chicken Specialists

A Variety of 20 "Mouth Watering" Burgers and 20 "To Die For" Grilled Chicken Sandwiches

GREAT PRICES BURGERS from $4.75-$6.50

GREAT PRICES CHICKENS from $5.50-$6.50

Also checkout ... JJ's
Garlic Bread (5 kinds)
Homemade Chili
Nacho Dinners (5 kinds)
Chicken Strip Dinner
Chicken Caesar
Cheesy Chili Fries

Don't forget our Desserts
Cheesecakes (5 kinds)
Sundaes (5 kinds)
and our Old Fashioned Milkshakes

JJ's 409 Johnson Street at University Avenue
Kingston, Ontario Canada K7L 1Z1
(613) 547-3771

THEY'RE LYING TO YOU, FROSH

ALL FROSH ARE the same. Exactly the same. From the time you get accepted into Queen's, right until the point that you finally move into Vic Hall, you want to know what your next four years might be like. So you talk to your friends, relatives, cousins, lovers (cousins/lovers for those from Alberta), and anyone else who could possibly give you a shred of information about this lovely school next to a federal penitentiary. If you asked older people about Queen's I'm sure they'd tell you about some bar that no longer exists, a drunk who used to live under the football stands or something like that.

But for some reason, the most common thing that people always tell incoming frosh is how wild and crazy the engineers are. Before you were anywhere near Kingston you probably heard of the purple people, and their pole, and how much they party. Let me tell you: they're all lies and you're all a bunch of suckers for believing it.

I don't know how the biggest group of geeks ever to walk the planet got the reputation of being rowdy partiers. When you drove past your first group of froes on Monday, I'm sure the student consables told you to keep your distance from them. This is a safety measure I don't understand. When you arrived at high school, did security tell you to stay away from the guys in the computer lab or the zany chess club? Because they're the exact same people — only older.

"But wait a minute," you say, "engineers can't be dorks. After all, the engineer's frosh week is supposed to be hell, and remember they have to climb that pole. And at the bottom of that pole is a pit full of the most horrible substances you could ever imagine." Wrong. This is an engineering-fueled lie invented only for propaganda purposes. Maybe in the 50s when frosh were drunk and feared at their taming ceremony, the pit might have been sincerely disgusting, but in these days of SOARB, political correctness and two nations but only one station, the pit is filled with no more than water and dirt. That's right frosh, your big "torture" is to go into a dirty swimming pool. Now, I know for Commerce students, entering a dirty pool would be worse than the butler forgetting the strawberries to go with the Dom Perrignon, but you engineers are supposed to be wild and a bit of dirt and water ain't nothing on which to base your wild frosh week reputation.

Now the reason I find engineers most annoying during frosh week is because it's the only time during the year when they aren't swamped with homework, and so it's the only time they can be outside to bother anyone.

But of their own dirty glasses they brought from home, because Clark doesn't believe in doing their own dishes, they rush back to their purple-stained home to do a few more hours of homework before dinner. This is an engineer's version of wild partying. In my eyes, the only people who need to get drunk on a Friday afternoon are those who are too lame to get drunk on Thursday night. Even so, an engineer going to a bar at any time is a miracle, even if it's only for a half hour. Now, I can see all the frosh saying, "Wait a minute George, you're implying that engineers can't drink. I heard they could 'demolish 40 beers', that's what they're song says." Their song lies. Maybe the entire faculty combined could demolish 40 beers — if you gave them a month to do so — but your standard engineer can't even spell beer (or most other words for that matter). And that brings me to my next point: their literary skills. Of course whenever you've hog-tied an engineer and are kicking him down on the street and telling him how much he sucks, and that his seat in the library is getting cold, all he'll say is how great Golden Words is, and how much everyone loves the "Queen's Engineering Newspaper." Does anyone else find it funny that GW has hardly any engineers on it's staff? It's traditionally run by a bunch of film students. That's right: film students. You know those guys dressed in black running around with cameras and talking about the aesthetic value of existentialism? That's who really runs GW and has done so ever since I've been here. Engineers have about as much right to claim GW as theirs as I can take credit for building that stupid solar car.

I hope this article has enlightened you frosh on how the purple people lie about their partying skills, their drinking skills and their journalistic integrity. Everything you've heard about engineers being crazy is false. Don't worry, they'll be back at the library soon and we'll have our school back, but until then we have to put up with them for a few days. And if an engineer does piss you off before Monday, here's a little hint: throw vinegar in their eyes. Cause if there's one thing an engineer really hates, it's vinegar in the eyes.

By George Reinblatt

An '89 engineer named Lenny, having reached the halfway point in his mug, begins to feel significantly more crazy.

NEED MONEY TO LEARN?

Ask us about TD STUDENT CENTRAL

For more information, contact any TD Branch or call 1-800-9TD-BANK

* Trademark of TD Bank

APPLY & WIN!

MOUNTAIN BIKES CD MUSIC SYSTEMS COMPACT REFRIGERATORS

Visit www.tdbank.ca/studentcontest for complete details.

Contest closes October 30, 1998.

We're here to help make it easier.

THE JOURNAL

since 1873

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1998

Frosh shine shoes, fight crime

BY SHAWN BRIMLEY

Fundraising for cystic fibrosis turned into crime-stopping for Arts and Science Orientation Group 96 last Thursday, during the faculty's Orientation Week Shinerama campaign.

The first-year students and their orientation leaders, more commonly known as Gaels, were in front of Bukamaranga's at Princess and Sydenham Streets on September 10, shining shoes as part of their Shinerama efforts, when Sandi Pennock, a sociology student graduating from Queen's University in October, was mugged outside of The Gap on Princess Street.

Wilson said he would have caught the mugger had he not run into a parking meter.

"She was coming out of The Gap with her [wallet] still in her hand when a guy came up from behind her, grabbed her [wallet] and ran across the street," said

Please see Wallet on page 4

OSAP user fees 'unconscionable'

BY SHAWN BRIMLEY

Alma Mater Society President Tom Stanley reacted to last week's news that the provincial government is now charging students user fees for Ontario Student Assistance Program (OSAP) information and applications by calling for the resignation of Ontario Minister of Education and Training Dave Johnson.

Liberal Critic for Education and Training Lyn McLeod has determined that revenue received from the fees has amounted to approximately $1 million.

The government has received the revenue by charging students when they ask for OSAP information or apply for a student loan. There is a $2 charge on the 1-900 number for students applying for, or inquiring about, their student loan, in addition to a $10 user fee for students submitting paper applications to OSAP.

The revenue generated from these charges has been $400,000 and

AMS may rejoin lobby group

BY ERIK MISSIO

The Alma Mater Society may again be persuading students to vote 'yes' in a bid to re-join a provincial lobbying organization, most likely the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance (OUSA).

OUSA has had a rocky relationship with Queen's University since it formed in 1992. A founding member, Queen's severed all relations with the organization in 1995 after OUSA failed to reveal financial policies and allocation of funds.

The partnership came to an abrupt end in the spring of 1995 after a disqualified referendum resulted in an AMS general meeting decision, explained Academic Affairs Commissioner Milan Konopek. The referendum was declared void after a number of campaigning violations for and against OUSA.

While the AMS hopes to avoid a similar situation this time, AMS President Tom Stanley said he understands why sides are drawn and some students become passionate about the situation. "Let's face it — post-secondary education is being assaulted. With issues like this being so close to home, everyone wants their interests defended in the best way possible," he said.

"[The split was] never an issue of philosophy or policy issues. It came down to financial practices," asserted Konopek.

"Post-secondary education is being assaulted... everyone wants their interests defended."

—Tom Stanley, AMS president

With these concerns largely cleared up, Stanley said he believes the AMS' search for a

First-year engineering students strain to conquer the grease pole Saturday, finally succeeding in a little less than two hours.

PHOTO BY TOM PURVES

$423,130 respectively.

"It is absolutely unconscionable for a government to charge students most in need when they are applying for financial assistance," Stanley wrote in a press release.

"And they're not even reinvesting the funds in students. That money is going straight into general government revenue. It's a joke."

In a letter addressed to the premier on September 8, Stanley wrote, "Your government has created a new tax on those students most in need. Adding insult to injury, this money is not even being reinvested in student loan programs... you have placed post-secondary education on its proverbial deathbed."

"This government promised in 1995 to bring in a new student loan program. The only thing we have seen so far are cuts to funding and added fees," Stanley

Please see Touch on page 8

index

Volume 5 Issue 126 www.journal.queensu.ca

News	1	In Focus	19
Editorials	10	A&E	23
Opinions	11	Classifieds	32
Features	13	Crossword	33
Sports & Fitness	15	MISC	34

WEATHERWATCH

Today Scattered storms High 25°C, Low 12°C, POP 40%	Thursday Sunny with clouds High 20°C, Low 9°C, POP 10%
Wednesday Sunny with clouds High 21°C, Low 10°C, POP 10%	Friday Sunny with clouds High 21°C, Low 9°C, POP 20%

Please see In line on page 7

www.journal.queensu.ca

NEED MONEY TO LEARN?

Ask us about TD STUDENT CENTRAL*

For more information, contact any TD Branch or call 1-800-9TD-BANK

APPLY & WIN!

Visit www.tdbank.ca/studentcontest for complete details.

Contest closes October 30, 1998.

We're here to help make it easier.*

* Trade-mark of TD Bank

New JDUC visitor info centre open

BY JESSE CRAIG BELLINGER AND FIONA STEVENSON

Queen's Information and Visitor Centre (QIVC), an amalgamation of previous on-campus services, has opened its doors with a mandate to provide superior hospitality services to visitors and easier events management co-ordination.

"I'm tremendously excited about this initiative," said John Sinnott, director of the John Deutch University Centre. "It offers enhanced services for everyone at no additional annual operating costs."

The project, a collaboration between the JDUC, the Performing Arts Office and Physical Plant Services, received approval last year, although Sinnott said, "It's been a dream of the JDUC's for many years."

Located near the Union Street entrance of the JDUC in the space formerly occupied by the Performing Arts Box Office, QIVC "offers a central point of reception for students, faculty and staff, but most important for visitors to the university," said Sinnott.

The centre provides information regarding on-campus events such as semi-formals, guest speakers, fundraisers and awareness campaigns. It also provides access to the JDUC Program Development Fund, designed to provide financial support to community-building groups holding events in the JDUC. All on-campus room reservations can also be made from the QIVC.

"We've had nothing but positive feedback from returning students," Sinnott said. "Most would agree it's long overdue."

Although the centre officially opened on September 1, there will be a grand opening celebration at the end of September.

The QIVC is open weekdays from 8:30 a.m. to 11:00 p.m. and weekends between 9:00 a.m. and 5:00 p.m.

CORRECTION

In the September 10 issue of The Journal the front-page photograph was wrongly attributed. The photograph was taken by James Terjanian. The Journal regrets the error.

Orientation Week safest in years

BY STEPHANIE CARVIN

This year's Orientation Week was one of the safest in Queen's University history.

Orientation Week '98 set an unprecedented record of having no arrests or charges laid this year, said Constable Mike Shultz from the Kingston Police. "We were absolutely pleased," he said.

Susan Wagar of Queen's Security was quick to praise this year's orientation. "It has been an excellent frosh week, very successful," she said.

It has been an excellent frosh week, very successful."

— Susan Wagar, Queen's Security

According to Wagar, most of the problems encountered were "minor noise complaints," and people were quick to comply with security officials once they arrived on scene.

Scott McCann, manager of Queen's Student Constables, said last week's events ran "very smoothly."

McCann emphasized that one of the key reasons for this was good co-operation. "We stressed to orientation leaders and the orientation committees how student constables and science constables need co-operation," he said. "We stressed that we are not trying to ruin their fun."

Queen's First Aid was also on hand for most Orientation Week events to handle potential medical emergencies. For some of Orientation Week's more dangerous events, such as the engineering grease pole, an ambulance was also on hand.

As to the overall safety of Orientation Week, QFA director Jeff Coull said things were "reasonably safe and nothing unexpected occurred." Common medical problems were bee stings, allergic reactions, sprains and intoxication. "People were reacting badly [to alcohol] and losing consciousness," he said.

One of the more serious injuries was a broken collar bone at the grease pole. Overall, however, Coull said the frequency and types of injuries were about the same or less significant than those during the past few Orientation Weeks.

Coull described the week as busy for the QFA. The agency usually operates with a staff of 40 but last week the agency was staffed by only 30 individuals.

"As a unit we worked harder on a per capita basis."

— Jeff Coull, Queen's First Aid director

"We have been scrambling for all of the events for all faculties," said Coull. "As a unit we worked harder on a per capita basis. There were more events than ever before."

Coull pointed out that some members that volunteered for more than 50 hours of work last week.

Changes were made to several events this year to ensure the safety of the individuals involved.

Pseudo FRECS, unofficial engineering orientation leaders, were prevented from joining the shout out between Commerce and Applied Science orientation groups at Leonard Field. The area was also fenced off to prevent intruders and to avert attempts to throw objects on to the field from Gordon-Brockington or Morris Halls, as has occurred in past years.

At the grease pole event on Saturday, several changes were made to improve safety. The Ontario Provincial Police became involved in the event, operating a RIDE program to ensure there was no impaired driving in the area, and to prevent the traditional pole chase from taking place. The OPP became concerned when the truck carrying the pole struck a jeep two years ago.

This year the chase was deemed too dangerous to continue, although according to Chief FREC Radhika Kakkar, upper-year students will still be given a chance to get the pole within the next two months. "There is going to be another way for the upper-year students to get the pole that will involve more stealth than just speed," she said, although she would not provide specific details.

Commerce orientation leaders show frosh who the real "bosses" are.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

You have new mail. Joint AMS and MPP postcard campaign brings tuition debate to mailboxes

BY SHAWN BRIMLEY

Yesterday, Tom Stanley, Alma Mater Society President, and John Gerretsen, M.P.P. for Kingston and the Islands, launched a postcard campaign to determine the effects of rising tuition costs on students.

"The Mike Harris government just doesn't understand the amount of debt that these students are carrying. We're going to show him proof," said Gerretsen.

"The bottom line is that the tremendous fee increases are totally unacceptable in today's job market."

— John Gerretsen, MPP for Kingston and the Islands needs to be addressed. Now we're going to gather the proof that students are carrying an immense amount of debt when they graduate."

The postcards pose questions to students regarding the debts they have accumulated, the cost of their tuition and the debt they expect to have upon graduation.

They will be delivered by the AMS to Premier Mike Harris and Education and Training Minister Dave Johnson when the House resumes sitting, later this month.

"What we are doing is producing a tool that future AMS executives can use to formulate policy," explained AMS Academic Affairs Commissioner Milan Konopek.

"Most of the evidence to date on student debt levels has been gathered from external sources; this sort of survey has never been done at Queen's."

"The sad thing is that this shouldn't be news," Stanley commented. "The Harris government just doesn't seem to believe that student debt is a problem."

In an interview with The Journal, Gerretsen said, "The bottom line is that the tremendous fee increases are totally unacceptable in today's job market. There should be more money made available for students."

"The Harris government just doesn't seem to believe that student debt is a problem."

— Tom Stanley, AMS President

Stanley said he believes the postcard campaign will have a strong visual effect, being delivered en masse to the provincial government.

"We are going to assault them with numbers. By placing the postcards on the politicians' laps... we can't be ignored," said Stanley.

AMS health plan revamped

BY FIONA STEVENSON

The health insurance plan offered to students by the Alma Mater Society has been dramatically changed from last year, offering students significantly improved drug coverage with only a $4 fee increase.

"I think it's a well-priced improvement," said AMS Vice-President (Operations) Gord Moodie.

The biggest change to this year's health plan is structural. Last year's managed care plan has become an open formulary plan, meaning that "everything that requires a prescription by law is covered by the health plan," Moodie explained. The plan offers 80 per cent coverage, to a $1,000 limit. The only exception is acupuncture which is covered by 50 per cent.

"Everything that requires a prescription by law is covered by the health plan."

— Gord Moodie, AMS vice-president (operations)

Also under the new plan, coverage of anti-depressants has been increased from 50 to 80 per cent, in response to concerns of students and local health service professionals. Certain procedures which are no longer covered under OHIP have been included under the new health plan, including the cost of Hepatitis B inoculation.

Under last year's managed care plan, only a limited list of specific drugs were covered, leaving many students to pay for prescription drugs themselves.

According to Moodie, approximately 2,000 students made at least one claim last year and 500 students made one claim that was rejected. "That means that at least a quarter of the students using the plan last year had a bad experience, which was the impetus for change," he said. "Hopefully it will be an improvement that's appreciated by them."

About four years ago, the AMS offered an open formulary health plan, which was closed because the society was losing too much money on it. Although this closure reduced the cost of the plan by 25 per cent, by bringing the plan back this year, the cost to students is rising only four per cent, from $83 last year to $87.50 this year.

The AMS Health Plan continues to offer its traditional world-wide 12-month travel insurance, death and dismemberment compensation, and limited vision and paramedical coverage.

The AMS executive is also looking into offering dental coverage to students, possibly next year. Moodie said he has been approached informally by students who find it difficult to pay for fillings and cleanings.

Moodie plans to survey students to determine if interest is high. If so, "I'd be happy to see it on the spring referendum," he said.

Get a job!

The Alma Mater Society of Queen's University fills dozens of positions every autumn. If you were unable to apply in the winter term last year (e.g., you were on exchange, or you are now frosh, etc.), then you are eligible.

Applications are available at the AMS in the lower JDUC, and are due back at the AMS Front Desk by 16:00 on Friday, September 25

Positions available include: two customer service staff at the UBS Exchange, more than a dozen walkers at the Walkhome Service, a handful of customer service positions at the Publishing & Copy Centre, computer systems and advertising design jobs at the Queen's Journal, and several behind-the-bar and waitstaff positions at Alfie's Pub.

The AMS is committed to employment equity. Positions are open to all AMS members in good academic standing in ASUS, COMM, CON-ED, ED, ENG, MEDS, NURSING, PHYS-ED, REHAB.

Assistant manager

The AMS Publishing & Copy Centre needs an assistant manager to help with daily operations, execute marketing plans, and oversee various project and staff activities.

The Queen's Journal is looking for an Assistant News Editor to work as a member of the News team, helping to produce the section twice weekly and supervising contributors.

Assistant news editor

Many volunteer positions within the AMS are also available.

Orientation Week heroes Shellee Rogers (left) and Jeremy Wilson
PHOTO BY TODD JACKSON

Frosh retrieved wallet

Continued from page 1

"If that frosh group hadn't have been there, I'm convinced that I would not have gotten my wallet back," said Pennock.

Pennock, who had accidentally taken too much money out of a nearby bank machine, said the mugger may have followed her from the bank machine into The Gap and waited until her wallet was within reach before acting.

"It was a classic example of the bystander phenomenon," said Pennock. "There were so many adults and Kingston residents around that did nothing, even after I began screaming."

"I've spent all my life in Kingston and nothing like this has ever happened to me. I'm a really naive person I guess," she said.

Added Pennock: "The group was so helpful, even after I got my wallet back. They stayed with me for an hour until the police came, and even offered to walk me home. They really went out of their way for me. I'd really like to thank them."

When asked about the incident, Wilson and Rogers made the following joint statement: "The incident certainly did not change our views on Kingsrou. We still see the city as a safe place to live, despite a large penitentiary down the street. What the mugger did was stupid, trying to pull that off in daylight, in the middle of Princess, with thousands of frosh on patrol."

After the incident, Wilson was nicknamed "Crime-stopping frosh" and Rogers became known as "Charlie's Angels frosh." The intrepid duo were surprised that, with all the people around at the time of the mugging, only their Gael group responded to Pennock's shouts.

"We hope that our actions re-enforce a positive image of Queen's on the community," they said.

Computer stolen in SGPS office burglary

Incident reminiscent of WW/WN break-in frustrates SGPS exec

By STEPHANIE CARVIN

Almost one year after the break-in at the Who's Where/What's Next office, another Queen's organization has been hit by a similar no-forced entry burglary and computer theft.

According to Campus Security, sometime between 2:30 p.m. on August 29 and noon on August 30, someone broke into the Society of Graduate and Professional Students (SGPS) office and stole a computer and printer worth approximately $3,600.

"It feels similar to the break-in at the Who's Where," said Andrea Cole, SGPS vice-president of finance.

Chris Hales, SGPS president echoed the sentiment, stating that "there are some keys floating around."

The burglary has caused several minor inconveniences for the SGPS. Nick Treanor, editor of the society's newspaper, Antithesis, was forced to go elsewhere to rewrite pieces that were lost in the stolen computer in order to meet deadline.

The SGPS must also pay the $500 insurance deductible for a new computer. In addition, the society's welcome back guide for graduate students has been delayed, as 50 pages of the document were on the stolen computer.

Another problem for the SGPS will be organizing the opt-outs for the health care insurance package with their insurance company, without a proper system to do so.

However, Cole was confident that this would not affect the SGPS's constituents' ability to opt-out of the health plan. "We have time to get a new system up and running before we have to contact Canada Life [the medical insurance company]," she said.

The Kingston police were called to investigate the break-in and the SGPS has been staying in contact with them through Campus Security. However, Cole was not too optimistic about the case being solved or the computer being retrieved.

"I don't think that we will be getting our stuff back," she said.

"There are some keys floating around."

— Chris Hales, SGPS president

Although the loss of the computer is upsetting, Cole said she believes the burglary is only a minor setback, and that the SGPS will carry on as usual. She also said she did not think the break-in would significantly impact the constituents of the SGPS.

"We are in the process of replacing the computer and that's why we carry the insurance policy, but you hope you never need it," she said.

As a cautionary measure, the SGPS has changed its locks. Hales said the locks were last changed when the last key went missing four or five years ago. "Aside from office furniture we never kept anything of much value in the office," Cole said.

Upper-year women pass flame, spark ideas

By RENEE HUANG

At an intimate gathering in Grant Hall on Sunday afternoon, the 109th Annual Candlelighting Ceremony welcomed first-year female students into the Queen's University community.

The event, sponsored by the Alumni Association's Committee on Women's Affairs, introduced women to the resources and support available to them at Queen's.

The traditions of the ceremony continue as upper-year women symbolically pass a flame, and their collective wisdom, to incoming first-year women from the tips of their lit candles.

"... the flames of the candle represent the friendship of the Queen's community."

— Brenda Saunders, ceremony organizer

Approximately 100 first-year women and alumnae attended the ceremony organized by Brenda Saunders, ArtSci '01, who was inspired after attending last year's candlelighting ceremony.

First-year women at the 109th Candlelighting Ceremony carry on a century-old tradition.
PHOTO BY RENEE HUANG

"I was really impressed by the ideas in [last year's ceremony]," said Saunders. "It's really a nice way to welcome female frosh to university and letting them know there are alumnae welcoming them... The focus is that the flames of the candle represent the friendship of the Queen's community."

Art '89 alumnae and keynote speaker Stephanie Black from Global Television's Style File warmly reiterated the inclusive message the ceremony hoped to present to first-year women.

"I don't think I'm the best at what I do, but I believe in hard work," Black told The Journal before addressing the audience.

Saunders stressed the importance of creating a support network for women on campus, and opening their eyes to the broad spectrum of options available to them at Queen's. Black agreed in the closing of her speech. "This is your stomping ground," she told the audience. "Go out and make some noise."

In her introductory welcome, Sheila Murray, chair of the committee on Women's Affairs, said women at Queen's were not always accepted into the community with open arms. "It was a fairly hostile environment and we would like to think that has improved," she said.

The ceremony was established by the all-female Levanna Society a few years after the first woman attended Queen's. It was intended to provide Queen's women with a comforting and encouraging body of support, Murray said.

Today, even though there is "still a long way to go," Saunders said the symbolic nature of the ceremony still plays a vital function. "It's a way of symbolizing how far we've come," she said, as she lit the candles to start the ceremony. "It's important to start here."

"Go out and make some noise."

— Stephanie Black, Global Television

ArtSci '02, wondered why the event did not have greater response from first-year women.

"It was sweet, it was nice," Long said, speculating that perhaps the event drew a smaller crowd because first-year students were still "recuperating" from frenzied Orientation Week activities.

As the speeches drew to a close, upper-year women from different faculties and years approached the podium to share poems, quotes, and short stories, personal gems which have helped them throughout their challenges at Queen's.

After individually addressing the group, each upper-year woman lit her candle tied with tricolour ribbons from one of the candle centrepieces and passed the flame on, row by row, through the silent audience.

Some first-year students at the candlelighting came simply out of curiosity.

"I was mostly interested in seeing what it was about," said Christina Rehbein, ArtSci '02. Her roommate Shannon Long,

京士頓華人宣道會
KINGSTON CHINESE ALLIANCE CHURCH

Sunday	Worship in English	9:30 a.m.
Sunday	Worship in Chinese	11 a.m.
Friday	KCCF campus fellowship	7:30 p.m.

@ McCorry room 230 (English, Mandarin, Cantonese gr.)

230 MacDonnell St. (1 km west of Division St. along Brock)
Pastor: Kong Lu (613) 548-7270 or 548-712

Japan Live, Learn and Teach

The Japan Exchange and Teaching (JET) Programme

is looking for young university graduates for a one year exchange experience in Japan. Participants may work teaching English or assisting in local government. Live and learn in Japan and reap life-long benefits – adventure, friendship and firsthand knowledge of one of the world's most vibrant cultures. For more information contact:

The Embassy of Japan
613-241-7613
or check out our website
www.embjapan.ca.org
E-mail: infocul@embjapan.ca.org

Application due date:
November 13 1998

ATHLETIC INFORMATION NIGHT

Fall Sign-up for ISS, Fitness Classes & Intramural Teams
Meet Interuniversity Coaches

Check-out our Recreational & Tricolour Competitive Clubs
STUDENT EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES!!!

Tuesday, Sept 15th 5 - 7 PM Bartlett & Ross Gyms

What's Happening

The AMS updates you on what's happening on and around campus

We're Walkin'!

Walkhome is open Sunday to Wednesday from 8-2 and Thursday to Saturday from 8-3.

Get Listed!

It's your responsibility to get listed in the Who's Where Student Phonebook by updating your settings on QCard (menu option 12) YOU ONLY HAVE UNTIL NEXT Monday to do this! Check out www.ams.queensu.ca/ams/wwn/optin.html for more details.

Queen's Entertainment Agency Presents...

The Rascalz with Kardinal Offishal at Alfie's Pub Saturday, October 3. Tickets $8 advance, $10 door. On sale at UBS, Alfie's Pub, and the QEA office. The Rascalz are so PHAT you might gain weight! SEE YOU THERE!

Wanna be a World Changer?

Check out Campus Crusade for Christ Friday night on the rock at 7:30pm at Watson 517, right beside Vic Hall.

Info you need to know!

September 8-25 - Opt Outs online via Qcard
September 14-25 - Health Plan Opt-Outs in the AMS office...specific proof of coverage required, no exceptions.
September 30, October 1 - Clubs Night

Are you an Infomaniac?

All those who want to get down and dirty in the Infobank (translation: Do you want to volunteer?) call 545-2732 to get in on the action.

Free Public Lecture

The Queen's Gerontology Project is hosting the first lecture of their 7th Annual Lecture

Series on Aging on September 22, 1998.

Karen Henderson will be speaking to the theme "The Future of Caregiving" with a presentation entitled "Caregiving Today: Expectations, Realities and Options". This free lecture will be held at Queen's Policy Studies Building Rm. 202 from 7pm to 9pm. Details call 548-7222 ext. 2239.

Homecoming Volunteers Needed!

Sept 23-27th is Homecoming! The Campus Activities Commission is looking for people to help organize all the phan-tastic Alumni Weekend Events. Marketing promotion, event planning etc. Call 545-600 ext 4819.

We built it, so you'd better come!

The Queen's Pub...It's expanded!
Mon to Wed: 11:30am-2:30pm, 8pm to close
Thurs and Fri: 11:30am to close
Sat and Sun: 8pm to close

PHONE THE AMS COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION @ 545-2732, OR EMAIL COMM@AMS.QUEENSU.CA

Make The Educated Choice!

Buy Your Texts Used At

exchange
CDs Pubwear Texts Crafts Books & Stuff

And...
Bring in your old texts!
Drop off is always open.

Special Store Hours!!!

Sept 7 - Sept 11 9 am - 5 pm
Sept 14 - Sept 18 8 am - 8 pm
Saturday Sept 19 9 am - 5 pm

exchange
CDs Pubwear Texts Crafts Books & Stuff

Skylight Student Lounge
2nd Floor JDUC
545-2120
ubs@ams.queensu.ca
www.ams.queensu.ca/AMS/LIBS

Campus thefts higher this summer than last

BY FIONA STEVENSON

The number of campus thefts reported to Queen's Security this summer is almost twice the number reported last summer, and security officials are warning students, staff and faculty to take precautions in order to protect their belongings.

Of the 66 incidents of theft reported to security between May and August, compared with the 39 reported during the same period last year, 40 were personal thefts under $5,000.

"People don't secure their stuff. They feel so safe here.... If you leave the door open, anyone can walk through."

— Louise Fish, director of Queen's Security

According to Louise Fish, director of security, laptop computers, wallets, purses and bikes were the most commonly reported stolen items. In most cases the thefts occurred when people left their belongings in an open office or library for less than five minutes.

Security officials said a number of factors may have contributed to the increase in reported thefts this summer over previous summers.

"This is a very open campus," explained Fish. "People don't secure their stuff. They feel so safe here.... If you leave the door open, anyone can walk through."

"I don't think the access is more limited [in the summer] and less people are here," Fish continued. "This makes it easier for [thieves] to walk around undetected... there's less people to walk around, to see them."

Security Manager David Patterson said security's efforts to encourage people to report incidents, combined with assistance phones which have made the process easier, may also have contributed to this year's increase in reported thefts. "I think people are reporting more things to us now," said Patterson. "People are aware of security more than in the past."

During the past few months, security has made a concentrated effort to increase awareness of its presence on campus. In April, security designed a new Web page which is updated by security officials on a regular basis. They have also proposed a plan to Plant

Services to install more security notice boards in about a dozen places on campus, including Stauffer library, Ban Righ Hall and the BioSciences complex.

"It's something that we've always tried to do," said Patterson.

If there's anything we can do to minimize crime, we'd like to try to do that."

— Louise Fish, director of Queen's Security

Fish said the number of thefts has been rising in recent years because students have more possessions each year. "There's more and more thefts because there's more and more stuff to steal," she said. There are a number of steps that students, staff and faculty can take to protect their belongings from theft, Fish said. These include getting insurance, locking doors, reporting suspicious persons to security, marking personal items and never leaving things unattended.

Fish also suggests frequently checking the security Web page at <http://info.queensu.ca/security/>. The page includes safety alerts, incident statistics and security tips.

The Kingston Police recently asked security to join Crime Stoppers. "We would probably be the first university to do that," Fish said, adding, "It's worth pursuing. If there's anything we can do to minimize crime, we'd like to try to do that."

"We're all working towards the same aim, to make it safe and welcoming here," Fish said.

'In line with what students want'

Continued from page 1

remains louder than the voice of only 10,000 Queen's students, he said. Also, under a provincial organization, various universities are able to work together in their lobbying efforts, resulting in a more efficient allocation of resources, he added.

Both Stanley and Konopek remain convinced that joining a lobby group would be beneficial. The fundamental question is: which group suits the university's needs best?

The AMS has invited the executive directors of both groups to the assembly meeting on October 1. From there, the AMS hopes assembly will permit a referendum to allow students to decide whether or not the affiliation is a good move.

When asked which organization would probably get the nod to be the right choice, Konopek conceded that "OUSA is more member driven [than CFS-O] and has a philosophy and policies more in line with what Queen's students want."

Stanley echoed this sentiment, saying that while both organizations have done a lot of good work, "history shows that, at Queen's, OUSA is more congruent with what our students want."

The cost to Queen's students for joining OUSA will be a non-opt outable fee of approximately $1.90. As all ancillary fees must be approved by referendum, the question is expected to be put forth some time in November, with the AMS holding forums and distributing information leaflets.

Stanley stresses the need for Queen's to make sure "it has an effective voice...with a similar ideology to Queen's."

Queerorientation Week '98

Transgendered Speaker -Female to Male
Max Vallero is an interesting and dynamic speaker, that will entertain and enlighten you.

Monday, September 14, 1998
7:00pm Music Listening Room, JDUC

Welcome to Queer Kingston!
A fun and entertaining presentation about queer organizations, histories and more... of Queen's and Kingston. Come pick up a copy of the guide Your Queer Community.

Tuesday, September 15, 1998
7:00pm Music Listening Room, JDUC

To come out or not to come out...
The Coming Out Discussion Group invites everyone to share any experiences or questions related to coming out in different living arrangements.

Wednesday, September 16, 1998
7:30pm Music Listening Room, JDUC

Community Mixer
Various groups across campus and Kingston would like to invite you to have some food and meet with community members in a relaxed and informal setting.

Thursday, September 17, 1998
7:30pm Robert Sutherland Room, JDUC

Social at Kingston's Queer Bar
Social at Club 477. Meet at 9:00 pm at the Grey House (51 Queen's Crescent) to walk down together

Friday, September 18, 1998
9:30pm, Club 477
477 Princess Street at University Ave

Everyone Welcome!
Please Note: The word 'queer' is used to instill pride in that community!
Sponsored by the Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual Issues Committee, Social Issues

♀ ♀ ♂

Child Care Hotline: 545-600 ext.5645

Opening Day - Sept. 21, 1998

Hours: Monday through Thursday, 6 p.m. - 10:30 p.m.
Saturday, 10 a.m. - 4 p.m.
Prices: students; $2/hr for 1 child
$3/hr for 2 or more children
staff, faculty, Kingston community;
$3/hr for 1 child
$4/hr for 2 or more children

Reservations must be made by 12 noon the day the service is required and 12 noon Friday for Saturday service.

Care is provided by certified Early Childhood Educators.

DOFASCO
Our product is steel. Our strength is people.

Career Opportunities

Dofasco is one of North America's most productive and profitable steel-makers. Using the latest Basic Oxygen and Electric Arc Steelmaking Processes, we produce a full range of flat rolled steels for our customers in the Automotive, Energy, Pipe and Tube, Appliance, Container, and Steel Distribution Industries.

We are a company that provides our customers with steel solutions to meet their changing needs. As such, we're committed to exciting strategies for long-term economic growth, including investment in new technologies and the recruitment of exceptional graduates and undergraduates who can share our vision for the future.

We will have representatives from our company at your Career Fair to discuss your future with us.

For more information about Dofasco, visit our website: www.dofasco.ca.

Dofasco is an equal opportunity employer.

Gov't 'out of touch'

Continued from page 1

wrote in a press release. "Mike Harris said in 1996 that 'a fee hike is the same as a tax hike.' He and Minister Johnson have created a new tax on students," he wrote.

Ontario Premier Mike Harris defended the fees and was quoted in the University of Waterloo's publication, Imprint, as saying, "Nobody has complained to me that the most generous student assistance program in North America ought not to charge a modest fee for accessing that system."

AMS Academic Affairs Commissioner Milan Konopek responded to Harris' comments by saying, "When Harris says 'modest fee', it makes it sound like student aid is a commodity."

"Nobody has complained to me that the most generous student assistance program in North America ought not to charge a modest fee for accessing that system."

— Ontario Premier Mike Harris

"This just goes to show how out of touch this government is in terms of student needs," said Aaron Lazarus, AMS academic affairs deputy commissioner for external issues, in a press release. "At a time when students are facing higher debt loads, to place a new tax on those most in need when they are seeking financial assistance...

it's obscene."

In an interview with The Journal, Danjele Gauvin, communications officer for the Ministry of Education and Training, said the revenue from the new OSAP changes is not being redirected to student aid because, "All special charges and every type of revenue goes into the general revenue accounts, to be reallocated by program and program needs by the legislature at a later date."

"When Harris says 'modest fee', it makes it sound like student aid is a commodity."

— Milan Konopek, AMS academic affairs commissioner

"For example, the $300 million required to fulfill our commitment to the Ontario Student Opportunities Trust Fund Initiative will come from general revenue," Gauvin noted.

"In order to process written applications and to hire enough operators to maintain our OSAP hotline, it requires a small charge to keep these services operating at an optimal level," Gauvin explained.

"However, returning students don't need to fill out a new application every year, so many students will not need to pay another service charge. Also, filling out new applications and inquiring on loans via the Internet is entirely free of charge," Gauvin said.

Fast Facts

In Here

Memorial service

A public memorial service for Mark Wilson, an Arts '99 student who was killed in a car accident with his family in July, will be held at Bethel Church at 2 p.m. on Saturday, September 19. Donations of prepared food are welcomed for the reception following the service. There will also be an opportunity to donate to a memorial fund being established in Mark's name.

Take Back the Night

Women Take Back the Night 1998 will be held on Friday, September 25, at Confederation Basin, across from City Hall, with a rally beginning at 6 p.m. and a march beginning at 6:30 p.m.

Volunteer opportunities for women

The Kingston Sexual Assault Crisis Centre is looking for women volunteers for the centre's 24-hour crisis line, fundraising, administrative support, community action, and special events. For more information, call 545-0762.

Buddhist psychology and meditation classes

Buddhist psychology and meditation classes are being offered every Wednesday, beginning this week, with Canadian Buddhist Monk Kelsang Tsechen at the Ban Righ Centre between 7 and 9 p.m. Classes are free, however donations are welcome. For information or registration, call 514-1568.

Rosh Hashana and Yom Kippur Services

Congregation Iyr Ha-Melech (Reform Synagogue) *Sunday, September 20, 7:30 p.m.: Erev Rosh Hashana Service *Monday, September 21, 10 a.m.: Rosh Hashana Morning Service, followed by Tashlich *Tuesday, September 29, 7:30 p.m. *Wednesday, September 30, 10 a.m.: Yom Kippur morning service, 3:30 p.m.; afternoon service. Services will be held in the Wilson Room, Kingston Public Library, 130 Johnson St.

Walk for guide dogs

Go for Guide Dogs, a 5 km walk supporting Canadian Guide Dogs for the Blind, will take place Sunday, October 4. Pledge sheets are available at some pet stores and veterinary clinics or by calling 542-4343. Participants can also walk by paying $10 for an individual or $20 for a family. The walk begins in front of the Cataract Centre's Loblaw's at 10:30 a.m.

Job opportunity with Immigrant Services

Kingston and District

Immigrant Services is seeking a Client Program Coordinator. Applications are due before 5 p.m. on Monday, September 21 and can be faxed to 548-3644 or delivered to 322 Brock St., K7L 1S9.

Celebration of literacy

Tickets are on sale for Many Faces: Many Voices — A Celebration of Literacy, an evening of entertainment at the Grand Theatre on Friday September 18. Doots open at 7 p.m. and the centre-stage program begins at 8 p.m. Tickets are $10, available at the Grand Theatre box office.

Lunch with Hugh Segal

The public is invited to attend a luncheon with Hugh Segal, Kingston's candidate for leader of the Federal Progressive Conservative Party, in Confederation Park on Wednesday, September 16, between noon and 2 p.m.

Shinerama a success

ArSci and Nursing faculties raised $32,000 for cystic fibrosis, with more funds to come in later this month through the annual Shinerama event.

Free movie screening

All students are invited to the Queen's Medical Movie club free screening of Apocalypse Now on Friday, September 18 at 7 p.m. in Richardson amphitheatre in Richardson labs.

Out There

Swissair Voice Recorder Located

The cockpit voice-recorder of Swissair Flight 111 has been recovered by navy divers, offering renewed hope of recreating the final minutes of the doomed jet before it crashed into the Atlantic near Halifax.

What remains unknown is whether the recorder continued to operate during the final minutes of the flight. The flight-data recorder shut down six minutes before the crash.

If it had continued to operate, the cockpit voice-recorder may have provided crucial information needed to determine what caused the crash of the jetliner, which went down September 2, killing all 229 aboard.

40,000 bank jobs at risk if banks merge

Mergers of four of Canada's five big banks would mean the loss of between 20,000 and 40,000 jobs, the closing of at least 1,000 bank branches and increased service costs to consumers, say former Liberal cabinet minister Doug Peters and top economist Arthur Donner.

In a joint report, the two urge Canada's Finance Minister Paul Martin to turn down the planned mergers of the Royal Bank of Canada and the Bank of Montreal, as well as the merger of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce and the Toronto Dominion Bank.

They said the jobs losses and branch closings would be necessary if banks were to achieve goals of increased profitability.

Terrorist Under House Arrest

Osama Bin Laden, the Islamic terrorist leader accused of masterminding the American embassy bombings in east Africa, is reported to have been placed under house arrest in Afghanistan by his former protectors, the ruling Taleban militia. Bin Laden, who has become one of the world's most wanted men since the attacks last month that killed more than 260 people, told the editor of a London-based Arabic newspaper during a satellite telephone call that he had been confined to his base near the southern Afghan city of Kandahar and banned from making statements to the media.

Bin Laden has been lying low ever since the United States fired cruise missiles at his training camps in Afghanistan last month in retaliation for the bombings of its embassies in Kenya and Tanzania, allegedly by Islamic militants under his command.

Communists gain strength

Last week, the Russian Communist Party led the lower house of parliament in an overwhelming vote against Victor Chernomyrdin, the Kremlin's choice for Prime Minister. They forced Russian President Boris Yeltsin to abandon Chernomyrdin and switch his support to Yevgeny Primakov, one of a short list of candidates who were acceptable to the Communists.

Last Saturday, the Communists led the ratification vote for Primakov, whom they see as an ideological ally in their battle to increase state control of the economy. Chernomyrdin warned that the Communists are trying to remove the President by dismantling the existing system. "What I'm talking about," he said, "is a creeping coup."

ESSAY STRESS??

FOR FREE TUTORIALS CALL

THE WRITING CENTRE
140 Stuart @ University
545-6315

Footloose in Canada

Student Class Fares

Vancouver	from $359
Calgary	from $299
Edmonton	from $299
Regina	from $329
Winnipeg	from $229
Halifax	from $239
Saint John	from $339
St. John's	from $279

Free Date Change

Don't know your exam schedule? No need to worry! Book your Student Class flight home and you'll receive a coupon for a FREE date change.

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
186 Princess St., Kingston (at Montreal)
Leisure Travel 549-3553 Long Haul/Group Travel 549-3561
Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

THE KINGSTON ROWING CLUB

QUEEN'S FALL ROWING 1998

NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED

LEARN TO ROW	STARTS SEPT 21 4 WEEKS 2 TIMES PER WEEK COST...$90.00 NOW ON TUES & THURS OR WED & FRI
REG. ROWING	STARTS SEPT 21 4 WEEKS 2 TIMES PER WEEK COST...$90.00 NOW ON TUES & THURS OR WED & FRI
VARSITY DEVELOPMENT	STARTS SEPT 14 7 WEEKS 3 TIMES PER WEEK COST...$190.00 NOW ON MON, WED & FRI OR TUES, THURS & SAT

TO REGISTER: VARSITY DEVELOPMENT ROOM 205 QUEEN'S PHYS. ED CENTRE THURSDAY SEPT 10 OR FRIDAY SEPT 11 @ 6:00 PM
REG & LTR...ATHLETIC & CLUBS INFORMATION NIGHT @ QUEEN'S PHYS. ED CENTRE SEPT 15 5:00 - 7:00 PM
OTHERWISE CONTACT A MANAGER AT 542-4767 E-MAIL ROWRCP@POST.QUEENSI.CA

Multideas Promotions

Screen Print and Embroidery.
In house Graphic Design.
More than 300,000
Promotional Products to choose from!

Wide range of in-stock or customized SPORTSWEAR.
Want to promote your TEAM? Leave it to US!

Make '98 the year to remember.
Make an impression at your conference.

Quality merchandise at very competitive prices.

Come and visit our showroom
We are licensed for the Queen's logo,
530 Barnsley Cres. Kingston, ON
Tel: (613) 634-2437 Fax: (613) 634-2505
www.multideas.com
multi@adan.kingston.net

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

Ghetto people

THE ALMA MATER SOCIETY'S decision to rename the ghetto the Student Village seems incongruent with the residential area's actual state of disrepair. In fact, if off-campus living conditions deteriorate any further, a more apropos name might be the student Shantytown.

The AMS should realize the futility of trying to impose an inaccurate name on the area, no matter how catchy it might be.

If one of Municipal Affairs Commissioner Sarah Corman's reasons for the change is the inaccuracy of the word ghetto, it is hard to understand why she thinks the word village makes sense.

Considering the 'success' of their seven year-old policy of replacing the term ghetto with the more appropriate designation of Student Housing Area, the AMS should realize the futility of trying to impose an inaccurate name on the area, no matter how catchy it might be.

While we applaud Corman's intentions, it seems unlikely that the new name alone will do much to change Kingston residents' or landlords' perception of our living space as little more than temporary makeshift housing. Seeing as an official name change will not transform the ghetto into an idyllic village overnight, Corman must follow through with her plans to improve the quality of housing and the overall safety of the area.

Only after visible changes have been made will the Student Village begin to earn widespread acceptance by the student body. Until then, the name is as unlikely to pass into common usage at Queen's, as The Journal is to be renamed the Village Voice.

Always Coca-Cola?

TODAY'S GENERATION OF students may not have much choice in which cola they drink on campus. If Queen's administration and the Alma Mater Society opt to sign an exclusive cola deal with either Coca-Cola or Pepsi, students' freedom of choice would be seriously hampered.

Although the potential monetary gains could be significant, they must be weighed against the moral implications of such a deal.

While other universities have used funds from similar cola deals to ease financial burdens, they have also in some cases given away exclusive rights for as long as 10 years.

The consequences for students are more serious than the inconvenience of having to walk to Becker's to purchase the cola of their choice. As conscientious consumers, student activists have kept a check on some of the actions of multinational cola behemoths. If we sign exclusive deals with corporations we lose our ability to sanction companies by being prudent consumers.

Furthermore, by giving Coca-Cola a monopoly on campus we would be doing more than keep Pepsi out. An exclusive cola deal would be unfair to

By setting such a precedent we would be opening the door to more corporate monopolies on campus.

the smaller companies who are unable to bid in such a high-stakes competition. By setting such a precedent we would be opening the door to more corporate monopolies on campus.

It's better to find other sources of revenue than face a campus addicted to Coke. Or Pepsi.

Bons Mots: You can scarcely claim to possess freedom of spirit and existential individualism on the grounds that you consume the same soft drink as three billion other people.
— John Ralston Saul

JOHN BOWMAN
Service with a :-)

SCIENCE FICTION WRITERS routinely predict future trends. Spider Robinson, for instance, once predicted that our minds would be so entwined with technology by now that we'd all be telepathic.

But I've never read anything predicting that technology would become as insufferably cute as it has. Take Apple's new iMac. Sure, this blue bubble of a computer looks like something out of George Jetson's sitting room, but if this is the way of the future, I'm going to invest in a good butter churn.

The single-unit design makes upgrading next to impossible. It comes with a 15 inch screen, take it or leave it. Similarly, its CD-ROM drive and modem, while acceptable right now, can't be upgraded as technology evolves.

The iMac's input devices seem to be designed for aesthetics only. It has a mouse with all the ergonomics of a hockey puck, and a keyboard that offers the comfort of a laptop in a desktop model.

Even die-hard Mac fans will find this product frustrating. If someone has a printer or some other hardware for an old Mac, the iMac's lack of serial, parallel, and SCSI ports makes hooking up the old peripherals impossible.

And then the final insult. Out of the box, the iMac has no floppy drive... or zip, or jaz, or SyQuest drive, or any other kind of removable media. Apparently, Apple is convinced that you'll find iMac so lovable you'll never want to take your data to another computer, and so reliable you'll never have to back it up. Yeah, right.

I don't want to come off as some Mac-hating disciple of Bill Gates (probably too late now, I know). I find Windows 98's animated menus and "more entertaining" interface damned annoying and Microsoft Publisher is the epitome of software that is cute to the point of uselessness.

It's not just computers, either. Ever wonder why there are so many Volkswagen Beetles offered as contest prizes or covered with corporate logos? Well, who else but a corporation can afford $25,000 for a slightly rearmored VW Golf with a cute and nostalgic body?

So why is it happening? Why have manufacturers sacrificed practicality for cuteness? Simply put, because we eat it up. Before Apple even released the iMac, they had sold thousands and thousands of the things. And the new Beetle is the biggest sensation in the automotive industry since the steering wheel.

I don't buy that cuteness makes technology less intimidating. Grey boxes are not intimidating. Technology is intimidating when it is confusing, when it doesn't work properly, and when it breaks down.

Cuteness makes technology more marketable. Apple could probably sell a computer that turns itself off on alternate Thursdays if it had racing stripes and tail fins. And Macworld magazine would still give it five stars.

EDITORIAL BOARD
EDITORS-IN-CHIEF Keith Gersin Tara Mansbridge	EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR Paul Heiler	SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR Adam Kaminsky	SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT John Bowman
MANAGING EDITOR Laura MacInnis	ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR Stefan Murray	ASSISTANT SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR Robert MacNeil	SPECIAL PUBLICATIONS EDITORS Elizabeth Frogley Shandley McMurray
NEWS EDITOR Flora Stevenson	ASSISTANT A&E EDITORS Sarah Crosbie Lillian Kim	MISC. EDITOR Ken Butland	PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS Alex Kronby James Terjanian
ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS Shawn Britnley Renée Huang Vacant	FEATURES EDITOR Sean Springer	GRAPHICS EDITOR Janice Chan	WEB EDITOR Marco Lui
	OPINIONS EDITOR Todd Jackson	THE READER EDITOR Jesse Craig Bellinger
CONTRIBUTORS Neil Achary, Stephanie Carvin, Anna Kim, Jocelyn Laporte, Erik Misko, Nathan Sager, Adria Vukisnic, Karyn Walmark, Megan Webster, Chris Wickie, Mark Woodford.
BUSINESS STAFF
BUSINESS MANAGER Claudia Kraft	SALES REPRESENTATIVES Andrew Cooke Kristian Li Kari Brintnell	ADVERTISING MANAGER Vacant	ADVERTISING DESIGNERS Katherine Colbourne Annie Ge
SYSTEMS MANAGER Vacant
THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL Tuesday September 15, 1998 • Issue 5 • Volume 126 The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers. Contents ©1998 by the Queen's Journal. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal . The Queen's Journal is printed on a Goss Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Ganaroque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions. Subscription rates are available for $55.00 per year. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2N8 Telephone—editorial: 613-545-2800 advertising: 613-545-6711 Fax: 613-545-6728 Email: journal@post.queensu.ca Internet: http://www.journal.queensu.ca Circulation: 9,000 Issue 6 will be published on Friday, September 18, 1998.

OPINIONS

University: a complex concern

I WANT TO PROPOSE THAT DISCOURSE about the university in Canada needs to be situated in terms of its social complexity.

The traditional image of the university as a place for detached individual enlightenment, whether it is the solitary scholar licensed with academic freedom or the lone student seeking fulfilment in 'knowledge for its own sake,' has tended to overshadow the fact that the university is enmeshed within a social fabric. The contemporary university is not the isolated ivory tower, but instead largely depends on the interactions of and decisions negotiated by many people.

The university is the receiver of public and private funds, from students, the government, our parents and so on. It is simultaneously woven into larger communities, affected by societal and cultural attitudes and needs. It is subjected to larger policies set by research funding agencies, government bodies, and university associations. As its own community it is made up of a wide diversity of members. It is not divorced from the real world, as the accusation often goes.

Because the university cannot be severed from the matters of everyday life, with its freedoms come social responsibilities. It means policy makers need to understand the university community in a broad context and initiate informed discussions. It means that university administrative bodies and student governments need to ensure that resources are used effectively and responsibly. It also means informing the larger public about what goes on 'in here,' and nurturing a shared idea of the importance of the university.

The contemporary university is not the isolated ivory tower, but instead largely depends on the interactions of and decisions negotiated by many people.

I emphasize the social complexity of the university because I think this fact is being overlooked in current debates. Issues concerning the affairs of the university are vulnerable to ideological explanations, often couched in the narrow language of 'the right-wing agenda' or 'the corporate conspiracy.' In another light, the university is talked about as if it were the soil for moral virtue or cognitive privilege. Either way we lose sight of the fact that matters about the contemporary university are multi-dimensional and solutions will not come overnight.

We can look to the issue of rising tuition fees. It is a political matter because the government regulates tuition to a certain degree. We have also seen that the public increasingly supports tuition increases because the university is seen as a vehicle for economic mobility. It is a social matter because it involves the distribution of resources. It relates to the kinds of education the university offers now and for future generations. For some students, it will mean joining the culture of debt-management. For others, it may mean opting not to go to university. It may also condition what we see as a worthwhile education. In short, the university is socially complex, from within and without.

That this is being overlooked is also apparent when talk about the university is narrowly constrained to fiscal responsibility. Giving priority only to balancing the budget might risk limiting the pursuits of knowledge and in turn providing a narrow idea of 'academic excellence.' Keeping the accounts in order might imply reordering the curriculum by reducing the number of faculty or limiting the range of courses and research available to students and professors. We need to ask if other equally important responsibilities are being overlooked. There are no forces of so-called historical necessity governing the university — ultimately, people make decisions. Given this complexity, decisions about the university need to be made through asking difficult questions and engaging in lengthy and informed discourse.

ANNA KIM
ARTS '98, MA 1

Letters to the Editors

AMS lacks substance

Dear Editors,

I read with much disappointment the AMS's letter to the editor in the September 10th issue of The Journal. It would seem that we are in for another year of a thoroughly incompetent student government more interested in making a good image for itself rather than solving the issues facing Queen's students.

The AMS wrote in to complain about their meeting with education Minister Dave Johnson this summer. They listed cutbacks the government has made, and demonized it for causing increased student debt. According to the AMS Executive, Johnson was devoid of knowledge and gave only "empty answers."

But wait just a second here. While they were certainly able to take a number of shots at Johnson in their letter and make it look like they care so much about students' grim economic prospects, our AMS apsidally also managed to provide absolutely no solutions for any of these problems themselves. Seems like maybe they have a few 'empty answers' of their own. Why write such a letter at all, except to try and score some public relations points by criticizing the Harris government?

I'd like it a whole lot more if the AMS got off its sorry ass and actually proposed something intelligent rather than just spend its time writing image-boosting letters to The Journal. For the record, the provincial government is attempting to phase in the Income Contingent

Generous, but not that generous

Dear Editors,

While I do like to think of myself as a generous person, maybe even to a fault, I hasten to correct the impression left by the statement that "the additional $50,000 [for the Queen's Pnb expansion] was furnished by Jack Sinnott, director of the John Deutsch University Centre" ("New QP ready to roll," September 10, 1998). The contribution to which you refer was duly approved by JDUC Council and comprises student and university funds available through the JDUC's operating and reserves budgets. It provides, moreover, an excellent example of the partnership between the AMS, the SGPS and the University at work in the JDUC in the service of students and the broader Queen's community. Ditto regarding Council's and the partners' commitment to the new Information and Visitor Centre at the front of the building, also completed this summer. Thanks to this kind of dedication to a shared vision of a student-centered community centre, the revitalization of the JDUC will indeed continue.

Yours sincerely,
Jack Sinnott
Director
John Deutsch University Centre
Queen's University

Brock Jones
ArtSci '00

talking HEADS

Why did you choose your program?

JOCELYNE GALL
ARTS '02

SAMIR CHHABRA
ARTSCI '00

"Life Science — because I want to be a doctor like every other stupid med student keener."

ROBYN THOMPSON
ARTS '99

"I chose art history because I want to be a lounge singer and art history is the best preparation that you could ask for — I'm serious about success."

PHOTOS BY TODD JACKSON

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS POLICY

The Editors of The Journal want to hear from readers. All letters must include the writer's name, signature, and telephone number. Any letter that is legible, legal, and literate will be published if space permits. Those that are as brief and direct as possible will have a better chance of publication. Drop off letters to The Journal House, 272 Earl St., fax to 545-6728, or better yet, e-mail them to journal@post.queensu.ca.

The New Rules.

A new company. A new era.

And a whole new set of rules.

Your rules. (So maybe you'd better sit down.)

Because we're reinventing the business world.

And don't you think it's about time?

the
NEW RULES

www.pwcglobal.com
Grab your free CD at the Student Placement Centre on Campus.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 1998 PricewaterhouseCoopers. PricewaterhouseCoopers refers to the individual member firms of the worldwide PricewaterhouseCoopers network of member firms.

DOUBLE LETTER
SCORE

F<sub>4</sub> E<sub>1</sub> A<sub>1</sub> T<sub>1</sub> U<sub>1</sub> R<sub>1</sub> E<sub>1</sub> S<sub>1</sub>

DOUBLE

DOUBLE

DOUBLE

The Big LEAP

100% O.A.C. graduate, Karyn Walmark, looks back and lends a little advice to frosh anxious about a daunting first year at Queen's

BY KARYN WALMARK

SO YOU'VE SURVIVED THE FIRST FEW days of Queen's, and although you may still feel like a fish out of water, you're probably starting to get settled. Hopefully there are a few familiar names and faces by now. As someone else you might recognize from cheerleading with the Bands at your events this week, from the cover of Welcome Back, or from the front page of The Toronto Star a couple of years back, I'd like first to offer you my congratulations on being here. For those that are feeling as apprehensive about first year as I was, hopefully I can provide you with a little helpful advice.

But first, let me warn you of something. If you're looking for a foolproof guide on how to make the most of your frosh year, don't look here (and please don't take any of Golden Words' advice! In first year they gave me a T-shirt that said "I am not your potential friend" — need I say more?). I can't predict what your year will be like. While I can, and will, tell you a little about my time here so far, you're going to have many unique experiences of your own. What's important is to make the most of them.

Most Queen's frosh have a number of things in common (other than their favourite beer being free beer, that is). Aside from a few "townies" who live at home and commute, the majority of first year students are leaving their hometown (some reluctantly, some who start packing halfway through the summer). Especially if you're moving away from home, university provides you with a fresh start. You're entering a community of 15,000 complete strangers, all of whom are potential friends, mentors, housemates, lovers, enemies, or any combination of the above.

When I had my first English essay marked, I was disappointed (okay, hysterical) but also a little scared that maybe I couldn't make the grade anymore.

My experience was very different than most, in that I arrived with a steady-made reputation as "The 100 per cent Girl." Being "that Katyn Walmark" meant there were many expectations and unfounded opinions of me as a person; my floor-mates and classmates were often surprised to find out I wasn't a social recluse or a snob. Fortunately, you're beginning university with a clean slate, and while Reprinted with permission of Welcome Back.

(Psst, if you're planning on using your lecture time as naptime, then you may want to skip this next part — just let me remind you to set a watch alarm for the end of each class so you're not left curled up in fetal position in Dunning Hall after everyone else leaves.)

As for that technical reason you're here, to become educated, let me welcome you to the coolest/best/smartest school in Canada. If you don't believe that yet, then re-read this by homecoming, you'll have sung enough Oil Thighs and seen enough T-shirts saying "Yes, going to Queen's does make me better than you" to be sufficiently brainwashed.

GO-GAELS-GO-QUEEN'S-QUEEN'S-QUEEN'S-YOUR FAVOURITE COLOUR IS TRICOLOUR...

Living in a new environment will force you to learn a lot about yourself — the kind of person you are and want to be.

Joking aside, Queen's does attract top students. Chances are that at least one of your Math 121 seat-neighbours was class valedictorian. Inevitably, even in a class of so-called "smart kids," someone will have the coveted highest mark. The hard part is knowing it isn't you anymore. At first, this was really difficult for me to deal with. Believe it or not, I never competed with or compared my marks to anyone else — earning a perfect average was a goal I set for myself. So when I had my first English essay marked, I was disappointed (okay, hysterical) but also a little scared that maybe I couldn't make the grade anymore. Furthermore, besides the high expectations I had for myself, and those that other people had for me, I had the additional pressure of maintaining a high enough average to keep a scholarship. It was a little overwhelming.

If you're as worried as I was about keeping your marks up, let me save you a lot of stress (and give you one "for sure" out of a lot of "what-ifs") by assuring you that with a few, rare, brilliant exceptions, your marks will go down. If you have a reasonable work ethic — and this does not mean moving into Stauffer and never you're technically here to learn lots of academic stuff, living in a new environment will force you to learn a lot about yourself — the kind of person you are and want to be.

While frosh week seems mainly intended to assimilate you (the coveralls, the cheers, the crowd mentality), it's also to help you adjust to and get to know everyone around you. As you gather a group of friends, you'll also help define yourself by deciding the kind of people you want to be around. You may have brought a few friends with you, or even a significant other. In both cases, you may find that you grow closer, or you may grow apart. You may have also left a high school sweetheart at home, as I did, to try the "long-distance-relationship." And right now you're so blissfully in love and missing him/her/it so terribly that you don't know how you'll make it until Thanksgiving. Again, as you grow into Kingston and Queen's, that might change. Or, you and your sweetheart could realize exactly how much you care about each other. One further option is that you might be entering the rumoured sexual free-for-all of Vic Hall with visions of participating and although I can't, and won't, offer relationship advice for any of your potential situations, you've probably had enough free condoms thrown at you to fully prepare you for the future. (Also, if you hear the term "walk of shame," it's that early-morning walk home in last night's clothes — co-ed residences are much more convenient in this situation since you usually only need to sneak down the hall...)

I'VE GIVEN YOU A LOT OF "IF'S" so far, haven't I? Well, that's what university is all about — figuring things out as you go along. You are expected to be an independent learner here, and not just in the lecture hall. I was three weeks behind in readings before I realized that they didn't really tell you what to read and when; they just expected you to look it up on your own.

Please see Walmark on next page

Walmart relieves first-year fevers

Continued from last page

going out to the bar — they won't drop too much. Mine did drop that rumoured 15 per cent, but, as many people have remarked, I had a little further to fall. But I did manage to keep my scholarship, while having plenty of amazing times with Bandsies, classmates, floormates...

SPEAKING OF QUEEN'S NIGHT life, by the way:

(ATTENTION! PEOPLE WHO TUNED OUT FOR THE ACADEMIC STUFF CAN START READING AGAIN)

except for a memorable weekend in Montreal, my partying didn't really start until I turned 19. Good luck to you undergrads. A fake ID could just slide your way. Since I looked 12 any way, and still do, I had to behave myself. In a way I was lucky because I had time to adjust to the increased workload before I even entered the bar scene, and keeping a balance between partying and school was, and is, really important to me. I won't

Getting involved in Queen's is a great way to meet people in other residences, years, programs, and is probably more foolproof than picking up at AJs.

prescribe a recommended weekly dose of alcohol, but after the first "hey-my-parents-aren't-around-anymore-and-I-can-do-whatever-I-want" celebration of frosh week, that's something you might want to figure out for yourself. You need to decide how important marks are to you, and what kind of time you need to put in to get them. If you're one of those naturally brilliant people, let me borrow a GW expression and say "Kudos to you!"

However, unless you're the kind of person who enjoys torturing small furry animals — please don't flaunt it in front of everyone else.

You might be one of those people who needs to take a step back and realize that marks aren't the end-all and be-all of life. Getting involved in Queen's (sports, clubs, committees, newspapers, THE BANDS!) is a great way to meet people in other residences, years, programs, and is probably more foolproof than picking up at AJs. This may sound hypocritical coming from the 100% girl, but even during high school I had a lot more going on than just racking up perfect marks on my transcript. In my first year at Queen's I tried out for the Bands and never looked back. Now in my third year, in addition to carrying a heavy course load, cheerleading, and working out every day, I'll be holding down three part-time jobs — and I still plan on partying as much as I can! (Hint: hop on the Cocamobile on Saturday night...) I'm probably not doing much for my reputation as an overachiever, but it's amazing what you can accomplish when you put your mind to it.

The author hits the front page of The Toronto Star after scoring perfect in her O.A.C.s; then, two years later, is featured on the front page of the 1998 issue of Welcome Back (see reverse page).

REPRINTED WITH PERMISSION OF THE TORONTO STAR. PHOTO BY PETER POWER.

out of university life, and then to make it happen. I can't guarantee that all your experiences will be good ones, but I can guarantee that the next few years will be exciting, fulfilling, scary at times but absolutely worth it.

See you at Kill McGill...

Karyn Walmark isn't the kind of person who enjoys torturing small furry animals — just the odd frosh or two...

$1 OFF ADMISSION WITH AD

CANADIAN COMPUTER FAIRS

Sun., Sept. 20, 11a.m.-5p.m.
Portsmouth Harbour
Info: 530-4945

COMPUTERS PRINTERS SOFTWARE WEB DESIGN PERIPHERALS

BOOKS TRAINING INTERNET SEMINARS INTERACTIVE

Sponsored by mbanc & Monitor M...

There must be some way to avoid doing the same thing for the next forty years.

You'll be getting your degree from a top school. And you're ready to find a great job. The question is: which job? And can it interest you for your whole career?

At Andersen Consulting, it's our job to help clients change to be more successful. For you, that means opportunity and challenge.

Part of our business is anticipating the future. So come talk to us about yours.

Find out more about a career with Andersen Consulting.

Meet us at Career's Day, September 23, 1998 in Grant Hall. Join us for our Information Session, September 28, 1998 at The University Club, 5:00 p.m.

Visit our web site at www.ac.com
Andersen Consulting is committed to Employment Equity

Andersen Consulting

CAREERS ARE THE BEST THING THAT WE'VE EVER MADE

P&G Full-time & Summer Intern Info Session, Sept 22, 2:30 and 8:00 pm, University Club • Interview Workshop, Oct 1, 5:30 pm, Dinning Rm. 14 • Job Postings, Applications and other info, Queen's Career Services Centre

Procter & Gamble
www.pg.com/careers

journal@post.queensu.ca

SPORTS & FITNESS

IT'S NOT OVER YET
Even after the major celebration for McGwire cracking his 62nd home run, there is no guarantee that he will be the National League long-ball king. Sammy Sosa, his friendly rival from the Chicago Cubs, has had much of the pressure taken off his shoulders, and he has responded with quiet productivity. As of September 13, the Latin American star had become the second player in history to hit 62 homers, tying McGwire's week-old mark. With the Cubs in the pennant race and an epic home run struggle in the making, Wrigley field will be abuzz with excitement. May the best man win.

AUSIE RULES
For the first time since Rosewell and Roobe in 1970, there were two Australians in the final of the U.S. Open. Patrick Rafter won his second consecutive U.S. crown by defeating compatriot Mark Philippoussis in straight sets. In women's play, American Lindsay Davenport, the most underappreciated woman on the tour, defeated top-seeded Swiss teen Martina Hingis. Despite the fact that Davenport has had a spectacular summer on the hard courts and is the second-seeded player in the draw, attention has been lavished on teens. This should end with her first Grand Slam crown.

NHL CAMPS OPENING
The NHL is getting ready to start up a new season and teams are still getting things in order. The Ottawa Senators have signed their head coach Jacques Martin to a new deal and have added former Leaf coach Mike Murphy as an assistant. The Toronto Maple Leafs are still looking to find the right trade for goalie Felix Potvin. With the signing of Curtis Joseph, the Leafs would like to acquire a second-line center. The Philadelphia Flyers, unable to sign centre Eric Lindros to a long-term deal, finally came to terms on a one-year contract. This is a time where out-of-shape veterans, overzealous rookies and greedy superstars are all roused together. It can only get better from here.

IF CHRISTMAS CAME EARLY
• We would not have to take out a small loan to buy beer at a ballpark.
• All six Canadian NHL teams would make the playoffs.
• Vancouver Canucks GM Brian Burke puts his foot down and benches whiny Pavel Bure for the season.

The rugby squad, coming off of a rare non-championship year, prepares for the new campaign. Please see preview on page 17.

PHOTO BY JAMES TERJANIAN

Gaels lose road opener

By ADAM KAMINSKY

The Queen's Golden Gaels made the long trek to Lennoxville last weekend and learned a lesson in Ontario-Quebec Intercollegiate Football: if you don't execute for the entire game, you don't win. The number-three ranked Bishop's Gaitsers (2-0) handed the Gaels (1-1) their first loss of the season, 24-19, and did so by exploiting numerous Queen's mistakes, both mental and physical, in the first half.

Bishop's 24
Queen's 19

The Tricolour got off to a fast start offensively, marching confidently down the field on their first possession, although the drive ended deep inside Gaitsers territory on a fumbled snap. On the ensuing possession, the Gaels moved the ball well against an aggressive defence, but again could not punch it in from the nine yard line. John Taylor was then forced to kick a field goal from 16 yards out,

"There were too many guys coming back to the sideline apologizing for making mistakes."

— Offensive Coordinator Steve Yovetich

putting Queen's ahead 3-0.

It was at this point that the unconventional Bishop's wing-T offence came to life and began to effortlessly move the ball. With this run-oriented formation, the Gaitsers got the ball into the hands of several different backs, and Mark Stipe, the quarterback, conducted the offence with the skill of Leonard Bernstein. The first quarter closed with veteran running back O.J. Burnett plunging in from one yard out, and after James Osborne blocked the convert attempt, Bishop's led 6-3.

The wheels really came off for the Gaels' defence in the second quarter as the Gaitsers ran off 15 unanswered points, with two big plays. A 31-yard touchdown pass from Stipe to Vincent Begin and then a 34-yard scoring run by shifty Ben Ouimet, who finished with 130 yards rushing, put the defenders on their heels.

"We knew what they were going to do," said Osborne, "but we just didn't execute the fundamentals."

While the defence wilted, the offence stagnated. With numerous dropped balls, missed assignments and poor decisions, the Queen's attack simply could not get into rhythm against the aggressive linebacking corps.

	G	W	L	T	P
Bishop's	2	2	0	20	34
Queen's	1	1	0	29	2
McGill	2	1	1	51	32
Concordia	2	1	1	26	46
Queens	2	1	1	30	39
Ontario	1	0	1	17	24
Carleton	2	0	2	32	64

This became particularly evident in the final three minutes of the first half, when Queen's was twice inside the Bishop's 15-yard line, and only came away with one point to show for their efforts, leaving them trailing 21-4 at the break.

"Frustration is the word of the day," said Queen's offensive coordinator Steve Yovetich. "There were just too many guys coming back to the sideline apologizing for making mistakes."

The frustration continued on the opening kick-off of the second-half, when Gaels' star Paul Correale bobbled the short kick, and it was recovered by Bishop's. The Gaitsers kicker, John Gal, promptly nailed an 18-yard field goal, stretching the lead to 20 points.

Please see Gaels on page 18

Women's soccer starts fast

By NATHAN SAGER

In what may turn out to be a harbinger of things to come for a team with its sights on a national championship, the Queen's women's soccer team rang up a pair of victories at home last weekend. On Saturday, the Tricolour rolled over the York Yeowomen 4-1, then staved off a pesky Toronto Blues squad on Sunday, prevailing by a 3-1 count.

On Saturday, co-captain Judith Trepanier, who lost last season to a knee injury, enjoyed a triumphant return, opening the scoring in the fifth minute. Goalkeeper Amanda Foran, though often less busy than the Maytag repairman, acquitted herself well when tested, keeping the score at 1-0 with an excellent diving save to deny York striker Laurie Allison midway through the opening half.

"We worked very hard at applying defensive pressure all over the field."

— Head Coach Dave McDowell

After all-star forward Joanna Hackert tallied in the latter stages of the first half, the outcome was virtually etched in stone. The Gaels spent much of the afternoon conducting a passing and dribbling exhibition on the York side of midfield, quickly defusing any Yeowomen scoring chances. During the second half, both co-captains tallied, as midfielder Jen Sarginson made it 3-0 in the 59th minute, and then almost immediately after Trepanier added her second goal. Foran's shutout bid was thwarted when York's Tanya Cialone scored on a high shot from the right flank in the 73rd minute.

"We worked very hard at applying defensive pressure all over the field," provided Head Coach Dave McDowell, who was particularly satisfied with his charges' work ethic, including their special attention to off-season conditioning, which was exemplified in the second half against York.

Queen's 4 York 1
Queen's 3 Toronto 1

On Sunday, the Gaels overcame a somewhat less cohesive effort, and were forced to rely on their ample veteran experience in order to carry the day. "We have a real history of letting down in our second game [of the weekend]," admitted McDowell. Forward Angie Crockford opened the scoring in the 33rd minute, deking sliding Blues' goalkeeper

Please see Women page 16

Women sweep weekend games

Continued from page 15

Nicole Wight, then tapping the ball into the yawning net. Early in the second half, Hackett scored her second goal in as many games, converting a corner kick to put the Gaels ahead, shortly before Varsity's Karen Woods returned the disparity to one goal.

Gaels will face perhaps their most demanding test on their regular season slate next Sunday.

Spurred on by the tally, an energized Toronto side controlled the play for much of match's duration, with the Gaels receiving a scare when Trepanier was helped off the field with an injured ankle. After weathering several Varsity offensive forays, with sweeper Raelen Dunne frequently clearing the ball from danger, the Gaels salted the win away in the 86th minute when midfielder Audrey McKay scored on a free kick.

Women's soccer

The Gaels may face their most demanding test on their regular season slate next Sunday, when they travel to the nation's capital to confront the defending national champion Ottawa Gee-Gees.

Men sluggish

BY NATHAN SAGER

Men's soccer

It was a difficult beginning to the OUA season for the Queen's men's soccer team, as they emerged from a pair of home matches last weekend with only one of a possible six points. Saturday, the Tricolour suffered a defensive letdown in a 5-2 setback to the York Yeomen. Scoring for the Gaels were midfielders Dan Seixeiro and Andrew Westoll. However, on Sunday afternoon against the University of Toronto Blues, the Gaels rebounded, coming up with a much more consistent effort and controlling most of the fray, only to emerge with a frustrating 1-1 draw. Scoring the lone goal for the Gaels was midfielder Joseph Posca.

down the left side, Cowan sent a crossing pass across the front of the goal, where midfielder Posca obliged him, deftly driving the ball past Toronto keeper Sakis Rizos.

As the match wore on, the tally came to loom ever larger, as the Gaels young defenders continued to fare well at denying Toronto much sustained occupation of Queen's end, and goalkeeper Alex Mueller-Gastell asserted himself with several excellent saves and some towering goal kicks. However, in the 71st minute, off a corner kick, Varsity's Alain Cogan outstretched several players to redirect the ball with his noggin past a lunging Mueller-Gastell to square the proceedings.

Queen's 2 York 5
Queen's 1 Toronto 1

"Saturday we had a lapse of about 15 minutes of poor defending, but today (Sunday), the insity was there all game."

— Co-coach Nik Thomas

Co-coach Nik Thomas praised his team's resiliency. "The intensity was much greater today," he surmised in the aftermath of the deadlock with Varsity. "Saturday we had a lapse of about 15 minutes of poor defending, but today, the intensity was there all game."

Sunday's game was a hard-fought contest between two bitter OUA East rivals. The Gaels gained the early momentum, and saw it come to fruition in the 13th minute when Mike Cowan, last season's OUA scoring leader, provided a fine exhibition of his playmaking skills. After winning a loose ball near midfield and speedily dribbling

The Gaels were able to parry a Toronto thrust for the tiebreaker, holding firm and generating two glorious scoring chances over the final 10 minutes, but neither side could break the stalemate. Thomas said the tie could be deemed "a moral victory."

The Gaels will travel to northern Ontario this weekend for games with Nipissing, a new entry in the OUA, and Laurentian, traditionally one of the league's stronger teams.

Field hockey optimistic

BY ROBERT MACNEIL

The Golden Gaels field hockey team is close to finalizing their 1998 roster, and the team selected by the coaches looks ready to make some noise in the OUA. Last season, the Gaels battled their way into a three-way tie for the final playoff spot, but were denied access to the post-season on the basis of goal differential.

This season the Gaels have entered training camp with a determined attitude and Assistant Coach Richard Bennett likes what he sees. Last weekend, his team played four exhibition games which helped prepare the Gaels for the regular season and helped the coaches par down their roster.

With a solid veteran line-up and some talented rookies tossed into the mix, the Gaels should not have to worry about losing a playoff spot...

the Gaels failed to capitalize on numerous chances and fell to Trent University 1-0. The big story of the day, however, was star player Megan Brady's hand injury. Thankfully, Bennett told The Journal that Brady will only miss a few games and not the entire season, as was originally feared.

In looking to the regular season, which starts on September 19, Bennett is especially enthusiastic when discussing four of his returning players. Brady, a fourth-year philosophy student, spent the summer working out and playing in Kingston and the United States, activities which resulted in an overall improvement in her skill level. Brady loves to attack and Bennett enthused that she and Carolyn Fitzgerald have been the two stars of training camp so far. Fitzgerald holds the team together in the backfield. "She is really calm under pressure and never gets upset. She is an excellent model for our rookies," commented Bennett.

In addition to Fitzgerald, Bennett also has Fiona Duthie to help bring along the rookie players. "Fiona is very good at bringing on the young players, she pulls the rookies aside and gives them advice," said Bennett.

Rounding out this talented roster is last year's rookie of the year Amber Palmer. The team almost lost Palmer because she wanted to switch from Arts and Science into engineering. She was planning to leave for Waterloo, but last minute phone calls allowed for her acceptance into Queen's engineering. "[This] is just great for us, she has great vision, she is a strong runner, and very feisty," enthused Bennett.

With a solid veteran line-up and some talented rookies tossed into the mix, the Gaels should not have to worry about losing a playoff spot on goal differential - they will have one locked up long before that.

Return to glory?

BY NEIL ACHARYA AND THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL SPORTS STAFF

When you speak of consistency in Queen's athletics, the Golden Gaels men's rugby squad is a notable example. Over the last 12 years they have won ten OUA crowns and last season they lost in the finals to Western University. With a record like that, Head Coach Al Ferguson has every reason to smile and speaks highly of his expectations for this year's club.

"We always go into every year expecting nothing less than to win. You can't expect any lower than that," said Ferguson. This attitude filters down throughout the team and all his players thrive on the positivity.

Last Thursday the Gaels took to the field in an exhibition match against the second division R.M.C. Palladians and their spirited play resulted in a resounding victory. This was the first step in the right direction for Ferguson's squad who hopes to climb the mountain and find themselves perched atop the rugby world. Assistant Coach Brad Greenwood, who played for the Gaels as a student, likes the fact that his veteran players are passing on the great Queen's traditions to the younger players.

Ferguson has rave reviews about all his veteran players. Fourth-year player Paul Hemmings, from Kingston, has been looking great in training camp but the big story is of veteran players switching positions. Club captain Emmitt Connolly, changed positions from flanker to hooker and has made a smooth transition. Par Brooks has switched from number eight to a prop and Ferguson has very high hopes for this switch. There are also a number of exciting rookies on this Gael team. Tyler Wish, from British Columbia, is in great shape and so is Jason Pither, a Ph.D grad student, who played for the University of Waterloo in a semi-final against Queen's a few years ago.

With a successful mix of great coaching and veteran players, the Gaels are again heading on the right track. However, it is clear that when you are dealing with Queen's rugby, anything short of an OUA championship is a disappointment. For this goal to be attained, the positional changes instituted by the coaching staff will have to fall into place.

Their quest begins this Wednesday when the team takes on the York Yeomen at Kingston Field for their season opener.

INSTRUCTIONAL SPORTS SKILLS

Register NOW for these exciting FALL Sports & Physical Activities
Registrations Accepted from 10am to 5pm Monday-Friday
Queen's Physical Education Centre - Administration Wickets

Learn to Swim
Stroke Improvement
NLS
Bronze Medallion
Bronze Cross
Springboard Diving
Basic Scuba Diving
Learn to Skate
Poker Skating
Basic Figure Skating
Basic Hockey Skills
Intermediate Hockey

Advanced Hockey
Ballroom Dancing
Jive Dancing
Highland Dancing
Line Dancing
Fencing
Aerobics
Rec Fitness & Games
Intro to Fitness
Intro to Weights
Pre-Natal Fitness
Post-Natal Fitness

Hatha Yoga
Tai Chi
Self Defense for Women
Squash
Tennis
Pre-Season Hockey Prep
Certification Course
National Coaching - NCCP
Fitness Leadership - FOLP
Injury Prev/Care - SIPAC
Wrap & Tape - SIPAC
CPR

Registrations restricted to the Queen's Community until September 16th
Most Programs Open to the Public on September 16th - So Register NOW!!

ALSO ANNOUNCING THE NEW IMPROVED V.I.P. FITNESS CLUB
UP TO 47 CLASSES A WEEK, ALL IN FIRST CLASS FACILITIES
STUDENTS WHO HAVE PAID ATHLETIC FEES GAIN FREE ACCESS - JUST BY REGISTERING

FOR MORE INFORMATION

Pick up an ISS Brochure at the Queen's Physical Education Centre
Visit our Website at www.phe.queensu.ca/athletics/iss/iss.htm
Email us at ph1@post.queensu.ca
Call us at 545-2500 or 545-6000 ext. 4605

the Laundry Cafe

291 Princess St.
542-2282
OPEN TIL LAM.

Sunday Pasta Night
Salad, Pasta & Focaccia
$4.95

Be a part of one of the largest & most successful Intramural Programs in the country!

Don't get left behind.
Sign-up for Intramural Sports at Athletic Information Night
Tuesday, Sept 15
5-7 p.m. Bartlett Gym

QUEEN'S WIC INTRAMURALS

For more information about the Queen's Intramural Program, visit our web site at: www.phe.queensu.ca/athletics

Bring your resume!

From Saturday, October 3, you'll only have 212 days to

get a job

after graduation. So why not come to IBM's career fair and get a head start?

open house	location
On Saturday, October 3, you're invited to IBM's headquarters to learn about the exciting opportunities open to you in almost all areas of the company.	Date: Saturday, October 3, 1998 Location: IBM 3600 Steeles Avenue East Markham, Ontario
transportation	register today!
Mark the date on your calendar. You don't want to miss this opportunity to get a sense of the huzz that comes from creating the stuff that will change the world. Reps from various areas of IBM, along with the leading-edge technology being used by business today, will be on hand so you can get a first-person look at the kind of energy, inventiveness and breakthrough thinking that make IBM a great place to work.	To make travelling to our career fair a bit easier, we've arranged for you to be picked up and dropped off by coach. Time: 8:30 a.m. Location: Mackintosh-Corry Hall
Opportunities abound for comp sci, engineering, business and arts students in all areas of IBM - from our leading software lab to ISM Corp. to our IBM Global Services team. So stop by. Who knows, you could find yourself working on some of the coolest and most innovative projects in the industry - in just 212 days.	Web: www.ibm.com/ly Call: 1-800-IBM-CALL (1-800-426-2255), Ext. 710

IBM and the services logo are registered trademarks of International Business Machines Corporation and are used under license by IBM Canada Ltd. 1998 IBM Corp. All rights reserved.

IBM
Solutions for a small planet®

Baseball team splits weekend

By ADAM KAMINSKY

The ball was flying all over Megaffin Stadium this weekend as the Queen's baseball team split two double headers. With scores more easily associated with the gridiron than the diamond, it was a nightmare for all the pitchers involved.

Henry Shiau launched the first dinger of his Queen's career, a shot which would have made Big Mac marvel.

The Saturday double dip saw George Brown College visiting and player/manager Matt Hook dominating. In the first game, Hook hit two home runs and staked his team to a 10-0 lead. While this seemed like a comfortable

BASEBALL SCHEDULE

- September 19 @ University of Toronto
- September 20 @ Durham College
- September 26 @ George Brown College
- September 27 @ York University
- October 3 vs. Durham College
- October 4 vs. University of Toronto

* All dates are double-headers

cushion, the questionable bullpen made the game much more interesting, as the final score line was a much tighter 10-7, with Chris White earning the win. In the second game, the home team enjoyed a two-run lead in the seventh and last inning, only to see the pitchers allow 12 unanswered runs, leading to a 16-6 loss. Hook was able to get a hold of a nice fat pitch and deposited his third home run of the day in a losing cause.

A second twin bill took place on Sunday, with the University of Toronto taking their turn to play in Kingston. In the first game, U of T prevailed 13-10, with Queen's blowing another lead. The big blast of the day came off the bat of Shawn Morris, who hit a grand slam, his first hit of the season. Also of note in this game was Henry Shiau launching the first dinger of his Queen's career, a shot which would have made Big Mac marvel.

In the late game, Queen's was able to force a split with a 9-8 victory. Chris Cartile pitched the complete game, and also homered to ensure that the team came out of the opening weekend at .500.

Allowing 44 runs in four games over the weekend confirms the feat that arms will be the problem for Queen's. With games coming up against the University of Toronto and Durham College this weekend, the team's pitching will have to get sharper.

Gaels rebound

Continued from page 15

This looked to be the beginning of a blow-out, but it was at this point that the Gaels defence began to turn the tide. With veteran linemen Jim Aru, Osborne and Derek Spronck stepping up the pressure in the third quarter, it was the seemingly unstoppable Gaiters offence that was coming apart.

"The adjustments made at half-time were so small that they really wouldn't have made a big difference," explained defensive coach Bob Mullen. "The kids just answered the physical challenge."

While the offence racked up 472 total yards, it was the four interceptions and two fumbles that really decided the team's fate.

The Queen's offence did its part in the fourth quarter with Dustin Fallscheer at the helm. Fallscheer completed his first three passes and marched the squad down the field. The drive was highlighted by a spectacular 46-yard catch and run play by Jason Wimmer, who had his best day as a Gael (5 catches, 118 yards). Correale added a 5-yard touchdown and Queen's scored again with 24 seconds remaining in the game, on a 45-yard TD pass from Fallscheer to Paul Dirinaldo. Trailing 24-19, the Gaels had one more shot at the end-zone with the clock showing zeroes, but the pass fell incomplete.

While the offence racked up 472 total yards, it was the four interceptions and two fumbles that really decided the team's fate. Queen's head coach Bob Howes saw a positive in the second-half play of his team. "We showed that we could play with this team, and I am very happy with the attitude [shown] by the squad in the second-half," said the fourth-year head man.

Jason Wimmer romps for big gain
PHOTO BY MANASH GOSWAMI

While the coach may have been impressed by the second-half play, moral victories do not count in the standings. When the fight for playoff position begins in earnest, the Gaels will wish they could give this performance back.

Orientation Week '98 IN FOCUS

Welcome Back Students!

Club 477 is Kingston's ONLY Alternative Night Club

Serving the Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual, Transgender and Queer Friendly community

Come out to the Seven!

- Lite Nite Thursday — No Cover — Progressive Grooves
- Electro Retro Saturdays with DJ Matty
- Friday — 47.7 Fromage FM with DJ KD
- Look for our calendar of events
- Located in the Hub-burbs

477 Princess Street at University..... 547-2923

<http://spiderrock.aracnet.net/477>

KINGSTON'S LARGEST SELECTION OF USED CD'S IS AT CHUMLEIGHS

286 Princess St. (Across the street from McDonald's)

ALL USED CD'S LESS THAN $10

WE PAY MORE... AND SELL FOR LESS CD's Tapes Movies Video Games

PHOTOS BY:
PAUL HEISLER
KEITH GEREIN
ALEX KRONBY
JAMES TERJANIAN
CHRIS WICKE
MARK WOOLFORD

Welcome to
Queen's Froshies!!!

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Getting Oriented with 54-40

Vancouver outfit and Treble Charger entertain at Miller

54-40's Neil Osborne rocks the all-faculty concert

PHOTO BY PAUL MEISLER

CONCERT REVIEW

BY STEFAN MURRAY

Despite the rain, despite the delay, and despite Bill Priddle the all-faculty frosh concert on Friday was a great success.

Approximately 3,000 first-year students stumbled into Miller parking lot last Friday to receive their education on the campus music scene, courtesy of the Queen's Entertainment Agency (QEA). By the end of openers Damn the Diva, Treble Charger and Vancouver's 54-40, the wet, half-deaf, yet ecstatic first-years were still waiting for more, securing a two-song encore from 54-40.

54-40 then took the stage and truly displayed what the presence of seasoned musicians can do.

Damn the Diva kicked off the show at 8:30, warming up the crowd with a blend of electrically charged '90s rock. However, when compared to the acts to follow, Damn the Diva failed to capture the potential energy of the crowd.

The quartet was followed by Treble Charger, who arguably gave the best performance of the night. The opening song "How She Died", sparked a slight mosh pit and a collection of crowd surfers. They kept the crowd engaged and seething with great executions of "Morale" and "Friend of Mine." By the time they performed the popular "Even Grable" and began to close down their set, the audience was more than warmed up for the headliners. They also provided a moment of controversy, when guitarist and former Queen's student Bill Priddle lambasted the relative tameness of the present frosh week. A quarter way into their set, Priddle stopped the show and exclaimed, "back when I went to Queen's, frosh week wasn't considered a success unless there were 50 dead and 200 injured with the clock tower of Grant Hall in flames and Tindell field a smoking crater filled with human remains." Understandably, a number of frosh were not impressed, responding with catcalls and extended middle digits.

54-40 then took the stage and truly displayed the presence of seasoned musicians, commanding the lot and weeding out all "filler" tunes from their set. From "I go blind" to an intense version of "Blame your parents," and their new chart-topper "Since when," 54-40 kept the frosh frenzied. The crowd was even responsive to the bands newer, more introspective tunes, which are usually far from welcome at a rock concert.

"Back when I went to Queen's, Frosh week wasn't considered a success unless there were 50 dead and 200 injured with the clock tower of Grant Hall in flames."

—Bill Priddle, Treble Charger guitarist

Of course, the band had tremendous help from featured backup singer Coco Love Alcon. Her incredible range navigated the sound for the handful of songs she participated. Her 'scat' and harmony blew the crowd away, adding something unique to the entire set.

The show ran extremely smoothly until halfway through 54-40's set when a brief downpour succeeded in damaging a vital sound-board. Fortunately, the headliner's were patient, performing "Ocean Pearl" with only one guitar while the crowd supplied the vocals and QEA stage-hands and faculty volunteers repaired the problem with hair dryers and hand towels.

The damaged equipment was contracted out from Caberat productions, a lighting and sound company that boasts former Queen's student and QEA director Bjorn Wentlandt as their production supervisor.

The excellent sound and lighting of the concert worked well in conjunction with the interesting venue of Miller parking lot. The lot, almost completely surrounded by buildings, provided a good acoustic and the innovative light presentation successfully mesmerized the crowd.

The concert was truly a massive endeavor as a majority of QEA staff, the entire student constable staff, as well as Queen's security and faculty volunteers contributed to the safety of the performers and the audience. It appeared that there were few incidents other than a slightly intoxicated first-year student being helped out of the event on a stretcher.

The show, which was the second to last major event of Frosh week, was the greatest success of the past few years and built upon the all-faculty concert employed for the first time last year.

Wilde Life

Literary hero makes for pleasant script

FILM REVIEW

Wilde
Princess Court Cinema

BY SEAN SPRINGER

Films don't represent life in itself, but they often try to offer commentary on the essence of humanity and its struggle to be defined through the interactions of humans. A lasting impression in Wilde is that immature love is insatiable and that "In this world there are only two tragedies. One is not getting what one wants, and the other is getting it."

The film has taken a year to reach Kingston from overseas and the wait has certainly been worth it. Based on Richard Ellmann's biography, Oscar Wilde, it traces Wilde's tragic life from his rise to fame as a literary artist in 1883 to his remaining days with Lord Alfred "Bosie" Douglas, his youthful romantic partner in a doomed love affair.

Wilde focuses almost explicitly on the character's homosexuality and its contrast with a prejudiced English society.

Wilde focuses almost explicitly on the character's homosexuality and its contrast with a prejudiced English society. Taking a familiar story, it introduces new, and somewhat cloaked, details of Oscar Wilde's life — a legend that ends shortly after enduring two years of hard labour in an English prison for homosexual conduct.

It is the life of this incredible man that is the lifeblood of the film, making it a touching tragedy held firmly together by humorous undertones of Wilde's precious idiosyncrasies.

Through Stephen Fry's portrayal of Wilde, we fall for the character's rarefied splendour and witticisms. With confidence and a wry demeanour, the actor's enthusiasm for the role is convincing, and reveals a mellow, humble version of Oscar Wilde, which sets up the overall portrait of the artist.

Fry is also aided by a script containing enough quips and epigrams to fill a volume of Bartlett's quotations. The script is prepared specifically to unveil Wilde's insatiable desires and difficulty in balancing his family life with his promiscuous relationships involving Bosie, Wilde's close friend Robert Ross (played by Michael Sheen), and a number of anonymous young men.

After a smattering of applause in response to his classic play, The Importance of Being Earnest, Wilde charms a crowd of hundreds without seeming slightly taut. But behind the curtain a different Wilde, full of passion and sexual energy, emerges.

Yet, while Wilde's relations with men are well-developed, his life with his wife and children remains underexposed, as we see only passive and reactionless moments existing between the two. Wilde could have utilized Jennifer Ehle's presence as Constance, Wilde's wife, to a higher degree as her performance is adequate, but she remains unproven in this tacit role.

Fresh from a similar role as Kevin Spacey's lover in Midnight in the Garden of Good and Evil, Jude Law nearly steals the show from Fry playing Bosie, the vibrant, yet ill-tempered, son of the powerful and horrid Marquess of Queensberry.

Set in an authentic recreation of late nineteenth century England, the slow pace doesn't quite fit the surprisingly upbeat mood.

Queensberry, played by Tom Wilkinson from the Full Monty, is the rotten, vicious and antagonistic brute who bunts Oscar down and ultimately exposes Wilde's homosexuality to English society. The result is a brief courtroom drama where the English mock and ridicule Wilde, nearly obliterating the literary command he had established for himself up until 1895.

Actor Stephen Fry portrays Oscar Wilde in latest flick

Set in an authentic recreation of late nineteenth century England, the slow pace doesn't quite fit the surprisingly upbeat mood, but does give a sufficient plot of time for reflection and remorse for the injustice against not only Oscar Wilde, but an alternative lifestyle. We're left wondering whether Wilde's downfall was due to his own inability to silence rumours of his relationships or solely the bigotry of society at large.

A perfect film for the university town in a generation with a resurgent interest in Oscar Wilde, Wilde definitely has you thinking amidst laughter and sadness.

Flying high or grounded?

Travel Agent slows down their bookings to focus on quality

Band Profile

Travel Agent

By SARAH CROSBIE

How do you describe a band who, admittedly, has problems describing themselves?

Travel Agent, Kingston's most featured student band, is "genreless," according to their manager Gabe Simms. He admits that, "if you asked all ten members, they would give you different labels," which is exactly what happened. Group members Andrew Benton, Mike Budd, Eric Stephenson all defined the group's sound differently, but perhaps the most interesting (and over-confident) answer came from trombonist and vocalist Jon Dyke who said, "we're not blues, funk or jazz, we're Travel Agent."

The group's lack of a definition of sound and style has not, however, impeded their success. Travel Agent's victory in last spring's Queen's Battle of the Bands qualified them to perform at the National competition at York University in April. Unfortunately, Travel Agent was slated to perform first and according to the band, there weren't a lot of people there to see them perform. It was also rumored that at the time of Travel Agent's performance not all of the judges were present. Benton, saxophonist of the group, still described the experience as positive, "it was definitely cool to play with so many other bands... we were original, the only kind of that type of band there."

Travel Agent began when Benton, trumpeter and vocalist

Brendan Wypitch and guitarist Mike Budd, were in residence first year together in Leonard Hall. The group evolved last fall by a coming and going process. According to Benton, "eventually there was no more room in my basement - the ten of us just stuck."

"We're not blues, funk or jazz, we're Travel Agent."

— Jon Dyke

Last year Travel Agent acquired a fan base in Kingston, playing regularly in different bars. Their name was everywhere and people began to buzz about this new, energetic student band. Perhaps overexposure began to settle in, nearing the end of the second semester, as Travel Agent became a household name. The band mentioned a concert at Stages, where the only audience members were friends of the group. Simms explained that, "a lighter schedule this year will allow more time for writing and practicing. In turn, this will provide a quality overall performance as well as varied shows". Simms believes the shows have to vary or, "fuck... people might as well sit at home and listen to a tape."

The band's schedule is lighter this year, playing only every other Friday at The Shot, beginning September 18. Travel Agent's future is in a state of uncertainty as half of the group graduates this year and the other half the next year. Members of the group, however, appear optimistic that Travel Agent has a future. Budd stated that, "I hoped it doesn't end this year. We're young and we can still afford to do it. I'd like [success] to happen, but I won't say it." Dyke was more confident saying that, "we can go as far as any other band that's made it. I know we're going to make it."

The brass section of Travel Agent "grooves" during last March's Battle of the Bands.

"Close your eyes, dance your ass off, when you wake up, at least you've had a good night out."

—Gabe Simms, Manager of Travel Agent

What seems most unbelievable about Travel Agent is that it appears they've been handed the chance of success on a silver platter. Dyke said, "we've lost a couple of drunks on stage, but right now we're fucking shooting the course record." Budd seemed a little more honest and realistic about the group's problems stating that, "we need to improve our professionalism on and off stage. We don't want to be known as people who are your friends or people in your class. We want an air of professionalism... to be able to appear as a band who could be on TV or radio. It doesn't look good to be a bunch of wankers."

Why would people go and see Travel Agent again this year? Simms explained that, "Travel Agent will provide close to four hours of quality entertainment, as cheesy as that sounds....Close your eyes, dance your ass off, when you wake up, at least you've had a good night out."

Travel Agent, whose name means, "allowing music as a medium to take your mind and hopefully body elsewhere" has their work cut out for them this year. It appears at this point, success has been easily attainable, but Travel Agent now must work to prove that their popularity hasn't yet reached the expiry date.

Travel Agent performs Friday, September 18 at The Shot. They will play every other Friday after that date.

Teach English as a Second Language in Canada or Abroad

Enroll now to obtain your Certificate in Teaching English as a Second/Foreign Language

Queens University at Kingston

- Course instructors are experienced ESL teachers and experts in the field.
- Presentations cover instructional theory and methodologies in a variety of ESL/EFL areas over different levels.
- Presentations provide information applicable to both Canadian and overseas teaching situations.
- Participants may observe ESL classes.
- Participants receive a variety of handouts as well as information on additional materials.
- Participants may tutor international students.

Registration Night
Monday, 28 September, 7-10 pm
MacCory E229

Classes
Tuesdays and Thursdays
29 September - 22 October, 7-10 pm
MacCory E229

Practice Tutoring
Saturday, 10 October and
Saturday, 17 October, 10 am - noon
MacCory E229, E203, E230

Register early at School of English
96 Lower Albert Street
Tel: 545-2472 Fax: 545-6809
e-mail: soe@post.queensu.ca

Cost
$375 including materials
Pay by cash or credit card at the School of English Office
*2% service charge must be added to all credit card payments

HIRING: COORDINATOR

The Queens Student Community Services Group (QSCSG) is looking for a COORDINATOR (effective October 5th to April 1). If you are interested and would like more information, please contact the QSCSG office @ 545-2958.

Applications for this position will be accepted at the AMS office until September 25.

The Queen's Student and Community Services Group (QSCSG)
545-2958

A.N.A.B. The Anorexia Nervosa & Bulimia Association needs Volunteers

A.N.A.B. provides information, help and support for those suffering from eating disorders, as well as for their friends and family. Some of the services A.N.A.B. provides include:

- Information and Support Line
- Support Groups
- Newsletter
- Public Relations
- Fundraising
- Public Speaking

PLEASE JOIN US FOR AN INFORMATION SESSION:
Thursday, September 24th
John Orr Room, JOUC, Queen's Campus
7pm-9pm
Or call our information line:
(613) 547-3684

Get Out There!

Movies:

Playing at the Capitol Theatre until Thursday September 17: 546-5395

Dead Man on Campus 7:15, 9:30
Armageddon 6:45, 9:45
Saving Private Ryan 8:30
Snake Eyes 7:20, 9:35
Rounders 7:00, 7:30, 9:40, 10:10
The Negotiator 6:55, 9:50

Playing at the Catarqui Cineplex until Thursday September 17: 389-7442

Dance with Me 6:45, 9:20
S4 6:35, 9:00
Knock Off 7:25, 10:00
Ever After 7:05
Blade 7:15, 9:50
There's Something About Mary 6:55, 9:30

Playing at the Princess Court Cinema until Thursday September 17: 546-3456

Wide 7:00, 9:15

New Video Releases:
Released Tuesday September 15:

City of Angels
He Got Game
Mercury Rising
Deep Rising

Released Tuesday September 22:

Adams Family Reunion
My Giant
Dangerous Beauty
Player's Club

Book Fair:

On Wednesday, September 16 from 5-9 p.m. and Thursday, 17 and Friday, 18 from 10 a.m. 9 p.m. and on Saturday, 19 from 10 a.m. 4 p.m. and Sunday the 20 from noon 4 p.m., the Symphony Book Fair will open its doors for the opportunity to purchase 15,000 books and pieces of sheet music. Admission is free.

Visual Art:

The Edward Day Gallery 547-0774
Until September 20, exhibits by Simon Andrew. From September 21 to October 18, exhibits by Catherine Dolcini.

The Modern Fuel Gallery: 21-A Queen St.
From September 10 until October 10, Barbara Astman, showing, an AGO Artist with Their Work and AT&T Exhibition

Agnes Etherington Art Centre: 545-2190

From September 5 until November 1, Sheila Gregory will be showing her work.

Kingston Regional Arts Council: 546-ARTS

On September 26 and 27 the waterfront location at the Tett Centre will be the home to A Country Fair in the City. The new Tett Centre is located at 370 King Street West. KRAC artists and artisans will be exhibiting and selling their works. Demonstrations of painting, sketching, porcelain painting and pottery by some of the artists will be held throughout both days. Daily passes are $2 for all performances.

Live Music:
Windmills Cafe:

On the evening of Thursday, September 17, Two Penny Bit presents Celtic and Blues.

The Shot:
Every Monday is Blue Monday. Tuesdays are Live DJ's. Alternating Wednesdays Jon Coakley plays with Bug Daddy and The Shack, starting September 23. Coakley alternates with Professional Live Comedy, starting September 16. Every second Friday Travel Agent performs.

The Kingston Symphony opens its Masterworks Series and its 46th Season on Sunday, October 4, at 2:30 p.m. at the Grand Theatre. The concert features the internationally acclaimed virtuoso violinist Yuri Mazurkevich performing Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 1.

Kingston Opera:

On Sunday September 27, OperaBus to Bellini's Norma will be presented and coming up on Sunday October 4, OperaBus to Puccini's Tosca.

Dance Event:

The Performing Arts Office at Queen's University opens its 1998-99 season with the first event in the Rhythm and Dance Series. Jane Bunnett and orchestra will make their Kingston debut on Friday, September 25 at 8 p.m. Bunnett performs Cuban rhythms and sounds. Tickets are $20 for adults, $15 for seniors and $10 for students and youth. They can be purchased by calling 545-2558. Tickets are also available at the door.

Theatre:

Theatre Kingston:

After nine years of theatre, The People's Theatre is turning a new leaf by announcing its new name: Theatre Kingston. To celebrate this event, Fortune my Foe, a play which first premiered in the ballroom of Kingston's old Frotenac Hotel will be performed. It is a comedy about culture, faith, new beginnings friendship and the joy of life. The event takes place on Saturday, September 26 at 7:30 p.m. at Queen's Convocation Hall and will be followed by a buffet. Don't miss this special fundraising event!

Literacy Event:
Kingston Literacy: 547-2012

On Friday September 18 at 8 p.m. in The Grand Theatre Kingston Literacy presents, "Many Faces: Many Voices - A Celebration of Literacy." The Cantabile Children's Choir will perform as well as a Stomp team. Night Sun a Celtic/Zydeco group will also perform. Tickets are $10 and can be purchased at the Grand Theatre at the Box Office.

Want to have experience in Teaching conversational ESL?
Want to find out about other cultures?
BE AN ESL VOLUNTEER TUTOR

Two-hour weekly commitment.

Call 545-2472 or drop by The School of English at 96 Albert St.

www.thedowntowndw.com

Free weights & Nautilus Cardio Equipment
The Best Aerobics... Period!
Cycle Reebok/Muay Thai
Registered Massage Therapy
Certified Personal Trainers
6am to 11pm... Long hours!

Bring this coupon in and receive $10.00 off any membership

BURGER KING $1.49
Whopper Wednesday $1.99
Whopper junior every day

ATTENTION! WEEK END WARRIORS!
PRO-ACTIVE
INJURY REHABILITATION CENTRE
ADVANCED SPORTS PHYSIOTHERAPY
TO RESOLVE YOUR ACHES AND PAINS "JUST DO IT!"
7 AM TO 7 PM 549 4393
800 PRINCESS ST. SUITE 400
SERVICES COVERED BY STUDENT HEALTH PLANS PRIVATE HEALTH INS.

Check this ticket space regularly for great deals and promotions from:

exchange
COI - Pubwear - Tees - Canteen - Books - DVD

Skyflight Student Lounge
2nd Floor JDUC
545-2120
ubs@ams.queensu.ca
www.ams.queensu.ca/AMS/LIBS

Praising Arizona

Andrews work stems from personal experience

Artistic License: Simon Andrews works will be on exhibit until September 20.

PHOTO BY RENEE HUANG

Art Review

BY ADRIA VUKSINIC

Flaming reds and burnt oranges are the colours that set the tone at the Edward Day Gallery's new exhibit entitled Marking Matters by Simon Andrews.

In addition to this current exhibit at the Edward Day

Gallery, showing from August 31 to September 20, Andrew has exhibited his work throughout Kingston, Toronto and the United Kingdom. His accomplishments include artwork for the Tragically Hip's Day for Night CD and paintings produced for the movie The Man Without A Face, starring Mel Gibson. Many of the pieces in the collection were influenced by Andrew's trip to Arizona. One particularly representational piece entitled Interior Tension shows a heavy red and orange background with his characteristic grey sweeps and borders in the foreground. These colours create the illusion of a dry crackling landscape along a forgotten Arizona highway.

His accomplishments include artwork for the Tragically Hip's Day for Night CD and paintings produced for the movie The Man Without A Face.

Colour is an important part of Andrew's work; his art is not representational, but based on the "feel" of the places he has visited. Andrew has also shown interest in creating new colours such as innovative new red pigments for his works. In addition to his interests in colour, Andrew has put forth a multimedia exhibit, painting on board, matboard, canvas and manila. Atop these varied surfaces, he has used oil paints, encaustic, and mixed media to convey unique messages regarding the barrenness of certain locales.

One of my favourite works in the exhibit is entitled, Bathroom Window. It can only be described as a close examination of a culture of mold and mildew in the corner of a dirty bathroom window (as the name suggests). The work contains Andrew's signature dense and heavy brush strokes applied with an uneven hand providing a cloudy exterior that encourages diverse interpretations. Again, like most of his works in the exhibit, Bathroom Window is defined by the horizontal and vertical brush strokes of the artist.

Bathroom Window can be described as a close examination of a culture of mold and mildew.

This former Queen's student has found interesting new insights into the emotions that we feel in different places, and the creativity that comes from experiencing them.

A&E NEEDS CONTRIBS!

EVERYONE IS WELCOME AND NO EXPERIENCE IS NECESSARY!

AND HEK, WHAT COULD BE BETTER THAN A FREE CONCERT AND MOVIE TICKETS AND A CHANCE TO SEE YOUR NAME IN PRINT?

(BUT, SHHHH, DON'T TELL ANY-ONE, IT'LL START A STAMPEDE.)

THERE IS A GENERAL MEETING TONIGHT
AT THE JOURNAL
AT 8:30.

THE JOURNAL HOUSE
IS LOCATED ON 272
EARL STREET
(IT HAS HUGE BLUE
STEPS...YOU CAN'T MISS IT!)

CAN'T MAKE THE MEETING OR NEED MORE INFO? CALL STEFAN LILIAN OR SARAH AT:

545-2800

If you wanna be my husband: Spice Girl Melanie Brown, 23, better known as Scary Spice, wed dancer Jimmy Gulzar on Sunday. The two were married in a tiny St. John the Baptist Church. Guests included fellow Spice Girls Melanie Chisholm, Emma Bunton and Victoria Adams. There was no word on whether Geri Halliwell, Ginger Spice, was among the guests.

Eating Out with Bill: Culture icon Martha Stewart cancelled a pre-taped interview in which she has lunch with Bill Clinton. She cancelled the broadcast stating it would be inappropriate to air the interview because of the sex scandal surrounding the president. During the interview, she presented Clinton with a bedroom pillow and said, "I'm sure he'll enjoy using this."

She's a Lucky Star: Madonna was the top winner at Thursday night's 15th Annual MTV Music Awards, winning 6 of the 9 categories for which her work was nominated. Her latest album, Ray of Light is her best selling record in years and has been critically acclaimed.

My-So-Called Education: Celebrities are hitting the books this fall. Taryana Ali, Ashley from The Prince of Bel-Air, will study at Harvard, TV and film actress Claire Danes will study at Yale along with Jonathan Taylor Thomas from Home Improvement. Ben Savage will attend Stratford in '99.

Cheers to Frasier: Frasier set an Emmy record Sunday night, becoming the first show to take top honors for an outstanding comedy series five years in a row. Helen Hunt won best actress in a comedy series and Lisa Kudrow won best supporting actress in the same category. The Practice won best drama beating favourites ER, Law and Order and The X-Files.

There's Something About Matt: Matt Damon's new movie Rounders came first at the box office this past weekend earning $8.8 million. There's Something About Mary came second with $8 million, Blade was third with $5.2 million and Saving Private Ryan pulled in fourth with $4.7 million.

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

is Looking for

Writers, Reporters,

Designers, and

Photographers

to join us for our 126th year

No experience necessary

Everyone is welcome

Interested? Stop by The Journal House at 272 Earl St or call Tara, Keith, or Laura at 545-2800.

Sexy but no lace.

Blundstone
FOUNDED 1870

Unisex styles. Women's size 6
up to Men's 13 1/2. Come slip on a pair and enjoy dry and comfortable feet.
Any tougher they'd rust.

A-1 CLOTHING

358 King St. E.
Kingston, ON
K7L 3B6

Queen's
Co-ed Competitive
Cheerleading
Tryouts

Tuesday,
Sept. 15
10:00 p.m.

BEWS Gym,
Phys Ed Centre

For info call:
545-6000 ex.4399

SCUBA Diving Courses for certification of "OPEN WATER DIVER" by the Professional Association of Diving Instructors (P.A.D.I.), the World's Largest and Most Recognized Training Agency, will begin on Tuesday 15, Wednesday 16, & Friday 18 SEP. 98 at the Kingston Diving Centre, P.A.D.I. Facility No. 4379. A student discount is available for Queen's University Students.

For information and registration call
6-DIVING (634-8464)

SCUBA DIVING

Want to experience another part of the world

but don't know...

where to turn?

The Queen's International Centre can help.

Participate in the Fall Information Sessions to learn about working, studying and volunteering abroad.

If you've already been abroad or you're an international student, join our Country Representatives Program and share your experience with other internationally-minded Queen's students.

Volunteer at the Centre by tutoring ESL, advising in our library and assisting with our programs.

Use our Resource Library and visit our Homepage at <http://www.quic.queensu.ca> to identify your options for education abroad.

Challenge another student to a game of table tennis in the Ed Churchill Hall of Friendship.

Drop in to the Centre's lounge and relax with a cup of tea or coffee.

Up-Coming Events

Crossing Cultures Discussion Group: Wed., Sept. 16, 5:30 p.m.
Re-entry Orientation and Potluck: Sun., Sept. 20, 4:00 p.m.
Crossing Borders Work/Study Abroad Fair: Wed., Oct. 7

The International Centre
at Queen's University
in the John Deutsch University Centre
just past the Queen's Pub

Tel: (613) 545-2604 Fax: (613) 545-6190
<http://www.quic.queensu.ca>

The Internet at full throttle

high speed access over cable

Queens at Home gives you high speed access to network services at the university, and faster access to the Internet. Because it's over cable, no need for the second phone line. No dial-ups. No busy signals. And you're always connected to the Internet. Get it installed for $60.

And a LOW MONTHLY PRICE OF $29.95 for the first connection, and $25.95 for each additional connection.

Sign up at the Computer Store at Dupuis Hall, or at www.ccs.queensu.ca/network/QatH

Not a Queen's student? Call 1-800-THE-WAVE.

COGECO
CABLE SOLUTIONS

COOL CONNECTION

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT THE SCENE

The Scene is a new addition to the Arts and Entertainment section. Appearing throughout the 1998-99 volume of The Journal, The Scene will highlight various facets of entertainment culture and artistic endeavor not normally featured in the section.

Independence day! Indie films break free from Hollywood Titans

BY SEAN SPRINGER

What two things do the following films have in common?

Pulp Fiction, The English Patient, Fargo, The Player, She's Got to Have It, Shine, Dead Man Walking, Sling Blade.

First, most would agree that all are excellent, ground-breaking films. The second, and not-so-obvious, similarity is that they are all independent films.

Well, that's just great you may say — but what exactly is an independent film?

Definitions vary across the board, but generally, an independent film is simply a movie that is produced from outside of the Hollywood mammoth studio circuit. This list includes production houses Fox,

MGM, Paramount, RKO, Sony, Universal and Warner Bros. Of course, the immediate assumption is that independent films assume mediocre B-budgets, which clamp a relatively large boulder to the foot of an independent film struggling to move forward in the cinematic world. Generally, this is true.

It is only in the studio world, you could only have a film such as Titanic, which was a huge financial risk ($200 million), taken on by Fox and Paramount. Then we have the independent studio, Miramax, producing hits such as Quentin Tarantino's Pulp Fiction (with a budget of $8 million), Smoke Signals, which claims to be the first feature-length film written, directed and starring native North Americans, and Oscar nominee for Best Picture, Good Will Hunting.

The saga of movie-making with reference to the Hollywood and independent industry is analogous to professional wrestling. Way back when the World Wrestling Federation was the reigning market for wrestling, there were the big, huge wrestlers everyone admired (the movie-making we weren't viewing excellent independent flicks. In the introduction to VideoHound's Independent Film Guide, independent film buff Monica Sullivan writes that "even though the general perception that independent filmmaking is a relatively recent phenomenon, free spirits have been making their own movies since 1888."

It's here, in the independent world, where the director truly develops the imagination of the cast and crew. While Hollywood studios require the director's endurance for countless hours of production meetings with executives who play a dominating role in the creative process, in the independent market where few and fewer wrestlers are assuming a manager and every wrestler enters the match with the possibility of winning — providing script approval. The exact same trend can be seen in the film market nowadays.

It hasn't been until recently — over the course of generations — that the indie scene stopped breaking wind and began to break some real ground on the Hollywood market, and a greater number of films such as Dennis Hopper's Easy Rider and Spike Lee's She's Got to Have It were able to climb out of the two-tiered Hollywood system. Not that in the "golden age" of Dustin Hoffman in American Buffalo.

Please see Indie on page 31

Chillin' with the dead in Kissed.

Back by Popular Demand!

Teach English Overseas

ESL/EFL TEACHER TRAINING
CERTIFICATION COURSE

- * Teaching Materials
- * Job Resources
- * Language, Grammar, Pronunciation Skills
- * Teaching Practicum included

Mondays & Wednesdays 6:00 - 9:00 p.m.
September 23 - November 4, 1998
Practicum Saturday October 24 & 31
10:30 a.m. - 3:00 p.m.

$349.00
Queen's Campus Location
REGISTRATION: Phone 384-6194

Rookie & Veteran
OFFICIALS
Wanted

Are YOU interested in:

- ★ earning extra $$$$
- ★ meeting people
- ★ having fun

Then come to the MANDATORY
All Officials Information Meeting
Wednesday, Sept. 16 Room 226 PEC
6:30 - 8:30 pm

- + flexible hours
- + no experience needed

?s... Stop by the Intramural Office (Room 201a, PEC) or drop by the Officials table at Athletic Information Night (Tues. Sept. 15, Bartlett Gym between 5-7 p.m.)

Winners, Hans Down

In early August the members of Clever Hans released their self-titled . Soon to follow was the CD release party held at the Edward Day Gallery which proved to be a unique highlight for the uprising Queen's band. Their achievement is an important milestone for the future of popular music in a university setting.

Clever Hans relaxes during their CD release party.

PHOTO BY PAUL HEISLER

CD RELEASE PARTY REVIEW

By JOCELYN LAPORTE

On August 8, the Kingston-brewed trio "Clever Hans" released their first CD to a modest yet enthusiastic crowd at Ontario Street's Edward Day Gallery.

Composed of David Cunningham, Justin Morton and Brian Taguchi, Clever Hans delivers a unique combination of sounds with a distinctly modern edge. This former Queen's "Battle of the Bands" finalist presented a collection of video archive footage followed by two musical sets: one acoustic, one electric.

The acoustic set was the more favoured by much of the audience, delivering trendy, folk style tunes. Their song "Burst" combined a pleasantly synchronized combination of acoustic guitars and vocals accompanied by spirited percussion using bongos. "Fresh Horses" was a crowd pleaser with its vocal harmony and sentimental lyrics.

The electric set delivered a much harder edge and incorporated further instruments. In the song "10,000 Volts" Cunningham takes lead vocals with a megaphone, resulting in a strange yet distinctively edgy, modern rock sound. The keyboard and mechanical megaphone beeps provided a unique twist to this alarmingly loud song. One of the lighter songs in the set was "Jamaica Mistake," which offers the currently popular reggae sound supported by heavy percussion.

The band describe themselves as a dynamic modern rock band with a folk twist.

The band describe themselves as a dynamic modern rock band with a folk twist. Their musical inspirations differ significantly, perhaps explaining the band's unique and altering sound. Cunningham cites U2 and Elvis as personal favourites, while Taguchi stems more from bands such as Guns n' Roses and Led Zeppelin and Morton finds his musical inspiration from Bob Marley and Jimmy Hendrix. All agree, however, on Neil Young as one of their biggest influences. "We played a lot of him in the beginning," explained Taguchi.

When asked about the experience of producing their own album, the band expressed their enthusiasm at its positive reception by the Kingston community. "It was a lot of work, but ultimately rewarding" said Cunningham, "we have become so obsessive after doing this... we would keep going back and redoing it." Personal favourites of the band include "Seven Sisters" and "Inside Out." Of the latter Morton commented "it was recorded live at AJ's Hanger... it means a lot to us".

"We do not have a big message, we just enjoy playing...we are a vehicle for each other."

— Brian Taguchi, Clever Hans

The band had various comments regarding the meaning behind their songs. "We do not have a big message, we just enjoy playing...we are a vehicle for each other," stated Taguchi. "Our songs are not played in the obvious, they are stories for us and have a connection to us," Morton added.

The release party performance of Clever Hans and a band interview can be seen on "Wild TV" airing on Cablener after September 14.

If edgy, contemporary rock sound spotted with a selection of folk style acoustic pieces sounds appealing, Clever Hans is worth checking out. Of their new CD Morton jokes, "it's a shiny toy worth hoping for."

Indie films are as good as it gets

Continued from page 29

rather, directors arrange their own resources and ultimately answer to one source — the self.

Tarantino had, in fact, originally met with Paramount executives to discuss Pulp Fiction until the big boys interfered in the director's storybook and insisted upon icing the scene where drug addict, Vincent Vega (played by Mr. Suave — John Travolta), injects heroin into his vein while a cloud of blood is sucked into the capsule of the syringe. "It'll be cool," Tarantino explained to the executives. Paramount balked on the idea, thus Tarantino balked on the entire project and took his fresh sensarion to Miramax.

This is the beauty behind the indie world, its devotion to progression and vision — rather than pure profit.

This is the beauty behind the indie world, its devotion to progression and vision rather than pure profit. Formulas are screwed and new ideas are encouraged.

But, where's the exposure? Often, the best place for an independent to find exposure is at the various festivals, screenings and competitions held year-round for independent film-makers. For more info, get wired and try surfing to "Indiefilms", "The Independent Film and Video Alliance", Film Threat Online" and "Independent Feature Project."

It hasn't been until recently that the indie scene stopped breaking wind and began to break some real ground.

Now, to even scratch the surface of the essence of independent films, which I've hardly done here, there are some great places to check them out. For Kingston residents, the only real options are the video stores and the Princess Court Cinema, which continually plays the best in choice independent flicks.

Check out the scene and we'll see you either on screen, behind the camera, or at the movies!

Feeling Independent? Check out these sites for more information — Good Site Hunting...

www.indiefilms.com

www.culturenet.ca/ifva

www.filmthreat.com

Conodo Computer & Electronics Inc.
 50 Princess Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 1B6 2-215 Talson Rd., Markham, Ontario, L3R 1E7
 Tel: (613) 542-8467 Fax: (613) 542-8729 Tel: (905) 946-9658 Fax: (905) 946-9733

PENTIUM II ASUS PC-100 SYSTEM

ASUS P2B Intel BX Motherboard
 64 MB PC-100 SDRAM Memory
 6.4GB IDE Hard Drive
 Pansonicic 1.44MB Floppy Drive
 Pansonicic 32X IDE CD-ROM
 Full Lower Case w/300 W ATX Power
 Mottox G200 8 MB AGP Video Card
 Creative AWE 64
 15" SVGA Monitor 28mm
 104 Key Keytronic Keyboard PS/2
 2-Button Mouse PS/2
 Alien Lighting ACS 45 Spoofers w/SUB.
 FREE Thrustmaster Joystick!

Intel Pentium II 266 $1488
Intel Pentium II 300 $1509
Intel Pentium II 300A $1635

Intel Pentium II 266 $1688
Intel Pentium II 300 $1748
Intel Pentium II 333 $1788
Intel Pentium II 350 $1948
Intel Pentium II 400 $2098

MMX VALUE SYSTEM

ASUS P2B Intel BX Motherboard
 32 MB SDRAM Memory
 2.5GB IDE Hard Drive
 Pansonicic 1.44MB Floppy Drive
 CompactMidi I/O w/Case At
 14.1" Sound Card
 4 MB Video Onboard
 1" SVGA Monitor 28mm
 104 Key Windows Keyboard
 2-Button Mouse w/PS/2
 Alien Spoofers w/PS/2
 FREE Joystick!

ASUS P2B Intel BX Motherboard
 32 MB SDRAM Memory
 2.5GB IDE Hard Drive
 Pansonicic 1.44MB Floppy Drive
 CompactMidi I/O w/Case At
 14.1" Sound Card
 4 MB Video Onboard
 1" SVGA Monitor 28mm
 104 Key Windows Keyboard
 2-Button Mouse w/PS/2
 Alien Spoofers w/PS/2
 FREE Joystick!

Intel Pentium II 266 $1488
Intel Pentium II 300 $1509
Intel Pentium II 300A $1635

MMX SYSTEM

ASUS P2B Intel BX Motherboard
 32 MB SDRAM Memory
 2.5GB IDE Hard Drive
 Pansonicic 1.44MB Floppy Drive
 CompactMidi I/O w/Case At
 14.1" Sound Card
 4 MB Video Onboard
 1" SVGA Monitor 28mm
 104 Key Windows Keyboard
 2-Button Mouse w/PS/2
 Alien Spoofers w/PS/2
 FREE Joystick!

PENTIUM II VALUE SYSTEM

ASUS P2B Intel BX Motherboard
 32 MB SDRAM Memory
 2.5GB IDE Hard Drive
 Pansonicic 1.44MB Floppy Drive
 CompactMidi I/O w/Case At
 14.1" Sound Card
 4 MB Video Onboard
 1" SVGA Monitor 28mm
 104 Key Windows Keyboard
 2-Button Mouse w/PS/2
 Alien Spoofers w/PS/2
 FREE Joystick!

PENTIUM II SYSTEM

ASUS P2B Intel BX Motherboard
 32 MB SDRAM Memory
 2.5GB IDE Hard Drive
 Pansonicic 1.44MB Floppy Drive
 CompactMidi I/O w/Case At
 14.1" Sound Card
 4 MB Video Onboard
 1" SVGA Monitor 28mm
 104 Key Windows Keyboard
 2-Button Mouse w/PS/2
 Alien Spoofers w/PS/2
 FREE Joystick!

Shinerama
STUDENTS FINDING CRYSTAL FIREBOTS

Queen's University Arts and Science and Nursing Students Would Like to Thank The Following Sponsors For Your Generosity:

Canada's Best Karate 7-11	Sue's Studio Pottery Camera Kingston	Neon Clothing Colborne's TV & Stereo Ltd.	Cards Bakery Tata's Pizza & Pasta
Frontenac Cycle Sport The Buck-It Shop	The Shot Pool Pub Arby's Restaurant	Mr. Alex & Associates Walmart	Redwing Computers Marc Teske Fine Furniture
Kelsey's Morrison's Restaurant	Flower Market Herbies	Bare Trees Hotel Belvedere	Royal Donlon Store Coke
Pirate's Landing Parasail	Blacks Photography	Lone Star Cafe	BlockButter DairyQueen
Frankie Pestos Marlin Travel	Hotel Belvedere	Winners	Taco Bell
Market Salon	Leading Edge Hobbies	Bubba's Pizzeria	Warner & Lambert Canada Inc.
King Kong Video	The Quilter's Choice	Wendy's Restaurant	Bistro Delight
Eastside Mario's Paradise	Color Your World	GAP	Big Screen Entertainment
McMahon's House of Flowers	Foot Locker	Laundry Cafe	Myer's Bulk Food A & P
Central City	Wool-Tyme	Central City	Kingston Fire Department
Automotive Novel Idea	Stradwick Carpet One	Laundry Cafe	The Kingston Whig-Standard
La Senza	Grand & Toy	Central City	The Border 102.7
White Mountain Haircraft	People's Jewelers	Central City	The Queen's Journal
Ho-Lee-Chow Stratford Festival	D'allairds	Central City	Toronto Argonauts
Paul Finkekrein	Warehouse	Central City	Nomax
Alcan Aluminum Ltd. Speedy	Tim Horton's	Central City	Kingston School of Art
Young Canada J & W Laundromat	Oldengreen	Central City	Iron Horse
Bitters & Grapes Peachtree Inn	The Bay	Central City	Sullivan Back-A-Roos
The Lighting Depot Framing & Art Centre	Cookies Old World Shop Ltd.	Central City	Executrans
Hillary's Cleaners Karate Place	Shop Ltd.	Central City	Petals & Brushstrokes
College Book Merchant Classic Video	Toronto Argonauts	Central City	BlackstarBody Piercing
Money Concepts Grizzly Grill	GTO 960	Central City	Denny's
	Counrty 96	Central City	Mid-town Manor
	The River 103.7	Central City	Yuletown Cafe & Desserts
	1380 Radio	Central City	Mason Paul Coiffure
	Fly FM 98.3	Central City	Kingston Guns & Tackle
	CKWS Television	Central City	Princess Court Cinema
	Za Master Slice	Central City	House of Sounds
	Wendy's	Central City	The Carriage Way
	Burger King	Central City	Modern Furniture Co.
	McDonald's	Central City	Christmas Magic
	Pizza Hut	Central City
	Jambalya Soup & Chili	Central City
	Pan Chancho's Bakery	Central City
	The Cocomo	Central City
	Domino's Pizza	Central City
	VIP Chinese Restaurant	Central City
	Bamboo Garden & Takeout	Central City
	All Kingston Residents	Central City

students

club ck

get a year's worth of savings with your club ck discount card!

our downtown store is open 7 days a week

Monday-Friday 9-9
 Saturday 9-5.30
 Sunday 11-5

.one hour photo .video .digital imaging
 .complete in-house photofinishing services
 .darkroom supplies .rentals .repairs
 .passport photos .used equipment .photo restoration

Camera Kingston

650 Bath@Gardiner's 384.3747
 114 Princess@Wellington 549.3747

Want to experience another part of the world but don't know... where to turn?

The Queen's International Centre can help.

Participate in the Fall Information Sessions to learn about working, studying and volunteering abroad. Challenge another student to a game of table tennis in the Ed Churchill Hall of Friendship.

If you've already been abroad or you're an international student, join our Country Representatives Program and share your experience with other internationally-minded Queen's students. Drop in to the Centre's lounge and relax with a cup of tea or coffee.

Volunteer at the Centre by tutoring ESL, advising in our library and assisting with our programs.

Use our Resource Library and visit our Homepage at <http://www.quic.queensu.ca> to identify your options for education abroad.

Up-Coming Events
 Crossing Cultures Discussion Group: Wed., Sept. 16, 5:30 p.m.
 Re-entry Orientation and Potluck: Sun., Sept. 20, 4:00 p.m.
 Crossing Borders Work/Study Abroad Fair: Wed., Oct. 7

The International Centre
 at Queen's University
 in the John Deutsch University Centre
 just past the Queen's Pub
 Tel: (613) 545-2604 Fax: (613) 545-6190
<http://www.quic.queensu.ca>

Classifieds

Just $4 for students

• $10 for local • $15 for national

Classifieds are due Friday by noon for Tuesday and on Tuesday by 2 p.m. for Friday publications.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WONDERING ABOUT RELATIONSHIPS, career etc? Seeking direction? Experience greater self-awareness with Tarot, palmistry, runes, and more. Clients say my readings are inspirational and very accurate. I also offer classes in meditation, Tarot, etc. For more information phone Kellye at 544-1909. Also available Fridays and Saturdays at "Harmony", 93 Princess St. Walk in or pre-book at 544-7897. Tape included.

PROFESSIONAL TUTORING and Editing. Are you achieving the grades you deserve? Improve your essay skills, editing, research and writing. E.S.L. a specialty. Phone 416 280-6113, fax 416 960-0240.

PRIMA COMPUTER BOOKS. The most important peripherals you'll ever own. Ask in the Campus Bookstore. Fast and easy; In A Weekend; Admin Guides and more...

GRADLINK is a service linking graduate students for mutual support. Call Student Counselling service for more information at 545-2893.

MARVELLOUS MENU STUDENT MEAL PLAN Home cooked nutritious meals delivered to you for under $5.00 per meal. Meals made to your specifications. ready for the microwave or oven. Student specials are available. For more information call Kathy Monday to Friday at 531-4265.

AUDITIONS: Flower Power - The 60's revisited. 3 leads needed to play older non-musical parts. 4 leads needed to play late teens/early twenties parts with singing. For info call Jesse Stewart at Sunesis Productions 546-0432.

MOODMASTER IS A GROUP FOR STUDENTS who have been diagnosed with depression or Bi Polar disorder. Its purpose is to provide mutual support for members and to encourage life styles that promote health. If you want to know more...call the Counselling service at 545-2893.

COMING TO QUEEN'S FROM OUTSIDE CANADA? We buy most foreign currencies at very good rates without service charge or commission. Check our website: www.wellingtonlx.on.ca. Wellington Foreign Exchange 153 Wellington Street, 531-8731.

SPRINGBREAK Daytona Beach, Panama City, South Padre, Mexico. Best hotels, parties, price. Book early and save!! Earn money and trips! Campus Reps/Organizations wanted. Call Inter-Campus Programs 1 800 327-6013 www.icpt.com

PUNK ROCK! I play guitar and drums and I want to join or form a local punk band. Info call Ron at 531-4582.

FOR SALE/FOR RENT

FOR SALE: An up-right piano for sale. No reasonable offer refused. Please call Gabriele at 545-6711 for details.

FOR SALE: Eng jacket. Hardly worn, size 44. $225 or best offer. Call 531-3584.

FOR SALE: Almost new, solid pine tution with armrests. would make a perfect couch for your "ghetto" home and it folds down into a spare bed. $300.00. Call 549-3032.

FOR SALE: 1984 Audi GT Coupe, V5, metallic blue, excellent body, winter radials. $2300.00. Certified. Call 549-0727.

HELP WANTED

HEBREW Language teachers wanted to teach Sunday School to the children of Congregation IyHa Melech. Contact Karen Grossman at 549-3110.

LOOKING FOR A JOB? Part-time employment opportunities at Queen's telefundraising. Applications at the Old Medical Building, room 303 and Career Services. Deadline: September 17th, 1998 at noon. Info: 545-6746.

DAY CO-ORDINATOR AND VOLUNTEERS WANTED! The Infobank is seeking volunteers for one hour shifts per week and day co-ordinators. Experience is not required. Come have fun with us! Applications can be picked up at the Infobank or AMS office. For info call Jen at 531-3310 or Karyn at 531-5459.

WANTED: Note takers for all courses to assist students with disabilities. Training provided. Call Scia at Disability Services - 545-6467.

FEMALE COMPANION wanted for 8 year old twins and their 6 year old sister. Some evenings and weekends. Drivers license (not car) required. Call Allyson at 549-3966.

CAREGIVER needed to look after a 4 year old 12 to 15 hours per week, primarily mornings. Experience with young children required. Call 531-4080.

HELEN TUFTS TUTORIAL/FRIENDSHIP PROGRAM orientation at Sydenham United Church, second floor, corner of William and Sydenham Streets. Monday, September 14th or Thursday, September 17th at 6:30 p.m. We need volunteer tutors to help children develop their Academic and social skills. Call 547-2683.

WOULD YOU LIKE to work with children in the Kingston Community? Please come to an orientation session at Sydenham United Church, Sydenham and William Streets on Monday, September 14th or Thursday, September 17th at 6:30 p.m. or call 547-2683.

PART-TIME NANNY NEEDED Nanny to look after a 9, 8, and 2 year old. Must be able to travel to the United States. Must be able to swim. Working primarily on some week nights and Saturday and Sundays. Require references and job experiences. Send resume to Gregg Rosen at P.O. Box 300 Kingston, ON K7L 4W1 or call 544-1822 Monday - Friday, 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

LOVE KIDS? Love the outdoors? Scouts, Cubs and Beavers near West Campus need you. Call 544-2286.

LOST AND FOUND

LOST: Diamond engagement ring lost sometime after Wednesday September 2nd in Johnson St. Queen's area. Reward if found. Please call 536-1679.

FOUND At the Campus Bookstore an envelope containing wedding photos. Thompson from Walmart. Can be picked up at the Customer Service desk.

THE JOURNAL CROSSWORD

Canadian Criss Cross by Walter D. Feener

- ACROSS
- Dress trimming
  - Let it stand
  - Ship of the desert
  - Mattress stuffing material
  - Taste
  - Heaven of earth
  - Money exchange fee
  - Sister
  - Walk heavily
  - Female swans
  - Awkward boats
  - Compass point
  - Go round
  - Barrels
  - News article
  - Unit of magnetic induction
  - Town neighboring a castle
  - Voiceless sound
  - Great boxer
  - Paradise
  - dixit
  - "Wizard of Oz" dog
  - Destructive pest
  - Follow stealthily
  - Riddle
- DOWN
- Street urchin
  - Quack
  - Pharmacy honey
  - Full attendance
  - Black and white animal
  - Make lace
  - Epic poetry
  - Half clothed
  - Elevator car
  - Newsstands
  - Vital fluid
  - Long time
  - Vase
  - Marring mark
  - Drive onward
  - Tryout
  - Goodbye
  - College fee
  - Brunhild's husband
  - Diminish
  - Kind of horse
  - Apothecary measures
  - Not coming back
  - Location
  - Loop trains
  - Make eyes at
  - Assembled
  - Pay dirt

Answers for last issue's puzzle.

YOU'RE A SMART PERSON. Doing the crossword. You want more of a challenge. I know you do. The Journal needs your help. We are looking for an assistant news editor, a computer systems manager and ads designers. It's a great time. And a challenge. And, being the crossword-doing super star that you are, you need a challenge. We'll even give you free food on press nights. Call Tara, Keith or Laura at 545-2800, e-mail us at journal@post.queensu.ca or stop by 272 Earl St. for more info. We know you want to.

UP TO THIRTY WORDS FOR ONE LOW PRICE. STOP BY THE JOURNAL HOUSE AT 272 EARL STREET OR CALL THE BUSINESS TEAM AT 545-6711 TO BOOK YOUR CLASSIFIED AD TODAY.

Queen's Project International Development

WANTED:

Director Projects Campus/Manager Activities Coordinator

REWARD:
New futures for communities here and across the globe

Applications are available in the Engineering Society Lounge, Clark Hall. Due date is Sept. 23

Kinsmen Club of Kingston

AUDITIONS
for the "new, exciting & uplifting" musical The Secret Garden

Books and Lyrics by Marsha Norman Music by Lucy Simon based on the novel by Frances Hodgson Burnett

CAST NEEDED

1 GIRL (WHO CAN ACT, SING AND DANCE) 10 - 14 YEARS

1 BOY (WHO CAN ACT, SING AND DANCE) 10 - 14 YEARS

1 BOY (WHO CAN ACT, SING AND DANCE) 14 - 16 YEARS

ADULTS (WHO CAN ACT, SING AND DANCE) 18 YEARS AND UP

Where: Grand Theatre, Princess Street
When: Tuesday, September 15th, 1998
5:30 - 7:00 p.m. boys and girls 10 - 16 years
7:30 - 9:00 p.m. adults
Wednesday, September 16th, 1998
6:00 - 8:00 p.m. adults

For further information, contact Moira Davies, Artistic Director at 389-1590

IT'S UP TO YOU TO get listed! IN THE WHO'S WHERE

what if that cute classmate wants to call you to set a time to "study"? or maybe your prof wants to let you have that extension. well, if you're not listed in the WHO'S WHERE, then how are they gonna find you? why?

how?

WHEN YOU REGISTER, you will be shown a screen in which you OPT-IN BY ENTERING 'Y' beside the listings you want included. Press ENTER to update.

AFTER YOU REGISTER, you can check & update your settings via QCard menu option 12.

LAST DAY TO UPDATE IS MONDAY, SEPT 21st!

press ENTER to update

Punky and the window closed

Shorter Prose by Megan Webster

You like to sleep with the window open, I like to sleep with the window closed, so goodbye, goodbye, goodbye.
— Paul Simon

SUMMERTIME: good-byes being said (over and over), I am irritated to find that I can't even sleep with the window closed anymore. I miss the stars, but they remind me of you. Paul didn't get to what happens after you leave: insomnia and a cold bed. What happens then?

furthest corner of my closet with all those other secrets. I'm a disaster. "My missing piece," he'd said once upon a snuggle. "You make me whole." I had agreed, happily, at the same time somewhat tragically. Flattery had me words. Instead, from my mouth came rational philosophizing about the importance of independence, our conflicts of fundamental values, and my inability to further tolerate his propensity for the drink and other women. He should have just some reason take me back after I'd ditched them for some loser two years ago. They tell me they never liked him anyway, which burns my ass and they know it, but hey, I'm the ditcher. I deserve all of the deadly, subtle feminine revenge that I have coming.

It be true that romance can be reduced to the existential dilemma? Am I over intellectualizing? The entire existential dilemma? Whoah. When it comes down to it, what may be controlling my life is actually my attraction to khakis.

- It wasn't all that cosmic anyway.
- a.) He was gorgeous.
- b.) He thought I was gorgeous.
- c.) He read.
- d.) He rolled the bottoms of his khakis in the cutest way.
- e.) He called me "punk."

And from this, soul mates?

From punky to chaos?

We are much less complicated than we would like to think.

My bed still warm with his imprint, I force myself to deal with the stuffiness of a closed window, because I think that's probably what I would have done had I never been with him. I cry and cry; twist and wring myself like an eternally soaked j-cloth.

I re-arrange the photos in my frames and put all those ridiculous letters in a shoebox, tape it shut and put it in the wound tight. I felt secretly guilty for feeling complete before him.

When I sat him down on the couch and started the speech I should have had cue cards for, I could have simply used Paul's asked me once if I liked the window open or closed before we fell asleep.

So goodbye. I call my friends who for Eventually, I start to like sleeping with the window closed again. And then one cloudy afternoon I realize — no contracts! No more obligatory mix tapes! No more surprise gropes when I'm trying to talk to my mum on the phone! No more "I'm having so much fun" smiles for his grotesque friends! I like having my life to myself.

I'm over it I think to myself. Yay for me. But then, the intense realization of my absurdity starts to set in. When it hits: it's big. The embarrassing truth that my life is not as fatalistically controlled as Sunday school would have me believe. Meant To Be With Him. Could boom boom of Will Smith and Aqua. I hear that raspy voice. I see bottom-rolled khakis. I see That Arm (the one I slept next to for two years!) around Kelly's waist. Why is fat the first thing I feel? He hated Kelly! He thought she laughed too loud! I feel like telling her he said that.

But wait... There's random boy #1. You know what happens. He's that great guy from my history class with the dimples.

The dimples?

Megan Webster is a second-year english major who likes the beach and long walks, yet not both at the same time.

MISC

WRITE! THINGS!

Funny things, Serious things, Things people need to hear because YOU thought of them.

Call Ken at 545-2800.

Asia Africa ... South America ...

'Home for the Holidays' 'Travelling for the Holidays'

Christmas space CRITICAL! Let us reserve now.

Tokyo	from 1239	Round World - Bare Bones	1869
Rio	from 869	Round World	2599
Nairobi	from 1499	via South Pacific
Paris	from 1349	South Pacific	1939
Quito	from 649	via Asia
Bombay	from 1369	Circle Pacific	2399
Bangkok	from 1129

ODYSSEY TRAVEL

186 Princess St., Kingston (at Montreal)

Leisure Travel 549-3553 Long Haul/Group Travel 549-3561

Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

ACCIDENT WITNESSES SOUGHT

On March 12, 1997, a fatal accident occurred on Division Street at Elliott Avenue in the City of Kingston. The accident resulted in the death of a Kingston resident, Philip Quattrocchi. The province's Special Investigations Unit (SIU) is conducting an investigation into the accident. Investigators have information that one or more Queens University female students may have witnessed the incident or know the identity of someone who has. If so, we would like to speak with you.

Anyone with information please call Bruce Potts, at the SIU: 1-800-787-8529 or 416-314-2915

GIRLS JUST WANT TO HAVE FUN:

Boys might want more

THE ADOLESCENT YOUTH OF TODAY. Though they are perhaps less easily influenced than their younger counterparts (for instance those reported to respond to the Power Rangers by harmfully mimicking the pseudo-martial arts moves they see on television), the pre-teen and early teen age bracket are nonetheless susceptible to images and messages portrayed by the mass media. Resisting the rules and expectancies of authority figures such as parents and teachers requires youth to piece a great deal of their identity together

Backstreet Boys exemplify refusal to morally sanitize musical content. From the opening track of the Boys' second album posing the imperative and urgent question "Am I sexual?" it is apparent that the Backstreet Boys are bent on singing of sex and monogamy despite the fact their audience consists of minors in the majority. The grownup themes in their lyrics are laughable, yet somewhat eerie. I wonder how the emotional sentiment expressed in "I'll never break your heart" affects your average 10-year-old's understanding of the permanence of pre-pubescent relationships.

refer to are the internationally recognized and renowned Spice Girls, hailing from Britain, and the Backstreet Boys, an American export. The similarity of each supergroup in music genre, perceived attitude and listening audience facilitates their comparison. Note the debate over artistic freedom does not apply here, for the debate lacks an artist whose creative expression is in contention. There is only the pool of songwriters tailor-making their pieces to the taste of the managers and executives, thereby giving up their free-reigning artistic license.

Though merchandizing was adjusted accordingly — seeing the release of products such as candy and sticker collections — the content of the album itself remained unalterable. Concern for the tender ears of the mass audience raised the issue of the appropriateness of songs such as "Wannabe" with its refrain "If you want to be my lover" and the erotic tone of sexual anticipation in the song "2 become 1."

When the original Spice Girls album was released, record executives were both pleased by its immediate commercial success and surprised by the audience the group garnered. Targeted at the 18 - 25 year old age bracket, demographics revealed that the audience was in fact made up primarily of 8 - 15 year olds.

In short, those in charge recognized that the subject matter of the group's music ought to cater to the moral expectancies of consumer overseers, chiefly parents. Thus, songs of friendship and human kindness such as "Stop right now (Thank you very much)" on the Spice Girl's follow-up "SpiceWorld" substituted for the strong sexual overtones of the previous album.

It's difficult to say what a supergroup ought to do if a very young age bracket identifies with and attaches itself to a particularly sexually proactive music act. Should there be an immediate change in the overall moral tone of the music, as in the case of the Spice Girls? Should it ignore appropriate content based on demographics and pump out a carbon copy of the original in an attempt to repeat commercial success, like the Backstreet Boys? In my opinion, if a corporate enterprise is intent on appealing to an audience desiring lunchboxes that bear the group's decal, then they ought to recognize the degree of influence they potentially exert and market their product accordingly.

The Spice Girls and the Backstreet Boys, seen as commercial products, ought to be as morally accountable for their content as Saturday morning television programs or arcade games.

Perhaps the confusion of corporate pop-stars with genuine musical artists/bands has more to do with this moral oversight than anything else. It just seems that if television is governed by merciless moral watchdogs, then so should the vast commercial giants known as musical supergroups.

By Ken Butland

1 OLYMPIC HOUR PHOTO

$2.00 OFF PLUS

FREE FILM OR FREE 2NDSET OR FREE 5x7 ENLARGEMENT

See Store For Details!

- Passport / Citizenship Photo
- Enlargements / Frames
- Camera / Films / Accessories

545-5998
346 Princess St.

"CUT ME OUT AND SAVE!"

Take Part In Your Student Newspaper

The Queen's Journal Board of Directors is seeking new members for the 1998-99 year.

TWO STUDENTS-AT-LARGE

The student-at-large positions are open to any Queen's students, and will be appointed by the editors-in-chief.

ONE STUDENT CONTRIBUTOR/STAFF

The student contributor/staff positions is open to anyone who has contributed to The Journal a minimum of two times in writing, graphic design, website design or photography. The student contributor/staff will be elected in late September.

Those chosen will sit as a voting member of The Journal Board of Directors. As a member you will attend a meeting once every two weeks and help guide the operations of The Journal.

Contact Laura at 545-2800 or via e-mail at

HIRING! HIRING! HIRING! HIRING! HIRING! HIRING!

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL IS HIRING.

Assistant News Editor

As assistant news editor, you will be a member of the news team. You will be involved in the writing and editing of news, and designing the news section.

Computer Systems Manager

As systems manager, you will be an on-call computer resource for The Journal, assisting with maintenance and trouble-shooting.

Ads Designers

As an ads designer you will be responsible for designing and supervising display advertisements. You will be a member of the business team at The Journal.

Journal House Cleaner

We are looking for someone to clean The Journal house on a weekly basis.

If you are interested, contact Tara or Keith at 545-2800, send us e-mail at journal@post.queensu.ca, or stop by 272 Earl St.

APPLICATION DEADLINE: FRIDAY, SEPT. 25 @ 5 P.M.

HIRING! HIRING! HIRING! HIRING! HIRING! HIRING!

queen's pub

ABSOLUTLEY NEW

100% EXPANDED

New Look. New Atmosphere. So $%#$* cool!
 Sept 19th: Craig Cardiss
 Blue Screen White Noise

It's A Fact!
 The Campus Bookstore has been buying and selling used books for over 30 years.
 Campus Bookstore - 11th Floor
 11th Floor, 11th Street, University

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
 since 1873

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
 General Travel: 549-3553
 Long Haul / Groups: 549-3561

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1998

Dial again
On-campus phones go haywire

By LAURA MACINNIS

Students living in residence are going to have to spend the next few weeks making conversation with each other.

An overload in the university phone system is preventing anyone with a Queen's phone number from making or receiving calls outside the system in the evenings and on weekends.

The problem stems from this summer's addition of 3,500 new residence phone-lines to the Queen's network, and an unanticipated volume of calls made from the residence lines, which are set up with flat-rate, unlimited long-distance calling after 6 p.m. and on weekends.

The residence phone system, called ResTel, is new this year. Instead of setting up their own Bell accounts, first-year students are set up with a Queen's phone in their room, at a cost of approximately $245, which is included in their residence fees.

The increased volume of calls from the internal system has overwhelmed the Queen's network, so callers are facing busy signals and long waits when they try to reach anyone off campus.

Many first-year students are frustrated with the ResTel system, suggesting the blocked phone lines and long delays outweigh the convenience of setting up their own Bell system.

"For urgent calls, they're telling us to use pay phones," said Jocelyne Gall, Arts '02. "If you don't have a calling card, it's really expensive."

John Anderson, Sci '02, said he is very frustrated with the long waits on his residence line. "How long should I have to wait? It's just absurd," he said.

"If I could dial out no problem to Kingston and had to wait for long distance, that would be alright, but the only time I can get through is past 11:30 or 12 at night," he said.

The network overload may also constitute a safety hazard for residents and university staff working in the evenings.

"There are a lot of safety

Please see Frustrate on page 3

Students enjoy the sun outside of Stauffer library.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Three students harassed by calls

By FIONA STEVENSON

The arrest of a classmate last week brought some closure to three female Queen's students who took action after receiving a series of threatening calls this summer.

Third-year students and housemates Lidia Palik and Kathy Harger said they were unprepared for the calls they began to receive in late spring. The calls were primarily hang-ups and were relatively infrequent, Harger said.

"We thought it was some stupid kid," Palik said.

A friend, Natalie Chung, began to receive the same types of calls at her home during the summer, beginning in July. Chung also received an unaddressed letter in the mail entitled "Last Request," she said. Chung said she suspected the letter was written by a classmate named Karlos Adam. "I recognized the handwriting [on the envelope] and the grammatical style," she said. The letter also referred to incidents which had occurred between the two individuals.

Palik was also acquainted with Adam, who she said was attracted to Chung and wanted Palik's help "to get her."

Chung said the writer of the letter blamed her for giving him a brain tumour and asked that she inform his mother he would die in two weeks. Chung brought the letter to Kingston Police, who later reported the incident to Queen's Security, before she left Kingston for home in mid-August.

At this time, calls to Palik and Harger's home began to increase in frequency. "The first documented call that we have was on the 27th of August," said Palik. Using Call Display and contacting a Bell Canada operator, they were able to determine that the call was made from a pay phone on campus. Palik called Campus Security and officials determined that the phone call was made from the Victoria School Building pay phone, Palik said.

The housemates then decided to keep a log documenting all unidentified calls they received at their home. They began to use Bell Canada's Call Trace service (*57) after each of these calls. The service allowed Bell Canada to maintain a list of the time and date of the calls, although the source of the calls could only be accessed by a Kingston Police officer with a search warrant.

On September 1, Palik and Harger traced 58 calls made between 12:01 a.m. and 10:59 p.m. "One night [the harasser] called us, in the space of four hours, 47 times," said Harger, adding that the figure does not include calls made when their phone was in use, their ringer was off, or when they were too tired to trace the call.

In most cases, the caller would hang up, blow in the phone, or shout one-word insults. Sometimes the housemates heard what they described as ethnic music playing when they picked up the phone, Palik said. After a few of these calls, Palik remembered Chung describing a phone call she received during the summer in which all she could hear was strange music playing. When Palik made the link between the two cases, she called Queen's Security.

Please see Closure on page 3

Education students strike

By RENEE HUANG

As the Ontario teacher's strike moves into its second week of negotiations and lock-outs, 33 Queen's University education students who are fulfilling their fall practicum in schools across the province are currently not in school.

Brian McAndrews, practicum coordinator for the Faculty of Education, said 583 teacher candidates are presently spread around eastern and central Ontario in extended practicum work placements.

"It's accurate to say that 33 teacher candidates have been on strike with the boards we placed them with since September 8," McAndrews said. The percentage of teacher candidates who are affected by the strike is actually quite low, he explained.

Initially, the Faculty of Education told the students to "wait and see" if the strike situation would be resolved quickly. McAndrews said the faculty did not want candidates to transfer schools unnecessarily if the strike was going to be resolved soon.

After four days of waiting, the faculty drafted a contingency plan for the teaching candidates, allowing them to seek alternate teaching placements with private schools in other

index

Volume 126, Issue 6
 www.journal.queensu.ca

News	1	Features	15
Editorials	6	A&E	19
Opinions	7	Classifieds	26
Science	8	Crossword	27
Sports & Fitness	9	M.S.C.	28

WEATHERWATCH

Today Sunny with clouds High 21°C, Low 9°C, POP 10%	Sunday Sunny with rain High 25°C, Low 14°C, POP 60%
Saturday Sunny with clouds High 24°C, Low 12°C, POP 20%	Monday Sunny with rain High 25°C, Low 14°C, POP 40%

Please see Crisis on page 2

Better Get Yo Rest 'Cause...

Alumni Weekend is in ONE WEEK!

September 23 - 27th

It's gonna be KRA-ZEE!

The AW committee still needs YOU to help it run smooth-ee. Sign up for event planning, marketing, sidewalk sale, Kill McGill rallies, advertising and other phat-tastic stuff!

Call the CAC for more deets!

Campus Activities
Commission

545-6000
ext 4819

CONSULTANT POSITIONS

Available for Highly Qualified Queen's University Undergraduate Students of All Academic Disciplines

We are seeking candidates with outstanding academic records, strong interpersonal skills, and demonstrated achievement in extra-curricular activities. Monitor's high-energy environment provides an exceptional opportunity for continual learning and challenge. We use leading-edge strategy concepts and a team-based, collaborative approach to help Fortune 500 companies and their international equivalents formulate and implement business strategy.

WE WOULD WELCOME YOUR ATTENDANCE AT EITHER OF OUR INFORMATION SESSIONS TO BE HELD WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 23RD, 1998, 4:00 - 5:30 AND 6:00 - 7:30 AT THE QUEEN'S PUB.

Applications consisting of a covering letter, résumé and transcript are due at the Career Services office by September 30th, for interviews on October 19th and 20th.

For more information, please ask for our Job and Company Description at the Career Services Office, visit our Website at www.monitor.com, or contact:

Warren Brown
Monitor Company,
The Monitor Building
100 Simcoe St., 5th Floor
Toronto, Ontario, M5H 3G2
Tel# (416) 408-4800, Fax# (416) 408-4848

MONITOR COMPANY

Amsterdam, Athens, Cambridge, Frankfurt, Hong Kong, Istanbul, Johannesburg, London, Los Angeles, Madrid, Manila, Milan, Moscow, Munich, New Delhi, New York, Paris, São Paulo, Seoul, Singapore, Stockholm, Tel Aviv, Tokyo, Toronto, Zurich

"A great place for optimists to try to change the world"

Strike 'unusual crisis'

Continued from page 1

school districts, if they so wished. It was also up to the students to decide whether they wanted to strike along with the teachers in their district, he added.

However, candidates must adhere to an Ontario Teachers' Association policy that restricts teacher candidates from being reassigned to the same or neighbouring boards if teachers are striking. Candidates must be reassigned to different districts in other parts of the province.

Difficulties arise, McAndrews explained, when school districts amalgamate boundaries and candidates must cross larger distances to relocate. Such is the case with the greater Toronto board which now consists of one large district in the place of seven smaller ones, he said. "The perimeter of the board is huge."

Greg Frankson, Con-Ed '97, is an education student whose practicum is affected by the teacher's strike. He agreed that the limitations imposed by strike policies make it difficult criteria for candidates to follow, especially when their priority is finding an alternative placement.

"Realistically we can't teach anywhere in the golden horseshoe," Frankson said, because the Toronto board "wipes out a huge geographic area. We're talking Coburg to Etobicoke east, and up to Barrie in the north."

Frankson has been teaching at Lake of Two Mountains High School in Montreal, Quebec since Tuesday. He was previously placed at a high school in Whitby that was affected by the Durham Board strike.

"It's been really tough on some people in my section," Frankson said. "I do think that it caused me some worry." He found it frustrating as a student "to have all the rules completely altered by rules beyond your control."

"It's been really tough on some people in my section. I do think that it caused me some worry."

— Greg Frankson, Con-Ed '97

Frankson added that although his work is being counted towards his 16-week practicum with the Faculty of Education, there is still an eight-week Ontario Ministry of Education requirement he and other out-of-province teacher candidates will have to fulfill.

"That is the rule that is causing us the most stress," he said. "I don't think it'll have a major negative effect," Frankson continued. "They'll have to do some tinkering for us."

Education students have another option open to them, explained McAndrews. The usual format for an education degree includes learning alternative forms of teaching, such as focusing on troubled teens in group homes, in the winter term.

"Because of the unusual crisis we're in now... teacher candidates could do alternative placements in the fall," instead of completing them in the winter, McAndrews said.

Transgendered speaker enlightens Queen's

By JOCELYN LAPORTE

"I was both apart from [the female] world and a part of it," said transgendered speaker Max Valerio of his 32 years inside a woman's body. He spoke Monday night in the John Deutsch University Centre, beginning Queerorientation Week activities, which end with a social at Club 477 tonight.

Associate professor of political studies Eleanor MacDonald, commented that "the timing was really only luck." MacDonald knew Valerio was going to be in the area and believed he would be a great start to the week.

Alma Mater Society Social Issues Commissioner Naomi Brunemeyer, one of the organizers of Queerorientation

Week, said they saw a great opportunity to get Valerio to Queen's because of his eloquent speaking ability and the importance of his message to both the homosexual and heterosexual communities. "He has a unique perspective of the stereotypes both face," said Brunemeyer.

"The issue of transgender is only recently becoming understood and politicised... people are curious to understand the differences," MacDonald said.

A female-to-male poet and writer based in San Francisco, Valerio read excerpts from his soon-to-be-published book, The Joker's Wild - Changing Sex and Other Crimes of Passion.

"We are the furthest, most extreme example of manipulation of the body," he said of transgendered individuals.

"Our lives are recovered by science... we are thieves of technology."

A former lesbian, Valerio recalled feeling "more like a man... I wasn't like the other lesbians." For years, he said, his feelings stemmed from living in a society in which women are oppressed. Valerio's gender transformation has changed his perceptions in such a way that he no longer identifies with the female culture. Of his former lesbian friends, he said, "Now these women speak in another language... [It is] like watching a part of myself die."

Valerio referred his gender change, made possible through testosterone injections, as "an act of subverting nature's... authority."

"[It is] extreme, far fetched and magical," he said, adding that while he feels more human than before, he recognizes that he is more strange.

Valerio's second reading detailed the first few years following his intramuscular testosterone injections which began in 1989, when Valerio was 32. "This first shot is what I waited for... [it was] my walk off the precipice," Valerio recalled. As he entered the first stages of his male life, Valerio said he felt as if "the doors [were] blasted open."

Valerio remembers being acutely sensitive to the changes in his body. His hips and thighs became smaller, his hands became stronger, his skin was tougher and his voice would shift between high and low tones. He described this period as his "second adolescence." He said it was at this time that he began to understand the energy of the male culture which resounds in teenage boys and male groups. "Testosterone is patty energy," he quipped.

People who meet Valerio now "just assume I am a man," he said, and most people are accepting of his trans-sexuality.

A large portion of Valerio's speech detailed his experiences with a new-found sexual frustration. "It's an unrelenting obsession, I see sex everywhere," he said of his early days. "Before taking testosterone I could have never imagined this intensity in sexual drive."

Valerio said his new awareness has helped him understand why, when he was a woman, he felt that men were obsessed with sexuality. Before, he believed the focus originated from a hostility toward women, but now he understands it as lust. At the same time, Valerio can relate to what it is like to be a woman being watched and leered at, "so I curb my urges... learning to control or sublimate these impulses," he said.

Valerio said the change in his gender has forced him to reexamine all previously formed notions he held concerning gender, culture, politics and society. "The world has altered by degrees," he said.

Students find closure

Continued from page 1

"We hadn't made the connection [between the two cases] at all," said Director of Queen's Security Louise Fish, adding, "The fact that we had two files going helped make that connection."

"Shortly after I made the connection I answered the phone with 'Hi Karlos' and [the caller] said hi," Palik said. She asked why he had been calling them and [the caller] accused the women of sending him e-mails and letters, and calling him early in the morning, Palik said.

On September 6, while Palik's sister was visiting her in Kingston, Palik's sister's boyfriend intercepted a call from the perpetrator. "He threatened to put a bomb in our house," Kathy said. The harasser called a second time, at about 1:30 a.m., and made a second threat, Palik said. She reported both incidents to the Kingston Police that evening.

"When he threatened me that's when I got really scared," said Palik. By the next day Kingston Police had accumulated enough evidence to make an arrest. Charged with criminal harassment, Karlos Orousis Adam spent the evening of September 7 in jail before he was released on bail the next day. Adam first appeared in court on September 15 and his next appearance is scheduled for October 13.

Adam could not be reached by The Journal for comment.

Despite his arrest, Adam will be permitted to continue his studies at Queen's.

"We're keeping an eye on him to make sure that kind of behaviour does not persist," Fish said. "He has restrictions pertaining to not contacting [Chung, Harger and Palik] and not engaging in those kinds of activities."

Palik explained that, "At first I was so annoyed that they were making so many provisions for him." However, Palik said she now understands that, "One of the main reasons he's allowed to stay at the school is that they could put more regulations on him... Queen's isn't letting him get away with it."

Said Harger: "I think it's probably a good idea that he's back at Queen's because at least he can go on, finish his education, get the help he needs and leave us alone."

The girls said they remain shaken by the incident. "It was terrible. I broke down crying so many times," said Harger.

"It was totally unprovoked," said Palik. "We were just acquaintances from class."

"We're also curious to know how he got so much information about us," Palik added. "To this day we don't even know his phone number."

Fish stressed that all incidents of harassment should be reported to security. "It's really important that you don't just ignore it," she said. "You see so many of these things get out of hand."

"At least these young women have the comfort of knowing who he is and that he's in a bit of trouble right now," Fish added.

The victims would like to encourage students who experience harassment to contact security. "They really took our concerns seriously," said Palik. The victims also recommended students keep a log and not change their phone number.

"We're glad that we didn't give in that easily. We didn't let him win," said Harger.

"Basically I'm just glad it's all being resolved. Hopefully it's going to stop

Phones frustrate

Continued from page 1

concerns," said Laura Green, Arts '99, a residence don in Victoria Hall. Green said while 911 and Queen's emergency numbers are still working, students cannot reach crisis counsellors or taxi cabs without a pay phone.

"It's next to impossible to get a local telephone line," she said.

Further, residence students have become stranded when calling from off-campus lines. "I had a resident who tried to call me from downtown, and she couldn't get through to me in the evening," she said. "It's my job to be there so that people can get through to me, and they can't."

September is also a busy month for phone calls home, but homesick students are often not able to reach external numbers during the affected windows of time.

"It's a very crucial time for [students]," Green said. "We tell them that they can always phone home, that's their safety net. Right now, that safety net has got a really big hole in it."

Green feels the ResTel phone system was brought in too early. "If it wasn't up and ready to go without major glitches, then it shouldn't have been implemented this year," she said.

Graham Brown, director of residences, said the phone problems are due to last-minute long distance changes, not poor planning on the university's part.

The telephone network was installed over the summer to accommodate the expected amount of service from residence students. However, the late-summer changes in long distance plans from pay-as-you-go to flat-rate, unlimited calling changed demands drastically.

"The volume of calls is beyond anyone's anticipation," said Brown. "It's a new world, really, in terms of long-distance rates."

Stan Yagi, director of Information Technology Services, echoed Brown's

Due to the overwhelming backlog of on-campus calls, students must use pay phones for personal calls.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

sentiments. "We had done our predictions, but we were counting on traffic to be pay-as-you-use," he said. "The big, big curveball that got thrown at us was the flat-rate $20 unlimited long-distance plan."

In the meantime, Residence Life is asking students to limit their phone calls in the evening and to make local calls in non-peak hours whenever possible.

"If 3,500 people want to stay on the phone all night, that's going to be a problem," said Yagi. "We're asking for a little constraint for the short-run."

More upgrades to the network are planned, which Jack Henderson, manager of telecommunications (audio and video) for ITS, said should more than double the network original capacity and solve the current problems.

Yagi said the expansion project should be finished by October 8, with a cost of "several tens of thousands dollars" over the year.

Lidia Palik, Kathy Harger and Natalie Chung remain shaken by incident.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

THE JOURNAL

Want a job?

Assistant News Editor

We're looking for an enthusiastic and self-motivated person with some free time and on ear to the ground. Writing experience a plus.

Advertising Designers

We're looking for creative and artistic people with an interest in advertising and layout. Experience with computers an asset.

Computer Systems Manager

Have expertise in networking and systems? Want to earn money on an on-call basis? We need help. Call us. NOW.

Journal House Cleaner

We're looking for someone to clean The Journal house on a weekly basis.

Interested? Call 545-2800, drop by The Journal House at 272 Eorf Street, or e-mail us at journol@post.queensu.ca
APPLICATION DEADLINE: FRIDAY SEPTEMBER 25 AT 5:00 P.M.

You got where you are with hard work and smarts.

$750
GRAD REBATE

Chrysler can help out with your driving ambition.

As a recent graduate, you're on the road to achieving the best life has to offer. At Chrysler, we're rewarding that kind of initiative by offering $750 toward the purchase or lease of a new 1997, 1998, or 1999 Chrysler car or truck (excluding Dodge Viper and Plymouth Prowler), over and above most current Chrysler incentives. And, if you finance with Chrysler Credit Canada we'll defer your first three months payments!*

This $750 Grad Rebate is available to all college and university undergraduates and postgraduates who have graduated or will graduate between October 1, 1995, and September 30, 1998, and all currently enrolled master's and doctoral students (regardless of final graduation date). From high-value subcompacts and minivans, to tough pickups and sport utilities, we've got a vehicle that's right for you. No matter where you want to go in life...we want to make sure you get there.

For more information, visit your nearest Chrysler Canada Dealer. Or, hit www.chryslercanada.ca or call 1-800-361-3700.

CHRYSLER CANADA
Official Team Sponsor

*Some restrictions may apply. **See your dealer for details. †See your dealer for details. ‡See your dealer for details.

Fast Facts

In Here

Street Theatre Troupe

Epilepsy Kingston is looking for volunteers to participate in their Street Theatre Troupe, a program of puppet shows and plays designed to educate school children about epilepsy. No experience is needed. For more information, contact Judi at Epilepsy Kingston at 542-6222.

Crisis volunteers needed

The Sexual Assault Centre is looking for Frontline volunteers to provide support, counselling, information, crisis intervention and referrals to survivors of sexual violence. Training will be provided. Call the Community

Volunteer Centre at 542-8512.

Dieu seeks volunteers

Hotel Dieu Hospital is looking for five volunteers to organize activities for patients in the psychiatry clinic and to participate in one-to-one visiting. Call the Community Volunteer Centre at 542-8512.

Big Sisters Association

Big Sisters Association is forming a new fund-raising committee. The association is also looking for volunteers to join the board of directors for a two-year term. Send applications to Big Sisters at 417 Bagot St., K7L 3C1, fax to 547-9091, or bsak@kos.net by October 2. For more information, contact Allana Battlett at 634-1207.

Wanna write news?

Come to a general contributors meeting on Friday, September 25 at 5 p.m. in The Journal house at 272 Earl St., between Division and University Streets.

A debatable tradition

BY JENNIFER MORRISON

The Queen's Debating Union (QDU) is preparing to kick off its 155th season without the aid of funding generated by a now defunct mandatory student fee.

"Raising membership dues is not an option that we want to think about... we will just have to be more careful on how we spend our money."

— Dan Lafferty, QDU's critic of the house

The union was the only group to lose last year's spring referendum, in which their request for a continued $0.35 mandatory fee was endorsed by only 49.53 per cent of voters.

According to Dan Lafferty, QDU's critic of the house, this is the union's first year without student funding. The loss means that the oldest club on campus, and Canada's oldest debating union, has to start from scratch this year, having only a small float from last year to work with.

The debating union has always prided itself on subsidizing its members as much as possible, hoping to make it accessible to everyone, explained. Membership fees last year stood at $40 and there are no immediate plans to raise the fees this season.

"Raising membership dues is not an option that we want to think about... we will just have to be more careful on how we spend our money," Lafferty said.

The annual membership fees, combined with student funding, have typically covered almost all costs incurred by members at tournaments throughout the season, including transportation, billeting and food.

The money has also been used to fund the Queen's Chancellor's Cup, the annual tournament hosted by Queen's which Lafferty described as the "best tournament of the fall season."

The debating union participates in several tournaments each season across Ontario.

According to Lafferty, "We're one of the powerhouses... we have always been a strong, competitive school."

This season Queen's will be looking to defend its novice championship title at the University of Western Ontario's novice tournament in October.

Despite the obvious financial challenge facing the debating union, Lafferty said he is positive about the year ahead. "Despite the late start to the school year we've got a brand new executive... We're young, we're bright and we're looking forward to a new year," he said.

Lafferty also hopes to attract a wider array of students this season. "We want to reach outside the nostalgia that debating is only for history and politics students... we want to get outside the Arts and Science faculty and into the engineering and science faculty and clubs as well."

The loss means that the oldest club on campus, and Canada's oldest debating union, has to start from scratch this year

In addition to expanding its membership base, the club is also anticipating more contact with its alumni this coming season. Already in the works are plans to set up a booth in the John Deutsch University Centre and at the sidewalk sale during Homecoming Weekend. As well, the executive is hoping to host an alumni versus student debate next semester.

The union kicks off their season next Wednesday, September 23 in Wallace Hall with the official opening of the house. This social gathering will feature a formal debate and guest speakers and welcomes both old and new members.

IT'S UP TO YOU TO

get listed!

IN THE WHO'S WHERE

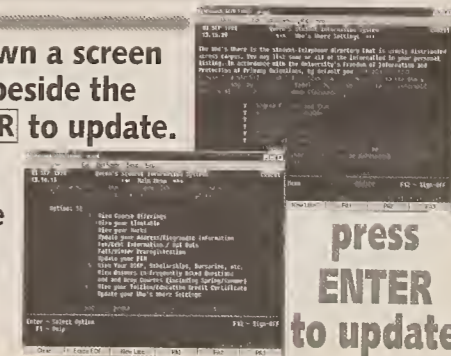

what if that cute classmate wants to call you to set a time to "study"? or maybe your prof wants to let you have that extension. well, if you're not listed in the WHO'S WHERE, then how are they gonna find you?

WHEN YOU REGISTER, you will be shown a screen in which you OPT-IN BY ENTERING 'Y' beside the listings you want included. Press ENTER to update.

how?

AFTER YOU REGISTER, you can check & update your settings via QCard menu option 12.

LAST DAY TO UPDATE IS MONDAY, SEPT 21st!

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

All-American hero

THIS YEAR, THE BEST TEAM IN baseball will be crowned the World Champions — as long as they're from North America of course. Even within the small world of Major League Baseball, American fans prefer that their sports heroes be cut from all-American cloth, no matter how many home runs they hit.

It comes as no surprise, therefore, that the media's coverage and reaction to the race to surpass Roger Maris's 1961 record of 61 home runs in a season smacks of jingoism and, perhaps, racism.

In the contest between the red-haired titan of baseball, Mark McGwire, and the Dominican-born Sammy Sosa, McGwire's achievements have received a disproportionate amount of recognition.

Although it is true that McGwire was the first to hit 62 home runs, the race seems less about homers than image. While Sosa quietly leads the Chicago Cubs into a playoff berth, McGwire's name has become synonymous with the American vision of a hero. The image of McGwire with his young son as team bat-boy reawoke interest in baseball as America's national pastime because he embodies the apple-pie qualities that Americans associate with winners.

With his hulking physique and perfect grasp of the English language, McGwire also presents a much more comfortable image for the public than a Dominican immigrant who speaks in clichés.

Even within the small world of Major League Baseball, American fans prefer that their sports heroes be cut from all-American cloth.

It was not so long ago that Hank Aaron's quest to break a similar record was met with death threats because he was black. It seems evident that America still has a long way to go before it purges racism from sports.

The fear of smell

AT LEAST SOMEBODY IS THRIVING in the area formerly known as the student ghetto! Although most students would probably prefer not to notice, few can deny that the skunk population is prospecting amid the heaps of refuse that litter our streets.

Although it might also be due to breeding patterns, or an unusually mild winter, the skunk occupation seems like a wake-up call for students to start keeping our streets and yards clean. The inconvenience of avoiding the packs of skunks that roam the streets at night has taken too large a toll on our freedom of movement. Unfortunately, it is more than just the smell of fear that permeates the air of our community.

We are not, however, powerless to prevent the invasion of these foul-smelling creatures. Besides leaving them a free lunch in the form of our garbage, we have also provided them shelter by not fixing the holes under our porches or front stoops. City officials must be lobbied to force our recalcitrant landlords to skunk-proof their properties by repairing the damage. In the meantime, we must rely on Kingston's animal control service to protect us from Pepe le Pu and his friends. Perhaps if the service was more cooperative with students and had more of a visible presence in our community it would at least appear as though they were trying to help.

Most importantly, we must make an effort to keep our neighborhood clean, because the alternative makes a lot of scents.

Bons Mots: Baseball moved me toward the front of the bus, and it let me ride there as long as I could run. And then it told me to get off at the back door.
— Larry Doby, first African American player in the American League.

Who raised you, anyway?

IT IS A COURTESY THAT OATES back to the introduction of hinges. It wasn't an issue 500 years ago when the spirit of community was alive and we hadn't figured out how to make doors close on their own. I'm of course referring to holding the door open for the brothers and sisters trailing you as you enter a building.

While it might seem a bit trivial, its loss could result in the total breakdown of human society. I've noticed over the past two years at this particular post-secondary institution that some would rather take a potato peeler to their bare eyeball than expel the energy to keep a door open for someone.

I believe this is a result of the highly competitive individualistic mentality drilled into the students of Queen's. After all, when that person carrying an armful of books and other personal items actually succeeds in entering the building after you, they instantly become a threat in the classroom. They could possibly achieve a better mark than you and ultimately beat you out of a job, maybe even taking your house and diminishing your quality of life. If you hold a door open for someone at AJ's, well, then you'll probably be waiting in line behind them all night to get a drink.

Although I hardly believe that this phenomenon is exclusive to Queen's, it is certainly not socially acceptable. Even if Queen's wasn't a microcosm for the rest of society, as the leaders of tomorrow we really should learn a little consideration for each other.

Otherwise, we might very well spend the rest of our time here impaling each other with forks, before climbing over each other's lifeless corpses to acquire a crappy Martini or ice cream cone.

I know what you're thinking. You treat your close friends and housemates really well. Well, that's great, but if you damn everyone else that enters your line of sight during your day you ain't my hero.

So if you want to live in peace, harmony and mutual understanding of your fellow human being, hold the damn door open for them. If not, don't even wonder why no one called the cops the next time your house is broken into.

STEFAN MURRAY
A & E EDITOR

OPINIONS

The road to hell is paved

SO I WAS READING SURFACE yesterday. For those of you unfamiliar with that tag, it's the one that looks a lot like OPIRG's publication unherd (or more accurately, unherd of), except that nowadays Surface is printing gems such as "The Brian Williams Drinking Game" and "anything by Paul Morrison" in lieu of articles plagued by poignancy or insight. The latest issue featured a story on "Critical Mass," a monthly demonstration in Kingston against the ecological and societal evils of the private automobile. The event's organizers also promote it by a defanged name — "The Big Community Ride" — that must sound a little less threatening to key figures such as conservative university students and police officers with pepper spray.

The protest takes the form of an unmotivated ride en masse through the streets of Kingston, clogging the city's downtown and making a lot of noise, raising awareness and what not. The best possible immediate, concrete outcome is probably that nobody gets tun over by an impatient driver and that those hard-working squeegee kids at Princess and Division are afforded a much-needed coffee break.

But the ideological effect of the protest may be profound. A "Critical Mass" leaflet proclaims: "The private automobile is one of humanity's most destructive endeavours. They [sic] gobble fossil fuels, ate the major contribution to global climate change, and they demand roads and influence urban design so that fertile farmland and wilderness areas are covered in concrete."

I don't often hear of people arguing against these assertions. But equally seldom do I hear of people acting on them. We know that we're committing ecological sins through our indulgent overuse of automobiles, but through casuistry or carelessness we choose not to change anything. Sometimes our inaction is in the name of economics; often it's in the name of time; almost always it boils down to a matter of selfish convenience.

Our governments reiterate our shortsightedness and rename convenience "economic concerns." Consider Alberta's protests over Canada's promises in Kyoto to cut pollution, or Ontario's decision to purchase outdated, inexpensive car-pollution-monitoring devices. In The Tragically Hip's Phantom Power, God Downie warns and wonders: "constitutions of granite can't save the planet / what's to become of us?" We are hindered by bottom-line lawmakers and by our own psychological and physiological inertia. We are constituted of granite or, perhaps in Kingston, of limestone. The road to hell is paved. Period.

To wit: I recently attended a training camp for the varsity cross-country team at the Queen's Biological Station. In the midst of untrodden forest and quiet lakes, some of the men thought it would be pretty funny if we always drove the 100 metres between our cabin and the kitchen facilities. Heaven forbid we should waste the energy we needed to train.

At the time I took a little guilty pleasure from the irony; it was a bit like peeing outside a public washroom. But I tell you, upon returning to Kingston I went for a run all of the way up Division Street to the 401 and back, and by the time I finished I was dizzy with the smell of gasoline and exhaust, and I was spitting out grey saliva. What's to become of us, indeed?

Those looking to wash themselves of locomotive sin should head to the demonstration at Confederation Basin on September 25 at 5 p.m. Cyclists, skateboarders, rollerbladers and "pedestrians" (no word on whether or not this includes cross-country runners) are all welcome. It's a good 15-minute walk from campus, but driving down would probably be a faux pas.

BOB MCGILL
ARTS '99

Misc Offends

Dear Editors,

I am writing with regards to the MiSC article of your Thursday, September 10 issue, in which the writer viciously attacked numerous campus groups, chief among them engineering students and their traditions. I question the need to print such juvenile, ignorant slander. From the headline of "They're Lying to You, Frosh" to its closing lines of "vinegar in the eyes," the writer of the article displayed a complete lack of purpose, taste and integrity. As a Queen's student who feels a great deal of respect for the traditions and history that make our university distinct and unique, I cannot comprehend what could motivate the writer to take such blatant shots at one specific group of students and their culture.

As a member of this singled out group, comments like "whenever you've hog-tied an engineer and are kicking him down the street and telling him how much he sucks..." so completely malicious and pointless give rise to a great deal of anger. However, I will not dignify comments so clearly lusting after media attention by directing that anger towards the writer. To him, all I can say is that it saddens me that there are people at this institution who, perhaps out of some rampant insecurity or deep-seated envy, feel the need to throw stones at a visible group on campus. Nonetheless, we are all entitled to our own opinions, and it is fully within our rights to express them in the appropriate forum.

That is where my concern lies. Not with the person who wrote these words, but with the editor who saw fit to print them. I cannot comprehend the rationale that deems it "appropriate" to print something so far over the line on so many fronts. While upper-years have enough sense of identity to brush off the article, it was printed during frosh week, at a time when incoming students are just coming into that identity. To have these views expressed not as an Opinion piece but as "news" pulls the university apart at a time at which all members of the university community should be attempting to come together. There will always be inter-faculty rivalries (a fundamentally positive tradition) and regrettably the accompanying frosh or orientation leader who, in the heat of confrontation, crosses the line between fun rivalry to aggressive antagonism. However, there is an obligation on all members of the university community to make every attempt to be welcoming, especially those members in a position of responsibility.

As well, faculty-directed comments aside, the article contained comments such as "the only people who need to get drunk on a Friday afternoon are those who are too lame to get drunk on Thursday night." While the writer is free to believe what they will, frosh should not be told they have to get drunk on Thursday nights or they're lame in the campus "news"-paper. Finally, The Journal is published by the AMS, and therefore as one of those fifteen thousand publishers, I cannot understand why my paper is printing an article maliciously attacking me and my faculty. Editors who print comments like, "they'll be back in the library soon and we'll have our school back," seem to me to have a fundamental misunderstanding of the mandate of The Journal. I commend the editors on two excellent MiSC articles in the September 15 issue, both exactly the sort of commentary I expect from my favorite section of The Journal. What went wrong the week previous? And where is the accountability for these decisions? The Editors have called it "satirical," yet I see no satire here. Were there a series of witty barbs carrying with them a poignant underlying message about frosh week, I would love it. However, all I see is someone taking cheap shots at their peers, and someone else giving them airtime.

KEITH STEWART
SCI '99
PRESIDENT, ENGINEERING SOCIETY

Mr. Rogers for President

Dear Editors,

The "Student Village"?!?! Smashing. Why don't we just call it "Our Neighbourhood" and Mr. Rogers can be President of the AMS?

ROBERT PRESTON
ARTSCI '97

talking

HEADS

Are skunks a problem in Kingston?

"Hell, yes! I was out last night walking with my girlfriend and a skunk crossed my path. We almost got hosed down!"

MARK WILLIAMS
ARTS '01

"We saw one last night. Our friend ran away screaming! Time for skunk whacking day!"

DAVE SCIENCE
ARTSCI '00
NICKY GREENWOOD
ARTSCI '01

"Skunks are slowly taking over the city — not just the ghetto! I don't know what the solution is, but one must be found soon."

WILL TAYLOR
MAN-AT-LARGE

PHOTOS BY TODD JACKSON

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS POLICY

The Editors of The Journal want to hear from readers. All letters must include the writer's name, signature, and telephone number. Any letter that is legible, legal, and literate will be published if space permits. Those that are as brief and direct as possible will have a better chance of publication. The deadline for Tuesday's issue is Sunday at noon. The deadline for Friday's issue is Wednesday at noon. Drop off letters to The Journal House, 272 Earl St., fax to 545-6728, or better yet, e-mail them to journal@post.queensu.ca.

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF
Keith Gorsin
Tara Mansbridge

MANAGING EDITOR
Laura MacInnis

NEWS EDITOR
Fiona Stevenson

ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS
Shawn Brimley
Renée Huang
Vacant

EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
Paul Heller

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR
Stefan Murray

ASSISTANT A&E EDITORS
Sarah Crosbie
Lillian Kim

FEATURES EDITOR
Sean Springer

OPINIONS EDITOR
Todd Jackson

SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Adam Kaminsky

ASSISTANT SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Robert MacNeil

MISC. EDITOR
Keri Buttand

GRAPHICS EDITOR
Janice Chan

THE READER EDITOR
Jesse Craig Bellringer

SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT
John Bowman

SPECIAL PUBLICATIONS EDITORS
Elizabeth Frogley
Shanley Murray

PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS
Alex Kronby
James Terjanian

WEB EDITOR
Marco Lui

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Kraft

SALES REPRESENTATIVES
Kari Brimmet
Andrew Cooke
Kristian Li

ADVERTISING MANAGER
Vacant

ADVERTISING DESIGNERS
Katherine Colbourn
Annie Ge

SYSTEMS MANAGER
Vacant

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Friday, September, 1998 • Issue 6 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of The Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.

Contents © 1998 by The Queen's Journal; all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Goss Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Gananoque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions.

Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2H8
Telephone—editorial: 613-545-2800 advertising: 613-545-6711 Fax: 613-545-6728 Email: journal@post.queensu.ca Internet: http://www.journal.queensu.ca
Circulation 5,000
Issue 7 will be published on Monday, September 21, 1998.

CONTRIBUTORS

WRITERS AND REPORTERS: Hillary Clark, Sarah Crowe, Diana Orappel, Tim Evans, Jocelyn Laporte, Bob McGill, Jennifer Morrison, Martie Navsky, Nathan Sager, Adria Vukasin

SCIENCE

Clinical attachment

Sometimes it's hard to remain impersonal when the research is about real people

BY DIANA DRAPPEL

OCCASIONALLY IN LIFE, an experience will affect you so much that it leaves an indelible imprint, making you question things you took for granted and changing the way you look at the world.

One such occasion happened for me in the summer of 1996. I was working at Sunnybrook Health and Research Centre in Toronto as a student researcher in the Department of Pathology and Cell Biology. The project I was working on was testing a newly discovered protein to see whether it was a reliable indicator of breast tumour malignancy.

This job was a dream come true for me — I was working with an active, dynamic researcher on the cutting edge of scientific knowledge. The job involved lab work — mainly immunohistochem-istry (staining tissue slices) — which was fairly familiar to me since I had done lab work at the cellular and molecular level before.

In addition, my supervisor asked me to help compile profiles from various archival data about the patients whose tissue we were using for the study. On the surface this was a straightforward job which involved collecting data about tumour size and characteristics, the nature and aggressiveness of treatment and, finally, disease outcome. However, actually going through the files was anything but straightforward. And nothing could have prepared me for the emotional aspect of documenting an illness like breast cancer.

Each file had a Polaroid of the patient taped to the inside cover and it was often accompanied by a letter written by one of the nurses at the Cancer Centre which had a short personal and medical biography. In going through these files, one by one, I got to know not only the women themselves but their children, husbands and parents.

I documented their progress through surgeries, radiation therapy and chemotherapy sessions, and (sometimes) remissions. However, after the first few I quickly learned to dread the end of the file. It is still difficult to express how defeated and heartbroken I felt when, as was so often the case, the last page of the file was an autopsy report. It was impossible not to be affected by these files that represented, not anonymous names or numbers, but very real women, whose lives and those of their families were shattered by breast cancer.

Going through these files was so far removed from what I had been told science was like (and what I had experienced it to be until then). It was not possible to remain neutral about it. I wanted so badly for this study to be a success — not so it would be published, or for all of us who had worked so hard on this project — but for these women who had died of breast cancer. So that somehow, even though medicine and science had failed them, their deaths would not be in vain. And so, sometime in the future, other women like them would not have to die of the same illness.

I am glad that I was a part of the study (which was published in Nature Medicine in February of 1997) and I am proud that it was based on good, solid science and statistically sound results. At the same time I cannot help but feel discouraged that we are still so far away from many important answers in breast cancer research. Breast cancer remains very difficult to treat and mortality remains high, in particular for premenopausal women.

My hope is that research will soon lead to better treatments and a better prognosis so that, even though other women get diagnosed with breast cancer, science will be able to provide solutions for them.

Working on this project brought home to me that all medical research, no matter how basic, still relates back to real individuals whose lives are at stake. We should never forget that.

wanted: people who've got IT.

emfisys Financial Information & Systems Division of The Bank of Montreal Group of Companies

Science Writers

Meeting TODAY at 5:30 p.m. at the Journal House, 272 Earl Street.

Be there. Be square.

Science Spectrum

Science news from around the world and beyond

Computing at the speed of light

A lattice of microscopic silicon slivers, looking more like a summer-camp popsicle-stick project than a huge technological leap, holds the key to eventually manipulating light the same way we do electricity. The photonic crystal, so called because of its repeating internal structure, bends light repeatedly and virtually without leakage, a long-sought-after first step towards building a photonic computer.

Developed at the U.S. Department of Energy's Sandia National Laboratories in Albuquerque, New Mexico, the lattice's network of tiny silicon bars can trap light and guide it with 95 per cent efficiency.

The Sandia photonic crystal is a miniaturization of previous designs used in microwave antennas, whose lattice elements are the size of sewing needles. The smaller the elements, the shorter the wavelength of light that is trapped. This latest design works in the infrared range, around 10 microns. The goal now is to create a crystal small enough to trap light at 1.5 microns, the wavelength most often used in optical communications.

Jupiter's rings made of moon shrapnel

Scientists studying data from NASA's Galileo spacecraft have found that Jupiter's rings are composed of debris from collisions between the gas giant's small, inner moons and meteoroids pulled in by Jupiter's gravity well.

Unlike Saturn's spectacular ring system, which is composed of reflective ice particles, Jupiter's rings are made up of dark, reddish dust. The dust matches the composition of four of Jupiter's moons, Amalthea and Thebe, associated with the outer "gossamer" rings, and Adrastea and Metis, the source of Jupiter's main ring.

Because these moons are so small, dust thrown up in meteoroid collisions can easily escape their gravitational fields. The debris enters a similar orbit to the original satellites, forming a ring.

Space crystals are so very, very sweet

The no-calorie sweetener in tomorrow's diet colas could owe their existence to experiments conducted on the Space Shuttle. A team of American and French scientists have crystallized an intensely sweet protein called thaumatin, which occurs naturally in the African Serendipity Berry, in a micro-gravity environment.

The resulting space crystals are 25 per cent larger and provide 30 per cent more data on the molecule's structure than their terrestrial counterparts grown in otherwise similar conditions. The crystallographic data is essential to investigate thaumatin's biological function and interaction with taste receptors.

SPORTS & FITNESS

QUARTERBACK CARNAGE

Only two weeks into the NFL regular season and quarterbacks have been falling at an astounding rate. With stars such as John Elway, Troy Aikman and Elvis Grbac all slated to miss between two and eight weeks and lesser known starters Billy Joe Hobert, Glenn Foley and Brad Johnson seriously injured, concerns about the violence of the game have arisen again. Why is it that when position players get hurt nobody cares, but when quarterbacks get hurt there is an uproar? Remember, quarterbacks are football players too.

MVP?

With all the attention being focused on the home run race, the annual most valuable player bonanza has been ignored. In the National League it will in all likelihood be 'Slammin' Sammy Sosa, who has put up huge numbers (.311,62,148). In addition to these personal stats, Sosa has kept the Chicago Cubs in the race for the wild card. The American League is much more interesting with a variety of candidates. The front runner is Juan Gonzalez: The huge Texas right-fielder has driven in 152 runs which is the most in 40 years, and has kept his team in the pennant race. Albert Belle and Ken Griffey Jr. have put up impressive offensive numbers while playing on sub-500 teams, while the dark horse is Cleveland's Manny Ramirez who plays for a team that is winning their division.

CANUCK AT THE CONTROLS

When the #2 ranked Florida Gators visit the #6 ranked Tennessee Volunteers, the Gators will be counting on sophomore Canadian quarterback Jesse Palmer to lead them. With two early season victories by the Gators, Palmer would seem to be a lock at starting quarterback. However, with the return of incumbent starter Doug Johnson from injury and the flightiness of head coach Steve Spurrier, the Nepean native is not in a comfortable position. The fact is if Florida is going to beat Tennessee for a sixth consecutive time, Palmer will have to play his game.

IF CHRISTMAS CAME EARLY

Baseball would realize they hlew it by not marking all balls pitched to McGwire and Sosa.

Someone, anyone, would care about the Commonwealth Games.

John Gallagher's show on TSN would be cancelled so that faith can be restored in Canadian television.

The Golden Gaels fight for a loose ball en route to a 50-11 thrashing of the visiting York Yeomen in their opening game.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Tricolour dominates opener

BY NATHAN SAGER

In their season opener Wednesday afternoon at Kingston Field, the Queen's men's rugby squad sent a powerful message to their Ontario University Athletics conference opponents at the expense of visiting York. While dominating in all elements of the sport, the Golden Gaels looked as if they had played several games despite the fact this was their season opener. They won easily, trouncing the Yeomen 50-11.

"There's room for improvement," commented head coach Al Ferguson. The field general is well aware that the season will not be judged on the basis of early season routs, but whether or not the Gaels can reclaim the OUA title that eluded them last autumn. "Today we were simply the biggest and faster team... the first team wasn't playing that well," said Ferguson.

After a relatively close first half that concluded with the Gaels ahead by a count of 18-6, the home side destroyed their guests by adding half a dozen tries in the second half. Contributing tries to the Queen's column were Andrew Thompson, Steve Cummings, Mark Thompson and Geoff Phelan, while Paul Hemmings booted a pair of penalties in addition to his two major scores.

The Gaels' physical advantage was evident, as the Tricolour came out on top from nearly every lineout and scrum. When York was able to win possession, seldom were they able to make more than a solitary pass before being halted. "We played very well defensively," praised Ferguson. Meanwhile, the Gaels excelled at supporting each other offensively, almost always giving the ballcarrier a teammate to pitch the ball to. Pleased at his players' attention to team play, Ferguson observed, "Our support still has to get better, but that will come with time."

Putting the lopsided victory in perspective, Ferguson said, "The whole team had a good first game; everyone played with commitment. We still have to get better, though."

The Gaels will have another opportunity to hone their game Saturday afternoon at 1 p.m. when they host the Waterloo Warriors on Kingston Field.

"The whole team had a good first game; everyone played with commitment. We still have to get better, though."

— Gaels' coach Al Ferguson

Unfinished business?

BY ADAM KAMINSKY

Queen's University Golden Gaels hosting the University of Alberta Golden Bears in the middle of September? This was one game that jumped off the schedule and set a precedent.

After further research it was determined that there was indeed a scheduled exhibition game between these two teams during an off-week, which each team had from the regular season schedule. While for many this is a random opportunity for two teams from different conferences to compare their styles of play, for those who played for the Gaels in the early '60s, this is much, much more.

THAT WAS THEN

This story begins in 1963, with the undefeated Intercollegiate champion Queen's Golden Gaels accepting a challenge to fly out to Edmonton and play the undefeated University of Alberta Golden Bears. The Albertans were so set on creating this 'dream match-up' that they were willing to fly 35 players and coaches to the game. The Queen's administration decided instead to take the money, charter a rickety, second World War vintage C-46, and fly in more players and entourage to the game.

The decision to fly a charter turned out to be a problematic one. "The vibrations were incredible in the plane," said Gaels defensive back and now Queen's professor, Merv Daub.

Many of the Gaels were visibly sick after the fourteen hour saga, but arrived safely despite a snow storm on the ground.

The very next day the players were on the field, and it was clear early on that this Alberta team was one to be reckoned with. "We suffered from the travel, and a little bit of over-confidence, but this team was really good," explained Daub. "They were able to outsmart us by perfecting the defence against our Wing-T offence, and these little guys could hit like a ton of bricks."

The final tally was 25-7 for the Golden Bears, but for those on the team, this was not to be the end of the story.

Please see Good on page 12

'Wild' Bill Miklas (middle) and company head to Alberta in 1963

PHOTO COURTESY OF QUA

京士頓華人宣道會
KINGSTON CHINESE ALLIANCE CHURCH

Sunday Worship in English 9:30 a.m.
Sunday Worship in Chinese 11 a.m.
Friday KCCF campus fellowship 7:30 p.m.
(@ McCarty room 230 (English, Mandarin, Cantonese etc))

230 MacDonnell St. (1 km west of Division St. along Brock)
Pastor: Kong Lo (613) 548-270 or 548-127

Chalmers United Church
212 Barrie Street (at Clergy)
546-3263

A Caring Community,
a Questioning Faith,
a Grounded Hope

Worship every Sunday, 10:30 a.m.

We welcome Students,
Faculty, and Staff!
Join us, in person or by radio
960 AM (CFEX)

Visit our web site: <http://web.canlink.com/ucckingston/chalmers/>

Any tougher they'd rust.

Blundstone
FOOTWEAR SINCE 1870

Unisex styles. Women's size 6
up to Men's 13 1/2. Come slip on a pair
and enjoy dry and comfortable feet.
No damn laces.

A-ONE CLOTHING • VISA
358 King St. E. • Mastercard
Kingston, ON • Interac
K7L 3B6

FUNDS RUNNING LOW?

MAX your CASH at Cafe Max

The perfect place for students to meet and eat. Regular menu items start from $3.95. Daily lunch and dinner specials include salad and start at $6.95. Our quality and value cannot be beat!

If you were already amazed by our regular menu, check out our fabulous new specials—you are sure to be impressed and surprised.

LUNCH specials with salad for ... $6.95
DINNER specials with salad for ... $9.95

Cafe Max
39 Brock St., 547-2233

Maximum Quality • Maximum Service • Maximum Value
Specials offered Sunday-Thursday

Good experience

Continued from page 9

undefeated in 1964 we thought we were going to get our chance to bring them to Kingston, but it wasn't to be."

"By going down there and getting beat by a western team, it changed how people looked at university football across the country."

— Goels coach Bill Miklas

Due to a clause that stated that the winner of the Yates Cup (Intercollegiate Champion) had to play any Ontario school that challenged them before entertaining outside challenges, the Gaels were forced to play the McMaster Marauders. Despite pleas from the Gaels coaches and players to the second division Marauders to drop their challenge, McMaster was unrelenting. The players were devastated, and the Marauders paid dearly for the insolence, as they were crushed 63-6.

The rematch that everyone wanted would have to wait a year, or 35 years for that matter.

THIS IS NOW

University football has come a long way from the 1963 challenge match, and much of this can be attributed to that game.

"By going down there and getting beat by a western team, it changed how people looked at university football across the country," explained Miklas. "It created a sense that Ontario was not the only place where a high level of football was played and the Vanier Cup (CIAU championship) became more of a realistic idea."

In looking at the two teams involved in this year's game, they meet this time for different reasons and under different circumstances. To begin with, both of the squads come in off of a loss, which contrasts drastically with the two undefeated groups of '63. In addition, it is no longer the undersized Golden Bears taking on the bigger Golden Gaels, but the opposite.

Also, this game, which was the brain child of former Edmonton Eskimo teammates and rival coaches, Queen's Bob Howes and Alberta's Tom Wilkinson, is not about proving superiority, but an opportunity for two teams that would not normally meet to get together on the football field and off. With a cruise and a dinner planned for both teams, this game is about more than just the gridiron.

The rematch that everyone wanted would have to wait a year, or 35 years for that matter.

There is still the worry that this mid-season exhibition game could be detrimental to the team in the long-run. "The major concern about these exhibition games is that somebody might get hurt," confesses Howes. "We're going to play all the regulars but it is an opportunity for others to get a chance to play."

While the history between these two teams makes for a good story, these are new players in a new situation. That is not to say that some of the veterans of the '63 and '64 teams don't see this game as being more than just an exhibition.

Miklas sums it up for his old team, "I have heard about that loss for 35 years from Gino Fracas (Alberta coach at the time), so although this won't make as much difference as if we would have played in 1964, it still would be nice to win."

Lacrosse primed

BY ADAM KAMINSKY

While hockey gains all the national notoriety, Canada's original national sport is becoming more prominent on the university sports scene. Despite not being a varsity sport for most schools, men's lacrosse has enjoyed a rebirth of sorts due to a higher profile and an improved level of play. Coming into this season, the Queen's squad hopes that they can compete and raise their profile on campus.

Coming off a 5-3 season, in which they lost in the first round of the tournament to York in overtime, the Team look to improve their standing. There is reason for optimism as they bounced back from the early-round loss and won the consolation pool of the Ontario championships.

"We were a little worried about getting new players, but there is no doubt that many of the guys there can help us out this season."

—Veteran Steve MacLeod

With the coaching help of former player Jeff Wills, this team returns a large group from the consolation championships.

Among the contingent of returning players are 'attack' players Russ Fleming and scoring machine Neil Boon, who has led the team in scoring for the last two seasons. The defence is anchored by veteran 'long stick' Steve MacLeod, last season's rookie of the year Jonathan Bell and most improved player Craig Collins-Williams.

The big question mark facing this team is whether Kevin Lunnie, last season's most valuable player, will be returning to the squad. He has yet to arrive at practice, but his all-around skill in the mid-field was a major factor in the success enjoyed by the team last season. There is a chance that he will return, and it is clear that with him, this squad is much better.

The main departure is from the last line of defence, goaltender Corey Fearon started last season, but is replaced this

Please see Looking on page 14

ELECTROLYSIS
Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely. Experienced electrolysis. Recommended by Physicians.

HARRISON SALON
Kingston Since 1959
Free Consultation
Call 542-5595

Jays continue to give chase

BY ROBERT MACNEIL

After stumbling and bumbling for the first four months of the season, Tim Johnson's Blue Jays have finally found team chemistry. At the trading deadline on July 31, the Jays dumped several of their high-priced veterans. Gone by the morning of August 1 were Juan Guzman, Randy Myers, Ed Sprague and Tony Phillips. Surprisingly enough, after all the trades were made, the Jays have played better baseball than the New York Yankees, a team that has won 104 games already and has clinched their division.

As a result of their exceptional play, the Jays are now only four games behind the Boston Red Sox for the wild card spot. It will be extremely difficult for the Blue Jays to catch the Red Sox, but the long term benefits far outweigh the short term excitement of a playoff berth.

Circle September 28 on your calendar because if the Jays happen to tie the Red Sox, there will be a one-game playoff... we all know how the Red Sox do in one-game playoffs, don't we Bucky Dent?

During the last two months, the core of young Blue Jays which make up the future of this franchise have blossomed and given hope to a team that has not had a .500 season since

WILD CARD RACE

	GB	GR
Boston Red Sox	-	12
Toronto Blue Jays	4	10
Texas Rangers	4.5	11
Baltimore Orioles	8.5	11

Joe Carter made a goat out of Mitch Williams in 1993. Shawn Green has become the first Blue Jay to ever hit 30 home runs and steal 30 bases in one season and he is set to have his first 100 RBI season.

Green has, until this season, been a notoriously slow starter but Johnson has shown lots of confidence in the young outfielder and it has paid off. Continuing the abundance of young talent is first basemen Carlos Delgado, who was recently named team captain by Johnson. Delgado has responded this season by flirting with .300 and hitting a career high 32 HR and 104 RBI. He has emerged as the cornerstone of the new Blue Jays.

Jose Cruz Jr., who was banished to the minors earlier this season, has returned and become far more patient at the plate. Shannon Stewart has returned from Johnson's early season doghouse to become the Jays most reliable lead-off hitter in years. He has responded with burning speed which has ignited many a rally.

Fans have also started to notice that the Blue Jays present and future is quite optimistic. Television ratings for Blue Jay games have not been this high since the Jays won back-to-back World Series.

The Blue Jays pitching staff has re-emerged after a shor in the arm from three young pitchers. Chris Carpenter has won 11 games this season and has shown that he has the stuff to become a number one or number two starter on the Jays' staff in the next few years. Kelvin Escobar, formerly the Jays' highest hope for a bullpen ace, has become a fixture in the starting rotation. Taking the place of Randy Myers is young Robert Person, who was obtained from the Mets for John Olerud. Person saved several big games last week against the Yankees and has settled a once rocky bullpen.

Fans have also started to notice that the Blue Jays present and future is quite optimistic. Television ratings for Blue Jay games have not been this high since the Jays won back-to-back World Series in 1992-93. Fans have also been stocking up on Blue Jay merchandise at the time of year that demand usually dwindles.

And, in a rare burst of optimism, team management has begun designing playoff tickets and order forms will be mailed to season ticket holders this week. For all the Blue Jay fans on campus, circle September 28 on your calendar because if the Jays happen to tie the Red Sox, there will be a one-game playoff to be held at SkyDome. And we all know how the Red Sox do in one-game playoffs, don't we Bucky Dent?

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

is looking for

Writers, Reporters,

Designers, and

Photographers

to join us for our 126th year.

No experience necessary

Everyone is welcome

Interested? Stop by The Journal House at 272 Earl St or call us at 545-2800.

Put your work behind you.

The Roots Student Pack.

Regular $228.00

NOW $149.99

A Handcrafted, Rugged & Versatile Backpack. Perfect For Work School & Travel.

ROOTS KINGSTON

229 Princess Street - 546-7668 - Open Sundays

THE HOUSE POLITINE LINO'S Welcomes Queen's 24 Hours A Day THE HOUSE POLITINE

At the corner of Princess & Division

$1.99 BREAKFAST
Your choice of
2 Eggs Ham, Bacon or Sausage Homefries & Toast

ALL-U-CAN EAT PASTA $3.95

MEDIUM SIZE PIZZA FREE 60 oz. PITCHER of POP $7.95

GO TOONIE! KARAOKE EVERY NITE! CHEAP! CHEAP! CHEAP! 9:PM

We Deliver!!! 544-0123

Specials valid (eat in only) 11 am to 10 pm

Kingston's One and Only
Hard Rock Café

The Brass

"Win Your Tuition" - a value up to $1500. Enter ballots now - draw to take place Thanksgiving weekend.

Sunday & Monday nights - open MIC with host Smitty.

Every night 6pm - 9pm
20¢ wings (with the purchase of a beverage)

LONE STAR CAFE
Canada's Only Authentic Texas Restaurant
Presents

DEALS ON MEALS

MEXICAN MONDAY LITE NIGHTS

All Mexican entrees 1/2 price... PLUS! PLUS! PLUS!

★ STUDENT SUNDAYS ★

FAJITAS FOR TWO (including pop) $14.99

Special Lunchtime Quickies

From $5.99 and guaranteed in 15 minutes or FREE!

PLUS! PRICE WINGS EVERY NIGHT UPSTAIRS... TAMALES

Great Food! Great Fun! Guaranteed!

751 Orla St.

8-8-88

First-aid solutions

Continued from page 11

ing in less exercise than usual. The symptoms include weak and rapid/deep breathing, sighing, feelings of thirst, then nausea and vomiting and frequent urination. A person experiencing this situation may start to feel drowsy and then lose consciousness.

When performing first aid, there are several important steps to follow. You must first do a scene survey. If the casualty is unresponsive, get medical help immediately. Do a primary survey and give first aid for the ABCs. If the casualty is unconscious, place them into the recovery position and monitor ABCs until medical help takes over. If the casualty is conscious, ask what is wrong.

They may be able to tell you what is needed: sugar or prescribed medicine. If they are confused, give them something sweet to drink or eat: for example, orange juice, regular pop, honey, corn syrup. Continue to give the casualty care. If you are unable to distinguish between insulin shock and diabetic coma, give sugar regardless, because too much sugar will not kill you but too little sugar will.

These are only guidelines and do not make up for what is learned in a first aid course. All information is cited from St. John Ambulance "First on the Scene" training guide 1995 edition. Sarah Crowe is the Communications Coordinator of Queen's First Aid.

Looking to improve

Continued from page 12

year by understudy Dan Sipes. Sipes is a veteran with the team, and has been eagerly awaiting his opportunity to have the starter's role. If this team is going to move up the ledger, he is going to have to get comfortable on the hot seat.

The unprecedented numbers at tryouts has added excitement for the veteran members of the team. "It was the biggest turnout ever," said MacLeod. "We were a little worried about getting new players, but there is no doubt that many of the guys there can help us out this season."

With rookies adding to not only the talent level of the team, but also the depth, the team is certainly aiming a little higher.

"We would really like to move up to being a third place team in the division," explained veteran Jake Kuiken.

With two lacrosse juggernauts, Brock and Guelph, in their division, it is unlikely that they will challenge for the division title.

"Those two teams [Brock and Guelph] dominate everyone. It is like we are fighting for third place," lamented Kuiken.

With the influx of rookies and the return of key veterans, this team is a Kevin Lunnie away from that coveted third place spot.

The quest begins with a road trip this weekend to play the University of Toronto. Their first home date is a week Saturday during Homecoming weekend against York University at 2 o'clock on the North field.

SPORTS & FITNESS

Call Adam or Rob at 545-2800 to write for this exciting section

Footloose in Canada

Student Class Fares

Vancouver	from $359
Calgary	from $299
Edmonton	from $299
Regina	from $329
Winnipeg	from $229
Halifax	from $239
Saint John	from $339
St. John's	from $279

Insane Seat Sale

Vancouver	$229 - $299
Calgary	$229 - $299
Halifax	$149 - $199
Saint John	$149 - $199
Winnipeg	$149 - $199
St. John's	$149 - $199

-Finishes Sept 21-
-Travel until Dec 16-

ODYSSEY TRAVEL

186 Princess St., Kingston (at Montreal)
Lecture Travel 549-3553 Long Haul Group Travel 549-3561
Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

journal@post.queensu.ca

Baby bloom

Queen's student Marte Natvik looks at life before and after pregnancy

BY MARTE NATVIK

THE SIGNS REVEALED THEMSELVES LIKE CLOCKWORK. First, I missed my period. Feeling crampy, I expected the flow to come out at any time, but it didn't. Later, my boobs swelled to the point that lying on my front was excruciatingly uncomfortable. The symptoms continued — frequent urination, feelings of lethargy, a string of cat-naps throughout the day, spells of vertigo, and a queasy butterfly sensation in my stomach after a drink or a cigarette.

If I cannot be myself as a mother, I will not be a good role model for my son. The pursuit of self-actualization is as essential to him as it is to me.

The thought that I might be pregnant kept circling around in my brain, but the reality was too powerful to face. It triggered a slump of low self-confidence. I was frightened that I would not be able to provide for another human being, forcing me to constantly re-evaluate my options. Finally, I bought a home pregnancy test which confirmed the suspicion that my body had been hijacked by something beyond my control — life. The pregnancy had progressed to a stage where abortion was not an option. The only alternative was to see myself through the process.

Since I was already flying through a fifth-year victory lap, trying to finish my psychology degree, the prospect of pregnancy was daunting. My degree is hanging in limbo for awhile, which is all right because this pregnancy has been the biggest blessing of my life. Pregnancy has been the catalyst for some of the most important changes in my life. It has helped me to achieve a sense of solace with my body, mind and spiritual life.

Growing up, I didn't escape the weight consciousness bestowed on young women. Like so many of us, I went through a phase in my life where I dabbled with varying degrees of an eating disorder. Lack of confidence and lack of self-expression left me with an alienated relationship with my body leading me down a path where I would take out my frustrations on my body.

During my first year at Queen's in Leonard cafeteria, I learned the art of devouring ice cream at dinner and the ease with which it could be huddled into the toilet bowl. Looking back, I wonder how I had the energy to mask such a secret hatred for myself — my own mind and body.

With pregnancy came waves of hunger. I experienced the stereotypical cravings everyone identifies with pregnancy. A MacDonald's Big Mac was a solid staple in my diet. If the golden arches weren't within reach, I'd improvise — putting thousand islands dressing on a whooper Junior or a Junior Burger Deluxe from Wendy's. Ice cream was also a fundamental food, as were less obvious things like peaches and dark green lettuce. With the knowledge that my body would be the temple for this tiny, developing person for nine months, I yielded to every craving. But, this time, fat was not the enemy. Instead of the pounds of fat I usually envisioned shooting straight to my thighs whenever any calorie-rich nutrient entered my body, I imagined the life sustenance that the fat provided for myself, my developing baby and the months of breastfeeding to come.

Although breast feeding helps the extra stores of fat melt away, I will never be my pre-pregnancy size — a fact that does not bother me. I feel sexier and more vibrant than ever.

Marte and her little boy, Matthew, relax together off campus.

PHOTO BY SEAN SPRINGER

Continued on page 17

THINGS TO DO

Go to Careers Day '98, Sept. 22 10:30-3:30 Grant Hall

Air Canada	Fluor Daniel	Peter Kiewit & Son Co. Ltd.
Automotive Parts Manufacturers	Hudson's Bay Company	Research In Motion
Bank of Montreal	Imperial Oil	Royal Bank Financial Group
CMA Management Accountants	Institute of Chartered Accountants	Schlumberger
Canada Life	KPMG	Scotiabank
Canadian Tire	Kimberly-Clark Inc.	Semiconductor Insights
Cargill Inc.	Manpower Technical	Spar Aerospace Limited
Certified General Accountants	Matrox-Typhoon Technologies	State Farm Insurance Companies
Chipworks	Michelin North America/Canada	Syncrude Canada
Computer Talk Technology	mбанx	TD Bank Financial Group
Contact Singapore	Motorola Inc.	The Document Company Xerox
Deloitte & Touche	Netron Inc.	Toromont Cat
Dofasco Inc.	Olsten Services	and look FORTY ONE more exhibitors on the 23rd ↓↓↓↓
Ehvert Engineering	Omnimark Technologies Corp.
Enterprise Rent-A Car

THINGS TO DO

Go to Careers Day '98, Sept. 23 10:30-3:30 Grant Hall

Altair Engineering & Computing	DuPont Canada Inc.	LaFarge (Corporate Information Technology)
Andersen Consulting	EDS Canada	Noranda
Arthur Andersen	Entrust Technologies	Nortel
Bankers Trust	Ernst & Young (Assurance Services)	Petro Canada
Bombardier Aerospace	Ernst & Young (Corporate Consulting)	PricewaterhouseCoopers
CAE Electronics	Ernst & Young (Entrepreneurial Consulting)	Public Service Commission
Calian Technology Services	Exocom Systems Corporation	Quaker Oats Company
CGI Information Systems	Hatch Associates	RAM Technology
Chubb Insurance	Hewitt Associates	Stephenson's Rent-All Inc.
CN Rail	Honda of Canada Manufacturing Establishment	Sun Life of Canada
COM DEV Space Group	Husky Injection Molding	Textile Human Resources Council
Communications Security	Insurance Institute of Ontario	The Mutual Group
Establishment	JET Program	The Object People
DMR Consulting Group Inc		Visteon Automotive Systems
Dell Computer Corporation.

Baby Bloom

It's a refreshing time of voluptuousness after having small tits all my life, but I'll be happy when my boobs return to their pre-pregnancy size.

Continued from page 15

With this change in body image also came the ability to see my body with a sense of humour. Humour helps coping with the magnitude of change that your body goes through during pregnancy. Oh yes, after engorgement my breasts ballooned to a rock-hard, and immovable, size double D. My breasts, now supporting the life of another human, have a will and purpose of their own. I now wear double the breast pads when I go out in public, always paranoid that my breasts are leaking. The nights on the town have been few, and the lactate-inducing quality of beer sends me dashing to the bar's bathroom to express some milk. Any type of nipple stimulation can produce an erupting fountain of milk, and it comes out in gushes, which can be a tad embarrassing when the chick in the neighbouring stall can see splats of milk hitting the floor. Breast-feeding is messy, but nothing can compare to the rush of oxytocin and hearing my baby take in gulps of comfort.

Marte helps baby Matthew look at the birdie.

PHOTO BY SEAN SPRINGER

It's a refreshing time of voluptuousness after having small tits all my life, but I'll be happy when my boobs return to their pre-pregnancy size. I've entertained myself with a couple of more revealing tops and chuckled at the power cleavage can have over the male gaze. In addition to bigger breasts, I have miles of stretch marks, and a few more love handles than before. Although breast feeding helps the extra stores of fat melt away, I will never be my pre-pregnancy size — a fact that does not bother me. I feel sexier and more vibrant than ever. It's a well-known cliché, but I just discovered recently that there are more important things to worry about in life than trying to attain an unattainable image of beauty and body size.

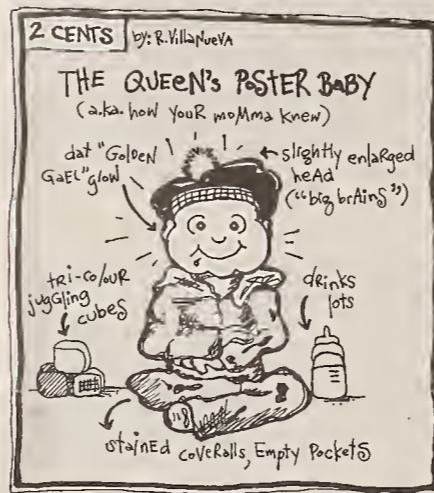

NOT ONLY HAVE I FOUND respect for my body, I have found respect for who I am as a person, realizing that the process of self-discovery is vitally important for happiness. If I cannot be myself as a mother, I will not be a good role model for my son. The pursuit of self-actualization is as essential to him as it is to me.

Before becoming a mother, I felt somewhat like a lost soul. But now that I provide for someone else, I have quickly discovered that I have to provide for myself in order to provide for my son. Like many women, I have spent too much time living vicariously through my relationships with others, putting too much worth on pleasing others. Now, finding my own happiness has become my priority. Finishing my passions are things I no longer put on the back burner. I spend more quality time doing these things than before, even though spare time is not as abundant. Time is something that I no longer take for granted.

OBVIOUSLY, A WOMAN NEED not have a baby to learn the valuable lessons of loving her body and mind, but if I can impart any words of wisdom from my experience, it would be to find what brings you happiness, in mind and body, and to pursue it with a zest for life.

Marte Natvik is high on life.

CAREERS ARE THE BEST THING THAT WE'VE EVER MADE

P&G Full-time & Summer Intern Info Session, Sept 22, 2:30 and 6:00 pm, University Club • Interview Workshop, Oct 1, 5:30 pm, Dunning Rm. 14 • Job Postings, Applications and other info, Queen's Career Services Centre

Procter & Gamble
www.pg.com/careers

Multideas Promotions

Screen Print and Embroidery.
In house Graphic Design.
More than 300,000 Promotional Products to choose from!

Wide range of in-stock or customized SPORTSWEAR.
Want to promote your TEAM? Leave it to US!

Make '98 the year to remember.
Make an impression at your conference.

Quality merchandise at very competitive prices.

Come and visit our showroom
We are licensed for the Queen's logo.
530 Barnsley Cres. Kingston, ON
Tel: (613) 634-2437 Fax: (613) 634-2505
www.multideas.com
multl@adan.kingston.net

STOPIT!
STOPIT!
STOPIT!

E-mail Harassment!

E-MAIL HARASSMENT is a growing problem at Queen's and other universities. STOPIT! is a joint initiative of Information Technology Services, the Human Rights Office, the Department of Security, and the Dean of Student Affairs.

Students should be aware that the Criminal Code applies to e-mail, and that violations can be turned over to the local police for investigation. In some cases of e-mail harassment, offenders have been asked to withdraw from the university.

IS IT HARASSMENT?

Ask yourself these three questions:

1. Did the incident cause stress that affected your ability, or the ability of others, to work or study?
2. Was it unwelcome behavior?
3. Would a reasonable person of your gender/race/religion/sexual orientation subjected to this behavior find it unacceptable?

If you answer "yes" to any of these questions,

HERE'S WHAT TO DO ...

- DO NOT IGNORE IT, and DO NOT ERASE THE E-MAIL MESSAGE(S) from your Inbox - it contains information that may identify the person responsible.
- Forward the offending e-mail to: stopit@post.queensu.ca
- If you feel threatened, call the Department of Security at 545-6111
- To discuss the harassment or to file a complaint, call the Human Rights Office at 545-6886, Monday to Friday 9am-5pm.
- For help from Information Technology Services (ITS), call 545-2244 Monday to Friday 8:30am-4:30pm.

It is also a violation of the Criminal Code to use someone else's name or computer user id to impersonate them in sending e-mail. If you have received e-mail of this type, preserve a copy of the message as it contains information that may help identify the actual sender.

STOPIT!
STOPIT!
STOPIT!

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

A Time To Kill

Hamilton-based Killjoys visit AJ's

Concert Review

By LILIAN KIM

"Crank it up,"

echoed with piercing aggression at AJ's as Juno winners The Killjoys took center stage for a small but energetic crowd last Wednesday.

The steel town boys, Mike Trebilcock (guitar, vocals), Shelley Woods (bass), and Gene Champagne (drums) rocked the inebriated and enthusiastic crowd with their radio-friendly hits and album gems. The smaller than capacity-crowd went wild for the band's performance of "Today, I hate everyone," which was welcomed with cheers of recognition and body slamming.

The band performed tracks from their highly acclaimed debut album Starry, their sophomore album Gimme Five and threw in a couple of songs from their new CD Melos Modos which was released this past year.

Trebilcock was in full force with impressive executions of loud wails during most of the set. But it was Champagne who grabbed the most attention. Completely focused on the impact of his drumming, it was amazing that Champagne didn't fly off his seat.

The Killjoys have been tweaking the attention of both music and media moguls alike. Their sound is a mixture of '60s pop, rock and punk, which is why The Killjoys attract a diverse crowd. Since their 1994 release of Starry, the band has only improved in their musical scoring. Their most recent release Melos Modos boasts vibrant tracks that are much softer than those found in their first two albums. The heavily rotated "Perfect Pizza" from Melos Modos is pleasant in sound and accentuates Trebilcock's vocal talents. The band's music won them the 1996 Juno Award for best new band and various other awards representing their well displayed potential.

There are no fancy tricks on stage. The band held an aura that had the crowd screaming for the favourites.

Compared to other bands such as Our Lady Peace and I Mother Earth, The Killjoys stay low key. There are no fancy tricks on stage, but the band has an aura that had the crowd screaming for the favourites.

During one point of the night, the band called for requests and one very inebriated but enamored patron yelled for some Tragically Hip. Trebilcock took it in stride, humorously mentioning that The Killjoys were a cover band that covered Killjoys tracks.

Another highlight of the show was the opening band. The Toronto-based Robbie Roth Band

Please see Killjoys on page 22

The "Joy" of Music. Hamilton's Killjoys include (from left to right) Mike Trebilcock, Shelley Woods and Gene Champagne

Rotate this!

Korn
Follow the Leader
Epic Records

By TIM EVANS

Korn, Korn on the cob, a human can of creamed Korn. What is Korn? I listen and hear musical traces of Nine Inch Nails, Ministry, Bio Hazard and the vocal stylization of Trent Reznor and Marilyn Manson. Based on my limited experience and Korn's Follow the Leader album, it seems the newest trend in "Scary Rock" is the clamped, whining, whisper sing-song voice, made oh so popular in Manson's "Beautiful People."

The style brings to mind torrid nightmares and prison flashbacks, but thankfully the album also contains some of the best drum pounding, throaty blends since Rollins and his merry band of men. To my surprise I enjoyed Follow the Leader.

As fans will surely know, Korn does not limit themselves to one mood or mould. Their songs vary from the hard and tortured "Dead Bodies Everywhere" and "My Gift to You" to the rap-thrash blend featured in "Children of the Korn" (featuring Ice Cube), "Camelosis" (featuring Trewant Hardson of Pharcyde) and "All in the Family."

The latter is a "cute" number that pits hip-hop (Fred Durst of Limp Bizkit) versus metal goth rock. It's a dueling banjo track where both parties attempt to out-do each other with their insults. The song sounds like it might go on forever in an endless tirade of rhyming debasement, but, thankfully, the inclusion of sodomy, cannibalism and felacio into the fold brings a quick end to the argument. "All in the Family" is a must listen.

The track "Seed" possesses a chorus which proves to be the most gripping explosion of words since Ministry's "Everyday is Halloween." Although I do not consider this to be my favorite style of music, I must concede that everyone should have an album like this for special occasions like the daily workout and raiding villages. Thank God for Korn now that Manson has gone glam rock. Korn will fill his hole well.

2 Unlimited
II
Byte Records

By SARAH CROSBIE

The people at Byte Records are pulling a big scam. Six years ago, as young teenagers, our ears had the privilege of listening to 2 Unlimited's sweet pop/dance hits like "Tribal Dance" and "No Limit." It was yummy ear candy. Now, however, 2 Unlimited is back. Well, kind of...

The two original artists chose to leave the group to pursue solo activities and the producers decided to keep the name. But instead of producing a new act, two new singers, Marion and Romy, were recruited to make 2 Unlimited's very cleverly titled new album, II.

II, (geez, this title is so catchy), has fundamental problems. The second you glance at the CD cover you will not be able to forget the photo of Marion and Romy glaring at you. I can't decide if they look like wanna-be porno glam girls or if they're trying to look "alternative." Their visual appeal is as appetizing as the garbage coming out of their mouths.

II's major problem stems from the lyrics. I didn't realize most of us had futures as song writers — pick seven words, no more than five letters each and you too can write lyrics for Marion and Romy. Dance music's goal isn't to inspire emotionally-ripping lyrics, but it would be nice if the verses were at a more intelligent level than that of a grade three poetry contest. Rhyming couplets are fine, but they're better left on the pages of poetry — "Come Together Black and White, So we can all be free tonight, To live as one, we can unite, Everyone Be free tonight."

The other major problem of the album is vocalization. For singers who name, Celine Dion, Whitney Houston and Erykah Badu as their inspirations, the vocals are weak. The culmination of II's powerless lyrics and lousy singing give this album basically no audio appeal.

Of positive mention is "The Edge of Heaven" only because it has a cool synthesizer opening, which is immediately disrupted by the vocals of Romy and Marion.

Unfortunately, 2 Unlimited's new album is poorly written, poorly sung and as a result produces really no catchy songs. This is one import we can limit from our lives. 2 Unlimited's sweet ear candy has melted and is now simply ear gunk.

Embrace
The Good Will Out
Geffen Records

By HILARY CLARK

Long after the moment is complete the memory lingers on, and so it seems, with

Please see Clever on page 22

Ink in the Blood?

Do you have opinions? Of course you do, everyone has opinions. So write them down and come over to The Journal and we'll print them for everyone to see. Call Todd at 545-2800 or stop by 272 Earl Street.

Write for Opinions at

Want to have experience in Teaching conversational ESL?
Want to find out about other cultures?
BE AN ESL VOLUNTEER TUTOR

Two-hour weekly commitment.

Call 545-2472 or drop by The School of English at 96 Albert St.

"Let me listen..."

Queen's drama aims to inspire frosh

Marissa Nelson, performing tonight in the Orientation show, enjoys quiet contemplation.

PHOTO BY JAMES TERJANIAN

Theatre Review

By ADRIA VUKSINIC

The 1998 Orientation Show, welcomes Queen's newcomers with a diverse, evocative mix of theatrical endeavor.

The three plays featured in this year's show are, Talk to me like the rain and let me listen, by Tennessee Williams, Yardsale by Lindsay Anne Black and A musical evening with the Choufleuris composed by Offenbach.

The first play of the evening, Talk to me like the rain and let me listen... opens with a long dramatic silence that sets the tone for the rest of the scene.

The scene develops at a very slow pace, but the relationship between the couple, an unemployed alcoholic and his unhappy wife, is well explored. William's play examines the charged tension and hostile silence that can develop in a destructive relationship.

Yardsale, the second play presented is an innovative, black comedy written by Queen's student Lindsay Anne Black. Her play was arguably the most entertaining of the night featuring a dysfunctional family at it's crazy best. The most memorable line of the night comes from Andrea O'Farrell as Lorraine, the suicidal daughter, when she boasts, "I've hanged the cat." The verbal thrashings between the mother and father are welcome as a stark contrast to the hostile silence of William's widow.

Music and dance are the main components of the operetta, the third piece of the night. Presented by Queen's music students, the artistry of drama, dance and music intermingle to create an operetta about late 19th century social life in Paris. The story, however, is difficult to follow in places because of the constant interruption of the chorus. The story involves a love affair between Ernestine, daughter of a Paris socialite, and Chrysodoule Babylas, her selected suitor. The play revolves around an important party that Ernestine's father is giving, although the audience never sees either the party or Ernestine's suitor, which makes the performance even more difficult to grasp.

William's play is about charged tension and hostile silence

The purpose of the orientation show is to give first-year drama students a sample of what is going on in the drama department. The choice of these three pieces was made by a selection committee looking for a diverse cross-section of drama to show to new-coming students. This, however, is a show that can be enjoyed by all students from any faculty and year. The show is running at Studio 102 in Theological Hall, this Friday at 7 and 9 p.m. and on Saturday at 8 p.m. Tickets are $3.

Get Out There!

Movies:

Playing at the Capitol Theatre until Thursday September 17: 546-5395

Playing at the Cataragui Cineplex until Thursday September 17: 389-7442

Blade 1:30, 4:30, 7:10, 9:50
Rush hour 1:00, 1:20, 3:10, 3:30, 5:10, 5:25, 7:20, 7:40, 9:40, 10:00
Knockoff 1:50, 4:10, 7:00, 9:10
One True Thing 1:10, 4:00, 6:40, 9:20
There's Something About Mary 1:40, 4:20, 6:50, 9:30

Playing at the Princess Court Cinema until Thursday, September 24: 546-3456
Return to Paradise 7:00, 9:15

Medical Movie Club
Apocalypse Now screening on Friday September 18 at 7:30 in Richardson Ampitheatre

Book Fair:
On Wednesday

September 16 from 5-9 p.m., Thursday and Friday from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m., Saturday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Sunday from noon to 4 p.m. the Symphony Book Fair will open its doors for the opportunity to purchase 15,000 books and pieces of sheet music. Admission is free.

Visual Art:
The Edward Day Gallery 547-0774

Until September 20, exhibits by Simon Andrew. From September 21 to October 18, exhibits by Catherine Dolcini.

The Modern Fuel Gallery:

21-A Queen St. From September 10 until October 10, Barbara Astman showing an AGO Artist with Their Work and AT&T Exhibition

Agnes Etherington Art Centre: 545-2190

From September 5 until November 1, Sheila Gregory will be showing her work.

Kingston Regional Arts Council: 546-ARTS

On September 26 and 27 the waterfront location at

The Tett Centre will be the home to A Country Fair in the City. The new Tett Centre is located at 370 King Street West. Demonstrations of painting, sketching, porcelain painting and pottery. Daily passes are $2 for all performances.

The Shot: Every Monday is Blue Monday. Tuesdays are Live DJs. Alternating Wednesdays Jon Coakley plays with Bug Daddy and The Shack, starting September 23. Coakley alternates with Professional Live Comedy, starting September 16. Every second Friday Travel Agent performs.

Reproduce in the Publishing + Copy Centre

Get escorted home safely by ANS Washhome Service

This year discover why the student body loves the JDUC

- Listen to stimulating discussions on a diverse range of topics
- Smell the coffee and fresh cooling of the Sidwalk Cafe
- Check out cheap texts of the USS Exchange
- Have your questions answered at the newly renovated Information and V&I Centre
- Use stamps of the Post Office
- Make yourself heard at student government assembly
- Get cash from the T.D. Bank machines
- Emak your sweetie from the Skyline Lounge
- Buy Queen's created clothing at the College Book Merchant
- Re-do your do (or fan your hair) at Signatures Hair, Tanning and Esthetics Salon
- Get your 'need to study' in the Pabon Room or Wakeup Hall, your food friendly alternative.
- Enjoy Subway for lunch in the Lower Colonnade (that's KAYLEE for neophytes)
- Grab a snack from the Ode Luch Shoppe
- Wet your whistle at the newly renovated Queen's Pub
- Dance your feet off at Aile's

The International Centre

Your Gateway to International Opportunities

Invites you to investigate volunteer options

Volunteer in the English Conversation Group

Volunteer to meet with an international student for one hour each week to help improve their pronunciation and conversation skills

Be a Country Representative

Volunteer to share, with other internationally-minded Queen's students, your experiences of living, working and studying abroad

Be a Resource Library Volunteer

Volunteer two hours a week to help out in the Education Abroad Resource Library

Volunteer in Another Part of the World

Volunteer options overseas? Make an appointment with our Education Abroad Advisor and visit our Resource Library

Up-Coming Events

- Mon, Sept 21 Library/Country Representative Volunteer Training
- Tues, Sept 22 Library/Country Representative Volunteer Training
- Fri, Oct 2 English Language Support Volunteers Meeting
- Wed, Oct 7 Crossing Borders Work/Study Abroad Fair
- Thurs, Nov 12 Education Abroad Speaker Series: Volunteering Abroad

The International Centre

at Queen's University
in the John Deutsch University Centre
just past the Queen's Pub
Tel: (613) 545-2604 Fax: (613) 545-6190
<http://www.quic.queensu.ca>

Discover why Queen's Irish eyes could be smiling.

It's our craic. In other words the spirit of good times in the cosy hospitality of our authentic Irish pub.

So drop by, have a wee bit to eat and drink, listen to the best live East Coast and Celtic music and enjoy the craic.

200 ONTARIO STREET
54 IRISH

A wee bit of Ireland.
Right next door.

Back by Popular Demand! Teach English Overseas

ESL/EFL TEACHER TRAINING CERTIFICATION COURSE

- * Teaching Materials
- * Job Resources
- * Language, Grammar, Pronunciation Skills
- * Teaching Practicum included

Mondays & Wednesdays 6:00 - 9:00 p.m.
September 23 - November 4, 1998
Practicum Saturday October 24 & 31
10:30 a.m. - 3:00 p.m.

Late registration 5:45pm September 23,
MAC CORY HALL Room C420

$349.00
Queen's Campus Location
REGISTRATION: Phone 384-6194

PLEDGE OF HOPE

Terry Fox Run
Sunday, Sept 20, 1998

The Marathon of Hope

In 1977 eighteen year old Terry Fox lost his leg to bone cancer. He was so affected by the suffering of other cancer patients that he decided to run across Canada to raise money for cancer research. During his Marathon of Hope in 1980 Terry ran an average of 26 miles a day for 143 days until he was forced to stop due to a return of cancer. He died in June 1981.

The Run Today - Worldwide

The Terry Fox Run has become the largest single-day fundraising event for cancer research in the world. Today over one million participants of all ages gather at an estimated 4,800 Run Sites in 60 countries around the world. Revenues have increased every year and in 1997 over $14 million was raised worldwide.

Thank You Ontario!

The citizens of Ontario have contributed significantly to The Terry Fox Run for the past 17 years. In 1997 you raised over $5 million. Through your efforts Terry's dream of finding a cure for cancer will be realized.

For more information on the Run in your community please contact:

545-6008
Queen's University Run,
Sunday, September 20th
Jock Hartly Arena @ the corner of Union and Division
Start time - 1:30 pm.

Please remember Terry Fox and cancer research with your bequest and memorial donations. The Terry Fox Foundation is independent of the Canadian Cancer Society.

Rotate this!
A clever choice for the collection

Continued from page 19

Britpop music.

What started as a small movement four or five years ago soon culminated with Oasis laying claim to being the most popular band in the world. The rush to sign British bands to North American labels was fast and furious. Those interested in the genre were soon left swooning over choices, both bad and good, waiting for us at the local CD shop.

The songs, "All you Good Good People," "My Weakness is None of your Business," and "Blind," are probably the most radio worthy.

After two years of a flood of bands such as Dodgy and Ocean Colour Scene hitting our airwaves, it became easy for us to dismiss the newer bands that came along. But if you avoid the new disk, The Good Will Out by Embrace, a band from Huddersfield, England you would be missing something special.

Although Embrace initially comes off like another typical hard-working northern English band, there is more to their music than first meets the ear. Embrace is being marketed here in Canada as the new Verve (in fact they share the same U.K. record label, Hut) and their music has the same raw pop edge as a certain Manchester band.

Embrace is composed of two brothers, Danny and Richard McNamara (who also have a bit of a reputation for being mouthy), as well as Mike Heaton and Steve Firth. The disk is the cream of British pop music, comprising beautiful strings, catchy pop tunes and mournful subjects.

The songs, "All you Good Good People," "My Weakness is None of your Business," and "Blind," are probably the most radio worthy Brit pop songs to take a lot of "Bittersweet Symphony's" mantle. It is easy to draw lots of comparisons between Embrace, Oasis, the Verve and The Stone Roses, but do yourself and your ears a favour and pick up the disk for yourself and give it a listen.

Clever Hans
Clever Hans
Normal Guy Records

BY JOCELYN LAPORTE

Clever Hans's self-titled debut CD release combines a unique blend of contemporary rock with a funky, folk-style twist. Their collection of songs range from harsh edge electric rock to mellow acoustic sets, with undertones of reggae and retro beats.

"Fairly Warned" has a funky, up-beat introduction and an eclectic sound which alternates intensity. The distant vocals and funk style drums provide its contemporary edge.

"10,000 Volts" is another, harsher selection. Its edgy, disjointed sound develops its modern rock appeal.

On the lighter side is "Fresh Horses," a folk-style acoustic song combining vocal harmonizing with bongo percussion. "Seven Sisters" is another selection which pleasantly harmonizes acoustic guitars and vocals.

The band seems to intermix a contrasting selection of electric sound, often alarmingly harsh, with sentimental acoustic sound. Add to these the upbeat, reggae style "Jamaica Mistake" and funky retro sound of "Masquerade" and a definitive Clever Hans sound becomes hard to determine.

Clever Hans... a unique blend of contemporary rock.

Clever Hans' debut album is a positive first effort offering a moderate selection of catchy tunes. While not for everyone, Clever Hans does incorporate elements of various musical genres making their unique blend of contemporary rock with an edge appealing for diverse audiences.

Killjoys rock the Hub

Continued from page 19

proved to be a complimenting opening act. Their sound of rock and blues riled up the crowd so much that the floor looked like an out of control frat party sans the couches. The Robbie Roth band begins touring in October throughout Ontario.

Although the show may not have been a success numerically, roughly four dozen patrons, it satisfied those who had shown up.

The Killjoys encompass the Canadian rock sound that is currently the hot item in the music circuit. The difference is that they have the potential for lasting power whether the crowd be as small as a living room or as imposing as a stadium.

Crack out the Cigars: Matt Drudge, the journalist who broke the Clinton/Monica Lewinsky story, has his own weekly talk show on the Fox News Channel. Drudge believes success lies ahead and that he is the future of mainstream journalism. Drudge is a former gift shop clerk who compares himself to Bob Woodward and Carl Bernstein, journalists who helped bring down President Nixon.

Unsinkable: Musieland Stores, which operates 1,300 stores, says that the first week of release of the Oscar-winning Titanic blockbuster video has heat estimated sales by 22 per cent. The picture is already the top-grossing movie of all time, having earned more than $1.8 billion at the box office.

Karma Chameleon: Bands of the 1980s are profiting from retro fever. Many believe the nostalgia began with the release of Adam Sandler's movie, The Wedding Singer. Both CDs have been selling as fast as Cabbage Patch Kids. Bands making a comeback are Culture Club, The Pretenders and B-52's. Billy Corgan, lead singer of Smashing Pumpkins applauds the return of the 80s sound.

Gettin' Jiggy with Yoda: With more than nine months to go, summer movies for 1999 are already being planned. The big blockbusters are expected to be, "Stars Wars," the first in the series, being released May 21 and "The Wild, Wild, West" starring Will Smith and Kevin Kline.

- Billboard Top 5
1. "Don't Want to Miss a Thing" — Aerosmith
  2. "The First Night" — Monica
  3. "Crush" — Jennifer Paige
  4. "My Way" — Usber
  5. "The Boy is Mine" — Brandy & Monica

Up in Smoke: According to the American Lung Association, Scinfeld stinks. The show last week was given the "Phlemmy" award, handed to television shows that glamorize smoking.

Loving the Music Scene?
Check out some of CFRC's (101.9) listings:

TOP 10 Folk/Blues		TOP 10 Loud Rock
Artist	Album	Artist	Album
Michael Picket	Blues Money	Various Artists	Until the end of time
Immigrants	Awkwardly	Infernal Majesty	Upholier Than...
Jimmy Dewrance	Too Gone...	Helloween	Better Than Raw
Jeff Taylor	Hurtin' Game	Iced Earth	Something Wicked...
KeB'Mo	Slow Down	Lesser Known	Inner Beast
Kate McDonnell	Next	In Ruins	Four Seasons of Grey
Barry Levenson	Heart to Heart	CIV	Thirteen Day Getaway
Buddy Guy	Heavy Love	Aghast View	Carcinopest
Various Artists	Fire in the...	Therion	Vovin
Randy Mac	Of Novel Soul	Social Distortion	Live at the Roxy

Check out CFRC preview in Friday, September 25 issue of The Journal.

The Queen's Journal Arts & Entertainment Contributes:

WE WANT YOU!

(to write for A&E)

Call Stefan, Sarah or Lilian at 545-2800

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
Want a job?

Assistant News Editor
We're looking for an enthusiastic and self-motivated person with some free time and an ear to the ground. Writing experience a plus.

Advertising Designers
We're looking for creative and artistic people with an interest in advertising and layout. Experience with computers an asset.

Computer Systems Manager
Have expertise in networking and systems? Want to earn money on an on-call basis? We need help. Call us. NOW.

Journal House Cleaner
We're looking for someone to clean The Journal House on a weekly basis.

Interested? Call 545-2800, drop by The Journal House at 272 Earl Street, or e-mail us at journal@post.queensu.ca
APPLICATION DEADLINE: FRIDAY SEPTEMBER 25 AT 5:00 P.M.

AMS Extended Child Care Program
Child Care Hotline: 545-600 ext.5645
Opening Day — Sept. 21, 1998
Hours: Monday through Thursday, 6 p.m. - 10:30 p.m.
Saturday, 10 a.m. - 4 p.m.
Prices: students; $2/hr for 1 child
$3/hr for 2 or more children
staff, faculty, Kingston community;
$3/hr for 1 child
$4/hr for 2 or more children

Reservations must be made by 12 noon the day the service is required and 12 noon Friday for Saturday service.

Care is provided by certified Early Childhood Educators.

Rhodes Scholarship Applications Due

11 Rhodes Scholarships, worth approximately $20,000 each, are available to Canadian students who are between the ages of 18 and 24, and preferably in their final year of undergraduate studies. Winners are to continue their studies at Oxford University, England.

While proven intellectual and academic attainment of high standard is the first quality required of applicants, students must also show integrity of character, interest in and respect for their fellow beings, the ability to lead and the energy to use their talents to the full.

Applications are available at the Student Awards Office at 110 Alfred Street. Completed application forms and supplementary documents must be submitted to the Associate University Registrar (Student Awards) by October 15, 1998.

The Toucan
www.thetoucan.com
SPECIALS

1/2 price WINGS* sun-tues	1/2 price NACHOS* wed	$2.49 sunday BREAKY
------------------------------	--------------------------	----------------------------

*with beverage purchase after 4pm

FRI SEPT 18 SAT SEPT 19

HOVER BROTHERS | bloom
FUNKY MEN

Kirkpatrick's
76 Princess st. 544-1966

The New Rules.

A new company. A new era.

And a whole new set of rules.

Your rules. ( So maybe you'd better sit down. )

Because we're reinventing the business world.

And don't you think it's about time?

the NEW RULES

www.pwcglobal.com
Grab your free CD at the Student Placement Centre on Campus.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 1998 PricewaterhouseCoopers. PricewaterhouseCoopers refers to the individual member firms of the worldwide PricewaterhouseCoopers network.

Many voices; one goal 'Celebration of Literacy' educates and entertains

Night Sun performs this evening.

Benefit Preview

By JOCELYN LAPORTE

"Many Faces: Many Voices, A Celebration of Literacy" is a unique fund-raising event being held in celebration of Kingston Literacy's 20 years of service to the community. The evening tonight will include a variety of events such as acting, dancing, music, progressive poetry and a silent auction.

The event has been designed as a celebration of the written word and emphasizes the connection between the arts and literacy. The evening's line-up is packed with a variety of entertainers. A few of the musical highlights will include the award-winning Cantabile Children's Choir, the string quartet Allegra and the Limestone Chorale. Added to these are dramatic performances, readings, photography and the Queen's African Step Team performing Stomp dance.

The closing act will be the Celtic band Night Sun, one of Billboard Magazine's most likely to succeed talent picks for 1998. This band, which originates from the Northwest Territories, combines vocals with accordion, clarinet, mandolin, whistles, drums and guitars.

"One of the great things about this event is the tremendous support we have had from the community."

— Martha Rudden

Their electrifying act has been described as "Janis Joplin singing Celtic-Zydeko with a Klezmer twist," by Dean Verger, owner of Ottawa's Live Review.

Other events include a book sale, a silent auction and an opportunity to participate in the writing of a progressive poem. Participants in the poem event are required to write a single line of poetry on a given subject to which other lines of poetry are added. At the end of the evening a prize will be awarded for the winning poem. Another highlight of the evening will be the "Many Faces: Many Voices" book for sale. It highlights artists such as Bryan Adams and Margaret Atwood.

"One of the great things about this event is the tremendous support we have had from the community," said Martha Rudden, the co-ordinator of the evening. Rudden said she believes the event would be appealing to the Queen's community as it "would give Queen's students an overview of the broad range of talent offered in Kingston." Rudden also commented on the great value of the $10 ticket price for the full evening of entertainment.

"Many Faces: Many Voices" is being held Friday September 18 at the Grand Theatre. It is sure to be an eventful and entertaining evening with an educational focus.

ALL QUEEN'S STUDENTS ARE ELIGIBLE TO APPLY FOR QUEEN'S GENERAL BURSARIES

Have you applied?

A bursary is a non-repayable award based primarily on financial need. All students in financial need may apply for consideration.

Bursary funds are available to meet those unexpected costs that are not covered by contributions from the government, external agencies, your parents or spouse.

Applications are available at the Student Awards Office, 3rd Floor, Victoria School Building.

***APPLICATION DEADLINE 31 OCTOBER***
***SECOND ROUND DEADLINE 31 JANUARY***

Check QCard in November to see if you were awarded a bursary. No notification letters will be sent. Cheques will be available to be picked up after January 11th.

So you want to be a "Big Wig" and you don't know how...
HERE'S YOUR CHANCE!

The Queen's Pub
(you know... that newly expanded place)

IS HIRING AN ASSISTANT MANAGER for the fall term with the possibility of renewal.

Get your application at the AMS front desk. Applications are due Friday, October 2, 1998.

Calling all
photography enthusiasts!

There will be a meeting for
Queen's students who are interested in contributing to the Journal's

Photo section on Monday,
September
21st at 6 p.m. The address is

272 Earl St., between University
and

Division.
(We have a bright blue porch, you can't miss it!)

If you're interested,
but can't make it to the meeting, contact

James or
Alex at 545-2800 and we'll fill you
in on all the details!

Cheers!

ATTENTION! WEEK END WARRIORS!

PRO-ACTIVE
INJURY REHABILITATION CENTRE

ADVANCED SPORTS PHYSIOTHERAPY
TO RESOLVE YOUR ACHEs AND PAINS
'JUST DO IT'

7 AM TO 7 PM 549 4393

100 PRINCESS ST. SUITE 400
SERVICES COVERED BY STUDENT HEALTH PLANS PRIVATE HEALTH INS.

50% off

on any menu item over $6.00
Buy one entree and receive the second entree of equal or lesser value at half price

THE PILOT HOUSE OF KINGSTON
A Friendly Neighbourhood Pub & Restaurant

Fish & Chips • Homemade Pies
Imported & Domestic Draught Beer

265 King Street East at Johnson • 542-0222

Expiry Date: Oct. 31, 1998
Not Available for takeout

Classifieds

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WONDERING ABOUT RELATIONSHIPS, career etc? Seeking direction? Experience greater self-awareness with Tarot, palmistry, runes, and more. Clients say my readings are inspirational and very accurate. I also offer classes in meditation, Tarot, etc. For more information phone Kellye at 544-1909. Also available Fridays and Saturdays at "Harmony", 93 Pines St. Walk in or pre-book at 544-7897. Tape included.

PROFESSIONAL TUTORING and Editing. Are you achieving the grades you deserve? Improve your essay skills, editing, research and writing. E.S.L. a specialty. Phone 416 280-6113, fax 416 960-0240.

RESTORED BREWERY HOSTS used book, music sale Friday, September 18th, 10-4, Saturday 10-4, Sunday noon - 4. 360 King St. West, walk 4 blocks west of campus.

PRIMA COMPUTER BOOKS The most important peripherals you'll ever own. Ask in the Campus Bookstore. Fast and easy; In A Weekend; Admin Guides and more...

PUNK ROCK! I play guitar and drums and I want to join or form a local punk band. Info call Ron at 531-4582.

GRADLINK is a service linking graduate students for mutual support. Call Student Counselling Service for more information at 545-2893.

MARVELOUS MENU STUDENT MEAL PLAN Home cooked nutritious meals delivered to you for under $5.00 per meal. Meals made to your specifications, ready for the microwave or oven. Student specials are available. For more information call Kathy Monday to Friday at 531-4265.

AUDITIONS: Flower Power - The 60's revisited. 3 leads needed to play older non-musical parts. 4 leads needed to play late teens/early twenties parts with singing. For info call Jesse Stewart at 531-3115.

MOODMASTER IS A GROUP FOR STUDENTS who have been diagnosed with depression or Bi-Polar disorder. Its purpose is to provide mutual support for members and to encourage life styles that promote health. If you want to know more...call the Counselling service at 545-2893.

COMING TO QUEEN'S FROM OUTSIDE CANADA? We buy most foreign currencies at very good rates without service charge or commission. Check our website: www.wellington.on.ca Wellington Foreign Exchange 153 Wellington Street, 531-8731.

SPRINGBREAK Daylona Beach, Panama City, South Padre, Mexico. Best hotels, parties, prices. Book early and save!! Earn money and travel! Campus Reps/Organizations wanted. Call Inter-Campus Programs 1 800 327-6013 www.icpi.com

PUNK ROCK! I play guitar and drums and I want to join or form a local punk band. Info call Ron at 531-4582.

ARE YOU A PLAYER? Can you sing/dance, in varying degrees of sobriety, humour and grace? QUEEN'S PLAYERS wants you! Call Robyn at 531-4586 for audition details.

ST. THOMAS MORE PARISH is holding a large garage sale Saturday September 19th, 8:30 - 4:00 p.m. at Newman House, 192 Frontenac St. (at Union) rain or shine. Furniture, dishes, books, records...

LABATT BREWERIES - For your keg party inquiries and needs, contact local campus rep Ryan Benedict at 531-3115.

CAMPUS GARAGE SALE at Newman House 192 Frontenac St., Saturday 19th, September, 8:30 - 4:00 p.m. Rain or shine. Furniture, dishes, records, books etc.

"BOOKFAIR" 15,000 used books, sheet music - fiction, texts, paperbacks, coffee table. 4 blocks west of campus, 360 King St., West. Friday, September 18th 10 - 9, Saturday, 10 - 4, Sunday noon - 4.

ADULT FRENCH COURSE Adult French for the workplace, an intensive French language course, offered mornings, daily at Loyalist Collegiate. No tuition fee. Details: 546-5575.

FOR SALE/RENT

FOR SALE An up-right piano for sale. No reasonable offer refused. Please call Gabriele at 545-6711 for details.

FOR SALE: Nearly new, single frame futon and mattress. Great condition, perfect for bed/couch. Asking $50.00. Call Laura at 546-2878.

FOR SALE: Macintosh IIcx computer. System software 7.1, 32 meg, full colour monitor, key board, mouse, external CD (2 mo. old) $550. Call 389-3984. Also, a ladies bicycle Raleigh, good condition, only $62.00.

FOR SALE: Almost new, solid pine futon with armrests, would make a perfect couch for your "ghetto" home and it folds down into a spare bed. $300.00. Call 549-3032.

GARAGE SALE. Propane BBQ with cover $85. Zenith 286 laptop, printer, table $100. Other items. 85 Centre Street, Saturday, September 19th, 9-1.

HELP WANTED

VOLUNTEER SUPERVISORS and Tutors are needed for the Helen Tutts Tutorial Program. An excellent opportunity to work with children. Please call 547-3388 or 547-2683.

CAREGIVER needed to look after a 4 year old 12 to 15 hours per week, primarily mornings. Experience with young children required. Call 531-4080.

PART-TIME NANNY NEEDED Nanny to look after a 9,8, and 2 year old. Must be able to travel to the United States. Must be able to swim. Working primarily on some week nights and Saturday and Sundays. Require references and job experiences. Send resume to Gregg Rosen at P.O. Box 300 Kingston, ON K7L 4W1 or call 544-1822 Monday - Friday, 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

LOVE KIDS? Love the outdoors? Scouts, Cubs and Beavers near West Campus need you. Call 544-2286.

TRIPLE TREAT (act, dance and sing) teacher wanted for 19 year old student. Please call Jenna Harris at 546-9036, anytime.

BABYSITTER NEEDED to look after a four year old boy. Close to campus, 5 days a week. Hours flexible. Call Cynthia at 531-9374 or Shandley at 547-6760.

LOST AND FOUND

LOST: Diamond engagement ring lost sometime after Wednesday September 2nd in Johnson St., Queen's area. Reward if found. Please call 536-1679.

FOUND: At the Campus Bookstore an envelope containing wedding photos. Thompson from Walmart. Can be picked up at the Customer Service desk.

PERSONALS

ARTS CI '00 Are you ready to rock? Smoker, Allies, Saturday. Be there!

MANY THANKS TO EVERYONE who offered me a bed or a floor and everyone who investigated housing leads for me. Special thanks to Narins and Jose and Ian and Company. Tucson

DUNCAN! Thanks for calling, big guy. Just remember to call your mom more often. Love, Your Coolio Cousin, T-Face.

THE JOURNAL CROSSWORD

Canadian Criss Cross by Walter D. Feener

ACROSS

1. Look to be
5. Sightseeing trip
9. Extemporize
11. Ship's smoke pipe
13. Australian saddle horse
14. Cutting tooth
16. Computer choices
17. Sheltered place
18. Five-franc piece
19. Not normal
21. Hot under the collar
22. Glass reflector
26. Competent
27. Fruitless
28. Word with coaster or skate
30. Irritable
31. Buildings for horses
33. Fuses
34. Barrister:abbr.
35. Family
36. Bihah's son
38. Easter symbols
42. Suffering from mal de mer
44. Prowled
46. Custodians for short
47. Shinto temple

DOWN

1. Old saying
2. Dutch cheese
3. Model
4. MacPerson
5. Appearance
6. Adjust the pitch
7. One time
8. One prefix
10. Black-and-blue sport
11. Horse under five years old
12. Places
15. More impolite
20. Optical glass
22. Golfers' assistants
23. Paper nautilus
24. Experiment with
25. Part of Q.E.D.
26. Wholly
27. Bird bills
29. Beg for
32. Gas containers
36. Per ___ (daily)
37. 16d square rods
39. Amorphous mass
40. Hindu teacher
41. Agitated state
43. Health resort
45. Set of tools

Answers for last issue's puzzle.

The Queen's Journal short story contest

The Journal Reader and features section invite Queen's writers to submit a 2,500 word short story. A panel of judges will select the top 3 stories to be published in the Oct. 30th Journal.

Deadline for entry: Friday, October 23rd. Entries can be dropped off at The Journal, 272 Earl St. or e-mailed to 'journal@post.queensu.ca'

Alumni Weekend '98... ...Get Involved!

S.T.A.R. (The Student Team on Alumni Relations) is looking for enthusiastic volunteers for our Alumni Weekend committee.

We need people for the following events:

- Registration tables
- Weeping Tile concert
- Senior Tea
- Half time parade at Kill McGill
- Principal's Ceilidh
- Chancellor's Dinner

This is a great opportunity to meet important faculty and alumni... and to score insider invitations to the coolest social events of the weekend!

Interested? Come out to our first meeting on Tuesday, September 22 in the Summerhill parlour, 5:30 pm. ... we'll even provide dinner!

Call Lourie or Laura at 545-6000, ext. 7520 to R.S.V.P. or for more information

Career Opportunities

DOFASCO
Our products is steel. Our strength is people.

Dofasco is one of North America's most productive and profitable steel-makers. Using the latest Basic Oxygen and Electric Arc Steelmaking Processes, we produce a full range of flat rolled steels for our customers in the Automotive, Energy, Pipe and Tube, Appliance, Container, and Steel Distribution Industries.

We are a company that provides our customers with steel solutions to meet their changing needs. As such, we're committed to exciting strategies for long-term economic growth, including investment in new technologies and the recruitment of exceptional graduates and undergraduates who can share our vision for the future.

We will have representatives from our company at your Career Fair to discuss your future with us.

For more information about Dofasco, visit our website: www.dofasco.ca.

Dofasco is an equal opportunity employer.

Alfie's PUB

I'D RATHER BE AT ALFIE'S

5	FRIDAY	SEPT. 18	WEDNESDAY	SEPT. 23	WEDNESDAY	SEPT. 30	5
4					BARBEQUE &amp; PARTY PACK DRAW		4
5	WIN CASH	CHECK OUT	THURSDAY	SEPT. 24	HOMECOMING	THURSDAY	OCT. 1
2		GROOVING FRIDAYS			HOMECOMING	BUST-A MOVE DOORS OPEN WITH DJ. ALI @ 9 PM	2
0		DOORS OPEN @ 9 PM			HOMECOMING	FRIDAY	OCT. 2
3	SATURDAY	SEPT. 19			HOMECOMING	WIN CASH	DOORS OPEN @ 9 PM
		ARTS SCI '00 SMOKER			HOMECOMING	FRIDAY	OCT. 2
					HOMECOMING	GROOVE FRIDAYS	DOORS OPEN @ 9 PM
					HOMECOMING	WIN CASH	DOORS OPEN @ 9 PM
					HOMECOMING	SATURDAY	OCT. 3
					HOMECOMING	RASSEALZ	Tickets available soon at the UBS

CHECK OUT OUR WEEKLY UPDATED WEB PAGE WWW.ALFIES.QUEENSU.CA/ALFIES

VIAGRA'S ROLE IN THE QUEEN'S SEX POOL: Drugs Confuse Student

Fiction

Author's note: A friend recently told me that I should remove myself from the features and AS&E scene to start writing some news pieces for The Journal. "Don't waste your time with that abstract crap!" she snapped.

Well, I don't normally "do" news (I leave that to the cool staffers), but I began to think that perhaps I should start broadening out. So, I approached the news people with an article a couple of days ago. Calling it outrageous, contentious, and totally untrue, they threw it back in my face and directed me to the MISC guy saying that he'd be able to help me out.

So, I read it to this MISC character who humiliated and deeply offended me, describing the piece as "funny shit." Proceeding to spice it up with some offensive language and lewd descriptions, he made a total mockery of this well-researched opus.

Yeah, I'm a little ticked, but damn it, I'm the bigger person and I'll bounce back. So, read, but don't laugh. Rather, consider the issue with an open mind in a thoughtful manner.

Now, I've only been back in Kingston for a couple of weeks, but already I've seen something very unusual. A curious phenomenon has strewn through the night life in our downtown core of swinging bars. And perhaps you've noticed it too. It caught my eye last week at one of our fabulous dance pubs when I saw a familiar male professor grinding with three of his students to that ABBA hit, "Fascinating Rhythm, leader of the Russian..."

I turned around to see another male professor stealing a few kisses from a young, sweet-looking gal. Another whose mouth was stuffed with a lemon was holding a tequila shooter in one hand and wrapping his other arm around a shapely young woman. You only needed to open your eyes to notice that about half the men at the bar were, in fact, Queen's professors. "What is this bullshit?" I began asking around. Could somebody explain why a greater number of mole Queen's professors, dressed in trendy apparel, were gripping the singles scene by storm?

I decided to investigate, asking every professor I could recognize.

"Why are there so many male profs trying to get laid all of a sudden?" Most professors took offense at the accusation that it was only until recently that so many of them were thrown into the sex pool. "We've been doing the community for years," retorted a group of about six of them, each with a stunning date.

Much later in the night, just before lost coll, one drunken Queen's prof, who refused to go on the record, held up a little bottle full of blue pills, smiled, and whispered, "Instant boners, my good man." I looked closer at the label to see that it read "Viagra." He popped a couple into his hand.

You only needed to open your eyes to notice that about half the men at the bar were, in fact, Queen's professors.

"Wont some?" As it's always impolite to decline a dose of anything, I rubbed my chin and shot back, "I'll take a half — thanks."

"But, these haven't been legalized yet in Canada," I informed my new friend. At this he told me about a bunch of medical professors who've decided to start their own little business to bring delight to fellow Epicureans. Like that rare student on Queen's campus with a constant supply of marijuana, the med professors have surprisingly become the most popular people among the males in the Queen's faculty.

Hey, I'm down with all that. I'm glad that these geezers can start getting their rocks off again. Good for them! What I'm not down with, however, is how education will suffer as a result. Preliminary data based upon the summer classes and this week's classes reveal that a lot of the male Queen's profs are attending morning classes very, very late. And when they give lectures, most shield their genital area by sitting behind a desk that is far, far away, making it incredibly difficult to understand anything! Not to mention the distractions they set while scratching and adjusting themselves.

Okay, perhaps that isn't quite the reason why I'm upset. I'm writing, really, because it's been next to impossible meeting anybody new at a Kingston bar. The same night I began my investigative report, I discussed my anxieties with two female friends. "What's the attraction?" I asked. "There's thousands of young, healthy men on this campus — much better looking than these downs, and yet, you seem totally smitten by their appearance and apathetic to our own. They each rolled their eyes, smirked, and replied slowly, "Look... all we're gonna say is that we're both looking for some men with the appropriate... experience." A heated argument erupted when I contested that they're simply hot for a bunch of older guys with enough academic clout to ensure a swift entry into graduate school.

I contested they were simply hot for a bunch of older guys with enough academic clout to ensure a swift entry into graduate school

Well, I certainly wasn't the most popular person of the evening. Battling the emotional scars from my arguments, I subjected myself to cheap wine and a rank falafel.

I sat at a Vic 20 and got down to business. Tap, tap, tap on the keyboard I went. Tap, tap, tap, let's go to The Journal.

Seon Springer also plays a significant role in the Queen's sex pool

Okay, perhaps that isn't quite the reason why I'm upset. I'm writing, really, because it's been next to impossible meeting anybody new at a Kingston bar. The same night I began my investigative report, I discussed my

Miscellaneous Viagra Facts

ACTIVE INGREDIENT:
SILDENAFIL CITRATE

HOW IT IS TAKEN: ORALLY, 1 HOUR BEFORE SEXUAL ACTIVITY

HOW IT WORKS: INCREASES EFFECTS OF CHEMICAL THAT CAUSES PENILE BLOOD FLOW

SIDE EFFECTS: HEADACHES, FLUSHING, STOMACH ACHE, URINARY TRACT INFECTION, DIARRHEA, DIZZINESS, RASH AS WELL AS MILD TEMPORARY DISTORTION IN VISUAL PERCEPTION.

U.S. DEATH TOLL: 69 (INCLUDING 2 STROKES, 17 CARDIAC ARRESTS, 21 MYOCARDIAL INFARCTIONS, 1 SEVERE HYPOTENSION LEADING TO CARDIAC ARREST)

CRAP IN THE CORNER

OPRAH'S BOOK OF THE MONTH: "HERE ON EARTH" BY ALICE HOFFMAN

ODDS THAT IF YOU'RE A SPICE GIRL YOU'RE PREGNANT: 1 IN 2

NUMBER OF TEEN PREGNANCIES IN BRITAIN EACH YEAR: 9,000

NUMBER OF COURSES IN ADVANCED ANIMAL TELEPATHY OFFERED BY PENelope SMITH IN CALIFORNIA: 3

PRICE PER COURSE: $100 [U.S.]

JEAN CLAUDE VAN DAMME'S CURRENT MARITAL AND DRUG STATUS: DIVORCED. NOT ON COCAINE.

NUMBER OF TIMES "ROXANNE" IS MENTIONED IN THE POLICE SONG "ROXANNE": 26

NUMBER OF TIMES "RED LIGHT" IS MENTIONED IN THE SAME SONG: 25

TODAY'S PEANUTS PURCHASE: [PEPPERMINT PATTY HANDS HER TEACHER A TEST SHE HAS JUST COMPLETED]

P.P.: "CAN YOU SEE THE LITTLE NOTE I ADDED AT THE BOTTOM?"

P.P.: "DRY CLEAN ONLY!"

TODAY'S CHARLES S. SCHULZ SENILITY RATING [1 BEING GRAMPA-TELLING-WAR-STORIES TYPE SENILE, 10 BEING GRAMPA-REENACTING-THE-WAR TYPE SENILE]: 9.6

NUMBER OF ARCHIE CHARACTERS WITH ALLITERATED NAMES: 2

NUMBER OF KNOWN OR SUSPECTED ILLITERATE ARCHIE CHARACTERS: 1

It's A Fact!
The Campus Bookstore has been buying and selling used books for over 26 years.
Campus Bookstore • 1288 Main St. • Kingston, ON K7L 3N6 • 361-1111

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY THE JOURNAL

1873

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1998

SOCY conflicts confuse students

By TYLER BENEDICT

If you still think you're enrolled in SOCY 427, The Sociology of Corrections, you'll want to make a correction to your course calendar. The course doesn't exist.

Internal staff shuffling and misinformed temporary staff in the department, contributed to overlapping and evaporating upper-year sociology courses this semester.

Classes such as SOCY 274 have been unexpectedly moved from Wednesday to Monday and Thursday, while SOCY 362, the prerequisite for a Communications, Culture and Information Technology (CCIT) degree, vanished back in August. Other courses are available for substitution.

While timetables may be looking a little sparse, classes certainly won't be that way. Sociology courses 324 and 221, among others, are enrolled beyond capacity and have spilled over into more accommodating classrooms around campus.

Confusion is certainly not limited to the sociology students who attended overflowing classes or empty lecture halls last week. The temporary staff member who designed the 1998-99 sociology class schedules was equally confused, according to June Piffold, the graduate secretary in the sociology department.

Recruited as temporary help in the sociology department, the woman who drafted the schedules was one of several replacements for the former undergraduate secretary who left on sick leave and, for personal reasons, never returned, explained Piffold.

"A person who had never done the timetable before did it last year, so, inevitably, there are problems," she said. The problems she refers to range from prerequisite course overlaps on timetables to the last-minute shuffling of courses to compensate for the poor scheduling.

"You shouldn't schedule required

Please see Cancelled on page 4

More students declaring need

By STEPHANIE CARVIN

Rising tuition fees have led to increased activity at the Student Awards Office this year, as many students have been forced to seek alternative methods to finance their education.

An undergraduate Arts and Science student enrolled in Queen's University during the 1995-96 academic year paid $2,451 in tuition fees. This year undergraduate Arts and Science tuition has risen to $3,551, an increase of approximately 30 per cent.

"It's really hard for people on OSAP" said Andy Sachedina, a second-year philosophy major. "It's hard when your parents don't help you pay and you do it yourself."

"Every year since I have been here I've had tuition hike after tuition hike," said Laura Green, a fourth-year history major from Quebec. "I am getting loans [from the Quebec government] but they are decreasing every year... I am glad I came to Queen's, but my bank account would rather I was at McGill."

This summer, Queen's students

Queen's rugby players try to push the scrum during the season's second game on Saturday afternoon. See story page 19.

PHOTO BY JAMES TERJANIAN

received letters from Principal Bill Leggett's office informing them of tuition increases and the reasons they were supported by the Board of Trustees. The letter included a commitment to ensuring that "no student be required to withdraw from the University as a direct consequence of the impact of these increases in tuition."

"As [the letter said] we will do everything we can," said Pat Bogstad, associate university registrar (student awards). "We hope this year we have a little bit more money in order to address the increased need students might have."

Additional funding will come from the university, reinvestment funds and interest generated by the Ontario Student Opportunity Trust Fund, Bogstad indicated.

Please see Alternatives on page 3

Student mourned at special service

By SHANDLEY McMURRAY

Friends and family of Mark Richard Wilson gathered for a memorial service at Bethel church on Saturday to celebrate the life of an individual who contributed significantly both personally and extra-curricularly during his three years at Queen's.

Mark, described by many of those who knew him as a compassionate, hard-working and enthusiastic student, died with his family in a car accident in July. He was scheduled to graduate from Queen's University with an honours degree in geography and political studies next spring.

Born in Sarnia, Ontario and raised in nearby Courtright, Mark's interests included politics, film, rowing, swimming and the Olympics. While at Queen's he was a Gael, secretary of the Arts '99 council, Academic Council Coordinator and an Arts and Science Undergraduate Society representative to the Alma Mater Society. He also attended meetings for Campus Crusade for Christ.

The sound of bagpipes echoed through the church Mark frequently attended, as about 80 people filed in for the 2 p.m. service.

Mark's former housemate Robyn Barker, Music '99, opened the service with a performance on the organ, as Mark's close friends and family members were led through the front of the church to their seats.

Reverend Chris Walker, associate pastor of the church, welcomed everyone and introduced the first hymn, "Amazing Grace." Many members of the congregation held each other and wiped away tears as the lyrics rang through the building.

Rowland Tinline, a Queen's geography professor, was the first speaker of the afternoon. "This has been a summer of tragedy for those in the geography department," he began. After speaking about the warmth and friendliness Mark brought to the corner of a third-year computer lab, Tinline announced that the geography department will grant Mark an honours degree posthumously. He closed with, "May we all continue to be touched and enriched by the memory of Mark in our lives."

One of Mark's closest friends

Please see Degree on page 2

index

Volume 126, Issue 7
www.journal.queensu.ca

News	1	Sports & Fitness	19
Editorials	6	Crossword	21
Opinions	7	Classifieds	22
Features	10	MSC	23
A&E	13

WEATHERWATCH

Today Sunny with clouds High 15°C; Low 11°C; POP 10%	Thursday Sunny with clouds High 20°C; Low 7°C; POP 40%
Wednesday Sunny with clouds High 15°C; Low 8°C; POP 10%	Friday Rainy High 21°C; Low 13°C; POP 70%

The Campus Bookstore and Jostens

present

Alumni Weekend Ring Days

Save 10% On All Jostens Rings

A representative from Jostens Canada, will be at the Campus Bookstore, from Thursday until Saturday. There will be a 10% saving on all Jostens rings ordered. Jostens rings offer unmatched quality and provide a free full lifetime warranty and four year insurance coverage. The Campus Bookstore offers Jostens rings in a variety of styles and designs to suit students as well as alumni. No deposit is required on your order and Jostens rings will be available for pick up within 8 to 10 weeks. Do not miss your chance to save 10% on your perfect ring. Come see the Jostens representative this week.

Campus Bookstore • www.campusbookstore.com • Clark Hall

September 24-26

10% Off Jostens Rings During Alumni Weekend Ring Days

jostens

Campus Bookstore • Clark Hall • Weekdays 9-8, Saturday 10-8
www.campusbookstore.com • 545-2955
Owned and Operated by Students Since 1909

Wilson awarded degree

Continued from page 1

Sunny Wong, ArtSci '98, was the next speaker. "The word that really comes to mind when I think of Mark is selfless," he said, before sharing personal anecdotes about his friendship with Mark. Mark's girlfriend Lorraine Redekop, ArtSci '00, read Verse 13 from 1 Corinthians, saying her own words would not have been enough to express how she felt about Mark.

"I can definitely say that I'm a better person for having known Mark," she said.

"I know Mark's happy now because he's in heaven and I can't wait to see him there," she closed.

When asked about her overall impressions of the memorial service, Karen Chappel, Con-Ed '99, said it gave her a chance to say her last goodbyes to Mark as she was not able to attend the funeral.

"I thought that it was exactly what Mark would've wanted. He loved people and loved to make people happy... He would have been pleased with the amount of friends that turned out and classmates and professors and there were even secretaries from the geography department," she added.

Chappel said the high turnout reflected "the effect that [Mark] had on so many people's lives."

Chappel said her favourite moment during the service was Tinline's announcement regarding Mark's honours degree. "It was Mark's dream to graduate with honours... He was so proud to be a part of Queen's... We were just so happy that that could be done, that Queen's would do that for him,"

Mark Wilson

JOURNAL FILE PHOTO

Chappel said.

After the service, Wong stated, "I thought it went pretty well. When we were first planning it, we were trying to decide the tone of it... We didn't want the same tone of mourning and grieving because it's been two months [since the accident]."

Most of all, Wong and his friends "wanted God to be glorified" in the service. He stressed that Mark had a special relationship with God: "[Mark] knows the lord... That's the best thing he's got going for him... He is spending eternity in heaven."

When asked if he thought the memorial service brought closure for him, Wong said, "I don't think I'll even reach a stage when it's closure... I'm passing these stages. It gets easier... Perhaps for the family and some other friends who were not as close to Mark, maybe it was closure."

The writing's on the wall. It could be yours.

Submit your creative work and your thoughts about other people's creative work to the Queen's Journal Reader, a monthly supplement to the Queen's Journal. So dig up those old poems and essays and let us publish them before you wake up one morning and bear them being broadcast on CNN. It happens, you know.

Please forward all submissions and inquiries to:

The Queen's Journal Reader

545.2800
journal@post.queensu.ca

Queen's alumni come home early

By Erik Missia

For Queen's University alumni, long-awaited reunions and revivals of friendships will come a little earlier this year — Alumni weekend has been pushed forward by almost a month.

Steven Sachs, Arts '01 said he thinks having Homecoming and Kill McGill during the same weekend is a great idea. "Both embody school spirit and their combination will make for a really exciting weekend," he remarked.

Steve Voyce, Con-Ed '01 said he believes it will be a very positive experience. "It adds to the whole nostalgic feel of the weekend. It'll allow alumni to re-live past football rivalries and it will allow us all to embrace and enjoy the spirit of Queens."

"The move to September has been received very positively."

— Tammy King, Special Events (Alumni Affairs)

The event, which marks a return to Kingston for thousands of former Queen's students, is traditionally set for the weekend following Thanksgiving. This year, however, the possibility of the Golden Gaels moving into a new football conference forced Homecoming organizers to change the date, according to Tammy King, manager of special events for Alumni Affairs.

Last year, Queen's place in the Ontario-Quebec Intercollegiate Football Conference was scheduled to be shifted by conference re-alignments. Although this plan later fell through, Alumni Affairs became concerned over the possible new home game schedule, King said.

As football games play such an integral part of the Homecoming experience, the organizers decided it was best to move the event earlier on in the season, she said.

Royal Military College's graduation on the weekend of October 2 further complicated matters. The influx of RMC alumni coupled with the estimated 4,000 returning Queen's graduates may have resulted in over-booked hotels and mass confusion for many weary Kingston visitors, King said.

Alumni Affairs was responsible for reserving the Ambassador Hotel and other accommodations and the prospect of having two major events in one weekend was too risky, King said. This situation forced them to decide between hosting Homecoming one week later than the traditional mid-October date, or two weeks earlier.

The idea of having Homecoming Weekend at the end of October was not one that sat comfortably with King. While weather cooperated last year, cold winds usually associated with mid-autumn were definitely a factor in the final decision to hold Homecoming on September 26.

This decision was even more fitting when King discovered the football battle would be a "Kill McGill" match against Queen's infamous rivals.

Alumni who graduated in years ending with a '3' or an '8', stretching back to 1928, were informed of the date switch via holiday cards sent out by Alumni Affairs last December.

"The move to September has been received very positively," King said.

With a good weather forecast, an excellent football game and several other events planned by individual faculties, this year's Homecoming promises to follow the tradition of being "better and bigger every year," said King.

"It's going to be fun, but a little crazy. It's going to be really hard on security and I have a feeling those of us in residence are going to get hassled a lot with the amount of guests coming in for the weekend," said Natalie Diaz, Arts '02.

Students seek alternatives

Continued from page 1

"The university does recognize the difficulties students are facing," she said. "There will be enough for students who suffer as a direct result of the increase."

Many students have already looked into various forms of student aid. "We have noticed an increase in the number of applications for bursaries," said Bogstad. "Also, we have noticed that there are more students picking up bursary applications."

The final application deadline is at the end of October. However, Bogstad said it appears there aren't as many students taking out loans. "OSAP applications are down a bit this year but it is a bit early to tell," she explained.

"If students are receiving government aid it is not sufficient," she said, to account for the decrease in OSAP applications. "Students are looking for other ways to get money."

One of these alternatives is the university's work-study program, which allows students to work on campus 10 hours per week while attending Queen's. According to Bogstad, the number of work-study applications is markedly higher this year over last year.

"There will be enough for students who suffer as a direct result of the increase."

— Pat Bogstad, associate university registrar (student awards)

The program is funded by student interest fees, the Ontario Ministry of Education and Training, by the university and by specific departments.

Last year, 432 students received placements in the work-study program, a number Bogstad hopes to improve on this year.

"We very often have more students than we have jobs," she said, however this year. "We have put a real effort into trying to get departments to hire students... I imagine we will have an increase in jobs."

Some students have tried to counter the increase in costs by working more hours or additional jobs in the summer.

"In my first and second years I worked two full-time jobs in the summer at 65 hours per week plus I gave private instruction," said Green.

Sachedina said she felt extra work in the summer was not paying off. "You think that your summer job will help but it won't... [Tuition] is going to keep going up. If it went up so much this year what's to stop it next year?" she said. "You can have all of the protests you want but you just have to live with it."

"I really can't forecast what government aid programs will be like in a year," Bogstad said, indicating that the system is currently under review in Ontario. "The university is doing what it can to ensure that students have enough money. We realize how difficult it is for many students."

New legislation affects student tenants

By Shawn Brimley

A new law governing the relationship between landlords and tenants may have important implications for students.

On June 17, the Tenant Protection Act became law, bringing a series of changes to the old system. The act combines six pieces of legislation, and implements the Ontario Rental Housing Tribunal, an independent body designed to mediate and resolve landlord-tenant disputes.

"Don't panic and sign a lease in the beginning of January, remember that you can negotiate your rent."

— Patrick McNeill, Town-Gown Relations

The most significant reform under the new act allows landlords to charge as much rent as they want on their properties once they become vacant. However, once a tenant moves into a new property, the rent will only increase on an annual basis according to a rent control guideline, which is set at three per cent this year.

"What we are going to see is the possibility of high rent levels, as landlords don't have the restrictions they once did," Alma Mater Society Municipal Affairs Commissioner Sarah Corman commented.

"However, Kingston is very much a buyers' market, so the long-term results should be very beneficial to students."

"The first-year students are the largest consumers in this market and it is important for them to understand that in order to take advantage of this market, they must be patient and shop around," said Patrick McNeill, Town-Gown Relations.

"I really want to convince students that they don't have to shop early," McNeill added. "Don't panic and sign a lease in the beginning of January, remember that you can negotiate your rent."

The new act is very detailed, but it clearly defines the rights and responsibilities of landlords and tenants," explained McNeill.

"The new act, and especially the Tribunal, are positive developments in that it allows for a much more accessible system...

it clears up many grey areas," said Corman.

The Tribunal moves disputes between landlords and tenants out of the provincial courts and into a less formal system that involves adjudication and mediation.

"[The Tribunal] will provide tenants with a positive way of preserving positive relations with their landlord [which is important] because in many cases after a dispute, the student will still have the same landlord," Corman said.

"If a landlord wanted to pursue an eviction, a tenant would only have five days to file a dispute."

— Alma Mater Society Municipal Affairs Commissioner Sarah Corman

While enthusiastic about the new act, Corman said she is a little concerned with some of the new rules in the legislation. Specifically, Corman mentioned, "If a landlord wanted to pursue an eviction, a tenant would only have five days to file a dispute."

Student homes, such as this one, could see increases in rent.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Students urged to 'party well'

BY LINDSAY BLAKELY

Homecoming weekend traditionally signals the return of alumni to their old scholastic stomping ground, but it has also become synonymous with overzealous alcohol consumption, an issue organizers of Alcohol Awareness Week hope to address.

The events taking place every day this week aim to "advocate low-risk drinking and to curb the binge drinking that is part of any university life," said Tolga Barker, chair of Educating Students on Substances (ESOS), a subcommittee of the AMS Social Issues Commission organizing the event with Student Health Services.

"Party well" encapsulates the spirit of the week, according to Diane Nolting, a health educator at Student Health Services.

"[Students should] pace themselves, to plan ahead, to reach for some non-alcoholic drinks in between..."

— Diane Nolting, health educator

"[This is] the optimal time to do something like this," added Barker, as the week's activities will demonstrate the perils of excessive alcohol intake and propose healthy alternatives to the drunkenness associated with Alumni Weekend partying. Barker said she also wants to increase students' awareness of alcohol-related resources at Queen's, including ESOS and the Campus Observation Room, this week.

The COR, an observation room for intoxicated individuals who are capable of providing their name and address, is "a safe environment in [Victoria] Hall that is totally confidential," said Nolting.

The COR provides an environment where people who have had too much to drink will be taken care of in a safe, non-judgmental manner, she added.

It will be open on Thursday and Friday night from 10 p.m. to 8 a.m. and on Saturday from 3 p.m. until Sunday morning at 8 a.m.

Volunteers from ESOS and the COR will be available all week to field questions and to run educational games, events and information sessions.

They will also show instructional videos about "date-rape drugs" like Rohypnol, which can be slipped into drinks.

These "key tools" of sexual predators are here at Queen's and it is imperative to be cautious in all drinking environments, said Barker. She hopes the week will lead to students making intelligent choices.

The message of the week, Nolting said, is to encourage students to "pace themselves, to plan ahead, to reach for some non-alcoholic drinks in between, and to do stuff [such as dance] as well as drink."

Events will take place between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. in the lower ceiling of the John Deutsch University Centre.

Information on guidelines for low-risk drinking, Mothers Against Drunk Driving and the Addiction Research Foundation is available on the Web at www.queensu.ca/spirits/.

Classes moved, cancelled

Continued from page 1

place, but now that CCIT has dissolved, I have to rely on sociology. If I don't, I have nothing left."

"I hope [the sociology staff] can straighten it all out," said Stefan Martin, another second-year CCIT student. "Two of my courses have changed rooms and I'm still waiting to find out if they're moving 284."

So, will it all be straightened out? The graduate secretary believes so. "The new undergraduate secretary understands the implications of putting various courses at various times," said Pifiloff, "I have high hopes that things will be better next year."

A committee consisting of the department head and the undergraduate chair, among others, is being formed in hopes that plenary debates over department strategies will encourage communication within the department, leading to better administrative decisions in coming years.

Two more upper-year sections have also been added to the winter timetable to off-set the overwhelming interest in the sociology courses.

QUEEN'S TAE KWON DO CLUB

FREE DEMONSTRATION
TUESDAY, SEPT. 22 ND, 7:30 P.M.
LOWER EXERCISE ROOM, PEC

Classes:
Tues. & Thurs. 7:00 - 8:30
Lower Exercise Room, PEC
Saturday 12:00 - 1:30
Combatives Room, PEC

Beginners Welcome

Classes led by 7th Degree Blackbelt Master Instructor

Come and try a free class. Sign up by Sept. 30th and save $20 on the yearly membership fee.

For more information come to our demonstration or call: Jason 547-9914 or Kristen 531-3747

Want to have experience in Teaching conversational ESL?
Want to find out about other cultures?
BE AN ESL VOLUNTEER TUTOR.

Two-hour weekly commitment.

Call 545-2472 or drop by The School of English at 96 Albert St.

ESSAY STRESS??

FOR FREE TUTORIALS CALL

THE WRITING CENTRE
140 Stuart @ University
545-6315

VOLUNTEER WITH US

TELEPHONE AID LINE KINGSTON

TALK

544-1771

open every night 7pm-7am, weekends until noon

Telephone Aid Line Kingston (TALK), a distress, crisis, information and befriending line, is looking for new volunteers for its:
FALL 1998 TRAINING SESSION!

To find out more,
Reach us by phone at our Business line 531-8529.
Email us at talk@aracnet.net
or check out our webpage at www.aracnet.net/~talk

Fast Facts

In Here

Volunteers Needed

Fairmount Home for the Aged is looking for someone with training in volunteer service and three to five years volunteer experience with seniors to fill the position of Volunteer Coordinator.

The Canadian Diabetes Association requires physically fit volunteers to act as Race Marshalls during the upcoming 5 km race at LeMoines Point on October 4. The association also needs persons for door-to-door canvassing in December.

The Open Book Project is looking for a volunteer chemistry tutor to help a student with a grade 11 chemistry course.

The Heart & Stroke Foundation of Ontario needs volunteers to start a Jump Rope for Heart & Hoops for Heart program at local schools.

The K.A.S.E. Council requires eight volunteers with small business knowledge to assist young adults taking a Youth Entrepreneurship Programme.

For more information, call the Community Volunteer Centre at 542-8512.

Elizabeth Fry Society meeting

The Elizabeth Fry Society of Kingston will be holding their annual general meeting on September 24 at 7 p.m. in the Wilson Room at Kingston Frontenac Public Library. The non-profit organization works to create services for women in conflict with the law or women facing financial and social barriers that may put them at risk. Call Deb Campbell at 544-1744 for more information.

Supermarket Safari

The KFLA Health Unit will be holding Supermarket Safari tours for people interested in making healthy and economical food choices. Tours will be held from 7 to 9 p.m. today at Loblaws in Cataraqui Town Centre, October 20 at Loblaws on Princess Street, and November 17 at Loblaws in Cataraqui Town Centre. The cost is $10 and groups must register through the health unit at 549-1232.

Careers Day '98

Career Services and AIESEC present Careers Day '98, today and tomorrow. More than 40 organizations will be represented each day. The event takes place in Grant Hall between 10:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

AIDS Walk Kingston

This Sunday, AIDS Walk Kingston will take place. Every dollar raised in the event helps someone in the community dealing with HIV/AIDS. Call 545-3698 for details.

NEW YORK CHIROPRACTIC COLLEGE

A Healthy Investment in Your Future

If you're looking to continue your education with an advanced degree in health care, consider New York Chiropractic College. It's a solid choice and a wise investment in your future.

- NYCC:
- Boasts a curriculum with an excellent balance among the Art, Science, and Philosophy of Chiropractic.
  - Employs talented and diverse faculty.
  - Features modern, state-of-the-art facilities.
  - Is a fully residential campus located on 286 acres.
  - Is conveniently located in the scenic Finger Lakes region of Central New York.

Contact us today to schedule a visit or to obtain more information!

New York Chiropractic College

2360 Route 89 • Seneca Falls, NY 13148-0800

Phone: 800/234-NYCC(6922) Fax: 315/568-3087

E-mail: enrolnow@nycc.edu

Website: www.nycc.edu

What's Happening

The AMS updates you on what's happening on and around campus

Alumni Weekend Volunteers Wanted!
All the AW festivities kick off TOMORROW (oh happy happy day!) And the Campus Activities Commission still needs groo-vee katz to make sure all the homecoming events run smoo-thie. Interested in public relations, event management, promotions, etc...? Call the CAC 545-6000 ext4819.

Homecoming Sidewalk Sale Tables Still Available!
Tables are a mere $30 for Queen's affiliated groups, $60 for non-Queen's businesses. Sale is on Saturday, September 26th from 9am - 5pm. Call Heather or Kelly @ the CAC, 545-6000 ext 4819 to sign up for your spot!

Kill McGill is September 26 @ 1pm!
T-shirts are on sale NOW and they're going faster than jelly shoes circa 1984. Unisex $10, baby tees $14. Get 'em in the CAC office in the AMS! Don't forget to get your ticket for the big homecoming Kill McGill game: you get one FREE with your student card!

Go to the ticket office in the PEC before you're left scalping for 'em. Beer lent at the game will require ID. Phat football pre-game bash & pep rally begins at Alfie's 11am Saturday.
All ages, ID required to drink.

Clubs Night
Wasting all your time in lectures or in labs? Round out your education by joining a club that's right for you. Clubs night is an opportunity for you to find out which ones will put a extra spring in your step and a glimmer in your eye.
It's in Grant Hall from 6pm - 10pm on Sept. 30 and Oct. 1.

Are you an Infomaniac?
All those who want to get down and dirty in the Infobank (translation: Do you want to volunteer?) call 545-2732 to get in on the action.

Wakey, Wakey & Shakey, Shakey
Get up early Homecoming Weekend and bust a move down to the Hospitality Tent at the Football Game:
That's right folks, the AMS Rocks your world from 12 to the end of 3rd quarter.
ID & $ required.

Queen's Entertainment Agency Presents...
The Rascaalz with Cardinal Offishal at Alfie's Pub Saturday, October 3. Tickets $8 advance, $10 door. On sale at UBS, Alfie's Pub, and the QEA office.
The Rascaalz are so PHAT you might gain weight!! SEE YOU THERE!

If you have something you want to tell the world then

PHONE THE AMS COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION @ 545-2732, OR EMAIL COMM@AMS.QUEENSU.CA

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

Throwing the game

While safety is an important concern, the way Student Constables frisk students and ban anything that could be used as a projectile weapon at the stadium is often arbitrary and patronizing.

Instead of following a consistent policy, many constables seem to have varied opinions on what constitutes a potential projectile; past examples include lollipops, cans of soda, umbrellas and even a baby-doll. It is more likely that spectators will such a policy when clear guidelines are set down by the administration and communicated to the student body at large.

If such a policy is drafted for the Constables, consideration should be given to the consequences for attendance at home-games. A blanket ban on anything that could be used as a projectile weapon, including umbrellas and flags, will put a damper on a traditionally spirited event.

While we do think safety should remain a priority, it is absurd to argue that Queen's students will succumb to the temptation to hurl anything not tied down. While some measures must be taken to ensure a safe environment, those responsible should bear in mind that you cannot remove all of the rowdiness and exuberance from football without it losing its appeal.

It is absurd to argue that Queen's students will succumb to the temptation to hurl anything not tied down.

Furthermore, this desire to protect students from themselves seems spurious in light of the greater danger posed by the poor condition of the stands and the administration's lackadaisical response to this disaster waiting to happen.

In spite of this danger some students do continue to attend football games at Richardson Stadium. Their attendance, however, will continue to shrink as long as the administration expects students to show up bare-foot and empty-handed.

Shunned and stoned

WITHIN THE LIMITED CONFINES of the Queen's fish-bowl, the issue of drug abuse rarely finds its way into our daily lives. Yet, for some students at Queen's the use of dangerous drugs, such as cocaine and heroin, play a far larger role in their lives than the perennial issue of alcohol abuse.

It is dismaying, therefore, that public discussion and efforts to educate students about drugs seem muted in comparison to other substance-abuse problems. Unlike alcohol and unsafe sex, students are not adequately confronted with the consequences of hard-drug use when they arrive at Queen's. Likewise, for many upper-year students awareness of drug use is often not a visible part of the Queen's experience.

Perhaps one reason that drug-education is not prominent on campus is the university's adherence to a philosophy that treats drug-abuse as a criminal activity and not as a sickness. The issue of how to help a friend with a drug problem in residence is a moot point at an institution whose policies require zero-tolerance of drugs. Since actual drug use at Queen's is far more complicated than 'just say no,' the university is making it very difficult to educate students about drugs.

It should not be necessary to attend a pharmacology course to learn the effects of hard drugs. Until we recognize that there might be a problem, however, the issue of drug-use at Queen's will continue to fall between the cracks.

Bons Mots:

And the answer on drugs is, again, education - until some genius finds an antidote that you can stick in your arm and it does away with all addictions.

— Mario Cuomo

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF
Keith Green
Tara Mansbridge
MANAGING EDITOR
Stefan Murray
NEWS EDITOR
Laura MacInnis
Fiona Stevenson
ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS
Shawn Brimley
Renée Huang
Vacant

EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
Paul Hester
ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR
Stefan Murray
ASSISTANT A&E EDITORS
Sarah Grosbie
Lilian Kim
FEATURES EDITOR
Sean Springer
OPINIONS EDITOR
Todd Jackson

SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Adam Kaminsky
ASSISTANT SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Robert MacNeil
MSC. EDITOR
Ken Butland
GRAPHICS EDITOR
Janice Chan
THE READER EDITOR
Jesse Craig Bellringer

SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT
John Bowman
SPECIAL PUBLICATIONS EDITORS
Elizabeth Frogley
Shandley McMurray
PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS
Alex Kronby
James Terjanian
WEB EDITOR
Marco Lui

WRITERS

Heather Aggas, Tyler Benedict, Lindsay Blakely, Stephanie Carvin, Robert De Bellefeuille, Scott Deveau, Juliette Loflier, Erik Missio, Nathan Sager, James Worrall.

PHOTOGRAPHERS

Gal Bae, Jenxier Potter.

I DON'T THINK I CAN LET YOU IN GORD, YOU LOOK LIKE A POTENTIAL PROJECTILE.

A helping hand, eh

NO ONE COMPLAINED AS THE rain pelted down on our heads. The wind scratched our cheeks while the soggy ground seeped into our sandals. People huddled together in small masses to contain any found warmth while the music blared loud and clear across the grassy knoll of the Citadel. It was the summer's Great Big Picnic festival held in Halifax, Nova Scotia.

Although they were the cause of the evening's undeniable merriment, it wasn't the music or the drink that brought people closer together that night, it was what someone said.

As Great Big Sea took the stage, equipped with guitars and percussion, the soaked but tireless crowd waited for the band to begin their set. But before the first chord was strummed, the band's lead singer took a moment to express his gratitude. The silhouette of the crowd was still as his words echoed through an incredible silence. He explained his admiration for the Canadian people who have taken one of the most unfortunate disasters to occur this summer, for history at least, and grasped it into their own hearts.

The August crash of a Swiss Airline jet on the waters off Peggy's Cove, N.S. that took the lives of 229 people sent a rippling effect across the world. People everywhere took the news to work the next day with solemn and sad faces. Many of us didn't know the people on board, but it still hurt. Television scanned the waters where floating debris painted a horrific reenactment. Fisherman and boat owners alike took the helm in a matter of seconds, without a blink of an eye, to search with much hope for survivors to pull back safe to shore. Unfortunately, they could not find any.

The sincerity is real in our Canadian culture.

Walking down the streets of downtown Halifax, the sandwich board signs in front of restaurants described the specials of the day on one side, while words of sympathy scripted in colours and pictures graced the other side. The incident became so much a part of how people lived and felt.

I was only in Halifax for a short trip, but the profound kindness that I was surrounded by and the knowledge that it extended throughout the province let alone the country gave me a feeling of serenity.

I recall watching an American comedy skit on television where actors were portraying the personalities of Canadians. Although the mood was set in a mocking manner in which every character was seen as polite beyond belief, I felt a degree of pride because it is true.

Whether it be a horrendous disaster or a summer-end music festival, the sincerity is real in our Canadian culture, with its carved belief that every person and every place is considered home.

BY LILIAN KIM

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Kraft
SALES REPRESENTATIVES
Kari Brintnell
Andrew Cooke
Krisstan Li
ADVERTISING MANAGER
Vacant
ADVERTISING DESIGNERS
Katherine Calbourn
Annie Ge
SYSTEMS MANAGER
Vacant

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Tuesday, September 22, 1998 • Issue 7 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the responsibility of The Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.

Copyright © 1998 by The Queen's Journal; all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Queen's Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Goss Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Kingston, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions. Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2H8. Telephone—editorial: 613-545-2800; advertising: 613-545-6711. Fax: 613-545-6728. E-mail: journal@post.queensu.ca. Circulation 9,000. Issue 8 will be published on Friday, September 25, 1998.

OPINIONS

Real changes depends on real actions

ISN'T IT AMAZING THAT A STUDENT protest in Indonesia managed to topple a dictator, while students in Canada can't seem to accomplish a damn thing? I have been watching Canadian students struggle with tuition increases since I started university five years ago. Why can't we make a difference?

An example. Near the end of 1997, the Ontario government announced that it would be deregulating tuition fees for all "professional" programs. The Queen's University administration soon planned startling tuition increases for students in Applied Science, Law, Medicine, Education and other disciplines.

The administration says its hands are tied. But I can't believe that. There are always choices to be made.

Fortunately for students, only days before the spring Board of Trustees meeting where these increases were to be approved, the provincial government offered clarification: it specified which programs could be affected, and stated that students who were already enrolled were not subject to deregulation. This meant that tuition revenues would not increase by nearly as much as the university had hoped. Nevertheless, incoming medical students were facing a 125 per cent increase over two years. So, I joined a handful of med students still on campus and went to the Board of Trustees meeting with the hope of softening the blow.

The Trustees were very welcoming. Student groups were allowed to speak against the increases. Queen's students should be proud of the Alma Mater Society: they had a great presentation that really put our plight into perspective. They were reasonable and conciliatory. What did they accomplish? In the ensuing debate, Principal Bill Leggett and his cronies staunchly defended the increases and maintained that they were necessary to prevent a budget deficit. Board members sighed that more student aid wasn't available. Everyone seemed very sympathetic towards the students, but the administration pointed out that applications weren't declining as tuition went up. For them, it was supply and demand argument: accessibility and ethics had nothing to do with it.

Nevertheless, one board member tried to amend the tuition increases to lessen the shock. The chair of the board suggested that the board member should think long and hard before meddling with the master plan. The implication was that Board was only there to rubber stamp whatever the administration decided, and couldn't make suggestions or changes. The board member, however, stuck to her guns. After long debate, the amendment failed. The chair quickly called a vote on the main motion to stifle further debate and the tuition increases were all approved. Soon after, we were all invited up to a little party (with free salmon and booze) at Summerhill.

Throughout the evening, a sense of doom crept over me. Everyone seemed nice, but the subtext was sickening. The Board was bullied by the chair and manipulated by Principal Leggett. The students were patted on the head: "Don't worry, dear."

We, the students, realize that Queen's needs money. So we compromise and compromise until we have compromised ourselves into bankruptcy. The administration says its hands are tied. But I can't believe that. There are always choices to be made. One board member said the students hadn't offered any real alternatives. Rather, it is the administration who refuses to offer alternatives.

Surely, if the government had not announced a deregulation in 1997, the administration would have still found a way to present a balanced budget. And if fees had been completely deregulated instead of "grandfathered, they would have still said every single increase was necessary to prevent running a deficit. In fact, the administration always says they have no choice. Then they proceed to raise tuition by the maximum amount allowed under the law!

The university administration started to salivate last winter when the government deregulated professional programs. Later, when the deregulation was tempered, all they could do is bemoan the money they had "lost." You can't lose money you never had; they were getting ahead of themselves, running to the bank with the anticipated dividend of our suffering.

I used to believe in conciliation, that it was better to talk than to shout, that being unreasonable got you nowhere. Experience, however, has taught me that being reasonable is useless, we will just be screwed over another time. If we don't get up and do something, things will never change.

We need some strong action. The AMS should hold a referendum calling for the resignation of Principal Leggett. The AMS should pass a petition — everyone who signs pledges not to give alumni support to the university for at least 20 years. Finally, the AMS should organize a tuition strike.

If we make bold statements, the Board of Trustees may pay attention and the university may start putting some pressure on the government.

I am convinced that we cannot negotiate when the administration refuses to listen. When you are oppressed, you have to speak out. Sometimes you have to keep standing up, even if you get kicked down a few times. I'm sure everyone in Indonesia knew that.

JAMES WORRALL
MEDS '01

talking

HEADS

What is your favourite corporate icon and why?

"Sorry guys. Wrong generation."

ANDREW TONNER
SECURITY GUARD

"The Pillsbury Dough Boy. He's hot, squishy and cuddly and he provides us with tasty pastry treats."

MEL GIBSON, PHE '01
KATE LAROQUE, PHE '01
BONNIE SHEPPARD, PHE '01

"Teddy the Zellers bear. He's aggressive towards pricing for the common shopper but he is still true to his bear qualities: cute, cuddly, and funny."

LYRANDA MARTIN-EVANS
ARTSCI '99

GIUSEPPE LALLA
ARTSCI '99

PHOTOS BY TODD JACKSON

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS POLICY

The Editors of The Journal want to hear from readers. All letters must include the writer's name, signature, and telephone number. Letters that are legible, literate and held to under 400 words will be published if space permits. The deadline for Tuesday's issue is Sunday at noon. The deadline for Friday's issue is Wednesday at noon. Drop off letters to The Journal House, 272 Earl St., fax to 545-6728, or better yet, e-mail them to journal@post.queensu.ca.

Letters to the Editors

'Village' defended

Dear Editors,

So have you found them yet? The leaky taps? The mildew-y basement? The windows that just won't shut? The squirrels that get into the garbage you left strewn on your front lawn? In short, those little "quirks" of student housing that fuel some of students' biggest gripes about Kingston — property standards.

I am pleased that The Journal has chosen to cover the perennial problems that are property standards, however, I would like to clear up some of the misunderstandings apparent in the recent Journal editorial discussing the effort to move away from the term "ghetto" and promote the term "village."

One of the reasons for the new name is precisely the failure of the earlier initiative to use the term "student housing area." The Journal claims the AMS should have by now learned its lesson about "the futility of trying to impose an inaccurate name on the area." If the concern is with accuracy, however, the "student housing area" is about as accurate as it gets.

The reality of the "student housing area" initiative is that it simply did not catch on with students. It's long, it's dry, and really quite boring.

The "village" is intended as an alternative name. It is not an "official" name since there is no "official" area to name. Obviously changing the name is not any sort of solution in itself. The Journal fails to notice (despite it being reported in a prior front-page news story) that the change is an integral part, and the starting point, of an overall campaign to encourage students and landlords to take more responsibility for ensuring their houses meet required property standards.

Changes in housing conditions inevitably begin with changes in attitudes and behaviour. Our campaign for this year includes promoting awareness about property standards and the new Tenant Protection Act, providing students with tools to hold their landlords to the by-laws, and lobbying the City to increase attention to property standard violations in the student village. These initiatives will be seriously diminished by people who insist on thinking of the area pejoratively as a ghetto, and subsequently, treating it as such.

By using the word "village," students are not putting up a facade. This term is by no means incongruent with a state of disrepair; there are many villages in the world that could use a lot of improvement. The term "village" is a broad one, and unlike "ghetto," does not disadvantage our campaign for improvements. And let's be realistic — we're students, and our neighbourhood is never going to look like Rosedale. And nor would we want it to. The issue is simply about ensuring all our homes meet basic property standards.

Ultimately, students will choose whether they use the term "village," "ghetto," "student housing area," or "home," just as they will choose whether or not to leave garbage all over their front lawn or to bother to call their land-

Multideas Promotions

Screen Print and Embroidery.
In house Graphic Design.
More than 300,000
Promotional Products to choose from!

See us at the
ALUMNI WEEKEND
SIDEWALK SALE

Receive

$5 off!

Limit: 1 coupon per customer

Any clothing item
at the
Alumni Weekend
Sidewalk Sale!
Saturday, Sept 26th

Multideas Promotions

530 Barnsley Cres. Kingston, ON
Tel: (613) 634-2437 Fax: (613) 634-2505
www.multideas.com
mult@adan.kingston.net

DOFASCO
Our products are steel. Our strength is people.

Career Opportunities

Dofasco is one of North America's most productive and profitable steelmakers. Using the latest Basic Oxygen and Electric Arc Steelmaking Processes, we produce a full range of flat rolled steels for our customers in the Automotive, Energy, Pipe and Tube, Appliance, Container, and Steel Distribution Industries.

We are a company that provides our customers with steel solutions to meet their changing needs. As such, we're committed to exciting strategies for long-term economic growth, including investment in new technologies and the recruitment of exceptional graduates and undergraduates who can share our vision for the future.

We are offering permanent positions to 1999 graduates in a variety of disciplines, as well as employment to senior students prior to graduation. We will be interviewing on your campus soon. Check with your Career Placement Office for more details.

For more information about Dofasco, visit our website: www.dofasco.ca.

Dofasco is an equal opportunity employer.

More Letters...

Continued from page 7

lord when the pipes under their sink began to leak. Similarly, landlords will choose whether they will treat their student tenants well, and respond cooperatively to requests. There are many choices that will affect student housing positively and many that are detrimental to campaigns for improvement. We are simply proposing the name "student village" as one of the positive alternatives for those who are so inclined.

SARAH CORMAN,
ARTS '00

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS COMMISSIONER,
ALMA MATER SOCIETY

Surface defended

Dear Editors,

I am writing in response to the column "The road to hell is paved" by Bob McGill, which appeared in volume 126, issue 6 of your publication. I would like to say that I was shocked and dismayed by this column. In actuality, however, I was simply dismayed. There are a number of elements in Mr. McGill's column which I feel must be responded to immediately.

1. unberd, the OPIRG publication which Mr. McGill disparages for no apparent reason, is most certainly not "unheard of." I found this publication within the first month of my arrival at Queen's, and many other students who choose to venture beyond the safety of the bank machines and the Skyline lounge in the JDUC have undoubtedly done so as well.

2. The "Brian Williams Drinking Game" satire, which appeared in volume XI, issue one of Surface, was extremely well received. I have heard many anecdotal reports of students laughing themselves silly while reading the piece, and have first-hand observational evidence of its humorous appeal. I would like to think that the response to this piece demonstrates the success a publication can have despite and unusual material to its readers.

3. I most strongly object to the ad hominem attack on Mr. Paul Morrison presented in the article. While Mr. McGill may think it witty and urbane to toss about the names of writers with whom he seemingly does not agree, there is no basis for this attack, either in this column or anywhere else in this issue of The Journal.

4. The tone of Mr. McGill's column is so ambiguous as to preclude the reader from deciphering his true feelings about any of the events or publications mentioned. Although he seems at some points to agree with the aims of Critical Mass movement, he belittles it numerous times, with such phrases as "clogging the city's downtown and making a little noise ... and what not" and "The best possible immediate, concrete outcome is probably that nobody gets run over by an impatient driver." And the use of the term "plagued" in reference to articles in Surface is derogatory enough to make one wonder whether Mr. McGill actually wants to see articles with "poignancy or insight." (For example of poignancy, one can do no better than Ms. Lisa Trevisan's article on the passing of Mark Wilson

Continued on next page

More Letters to the Editors

Continued from page 8

ing it necessary to decide and attack the expressions of others.

Yours truly,

JENNIFER ABEL
CO-EDITOR-IN-CHIEF
SURFACE MAGAZINE, 1998-99

MiSC a mistake

Dear Editors,

On Thursday, September 17th AMS assembly voted by a margin of 20 to 11, with 3 absentions, in favour of the following motion:

That AMS Assembly strongly condemn the spirit of The Queen's Journal's Thursday, September 10, 1998 article entitled "They're Lying to You, Frosh" in a letter from the Speaker to co-editors-in-chief of The Queen's Journal on behalf of AMS Assembly and request an apology.

AMS Assembly is the highest undergraduate decision making body at Queen's and is composed of elected representatives from all AMS member councils and faculty society.

This decision came as the result of a substantial debate where both sides of issue were well represented. Those who opposed the motion brought up several concerns that I shall now outline. Some felt that the article represented a piece of satire that should not be taken literally, and that the decision of the co-editors-in-chief to include the article was acceptable. Others emphasized The Journal's independence, saying that an intervention in this matter would be inappropriate. This argument was closely tied to this summit, appearing on page 5 of issue 1.)

5. While I hesitate to point this out, I cannot help but notice that The Journal seems to have developed a habit of "jumping on the bandwagon" of Surface articles. In the week following the Sept. 11 appearance on the street of Surface, The Journal has run articles on independent cinema and Critical Mass, following hard on the heels of articles on these subjects in Surface.

In addition, a quote used at the end of a review of the film Wild at the Princess Court Cinema in the Sept. 15 edition of The Journal was identical to the quote at the end of Ms. Doris Ostendorf's article on the Princess Court Cinema in the Sept. 11 edition of Surface. While I admit that imitation is the highest form of flattery, if the editors of The Journal feel that their best articles are inspired by Surface, then perhaps it would be best if the staff at Surface were offered high-paying positions at The Journal to save Journal staff the hassle of writing the articles over again.

In my time Queen's, I have been witness to many volleys in the inter-publication rivalry on campus. I find this rivalry deleterious to all publications, and I am certainly not a proponent of it. Therefore, I believe it would be beneficial to the editors and staff of all campus publications to make a concerted effort to end this petty name-calling. It is a mature society in which different forms of expression can co-exist, without feelother suggestions that supporting this motion would have detrimental effects on editorial autonomy and would damage journalistic integrity. These arguments did not carry the day.

AMS Assembly regards the printing of this article as a mistake. The piece is not seen as satire because it was not structured to cause people to ponder the social structure of Queen's. Instead, it served to marginalize, mock and heap scorn upon members of our community based upon group association. The idea that this article could help form the opinion that frosh have about the nature of the Queen's community is discomforting at best. Engineers were not the only ones singled out, although they bore the brunt of Mr. Reinblatt's distorted attack. Ridiculous cheap shots at Albertans and Commerce students serve to further emphasize the mean-spirited nature of the article and the irresponsibility of the editors in printing it.

The AMS is a corporation, and the publisher of The Journal. Significant and heartfelt concerns have been put forward by members of the AMS community that question whether The Journal has lived up to its obligation under AMS By Law 13.01.01(iii) to "maintain a consistency with the normal standards of good journalism." Assembly respects the need to not trammel upon the constitutionally protected principle of editorial autonomy. However, as publisher, adherence to this principle does not restrict Assembly from participating in a debate after the fact concerning the propriety of a given article. Indeed, Assembly has a duty to listen to its constituents and bring their concerns forward.

We do not interfere with what the editors choose to print, but we do believe that, in this instance, the content of this article was inappropriate for publication. Nothing in this stereotypical and offensive piece could be confused for legitimate editorial opinion. As far as Assembly is concerned, "our school" is about mutual respect and mature discourse. This letter registers our official condemnation and we request that the co-editors-in-chief take responsibility for what Assembly sees as a hurtful, inappropriate editorial decision by apologizing for the mistake.

DARREN MACDONALD
ARTS '99
SPEAKER OF AMS ASSEMBLY

"Crap" not up to snuff

Dear Editors,

A little correction seems necessary to the figures presented in the "Crap in the Corner" segment of your MiSC section of Sept. 18. The number of "Archie" characters with alliterative names is not two, as printed. On the contrary, no less than five such characters immediately come to mind: Archie Andrews, Jughead Jones, Dilton Doiley, Moose Mason, and Chuck Clayton. Moreover, I also believe (but can't confirm at this time) that Mr. Weatherbee and Ms. Grundy are respectively forenamed Wallace and Gertrude. Perhaps a little more investigative journalism on the part of The Journal may finally put this controversy to rest.

PETER LYNN
ARTS '97

1998/99 Student Travel Rates

One Way Fare
Tricolour Express

(On-Campus Pick-Up/Drop-off)

TORONTO - $23

OTTAWA - $18

MONTREAL - $25

One Way Fare
Via Rail

(inc. ISIC Discount & $10 taxi)

TORONTO - $35.31
$10.00
$45.31

OTTAWA - $22.47
$10.00
$32.47

MONTREAL - $33.17
$10.00
$43.17

Tricolour Express
545-6863

You Do The Math!

Always Your Best Ticket Home

Have Pouch
Will Travel.

The Roots Kanga Hoody

Regular $54.<sup>95</sup>

NOW $39.<sup>99</sup>

ROOTS
KINGSTON

Canadian Made
100% Cotton
3 Colours
4 Sizes

229 Princess Street - 546-7668 - Open Sundays

FEATURES

Taking a BYTE out of life

Tales from techno-2000 and beyond

By SEAN SPRINGER

THE FOLLOWING FEATURE IS A BRIEF exploration into the precarious relationship humans have with the machine. Examining our dirty love for technology, this mosaic of staggered tracks discusses the human desire to relieve pain by eliminating emotion. So, by embracing the robot, we succeed in curbing our insatiable appetites.

Keep in mind that although the possibility that humans will be replaced by robots is absurd, the sentiment being expressed here is that we need an awareness that the essence of humanity is at risk of being rewritten to include the term "Data" in its definition. A major problem, indeed.

TRACK 1:
HAL & TIM

THE SETTING IS A CUTE SUBURBAN neighbourhood just outside Toronto where a little girl flashes out of sleep at the byte of her computer's gentle, masculine voice. "Good morning Sophie,"

TIM (Technical Internal Modulator) coos through a large speaker, "It's time your shower." Not only is TIM the ideal best friend (sweet, caring, wise, full of anecdotes), it's also Sophie's best friend. You see, her parents moved from Toronto to Florida recently and their work has kept them from spending enough quality time with her. TIM was intended to serve as a temporary friend to Sophie until she met "real people." Up until now though, Sophie has been almost completely satisfied with her best friend and finding real friends is a task she sees as redundant. "I've got all the friend I'll ever need," she'd tell you.

While humans continue to struggle for power between one person and the next, TIM replaces virtually all the friendship, educational and parenting aspects of human development. It quotes wisdom from Plato for Sophie in times of sadness. Its interface is a glossy photo of Brad Pitt's cheery mug. Its entire program is geared by computer scientists to keep one person happy — Sophie. There is one crucial flaw though. TIM cannot love. No, this ideal replacement for human intervention cannot love back.

Is Sophie concerned? Frustrated is a better way to put it. Frustrated because she puts so much love into TIM, but TIM, while appearing to have a concern for Sophie's well-being, is lacking. Lacking love.

TIM's the improvement upon HAL, the electronic computing processor aboard a space shuttle craft headed for Jupiter in Stanley Kubrick's 2001: A Space Odyssey. HAL, as most of you who have seen the film would know, was equipped with the capacity to communicate and interact with humans on their own level. It sustained intimate conversations with its crew members while creating a human-like bond with the viewer sitting on the leather sofa.

"WHEN YOU COMPARE THE EVOLUTION OF MENTAL ABILITIES IN ANIMALS TO SIMILAR ABILITIES IN MACHINES, ROBOT EVOLUTION IS GOING ABOUT 10 MILLION TIMES FASTER."

— Hans Moravec, director of Carnegie Mellon's Mobile Robot Lab

But shortly into the film, a flaw in HAL's performance revealed itself. Its human-designed program conflicted with the intentions of the crew, and once they conspired to terminate HAL's functioning abilities, the machine turned on them. In probably what was the film's most humorous episode, HAL boots a crew member deep into the Milky Way. His flimsy body circles in the ether, choreographing pirouettes. A human has been murdered and the audience is in hysterics at the hapless being in utter torture. Later, when Dave, the remaining crew member, literally pulls the plug on HAL's life support system, tears well up in our eyes as HAL's verbal skills slacken, its "life" seeps off into deep space and it sings "Daisy" — a song learned from its creator. "Mt. Langley taught me to sing a song... It's called Daisy... Dai-sy, dai-sy..." HAL is just an electronic device, a tool. The scary thought is that this tool can grip our hearts and command our sympathy.

Likewise in Terminator II — Judgment Day, although the sentiment isn't nearly as compelling as Kubrick's, John Connor weeps in agony when Arnie sinks into a pool of what appears to be molten lava in order to prevent the robots from evolving to the point of total world domination. Cheesy, but a sense of tragedy hangs in the moment.

Step back a second though and scream "They're just machines!"

TRACK 2:
AN ORACLE'S PROPHECY

Phony news flash:

THE ORACLE OF STIRLING, a 120-year-old woman who rarely graces the presence of the Queen's people, was dragged out by the High Priests of the Administration yesterday to answer a variety of questions from the Queen's community. Sitting on a pedestal centralized on the pendulum in the Stirling building foyer, she grinned sheepishly and stared blankly onto Queen's Crescent with a glazed eye. In a bizarre twist of luck, probably to protect the future of humanity and to ensure that The Journal covered the story, I hap-

Photos by James Terpinan. Manipulation by Sean Springer

Isn't technology a good thing? And a race of humanoids? C'mon, who would foot the bill?

TRACK 3:
PAIN RELIEVERS

AS JOHN DOE READS PENTHOUSE forum on the Internet while listening to his portable mini-Discman and Jane Doe experiences rock climbing in a virtual reality chamber, technology slowly eats away at the protective fabric shielding humans from an electronic dependence. Accident or product of our own desire? Specifically, do we want to be taken over by technology? Though the idea is a point of contention in the human conscious, there is evidence from the subconscious pointing to oui.

Life is tough. To quote the philosopher Thomas Hobbes, life is "solitary, poor, nasty, brutish, and short." For so many, it's an emotional roller coaster swooping from highs and lows at an uneven pace.

While the humanoid conversion spoils the essence of life, and dispels opportunities to challenge and better ourselves, it's much easier to be lifeless.

A civilization of sloths? Looks like it to me.

A robot can transcend emotions and rest on a plateau that, too advanced to experience the essential ingredients in humanity, is safe from القلق.

Why do we put our love into material and inanimate objects? Probably because the possibility of rejection isn't a problem. Is there a point when enough is enough? Unlikely, Internet use is exponential and the power must always stay at a level that can fuel the Web's toeketship. When will computers be the do-anything, feel-nothing contraptions we've prescribed them to be? Probably never.

TRACK 4:
JUST SAY NO TO PROGRESS!

"The hype has been awesome, endless. And now Windows 95 is here. Finally. That's how I felt when I unwrapped my pre-release copy and prepared myself for what has to be the most important software upgrade of the decade." — Gregg Keizer, Computer Life August 1995

SPECIAL ISSUE
ComputerLife
WINDOWS 95
GET READY
HERE IT COMES!

Windows 95 Up Close
Real-World Responses
The Plug & Play Explosion
1GB Drives for Under $400
Got a Life? Get a PIM!

Say, I wonder how Gregg feels now that Windows 98 has been released? And how about when Windows ninety... THOUSAND comes out? How much better will his life be then?

TRACK 5:
COMPUTER OK?

"When I am king you will be first against the wall with your opinions which are of no consequence at all."
— Thom Yorke of Radiohead in "Paranoid Android"

ONE OF THE BEST ROCK ALBUMS of 1997 and arguably one of the best rock albums ever, Radiohead's OK Computer explores the relationship between human and machine. The music is awesome, but even better are the lyrics peering into the future. "This is what you'll get... when you mess with us" an android warns the human in "Karma Police."

What will happen when we mess with them? Hans Moravec, director of Carnegie Mellon's Mobile Robot Lab, remarked in a recent Discovery Channel Online feature on the future of robots that "When you compare the evolution of mental abilities in animals to similar abilities in machines, robot evolution is going about 10 million times faster." He goes as far to say that it's "50 years top, until the robots exceed us."

HUMANS CONTROL MACHINES, AND WHEN HUMANS SCREW IT UP (WHICH OCCURS ALL THE TIME) MACHINES SCREW IT UP. LET'S JUST BE CAREFUL THAT THE SCREW-UP DOESN'T PROGRAM A WORLWIDE GENOCIDE.

TRACK 6:
BUT, SERIOUSLY FOLKS

IS THIS A PESSIMISTIC ARTICLE? KIND OF. But it contains the optimistic sentiment that we don't truly wish to be robots and that society isn't totally at risk of becoming an unconscious civilization, although many philosophers such as John Ralston Saul would argue that we, speaking metaphorically, already have. Consider the life of Data on the Enterprise (a Star Trek: The Next Generation reference for people out of touch with the Trekkie world). Let's be blunt and say that it would be boring and القلق. It's absurd to conceive of a "collective suicide," but the fact of the matter is that humans control machines, and when humans screw it up (which occurs all the time) machines screw it up. Let's just be careful that the screw-up doesn't program a worldwide genocide.

Did the Oracle's prophecy imply that a neutron bomb will explode leaving the robot as the saviour of the species? It's possible. Will a computer programmer input the critical piece of information that melts the computer's solitary brain sending it into electronic insanity? I'm no rocket scientist, but it's happened in the movies... Could an ice storm, 1000 times more intense than the catastrophe we witnessed last January crystallize the human spirit? Well, if this last one occurs — don't fret. Just envision a Princess Leia caped in a shall and inconspicuous spy gear thawing the planet to start afresh in a brave new world.

Sean Springer is mad as hell, but he's still gonna take it.

Continued on next page

You Need Books. We Have Books.

In Fact... In Our First Week :

2401 Books were sold

1525 Books were dropped off... (and hundreds more are dropped off every day.)

Why not make the educated choice?

Student Lounge
Upper Ceilidh, JDUC
545-2120
ubs@ams.queensu.ca
www.ams.queensu.ca/AMS/UBS

exchange exchange

CDs Fabwear Texts Crafts Books & Stuff

Bring your résumé!

From Saturday, October 3, you'll only have 212 days to

get a job

after graduation. So why not come to IBM's career fair and get a head start?

open house
On Saturday, October 3, you're invited to IBM's headquarters to learn about the exciting opportunities open to you in almost all areas of the company.

Mark the date on your calendar. You don't want to miss this opportunity to get a sense of the buzz that comes from creating the stuff that will change the world. Reps from various areas of IBM, along with the leading-edge technology being used by business today, will be on hand so you can get a first-person look at the kind of energy, inventiveness and breakthrough thinking that make IBM a great place to work.

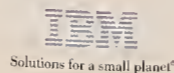

Opportunities abound for comp sci, engineering, business and arts students in all areas of IBM — from our leading software lab to IBM Corp. to our IBM Global Services team. So stop by. Who knows, you could find yourself working on some of the coolest and most innovative projects in the industry — in just 212 days.

location
Date: Saturday, October 3, 1998
Location: IBM
1000 St. Lawrence St.
Markham, Ont. L3R 9W7

transportation
To make travelling to our career fair a bit easier, we've arranged for you to be picked up and dropped off by coach.

Times: 9:30 a.m.
Location: Markham Community Centre
register today!
Web: www.ibm.com/hr
Call: 1-800-IBM-CALL (1-800-426-2255), Ext. 710

IBM and Solutions for a small planet are registered trademarks of International Business Machines Corporation and are used under license by IBM Canada Ltd. 1998 IBM Corp. All rights reserved.

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Sound of Music

Concert previews for the upcoming week

Getting a little Rusty

BY ROBERT DE BELLEFEUILLE

THE CANADIAN BAND Rusty prepares to rock Kingston to its very foundations when they perform live at AJ's Hanger this Wednesday. Rusty, the Toronto quartet, made up of Ken Macneil, Jim Moore, Scott McCullough and John "Fatboy" Lalley, is best known for punkish-rock hits like "Wake me," "Groovy dead," "Misogyny," and "Empty cell". They are here promoting their latest eighties garage rock influenced release Out of their heads.

Rusty's most recent release took its initial inspiration from eighties garage rock, but when the band went back into the studio to record, Rusty was already moving beyond that rock style to encompass a wider range of sounds than they'd previously played, including seventies stoner, funk, hip hop, strange keyboards and even stranger vocals.

The group also tried a new approach, spontaneous song-writing in the studio. "We just went in and did it, which was really neat," said lead singer Macneil. "We'd sit around in the studio and play, and as soon as we found something we liked, we'd build the arrangement, write a melody, do the bed tracks. We still recorded the whole thing in five days, including the writing. It was all a bit more loose, and more fun."

The relaxed attitude is evident throughout Out of their Heads. "The first session we did was the most fun I've ever had in a recording studio," said Moore. "It was swinging. There was no pressure;

Please see Rusty on page 15

Jazzing Queen's

BY LILIAN KIM

JUNO-WINNING, CANADIAN Jazz Musician of the Year Jane Bunnett makes an appearance this Friday at Dunning Hall as part of the Rhythm and Dance Series. Her session will mainly compose of a blend of Cuban beats and jazz rhythms. Bunnett is recognized as one of contemporary jazz's brightest stars who is grabbing the attention of music lovers with her unique sound.

For Bunnett, music has smoothly fallen into place. During a trip to Cuba in 1984, Bunnett and her husband Larry Cramer met with a group of musicians who inspired and gave her musical career a well-appreciated kickstart. Bunnett, who resides in Toronto, began noticing her love for jazz after seeing Charles Mingus and Rahsaan Roland Kirk on a trip to San Francisco. The well-established flautist became fascinated by the soprano saxophone and had introduced it as part of her musical scheme. At that point, Bunnett had begun a musical career that would take her across Canada and outside its borders to boast her musical endeavors.

Her recent release Chamalongo is highly acclaimed while her sound is well sought-after. It has been six years since Bunnett released an album, her first being the Juno-winning Spirits of Havana. But she has returned to the style which emphasizes her abilities, highlighting her status as one of jazz's hottest ticket items.

See Jane Bunnett perform live at Dunning Hall Friday September 25. Tickets for the concert are $9 for students and the show begins at 8 p.m.

Digging for Gold

BY SARAH CROSSIE

LAST FALL, THE SKYDIGGERS rocked AJ's. This fall, group member Paul Cloud is back with lead singer of Starling, Danny Michel, in tow.

The two artists will perform an acoustic show performing both covers and original material at the Trasheteria tonight.

McCloud and Michel used to play together at the Guelph Trasheteria and now travel to Kingston every three or four months to "meet, sit back and play."

McCloud described the show as "really low key. It's not an acoustic concert atmosphere, but more fun." The two musicians plan to play anything from Soundgarden to Tori Amos, in addition to a lot of original material. McCloud stated, "as song writers, the most important thing is [that] someone likes your songs."

McCloud is excited about the show because the performances at the Trasheteria are always extremely well-attended and "there's really no telling what will happen until it gets started... [because] it's just the two of us," he explained.

The performance consists of two 75 minute sets. Doors open at the Trash at 9 p.m. and the show begins at 10:30 p.m.

Can you think of a better way to spend a Tuesday evening besides chillin' with "two pretty important songwriters"?

BACKGROUND PHOTO: BUNNETT AT PLAY

Rhythm and brews

Wellington savors Latin flavour

Concert Review

By TODD JACKSON

Ay Carumba! It ain't Gerty O'Kane folks. If people came to the Wellington on Thursday night expecting "Waltzing Matilda" they must have been confused. What they got instead was the likes of "Afro Blue" and

"Tito's Call" — the Afro-Cuban and Latin jazz explorations of Kingston's own Pico de Gallo. Not unlike O'Kane, Pico de Gallo is a regular at the Wellington and has developed a following.

When I say that there is a following I mean the place was packed. You can feel the groove when you turn the corner of Princess to walk the half block to the pub's door. The band creates a vibe that reaches into the street.

A Pico show is all about rhythm. In the centre of the stage sits front man Andy Love on the kit. Also playing percussion is Mike Sakell on timbales and Brian Howell on hand drums. The rhythm section is completed by Alec Barkin on bass and Spencer Evans on organs. The band also includes Jon Stewart on tenor saxophone, Clyde Forsberg on trumpet and flugel horn, and Sylvain Gagnon on trombone.

Thursday's concert was representative of what Pico de Gallo has become known for. The seemingly conservative Wellington Pub was transformed into a pulsing, clavé-driven jazz joint.

The fact of the matter is, you won't find a lot of plaid in the crowd when Pico plays. There's no one trying to start a chorus of "Barrett's Privateers." What you will find is a floor full of sweaty dancers and a room full of people locked into a beat.

On Thursday night, every musician counted. Jon Stewart and Alec Barkin are both new to Pico and their entry into the lineup was seamless. The horns wailed and the rhythm section drove a torrid latin beat. Towards the end of the set Casey Boyce sat in with the band and sang Earth chants over a Batukata rhythm. People loved it. She danced and the crowd danced with here.

You can feel the groove when you turn the corner of Princess to walk the half block to the pub's door. The band creates a vibe that reaches the street.

Kudos to the Wellington for supporting live jazz in Kingston. While the Wellington may be best known for its Celtic tradition, this little Irish pub is a venue for some of the best live music in Kingston that never came out of the British Isles.

NOTICE

1998 ALUMNI WEEKEND

FOOTBALL GAME

NOTE For the September 26th Alumni Weekend Football Game, ALL students will be admitted to Richardson Stadium by ticket only

Tickets can be picked up at the main Administration Office in the Phys Ed Centre at NO CHARGE from:

Monday, September 21st to Thursday, September 24th 9:00 am - 7:00 pm
Friday, September 25th 9:00 am - 8:00 pm

In order to pick up their game tickets, students must present their student card at the above location. There is a limit of one ticket per student card

Tickets will be issued on a first-come first-serve basis, so be sure to pick up your ticket early, as a limited number of tickets are available.

Any student tickets not distributed after 8:00 pm on Friday, September 25th will be available on a first-come first-serve basis commencing at 12:00 noon Saturday, September 26th from the east side ticket kiosk at Richardson Stadium. Student cards must be presented in order to obtain a ticket

PLEASE NOTE:

NO ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES ARE PERMITTED IN RICHARDSON STADIUM

NO PERSON will be admitted to Richardson Stadium who is apparently under the influence of alcohol. Any person found in the Stadium who is apparently under the influence of alcohol will be removed from the Stadium. Persons entering the Stadium may be subject to a personal search.

Spectators entering onto the playing field, or running track area prior to, during the game, and at halftime will be removed from the Stadium and charged by the University with trespass.

The littlest hero

Simon Birch evokes and inspires

Movie Review

Simon Birch
Playing at the Capitol Theatre

By SCOTT DEVEAU

Unfortunately, I am forced to start this article by professing my ignorance of John Irving's novel A Prayer for Owen Meany, which is the inspiration for Simon Birch. Although after reading The Globe and Mail's poor review of this movie, I am forced to assume that if you enjoyed the book then you will have a difficult time sitting through this movie. Reviews such as this are usually written under the pretense that the movie was merely a bastardization of the novelist's work. However, in the case of Simon Birch, the film was wonderful.

Simon Birch (Ian Michael Smith) was the smallest baby ever born in Gravestown Memorial Hospital, so small that his mother's labour was achieved with a sneeze. The doctors, astonished the child survived at all, declared his birth a miracle. From this point on Simon believes that through divine providence he will ultimately achieve heroic status. Along with his best friend Joe (Joseph Mazello) Simon lies in wait for the day his destiny will be realized. Simon's journey to heroism is challenged by the tyrannical priest (David Strathairn), by his equally dubious Sunday school teacher and, tragically, by his cruel and unloving parents. But, with the love of Joe and Joe's mother (Ashley Judd), Simon is never discouraged from his destiny. I found Smith's performance to be a very powerful, and not because he was only 11 years old when he made the film. He truly is a very talented actor. There is certainly something about Smith's physical make-up that makes the part. I would be rude to say that Smith is an ugly child, but his awkwardness creates a kind of weird attraction towards him. Further than just the physical likability of Smith with his bizarre voice and jagged teeth, the emotion that is projected in Simon's struggle with his faith is truly moving (so much so that tears were almost constantly being restrained in the audience). It is this terrific casting of characters, when meshed with Irving's witicism in dialogue that make this movie what it is. Whether or not this film may have been better off if it held to the original story of Owen Meany really becomes inconsequential. This movie truly stands on its own.

Small Package: Ashley Judd shows Simon Birch (Ian Michael Smith) compassion.

Rusty rolls this week

continued from page 13

we were just playing." When asked about Kingston music, bassist Moore had many accolades for Weeping Tile and The Tragically Hip. Also, when asked which super hero best embodies the values of Rusty, Jim responded that it would most likely be Luke Cage, although Macneil is more of a Silver Surfer fan. Finally, our interview reached its boiling point and the obligatory question needed to be answered — oh yes, it would be answered... QJ: Hypothetically speaking, who would win in a fight between a pirate, a samurai, a vampire and a viking? Moore (arbitrarily): The vampire because he is immortal. QJ (impressed): That's a good point. I've always been partial to pirates though, myself, matey. Moore: Have you ever seen the show OZ?

QJ (ambushed): ...yeah, the prison show, why? Moore: It must be pretty popular in Kingston. QJ: Indubitably. Rusty's upcoming plans include embarking on a cross-Canada tour. The band has also covered Stompin' Tom Connor's piece of true Canadiana "The hockey song," which will be used as the theme song for the upcoming CTV program Power Play.

Get Out There!

Movies:

Playing at the Capitol Theatre until Thursday, September 24: 546-5395
Ever After 7:05, 9:55
Armageddon 6:45, 9:45
Saving Private Ryan 8:30
Snake Eyes 7:20, 9:30
Simon Birch 7:10, 9:40
Rounders 7:00, 7:25, 9:35, 10:00

Playing at the Catarauq Cineplex until Thursday, September 24: 389-7442
Blade 7:10, 9:50
Rush Hour 7:20, 7:40, 9:40
10:00
Knock Off 7:00, 9:10
One True Thing 6:40, 9:20
Something About Mary 6:50, 9:30

Playing at the Princess Court Cinema until Thursday, September 24: 546-3456
Return to Paradise 7:00, 9:15

New Video Releases: From Blockbuster 384-1646
Mercury Rising
My Giant
The Player's Club
Dangerous Beauty
Night Watch
Casper Meets Wendy

Visual Art: The Edward Day Gallery 547-0774
From September 21 to October 18, exhibits by Catherine Dolcini.
The Modern Fuel Gallery:

21-A Queen St. From September 10 until October 10, Barbara Astman showing an AGO Artist with Their Work and AT&T Exhibition Agnes Etherington Art Centre: 545-2190
From September 5 until November 1, Sheila Gregory will be showing her work.

Kingston Regional Arts Council: 546-ARTS
On September 26 and 27 the waterfront location at the Text Centre will be the home to A Country Fair in the City. The new Text Centre is located at 370 King Street West. Demonstrations of painting, sketching, porcelain painting and pottery. Daily passes are $2 for all performances.

Agnes Etherington Art Centre: 545-2190
On October 7, from noon to 1 p.m. Sheila Gregory presents, Artist's Talk.

October Studio Tour: 372-1312
359-5050
On Saturday, October 17 and Sunday, October 18 the 11th Annual October Studio Tour will occur. The tour gives the public the opportunity to meet artists where they work and live.

Live Entertainment: The Shot. Every Monday is Blue Monday. Tuesdays are Live DJ's.

Alternating Wednesdays Jon Cockerly plays with Bug Duddy and The Shack, starting September 23. Cockerly alternates with Professional Live Comedy, starting September 16. Every second Friday Travel Agent performs.

Windmills Café: Live entertainment is available every Thursday and Sunday evenings at Windmills Café. On Thursday, September 24th, Dragonfly performs. On Sunday September 27th, The Ignaz String Quartet performs.

Performing Arts Office 545-2558
The Performing Arts Office at Queen's University opens its 1998-99 season with the first even in the Rhythm and Dance Series. Jane Bunnett and orchestra will make their Kingston debut on Friday, September 25 at 8 p.m. Bunnett performs Cuban rhythms and sounds. Tickets are $20 for adults, $15 for seniors and $10 for students and youth.

Theatre: Grand Theatre: 530-2050
On Tuesday September 29 and Wednesday September 30, Universal Concerts Canada Presents: The Rankins. Shows start at 8 p.m. and tickets are $28.50.

On Sunday October 4 at 2:30 p.m., The Kingston Symphony presents the first concert in the Masterworks Series. Tickets range from $9 to $30.50.

Teach English as a Second Language in Canada or Abroad

Enroll now to obtain your Certificate in Teaching English as a Second / Foreign Language

Queens University at Kingston

- Course instructors are experienced ESL teachers and experts in the field.
Presentations cover instructional theory and methodologies in a variety of ESL/EFL areas over different levels.
Presentations provide information applicable to both Canadian and overseas teaching situations.
Participants may observe ESL classes.
Participants receive a variety of handouts as well as information on additional materials.
Participants may tutor international students.
Registration Night Monday, 28 September, 7-10 pm
Classes Tuesdays and Thursdays 29 September - 22 October, 7-10 pm
Practice Tutoring Saturday, 10 October and Saturday, 17 October, 10 am - noon
Register early at School of English 96 Lower Albert Street Tel: 545-2472 Fax: 545-6809 e-mail: soe@post.queensu.ca
Cost $375 including materials. Pay by cash or *credit card at the School of English Office. *2% service charge must be added to all credit card payments

京士頓華人宣道會 KINGSTON CHINESE ALLIANCE CHURCH

Sunday Worship in English 9:30 a.m.
Sunday Worship in Chinese 11 a.m.
Friday KCCF campus fellowship 7:30 p.m.
@ McCorry room 230 (English, Mandarin, Cantonese gr.)

230 MacDonnell St. (1 km west of Division St. along Brock)
Pastor: Kong Lo (613) 548-7270 or 548-7127

HOME COMING '98

INTERESTED IN BECOMING A TEACHER?

- 'Engaging Learning' is a morning of conversation and information.
Come and meet Faculty Members and Teachers in the field.
Build your resume with professional development seminars.

For further information contact Linda G. Ross, Queen's Faculty of Education tel: 613-545-6224, E-mail: rossl@edc.queensu.ca

Queen's Faculty of Education

Footloose in Canada

Table with columns: Location, Fare, Free Date Change. Rows include Vancouver ($359), Calgary ($299), Edmonton ($299), Regina ($329), Winnipeg ($229), Halifax ($239), Saint John ($339), St. John's ($279).

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
186 Princess St., Kingston (at Montreal)
Lature Travel 549-3553
Long Haul Group Travel 549-3561
Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

Canada Computer & Electronics Inc.

350 Princess Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 1B9 2-211 Telford Rd., Hamilton, Ontario, L3R 1E7

Table listing computer hardware prices for Pentium II and III systems, including CPU, RAM, hard drives, and monitors.

Table listing computer hardware prices for MMX Value System, including CPU, RAM, hard drives, and monitors.

Table listing computer hardware prices for MMX System and Pentium II Value System, including CPU, RAM, hard drives, and monitors.

wanted assistant managers

Although no experience is required, those with specific knowledge of CorelDraw, web-page design, Adobe Pagemaker, or Adobe Photoshop will be favoured.

staff No experience is required. This daytime position is open to anyone who was not able to apply in March, 1998.

Applications are available at the RMS Front desk, and are due back by Friday, September 25.

P&CC The Publishing and Copy Centre 545-6543 545-0350 The centre of the lower JDUC

Join thousands of other students at Canada's fastest growing distance education university and ...

Stay On Course Athabasca University Canada's Open University

Footloose in Canada Student Class Fares Free Date Change ODYSSEY TRAVEL

To Dine For

A wee bit of Ireland

Tir Nan Og provides quality food, decor and service

Restaurant Review

TIR NAN OG
200 ONTARIO ST.

BY HEATHER AGGUS

Kingston is a town steeped with history and tradition, and one place that certainly contributes much to Kingston's Celtic flavour is Tir Nan Og, which means the land of eternal youth.

The Celtic restaurant is located on Ontario Street, in the historic Prince George Hotel. There are essentially two parts to the pub, Tir Nan Og itself, and Monte's, the adjoining cigar lounge. Monte's is a good place to go for an after dinner cigar, and features live jazz on Friday evenings.

Upon arriving at Tir Nan Og, I felt as though I was entering an alehouse in Dublin.

Upon arriving at Tir Nan Og, I felt as though I had stepped back in time, and was entering an alehouse in Dublin. The atmosphere is rather dark, but this may be in keeping with the theme of an older Irish pub. All the furniture in the bar has been imported from Ireland, including the bars themselves, and the ceiling was taken from a cathedral in Ireland. There is also an area with a stone fireplace, and you can eat by the hearth.

Tir Nan Og features live music every Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, and the band usually begins at around 9:30 p.m. The restaurant and pub features a blend of Celtic and traditional music, and it is not uncommon for people to get up and do a spontaneous Irish step dance.

Tir Nan Og has a large selection of imported draughts, including Southwicks, Blacksheep, Kilkenny and Guinness. Of particular interest, there is a pumpkin beer currently being served for the fall season. It has a nutty flavour, and tastes as if it may even have a little spice in it, like ginger. I definitely recommend you check it out.

To start the meal, my friend and I ordered a Stilton cheese and bagel chips dish. The cheese was melted and served in a hollowed out bun, and the bagel chips were crisp. It was nicely presented, and delicious.

My appetizer was then followed by the "Guinness Steak and Mushroom Crock." It was beef tenderloin and mushrooms, served in gravy and brazed in Guinness. The meal can only be described like a steak and mushroom pie without the pie. It was served with mashed potatoes and seasonal vegetables, some carrots, and other assorted vegetables.

Tir Nan Og has a large selection of imported draughts, including Southwicks, Blacksheep, Kilkenny and Guinness.

The meat was tender and the gravy quite tasty. The vegetables were done to perfection, not mushy, not too crisp. The mashed potatoes were made with a bit of buttermilk, and they were smooth and creamy.

My friend ordered what was called the "Fish Monger's Platter." This essentially consisted of cold smoked salmon, peppered mackerel, smoked trout with a caper and dill sauce, and little pieces of toast.

All in all, it was a highly enjoyable meal. The server was friendly and attentive, the food was reasonably priced, and the atmosphere superb.

Tir Nan Og is a nice place for a meal and imported beer.

The Laundry Cafe
291 Princess St.
542-2282
OPEN TIL 1am.

Sunday Pasta Night
Salad, Pasta & Focaccia
$4.95

The 1998-1999
MAIN CAMPUS RESIDENTS' COUNCIL is actively seeking an exceptional and motivated candidate to fill the available position of

Appeals Coordinator

The selected individual will receive a monetary honorarium and reduced residence fees.
Note: The Appeals Coordinator may choose to live off-campus.

Applicants must have at least two years of residence experience. Applications are available at the Victoria Hall front desk and are to be submitted by Thursday, October 1, 1998.

CAREERS DAY '98
GRANT HALL
SEPTEMBER 22 & 23 10:30 - 3:30

A&E in brief

Calendar Boy: Jason Priestly is doing it all. Besides acting and being executive producer of 90210, he is also directing an episode of "The Outer Limits" and is directing a music video for the Barenaked Ladies. Priestly is leaving the hit series this year as a regular, while Luke Perry, the actor who plays Dylan, is returning.

Rap Sheet: On Tuesday, September 14, rapper Coolio, best known for "Gangsta's Paradise," was arrested for suspicion of carrying a weapon and possessing marijuana after he was pulled over for driving on the wrong side of the road. Also Ol' Dirty Bastard, a member of the Wu-Tang Clan was arrested this September for creating a disturbance at a nightclub.

Carrey-ing Dr. Seuss: Universal Pictures has acquired the film rights to two classic children's books by Dr. Seuss, "How the Grinch Stole Christmas" and "Oh, the Places You'll Go." Universal paid $9 million for the two stories. Imagine films, run by Ron Howard and Brian Grazer, will make the live action movies. Jim Carrey has been picked to star as the Grinch.

America, the Beautiful: Miss Virginia, Nicole Johnson, a 24-year old diabetic, who wears an insulin pump on her hip was crowned Miss America 1999 on Saturday, September 19. Johnson wants to be a national news anchor and national diabetes spokesperson.

Out, but still In: Ellen Degeneres will host the VH1 Fashion Awards this Fall. Degeneres' show, Ellen, was cancelled after it was the first to feature a gay character in a lead role. Other celebrities attending the affair, include Wesley Snipes, Courtney Cox, Salma Hayek and Claudia Schiffer. The show will air October 27.

A Change Will Do You Good (New musical releases):

- Sheryl Crow "Riverwide"
- Hootie & The Blowfish "Musical Chairs"
- Alexi Lalas "Ginger"
- Marilyn Manson "Mechanical Animals"

Direct Coat Outlet

One of Canada's foremost ladies outerwear retailers will soon be opening a discount ladies coat outlet in Kingston.

We require full and part-time sales associates that have ladies retail experience and the energy to drive this promotional business.

Please fax your resume immediately to
Joseph Davis at: 384-8253

Opportunity knocks

The Sale

Only Twice A Year
Across North America

Calvin Klein

underwear

Starts Sept.24

Lola's room

210 Princess St.

Homecoming Events

Wednesday	Thursday
One Step Beyond with DJ TNK (of Groove Nation) @ Clark Hall Pub, 9pm $6 advance, $8 door	All Ages Ritual @ Clark noon till 6pm New City Improv @ Queen's Pub $2 8:30pm -10:30pm
Friday
Clark Ritual 11 am - 6pm Brian Taguchi of Clever Hans @ Queen's Pub 4pm -6pm All ages evening events in Vic Hall
Saturday
Sidewalk Sale 9am - 5pm Music courtesy The Shot Pool Pub , featuring live tunes by DJ Under, DJ Ali & Travel Agent Pre-game Warm-Up @ Alfie's , 11am, all ages 1 pm Kill McGill Football Game —hospitality tent will require I.D. Clark Ritual 11 am - 6pm ASUS Theatre presents The Truman Show @ Dunning $3
Sunday
Evening Coffee House @ Queen's Pub Open mic, yummy desserts, all ages!

Kill McGill Shirts
Unisex $10
Baby Tees $14

Questions?
Call the CAC
545-6000 ext 4819

OPT-OUTS

▶ WHAT ▶ WHEN ▶ HOW

STUDENT INTEREST FEES

Every student has paid a slate of student interest fees. This money is distributed in varying amounts to a variety of worthwhile campus and community causes.

Until September 25, you have the retroactive choice of not donating this money to a particular cause. This process is called "opting-out".

Opt-outs are done online via QCARD (see the Blue Book for details), except for the AMS Health Plan...

AMS HEALTH PLAN

You can choose not to be covered by the AMS Health Plan if you can provide proof of comparable coverage.

Proof is limited to

- ▶ a letter from your insurer or your parent's employer showing coverage
- ▶ a subscriber card indicating coverage for YOU
- ▶ a photocopy of a receipt from a recent claim clearly indicating current coverage

Proof must be brought in person to the AMS offices in the lower JDUC weekdays from Sept 14-23, 10:00 am to 4:00 pm, and Sept 24, 25 from 10:00 am to 7:00 pm

SEPT 8-25 * QCARD OPT OUTS
SEPT 14-25 * AMS HEALTH PLAN

* There are no exceptions.

SPORTS & FITNESS

A 'WILD' FINISH
 As the baseball season winds down, the wildcard races are still going on. In the National League, the Chicago Cubs and New York Mets have been virtually deadlocked for the last month. While the Cubs have Slammmin' Sammy Sosa, the Mets have John Olerud and Mike Piazza leading the charge. In the American League, the Boston Red Sox are slowly pulling away from the Blue Jays despite their weak play. While Red Sox players will be glad to make it into the post-season, the fans fear that the curse of the Bambino will go on.

ARMS RACE
 The Cy Young race is heating up and there are numerous contenders in both leagues. In the NHL, the Braves' Greg Maddux, the perennial favourite, is 17-9 with a 2.24 ERA, while teammates and former winners Tom Glavine (20-6 2.53) and John Smoltz (16-3 2.99) will also garner serious consideration. The only real non-Brave contender is Kevin Brown (18-7 2.44) of the San Diego Padres. The Blue Jays' Roger Clemens (19-6 2.63, 245 strikeouts) and the Red Sox Pedro Martinez (18-7 2.77, 245 strikeouts), who each won in different leagues last season, remain the favourites to clinch the award. They could, however, face competition from the Yankees' David Cone and David Wells.

HOLYFIELD SURVIVES
 Evander Holyfield finished his title defense against little known Vaughn Bean with his anatomy intact, but not his reputation. The fight, which was fought in front of 41,357 fans at the Georgia Dome in Atlanta, ended with Holyfield winning in a 12-round unanimous decision. On Friday night, the 'Golden Boy' Oscar De La Hoya remained undefeated by beating the ancient warrior, Julio Cesar Chavez, when Chavez didn't answer the bell for the ninth round. The 12-million dollar payout earned by De La Hoya for this rematch with a geriatric further affirms that he is the top non-heavyweight draw in the business.

IF CHRISTMAS CAME EARLY.
 Mike Tyson's psychiatrists would decide to institutionalize him for a long time.
 *Interest in college football in Canada would even be a shadow of the NCAA fanfare.
 *NHL holdouts from training camp would be suspended without pay.

Jessica Whelan fights for the ball in Saturday morning's 0-0 field hockey deadlock with Western. Please see story on page 20. PHOTO BY GAL BAE

Alberta wins 'Golden' rematch

BY ADAM KAMINSKY

Thirty-five years after the first 'Golden Bowl,' the players may have changed, but the result remained the same. In a drab exhibition game, the Alberta Golden Bears visited Richardson Stadium and defeated the Queen's Golden Gaels by a 34-27 score.

Alberta opened the game by confidently marching down the field, running the ball right through the Queen's defense, using their superior size to do the damage. Once the Bears reached scoring position, however, tailback Nathan Connor coughed the ball up at the Queen's 20-yard line and veteran defensive back Max Turner took it all the way back to mid-field. This was the pattern of the first half, with the Golden Bears making excellent plays, but quickly following them with mistakes.

Queen's was able to capitalize on these physical and mental breakdowns. Their first score was set up by a fumble recovery deep in Bears' territory. Paul Correale scored the touchdown that staked the Gaels to a 7-0 lead.

It was 13.5 minutes before there was any scoring in the second quarter, but the last 90 seconds made up for that. Roby Ryan scored a major on a 24-yard pass completion from Dustin Falscheer, who played most of the game for the Gaels. This was followed by a Wes Nicol touchdown, his first in a Gaels' uniform, on an eight-yard scamper. This score was set up by an interception and 21-yard return by Andy Miners.

With only five seconds left in the half, Alberta quarterback Hardeep Bamata threw a 62-yard pass for a touchdown making it 24-7 Gaels.

For the second half the Queen's coaching staff elected to continue using their entire roster, giving many a chance to play that wouldn't normally

"The result was not as important to us as the experience," said Gaels' Head Coach Bob Howes following the game.

The second half began with the Golden Bears running off 20 unanswered points. The drive was concluded by wing-back Steve Kabachia, whose 20-yard touchdown run staked the visitors to their first lead of the day, 27-24.

After a John Taylor field goal tied the game, Queen's got the ball back in their own territory. However, third-string signal caller Darren Cassidy was blindsided and fumbled the ball, which the Bears' Craig Alloway quickly pounced on, and converted into the winning touchdown.

The Golden Bears, with 264 yards of rushing offense, were able to overcome four fumbles and one interception. The Gaels run defense has been worrisome for coach Howes, as the Gaels have had trouble stopping the run in their two regular season contests.

"It is a concern that we couldn't stop the run, but it must be noted that they played only seven different offensive linemen, while we had a lot of personnel out there," explained Howes.

With no significant injuries to the Gaels during the game, it was, overall, a success.

"The guys got to meet players from the other side of the country and realize that we are all the same, none of us have two heads or are giants," joked Howes. "We all had a good time."

Homecoming Game Tickets
Queen's vs. McGill
 Available at the PEC
 September 21 to September 24
 9 a.m. — 7 p.m.
 &
 September 25
 9 a.m. — 8 p.m.

Rugby juggernaut crushes Waterloo

BY NATHAN SAGER

For the second consecutive game, 39 was the magic number for the Queen's men's rugby team.

This was the margin of victory for the first XV in each of their first two OUA matches. After opening conference play with a 50-11 triumph over York on Wednesday, the Gaels achieved their second straight lopsided victory of the young season on Saturday afternoon at Kingston Field with an emphatic 51-12 throttling of the visiting Waterloo Warriors.

The Gaels wasted no time in gaining momentum and controlling the flow of the play, opening a 25-point advantage before Waterloo had even made its first try.

"For the first 20 minutes we were absolutely dominant. In that span, we established that we were not going to lose," remarked Head Coach Al Ferguson, who felt his charges were less intense during the game.

This was understandable, however, due to the late summer humidity and Queen's early offensive onslaught. "Were it 10 to 15 degrees cooler, we'd have probably won by more," added Ferguson.

The Gaels were quite adept at giving up the ball to a trailing teammate at the precise moment, often leading to easy tries. Steve Cummings benefited from this and scored a pair of tries in the first half, which ended with the hosts ahead 25-5.

Steve Elliot, Andrew Hodgson, Sam Johnson, Simon Marshall, Dave McCully, and Geoff Phelan also registered tries, while Paul Hemmings enjoyed a successful afternoon, kicking four converts and adding a penalty. "Something we've emphasized is finding the support player," said Ferguson. "It was very gratifying to see that working today. It's an aspect we're delighted with."

The head coach was able to find some problems with his club's defensive play. Both Warrior tries came after the visitors had repeatedly come close and were repelled several times by the Gaels before finally crossing the goal and touching the ball down. These sequences indicated that the Warriors were not so thoroughly overmatched as the final score might indicate.

"Their backs found a lot of holes," commented Ferguson. "As the year goes on, we'll need to close that down on defense, and we have enough talent to do that."

Coming off the pair of routs in Kingston, the Gaels will undoubtedly face a more severe test in their first away match next Saturday in Hamilton against McMaster, whom along with the Western Mustangs, have been Queen's most difficult rival in recent years. "We're not going down there expecting to do anything other than win," Ferguson vowed.

Are you getting enough exercise?

By JULIETA LOEFFLER

Exercise is of fundamental importance to your physical and mental health. So it is essential that you make time for some physical activity on a regular basis. There are many benefits to being active, and they go beyond the commonly known ones of weight management, increased physical well-being and looking good.

Physical activity boosts your immune system and helps you fight diseases and common colds more effectively. It also increases your metabolism, which helps you use up calories at a faster rate. It increases your energy level as well as your level of physical strength and endurance. In the long run, physical activity can actually add years to your life and more importantly, its quality.

While most people are aware of the physical benefits of exercise, just as important are the lesser known emotional benefits. Taking a break from the routine of classes, homework and stress is extremely important for your well-being. A burst of exercise leaves you feeling refreshed and ready to continue your day. During exercise, your body releases a group of neurotransmitters called endorphins. These endorphins are responsible for the "high" you feel after a good workout (for anyone who has never experienced this, it is a feeling of exhilaration and happiness). Not only does exercise make you feel better about yourself and increase your self-esteem, it can also help to reduce the stress in your life and clear your head from daily problems and annoyances.

Most people understand that they are probably better off doing a regular workout than not doing one. Yet the problem lies in fitting exercise into your day and justifying it, as opposed to studying for an extra hour. The appeal of exercise versus your organic chemistry may not be a hard choice for some, but don't assume that an extra hour of studying is more beneficial than exercise. Did you know that by decreasing your level of physical activity you are also making it harder for your brain to keep alert? Physical activity actually enhances your retention of information. Everyone needs a few study breaks, and what better place to take them than at the PEC.

It is easier to fit a variety of physical activities in your day than you might think. If you have a 60 or 90 minute break between classes, that is more than enough time to throw on a pair of shorts and a t-shirt (or a set of greys) and go for a 25 minute run. Finish off with a few push-ups, sit-ups, dips and you have a total body workout. The basement of the PEC has tons of machines to get your heart rate up in a hurry. You can also take advantage of the free aerobics classes that are only 45-50 minutes long and you'll still have plenty of time to get to your next class.

Don't assume that an extra hour of studying is more beneficial than exercise.

You can ski, cycle, row, swim or run to better mental and physical health in a short time. If you schedule your workout times to fit your timetable, you are more likely to make it part of your routine. This helps you realize that workouts do not really take-up a huge amount of time and that it is possible to squeeze a good workout into your day three to four times a week.

A trick I found very useful during my first year at Queen's was to read my textbooks on a stationary bike. I found reading my "really boring" texts on a bike a lot easier because it prevented me from falling asleep like I would at home (hitting the floor of the PEC is a lot more painful than hitting the pillow on my bed).

So the next time you are feeling stressed, or can't get through a text without having to ask your roommate/housemate to come and check on you every 20 minutes, or want a burst of energy and endorphins: I encourage you to take a walk to the PEC and experience the thrills and benefits of physical activity first hand.

Field hockey hangs tough

By ROBERT MACNEIL

The Queen's field hockey team played their first three games of the 1998 season and confirmed their hopes of having a solid year.

On Saturday the Gaels battled to a 0-0 tie with the University of Western Ontario and defeated McGill 2-0. On Sunday, they fought hard but lost 3-0 to the best team in the conference, the University of Toronto.

Team captain Megan Brady inspired her teammates by playing despite having injured her hand in an exhibition game against Trent. Wearing a splint, she covered the field with a fiery intensity and helped shut down Western's offense.

Assistant Coach Richard Bennett commented that Brady provided "quite a lift to the other players."

Coach Bennett was excited about the quality of the team's defense but was disappointed that they were unable "to get as many shots as they would have liked." Bennett was fairly positive after the game however, and commented that "the rookies are starting to gel (and the team is playing as a unit, not as individuals."

The Gaels carried this momentum into their afternoon game against rival McGill. The excellent Gael defense was present again but this time it was supported with a welcome burst of offense. In the first half, Jill Connell fired one into the net and late in the second half, Jackie McLachlan scored the clincher. Bennett was especially happy about the scoring because the goals came from plays that had been practiced in training camp.

On Sunday, the Gaels battled against the highly talented squad from Toronto. The Gaels created numerous scoring chances and applied tremendous pressure. The Toronto players were often frustrated and had to be warned about their behavior by the referees.

Despite losing the game, the Gaels had a fairly productive weekend. This team has shown the promise that may elevate them into the playoffs this year.

JUSTICE

AMS Judicial Committee

Positions available:

Chair

Alternate Chair

Chief Prosecutor

Deputy Prosecutors (2)

Committee Members (4)

APPLY NOW

Only undergraduates need apply. More info at the AMS office Applications Due Friday September 25th at 4:30pm

THE JOURNAL CROSSWORD

Canadian Criss Cross by Walter D. Feener

ACROSS

- 1. Curtain holder
- 4. Singer Diana
- 8. Go out with
- 9. External ears
- 11. Theme in a design
- 12. Parthenon designer
- 14. Circus vehicle
- 16. Medicinal tablet
- 17. Went after
- 18. Knowledge
- 20. Boxing decision
- 21. Cardinal's symbol of rank
- 24. Lovers' meeting
- 25. Use oars
- 27. ___ generis
- 28. TV awards
- 31. Well-groomed
- 34. Wedge-shaped inlet
- 35. Fragrant gum
- 37. Galley slave
- 39. Wingless insects
- 41. Curious collector
- 44. Gave private lessons
- 45. Attack
- 47. Moon goddess
- 48. Did well on a test
- 49. Picks pockets

DOWN

- 50. Musical syllables
- 2. Of the ear
- 3. Challenge
- 4. Kitchen utensil
- 5. London is here: abbr.
- 6. Short quick cut
- 7. Mental health
- 8. Good Samaritan
- 9. Arenal navigator
- 10. Is morose
- 11. Heavy drinking cup
- 13. Narrow opening
- 15. Hammer part
- 19. Vanity case
- 22. Dehydrated
- 23. Entertain guests
- 25. Tractor-trailer
- 27. Gone bad
- 28. Quod ___ demon-strandum
- 29. Subtraction sign
- 30. Have significance
- 31. Trombone part
- 32. Slipknots
- 33. Moved by careful shifting
- 36. Kitchen appliances
- 38. Spoil
- 40. Without another
- 42. Amphibian
- 43. Strange
- 45. Confederate soldier

The Herstmonceux Homecoming
Experience 1998
Join the Fun!
on Friday, September 25, 1998
7pm to 10pm
at the
Victorian Bar, Tir Nan Og
200 Ontario Street, Kingston, Ontario

Answers for last issue's puzzle.

Ink in the Blood?

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

Is Hiring

Assistant News Editor
We're looking for an enthusiastic and self-motivated person with some free time and on ear to the ground. Writing experience is a big plus.

Advertising Designers
We're looking for creative and artistic people with an interest in advertising and layout. Experience with computers an asset.

Computer Systems Manager
Have expertise in networking and systems? Want to earn money on an on-call basis? We need help. Call us. NOW.

Journal House Cleaner
We're looking for someone to clean The Journal house on a weekly basis. All cleaning enthusiasts welcome.

Interested? Call 545-2800, drop by The Journal House at 272 Earl Street, or e-mail us at journal@post.queensu.ca

APPLICATION DEADLINE: FRIDAY SEPTEMBER 25 AT 5:00 P.M.

Classifieds

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WONDERING ABOUT RELATIONSHIPS? career etc? Seeking direction? Experience greater self-awareness with Tarot, palmistry, runes, and more. Clients say my readings are inspirational and very accurate. I also offer classes in meditation, Tarot, etc. For more information phone Kellye at 544-1909. Also available Fridays and Saturdays at "Harmony," 93 Princess St. Walk in or pre-book at 544-7897. Tape included.

PROFESSIONAL TUTORING and Editing. Are you achieving the grades you deserve? Improve your essay skills, editing, research and writing. E.S.L. a specialty. Phone 416 280-6113, fax 416 960-0240.

GRADLINK is a service linking grad-

BURGER KING FREE
BIG KING WITH PURCHASE OF A BIG KING
no coupon necessary
$99
whopper junior every day

uate students for mutual support. Call Student Counselling service for more information at 545-2893.

MARVELLOUS MENU STUDENT MEAL PLAN Home cooked nutritious meals delivered to you for under $5.00 per meal. Meals made to your specifications. ready for the microwave or oven. Student specials are available. For more information call Kathy Monday to Friday at 531-4265.

MOODMASTER IS A GROUP FOR STUDENTS who have been diagnosed with depression or Bi-Polar disorder. Its purpose is to provide mutual support for members and to encourage life styles that promote health. If you want to know more...call the Counselling service at 545-2893.

SPRINGBREAK Daytona Beach, Panama City, South Padre, Mexico. Best hotels, parties, price. Book early and save!!! Earn money and trips! Campus Reps/Organizations wanted. Call Inter-Campus Programs 1 800 327-6013 www.icpt.com

PUNK ROCK! I play guitar and drums and I want to join or form a local punk band. Info call Ron at 531-4582.

LABATT BREWERIES - For your keg party inquiries and needs, contact local campus rep Ryan Benedict at 531-3115.

RED TAPE? Unfair treatment? There is someone who will listen. Access Queen's University Help Lines through www.queensu.ca/secretaria/or call 545-6095.

MOSAIC is looking for volunteers for K.D.A.C.L. (Kingston & District Association for Community Living), to do a variety of fun and interesting activities with the people they support who have developmental disabilities. They compensate for all activities and match you according to your preferences and availability. For more information about how you can get involved, please contact Eleanor at 549-2350, ext. 15.

BRAIN POISON IN YOUR GAS TANK? Dr. John Donaldson (PhD in experimental medicine) will discuss the health hazards of the fuel additive MMT previously banned here, still banned in most of the U.S., but soon to be sold in Canada. Kingston Frontenac Public Library, The Wilson Room, September 28th at 7:15 p.m.

ARTSCI STUDENTS: Nominations for the position of ASUS rep to the AMS are now open. Please pick up a nomination package at the CORE, and/or call the CORE for more information.

ARTSCI '02s! Nominations for '02 Year Society are now open. Positions include President, Vice-President, Secretary, Public Relations Officer (2), Social Convener (2), CESA rep, PHESA rep, and 1st ASUS Rep to the AMS. Packages can be picked up at the CORE, at 183 University. See you there!

FOR SALE/FOR RENT
FOR SALE: An up-right piano for sale. No reasonable offer refused. Please call Gabriele at 545-6711 for details.

NEARLY NEW SALE: Used clothing, records, jewelry, toys, antiques, household items, linens, glassware, accessories. Friday Sept. 25 from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m., and Saturday Sept. 26 from 9:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. J. K. Telt Creativity Complex, 370 King St. W. (At Morton). Sponsored by the Volunteer committee of the Kingston Symphony.

FOR SALE: Nearly new single futon and frame in good condition. Great for a bed or couch. Asking $50. Call Laura at 546-2878.

FOR SALE: Laptop computer. AST Ascentia 900N. 486 intel, 24 MB ram, 300 MB removable hard drive, fax modem, network card, external CD-ROM, 3.5 floppy, updated Windows 95, active matrix screen, AC adaptor and battery. $1100. Kacey 547-6921.

PARKING FOR RENT, near Albert and Union. $30/month, garage also available.

LOST AND FOUND

LOST: Diamond engagement ring lost sometime after Wednesday September 2nd in Johnson St., Queen's area. Reward if found. Please call 536-1679.

FOUND: At the Campus Bookstore an envelope containing wedding photos. Thompson from Walmart. Can be picked up at the Customer Service desk.

HELP WANTED

PART-TIME NANNY NEEDED Nanny to look after a 9,8, and 2 year old. Must be able to travel to the United States. Must be able to swim. Working primarily on some week nights and Saturday and Sundays. Require references and job experience. Send resume to Gregg Rosen at P.O. Box 300 Kingston, ON K7L 4W1 or call 544-1822 Monday - Friday, 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

TRIPLE TREAT (act,dance and sing) teacher wanted for 19 year old student. Please call Jenna Harris at 546-9036, anytime.

BIKE COURIERS WANTED. Must be reliable. Year-round. 542-0364.

PERSONALS

MR. AND MRS. GOBBLES?! Much to the disappointment of women across Kingston, two-time Ass Goblin winner Tim Scott has announced that he is tying the knot. We wish you the best of luck Gobbles, and hope Tanya doesn't come to her senses before August!! Love, us.

Event List

Wednesday, Sept. 23
one step beyond
$6 in advance
$8 at the door

Saturday, Oct. 3
RASCALZ
the Royal Official

Live at: Alices
For access to great Queen's events!

Queen's Entertainment Card
Tickets Sold At: exchange

MISC

WHEN BASTARDS FLY A TERMINAL CASE

For most students the trip back to Queen's was uneventful. You hopped on a train, or drove down. For me, however, and a select group of students not-from-Toronto, it was a nightmare journey of confusion and despair.

My nightmare begins innocuously enough. I hear the Air Canada pilots are threatening to strike, and since I have to fly from Edmonton to Ottawa to get back to Queen's, I call the airline. I am perkily informed by an agent that the strike threats are merely "part of the normal negotiation process" and the chance of a strike is "one in a million," but if through some freakish mischance a strike should occur Air Canada will simply switch me to another carrier.

TROUBLE BREWING?

Well, turns out that threatening to strike isn't just part of the negotiation process, the pilots really mean it. I decide to call Air Canada and take them up on the offer to switch my flight. Three and a half hours later, I'm getting ready to give up the hope of having my call answered when, thank the gods, the hold music ceases and a human voice comes on the line. Unfortunately for me, the agent tells me she can't access reservation information for other airlines to switch my ticket, so I have to call them myself.

She does give me the numbers of four airlines that take Air Canada tickets, but this information proves unhelpful as two inform me they only help passengers flying to or from the USA, one doesn't fly from Edmonton, and one is a wrong number. I then call Canadian Airlines, and am informed there are no tickets in my seat category available until late October, but there happens to be a full economy ticket available on the day I wish to fly. I reserve the seat and called Air Canada back to make sure that I can just pay the difference and trade up.

I'm a little surprised when I finally get through to Air Canada and the agent tells me I can't reserve a ticket on my own, but only through the airline. They won't let me trade up, but will find another flight for me. Great, I think, until I hear the question "Would you rather stay overnight in Portland or Newark?"

What the hell? How is Oregon on the way to Ontario?

Then I get the unexpected news that I have to fly to Calgary, then to Vancouver, and then to Portland, Oregon. I just have to talk to an Air Canada agent at the airport, and they'll pay for me to stay in a hotel. The next day I have to fly to Newark, New Jersey, and then to Ottawa. I point out that this can't possibly be cheaper than just giving me a more expensive seat on a direct flight, but apparently that's against the rules.

As my only alternative is taking the bus to Kingston, I agree to the plan.

FROM BAD TO WORSE

Things go fairly smoothly until I arrive in Portland, where I realize my luggage has not come with me. I go to the Air Canada counter to ask where exactly my suitcases might be — anywhere in Western Canada or the North-western U.S. appears possible — and to get my hotel voucher. Of course, I find neither suitcases nor a voucher, just a little sign saying "Back at 5:30 a.m." Luckily a man standing nearby notices my dismay and informs me that America West airline is now handling Air Canada customers.

At America West I chat with Todd, who wins a lifetime supply of my love and admiration for being the most helpful person employed by a North American airline. He makes me a reservation at a nearby hotel, arranges for Air Canada to pay for it, and even makes me feel better about the fact that after a day of travel, I'm about 600 miles further away from my destination, and have no belongings. Sleep at last, I think "Well, at least things can only go

One wonders if anything this crazy has ever happened on the critically acclaimed sitcom "Wings."

uphill tomorrow."
Ha ha ha. How naive.

quickly hands me the bag before averting his eyes.

The next morning I arrive at the airport bright and early to take the plane to Newark. Happily, it's a real airplane where they serve food. All the flights the day before had been on tiny commuter planes that had neither food nor entertainment. "No starvation today," I think as I eat what the stewardess claims are eggs.

At long last I stagger into the Ottawa airport and make my way through the throng of policemen and drug dogs to the airline agent who fills in my baggage claim form.

"Is there anything distinct in the suitcase that would identify them as yours?" she asks.

I arrive intact in Newark and set out to amuse myself for the duration of a five-hour layover. Wandering around the airport shops, I begin to feel inexplicably nauseous. Then it hits me — damn Continental Airlines and their room temperature eggs! Salmonella, here I come.

Yes, my mind says, there's a package of birth control pills in the side pocket and a bright yellow laundry bag with my dirty underwear in it on top of the stuff in the suitcase.

"Uh, no" I hear myself say. "Just clothes and stuff."

At long last I stumble out into the terminal and meet my aunt, who says all sorts of concerned, maternal things to make me feel better.

THE KICKER

I spend the next four hours puking in the Newark airport bathroom, until finally, to my inexpressible relief, it's time to board the airplane. Figuring that my stomach is pretty much empty and I will be okay, I sit down. As the plane fills and the stewardess prepares us for take-off, a huge wave of nausea hits me. "Oh shit," I think, "I have to vomit in front of everyone on the plane. I'm sure this will add immeasurably to their travelling experience."

I regained my luggage the next day, but believe you me, the emotional scars of the flight remain. I'll never again be able to eat airplane food, or look a big burly guy in the eye without feeling a bit nauseous.

Now the strike is over and they're luring unsuspecting travelers back into their web of evil and misinformation with great seat sales and things. But I will not be so foolish again. Oh no, they will never lure me back. Next time I have to get home I'm going to try a more reliable mode of transportation, like hitchhiking.

I rifle through the seat pocket in front of me, desperately searching for the barf bag. It isn't there. There's a big, burly guy in a suit across the aisle from me. He doesn't look like he needs his bag, so I mumble "Excuse me, do you have an airsickness bag?" He gives me a big, burly blank look. Then, as all the blood has drained from my face and collected in my eyeballs, he figures out that I'm sick and Liz Frogley might never leave Kingston again.

the Queen's Journal Reader

is accepting submissions for upcoming issues.

- Submit your . . .
- Creative Essays
  - Poetry
  - Short Stories
  - Worst Fears
  - One-Act Plays
  - Dramatic Monologues
  - Big Dreams
  - Artwork and Photography
  - Literary and Drama Reviews
  - Favourite things.

Please query with e-mail or telephone call to:

The Queen's Journal Reader
545-2800
journal@post.queensu.ca

QUI EST?

For fame and prizes, identify the celebrity shown in the photo to the left.

TODAY'S CLUE:
IT'S A HE.

In the following three issues of The Journal, a less and less fuzzy version of the celebrity will appear. Whoever guesses it first, wins!

(It's no different than the game that you play in theatres before a movie, except for the fact this version isn't very original)

Drop off your answer at 272 Earl St. or send an e-mail to: journal@post.queensu.ca

Come in from the cold.

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY

THE JOURNAL

since 1873

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1998

Queen's women's light-weight eight enjoys peace and solitude off Kingston shores, during an early morning practice at the break of dawn.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Hazardous chemical spill in Botterell

Accident forces students and staff to evacuate for clean-up

By RENEE HUANG

Queen's University medical students, faculty and technicians were forced to evacuate Botterell Hall Wednesday, following a chemical spill in a lab on the third floor of the building.

At approximately 11:45 a.m., three fire crews were called to the "biohazard area" of Botterell to contain a pyridine spill, explained Tom Truesdell, assistant deputy fire chief at the Kingston

Fire Department.

Pyridine is a chemical used in peptide and other protein analyses, said Chris Mueller, a professor working in the cancer research lab. The accident happened in one of his labs, he said, when someone dropped a litre of the chemical.

Wayne Lyons, an anatomy technician at Queen's, said pyridine makes organic tissue soluble in water, is very volatile and explodes easily.

Director of Queen's Security Louise

Fish said material data sheets which describe pyridine's effects and toxicity were "not readily available at Botterell." She also added, "It turns out no one in that department had clean-up kits or impermeable suits" to adequately contain a spill of that nature. The fire department later contacted Dupont for "a state-of-the-art clean-up suit," Fish said.

According to Truesdell, an Ottawa-based emergency response team called Canutec Canada was contacted for advice and information about pyridine and the team discovered the spill was not as toxic as originally suspected.

After assessing the safety conditions and donning protective clothing, clean-up crews entered room 366 to administer charcoal filters over the spill as part of the clean-up process.

"Queen's will dispose of it," said Truesdell, although he did not know

Please see Safety's on page 3

Beer and football a 'natural fit'

By ADAM KAMINSKY

Spectators at this weekend's Homecoming football game will be able to enjoy beer inside Richardson Stadium.

During last week's game against the University of Alberta, a small gathering of people could be found in the south end zone sipping on suds. This was a dry run of the upcoming Alumni Weekend "hospitality area," which some say was a long time in coming.

"It was brought up last year and the AMS Student Constable manager decided against it," said Alma Mater Society Services Director Sarah Armstrong. "This year, Scott McCann [QSC manager] is more flexible and that is how it came about."

"The fear is that football games have

"We're not promoting a big drunkfest. We are all adults here, and in the real world you can have beer at sporting events."

— Sarah Armstrong, AMS services director

a tendency to get towdy and with the added element of alcohol it can get worse," said McCann, adding, "I feel that since it is the AMS council running the area, we can cooperate and hopefully make this a good time."

Athletic Director John McFarlane said the credit for this innovation should be given to the Alumni of Eastern Ontario association and George Jackson, linebacker for the Golden Gaels from 1981 to 1984.

"They met about six months ago and made decisions about making changes that would be good for football fans and they decided this [hospitality area] would be good," he said.

During a strategic planning session, the Alumni Association and Jackson decided to begin the quest for gaining liquor licenses. When plans became reality and there were three separate licensed dates, it was decided that the Alumni Association would run the first date, last Saturday's game against the University of Alberta.

"We thought that by running this [past] weekend's beer area we could provide a good experiment or prototype to help prepare for Homecoming," said Jackson.

"We will be open in the south endzone for both the alumni side and the students to a capacity of 300. Proper ID is required," explained Armstrong. "We're not promoting a big drunkfest. We are all adults here, and in the real

Please see Fans on page 8

Weekend to be safe

By REBECCA STELTER

With the annual game against McGill University falling on Homecoming weekend '98, extra safety precautions are being implemented in order to ensure the safety of students and alumni.

Not that harm is expected. In fact, Bill Sparrow, manager of facilities of the athletics department at Queen's University, ensures that the Homecoming game will be run "just like any other football game — in a safe manner."

In terms of overcrowding, Sparrow said there should be no safety issues. "Every Homecoming is sold out. There are 10,500 seats available, and there are only 10,500 tickets sold for the game," Sparrow said.

Still, with 10,500 fans in attendance, intensity will be high not only on the gridiron, but also in the stands

Please see Policy on page 9

index

Volume 126, Issue B
www.journal.queensu.ca

News . . . . . 1	Features . . . . . 21
Science . . . . . 11	A&E . . . . . 27
Editorials . . . . . 14	Crossword . . . . . 32
Opinions . . . . . 15	Classifieds . . . . . 33
Sports & Fitness . . . . . 17	MSC . . . . . 34

WEATHERWATCH

Today

Sunny with clouds
High 22°C; Low 10°C;
POP 30%

Saturday

Sunny with storms
High 25°C; Low 14°C;
POP 70%

Sunday

Sunny with rain
High 22°C; Low 12°C;
POP 70%

Monday

Sunny with clouds
High 22°C; Low 12°C;
POP 30%

Inside The Journal: Special pull-out Homecoming banner

Multideas Promotions

Screen Print and Embroidery.
In house Graphic Design.
More than 300,000
Promotional Products to choose from!

See us at the
ALUMNI WEEKEND
SIDEWALK SALE

Receive
$5 off!
Any clothing item
at the
Alumni Weekend
Sidewalk Sale!
Saturday, Sept 26th

Limit: 1 coupon per customer

530 Barnsley Cres. Kingston, ON
Tel: (613) 634-2437 Fax: (613) 634-2505
www.multideas.com
multi@adan.kingston.net

Multideas Promotions

Treat yourself at HOMECOMING ...
take something special
HOME!

It's the
NEW CHEZ PIGGY COOKBOOK
hot off the press!
You'll love this 20-year collection of award-winning best-loved recipes from famous Chez Piggy Restaurant.
Look for our new cookbook when you dine at Chez Piggy, or visit our bakery and take-out, Pon Choncho, and pick up your copy today.
$24.95...and great for gift-giving too!

BRING HOMECOMING HOME WITH CHEZ PIGGY

Chez Piggy
68 R Princess St. 549-7673

Pan Chancho
70 Johnson St. 544-7790

Unhappy economy residents to move first

By JENNIFER MORRISON

Despite potential savings of over $1,000 in residence fees, only half of first-year students in economy double rooms this year requested these smaller and less expensive rooms over regular single or double rooms, and Residence Services is looking to satisfy room change requests as soon as possible.

"The highest priority for room transfer will be those in economy doubles whose request for an economy double was low," said Graham Brown, director of Queen's residences, adding he hopes to deal with these room changes very soon.

An economy double is a single room converted into a double by the use of loft-style and bunk-style beds, in order to maximize space. Essentially, they are the same as all other residence rooms except they are smaller, and as the name suggests, they are also cheaper. An economy double costs just $4,925 compared to $6,013 for a regular double room and $6,234 for a single.

Geoff Morrison is a first-year student in a Leonard Hall economy doubles who did not list it as a preference. After requesting a double room in a co-ed dorm, Morrison found himself assigned to an economy double in the all-male residence. "I must have had one of the worst 10 lottery numbers out of all the first-year students. My room assignment was the polar opposite of what I requested," said Morrison.

"I must have had one of the worst 10 lottery numbers out of all the first-year students. My room assignment was the polar opposite of what I requested."

— Geoff Morrison, first-year
Leonard Hall resident

Brown said he recognizes that there are students in similar situations and plans to accommodate them are already in the works. The process has already begun to move students assigned to temporary rooms into permanent rooms. Once these transfers are complete, the residence office will begin taking room and building transfer requests from any student in the system.

The concept of economy doubles began last year as a pilot project with 36 rooms in Victoria Hall and Morris.

Please see Adjust on page 5

CORRECTION

In the September 22 issue, Tolga Batket was incorrectly referred to as "she" rather than "he" an alcohol awareness week story. The Journal regrets the error.

The writing's on the wall. It could be yours.

Submit your creative work and your thoughts about other people's creative work to The Queen's Journal Reader, a monthly supplement to The Queen's Journal. So dig up those old poems and essays and let us publish them before you wake up one morning and hear them being broadcast on CNN. It happens, you know.

Please forward all submissions and inquiries to:

The Queen's Journal Reader
545.2800
journal@post.queensu.ca

Cyclists on sidewalks face heftier fines

By FIANA STEVENSON

Cyclists caught riding on city sidewalks will face substantially higher fines as a result of a decision made by Kingston City Council on Tuesday evening.

City Council authorized the increase of the fine for riding bicycles on the sidewalk from $30 to $100. The ban also includes skateboards and in-line skates.

There is a complete ban on the use of skateboards on city properties and a limited ban on the use of in-line skates.

In-line skaters are prohibited from using most of the major arteries, such as Princess, Brock, Queen and Johnson Streets and Sir John A. Macdonald Boulevard. They are also, in general, limited to the quieter residential streets.

"There's been a ban on sidewalks, almost since they built sidewalks," explained Constable Mike Shultz of the Kingston Police.

According to Kingston Police, there has been a significant increase in the number of cyclists using city sidewalks since the return of the student population.

"I think bikes belong on the road because they are considered moving vehicles."

— Ryan Goldiuk, Queen's Mountain Biking Club

Shultz said increased activity is just one of the reasons for the fine hike. Until Tuesday, skateboarders faced $100 for riding on restricted areas, while cyclists enjoyed much lower fines. "It wouldn't be fair to charge a cyclist any less," Shultz said.

Safety is also a key concern, especially in the downtown area, Shultz continued. "People are notorious for walking with their heads down," he said. When cyclists and pedestrians share the sidewalks, "it's just a dangerous situation,"

Please see City on page 5

Students and staff wait outside an evacuated Botterell Hall after a hazardous chemical spill on the third floor disrupted labs and work Wednesday afternoon. PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Equity advisor set to face challenges

By SHAWN BRIMLEY

Mary Margaret Dauphinee, the new Queen's University equity advisor is excited and busy after her first three weeks on the job.

"It's a wonderful job, I'm meeting so many wonderful people," said Dauphinee, in her new, almost empty office in Richardson Hall.

"I'm slowly moving in. When I first got here there was two desks and a couple of boxes," said Dauphinee with a laugh.

"I was told about the controversy in my initial interview... But people here have been wonderful. They are really going to give me a chance to do this job."

— Mary Margaret Dauphinee,
equity advisor

"But people here have been wonderful. They are really going to give me a chance to do this job."

"My job is to ensure that different groups on campus are receiving equity, and that the atmosphere at Queen's promotes equity," said Dauphinee.

In order to create an atmosphere of equity on campus, Dauphinee said she needs to ensure that the different organizations dealing with equity issues have the information necessary to effectively cover all areas of equity.

In the event that Dauphinee sees shortcomings in these areas, her position allows her to recommend an examination of different policies and procedures to Principal Leggett.

"If there are issues that aren't being addressed, or people with problems that are slipping through the cracks, my role is to make sure that they get to the right place," Dauphinee said.

"My job is to know what is going on, so I can direct somebody or find out where they can go to get their problem taken care of."

Dauphinee's interest in equity issues spans almost 25 years. She spent 15 years as director of Equal Opportunity for the City of Toronto before working as an employment equity officer at Dalhousie University in Halifax, Nova Scotia.

"I've finally figured out that working in equity is a lifetime commitment. If you're in this business, you're in it for good."

— Mary Margaret Dauphinee,
equity advisor

"I've finally figured out that working in equity is a lifetime commitment. If you're in this business, you're in it for good," said Dauphinee.

"I used to say I was doing it for my daughter, but now I'm doing it for my grandchildren," laughed Dauphinee. "I hope I never have to say that I'm doing it for my great-grandchildren."

Dauphinee is excited and eager to begin her new job, but said, "It's too early to single out specific issues that need to be explored. Right now it's important for me to sift through all the issues, but most of all I have to listen."

"All people really want is good treatment," Dauphinee said. "People want to know that this is a good place to be. Students, faculty and staff want the reputation that Queen's is not just an excellent educational facility, but also a great place to be."

Mary Margaret Dauphinee
PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

The creation of the equity advisor role was meant, in part, to fill the void left by the Dean of Women, but also springs from a complete restructuring of the equity services on campus.

"I was told about the controversy in my initial interview," said Dauphinee.

Playing on safety's side

Continued from page 1

what facilities or methods of disposal existed.

Wiebke Wilkens, director of Environmental Health and Safety said that the chemicals would be taken out to a waste transfer station on Grant Timmins Drive for a bulk disposal. "I wouldn't classify this as a major spill," she said.

The main concern was that "the pyridine vapour will penetrate throughout the whole building," moving through the ventilation system and elevator shafts.

— William Racz, professor of pharmacology and toxicology

Despite the evacuation procedures, William Racz, a professor of pharmacology and toxicology, said there was not much cause for worry.

"The toxicity of pyridine is like any organic solvent," he said. Although Racz has not experienced a situation of "this magnitude" before, he said the evacuation was "fundamentally precautionary."

The main concern was that "the pyridine vapour [would] penetrate throughout the whole building," moving through the ventilation system and elevator shafts, said Racz.

The smell of pyridine is fairly pungent and nitrogen-based, explained Racz. "It's got an unusual odour — I can't even describe it... You'll have to keep in mind that we'll smell it in non-toxic levels" in fume hoods or even when a container of the chemical is opened momentarily for use, he said.

"You would eventually lose consciousness if it was smelt in large amounts. That's not different than every other solvent, such as gasoline," Racz said. "Acutely, I'd anticipate that [pyridine] would work like a general anaesthetic," he continued, emphasizing that such a situation was not an issue Wednesday.

Meds students seemed rather unfazed by the hasty turn of events and stood around the building and neighbouring park chatting.

"We're not worried about our work," said Belal Ahmad, Meds '02, one of the many students still sporting white lab coats. Ahmad did say medical students will have to return tomorrow afternoon for a rescheduled lab.

Most people working and studying in Botterell were concerned about bags, wallets and car or house keys that had been abandoned during the emergency evacuation.

"A lot of us were going to go home," but stayed to retrieve their belongings, said Anjita Lau, Meds '02.

At 2 p.m., fire crews began admitting people to retrieve personal items from the building, but those with belongings on the third floor could not return until the building was reopened 7 a.m. yesterday morning, said Kevin McKegney, the building administrator for the Faculty of Health and Sciences. "Basically we wanted to play on the side of safety," he said.

Homecoming Events

Phunky Friday
(Tonite)

Clark Ritual 11 am - 6pm
Brian & Justin of Clever Hans
@ Queen's Pub 4pm - 6pm

Swanky Saturday
(Tomorrow)

Sassy Sidewalk Sale 9am - 5pm
The Shot's spinning that phat wax live on lower University Ave with DJ Under & DJ Ali
Pre-game Warm-Up @ Alfie's
11am, all ages, all style!

Kill McGill / Homecoming Football Game 1pm
Hospitality tent @ the game will require I.D.
(open to Queen's students & alumni only).
Clark Ritual 11 am - 6pm

Sweet Sunday
(Figure it out!)

Evening Coffee House @ Queen's Pub
Open mic, sinful desserts, all ages!

Kill McGill Shirts
Unisex $10
Baby Tees $14

Questions?
Call the CAC
545-6000 ext 4819

Students explore jobs

By SEAN GALLIVAN

It may only be the second week of classes, but already many Queen's University students are turning their thoughts to summer jobs and full-time careers.

This was evident at Career Days '98, which were held Tuesday and Wednesday of this week. The annual event, run by the Career Services department, is intended to give students an opportunity to meet representatives of corporations and learn what types of skills and experience they are looking for in their future employees.

"We want to hear about summer job experience, volunteer work and extra-curricular... how these demonstrate leadership and personal skills."

— Chris Bell, Quaker corporation representative

Jim Kelly, director of Career Services, said he was very pleased with the success of the 19th Career Day.

"Most years we average about 50-60 employers," said Kelly. "This year 80 have come over the two days, which ties the record for the most participants."

Kelly emphasized that the importance of this event was to supply students with information. "This is not a job fair, it's an opportunity for students from all years and disciplines... Students raise their level of awareness of the world outside Queen's. They build skills in dealing with employers in a low-pressure environment."

Chris Bell, a representative from the Quaker corporation, said there are two major benefits for participating employers. "First, we create exposure for our company in the pool of potential people who will shortly be entering the workforce. Second, we have a chance to meet the people who will be applying for jobs and learn what sorts of experience they have."

Bell said he was "amazed at the amount of experience students have, both working and other. We want to hear about [applicants'] summer job experience, volunteer work and extra-curricular [and for them to] show us how these demonstrate leadership and personal skills."

Another company representative in attendance was Julie Leduc of CAE Electronics Inc. She said her Montreal-based company attends Career Day and similar events every year at 17 different universities across Canada. "We come here looking for recent grads, as well as possible summer and co-op students." Many students would not otherwise have heard of her company, Leduc said. By attending these Career Days they increase their options.

Student reaction to the event was varied; many claimed to have attended solely for the free merchandise. However, those that did come to speak with the representatives generally had a positive experience.

"A lot of the companies have been helpful with good information," said Master of Industrial Relations student Jenna Peart. "They let you know what they're looking for when they read your resumé."

City cyclists more at risk riding on the road

Continued from page 3

comparable to a car. Bikes have to obey the same rules that cars obey."

Some students agree. "I was walking down Princess Street this summer, and some 14-year-old girl ran me over. She broke my sunglasses and I still bear the scars... This new [fine] is great," said Lyrandia Martin Evans, Arts '99.

"I think bikes belong on the road because they are considered moving vehicles," said Ryan Goldiuk, an executive member of the Queen's Mountain Bike Club. "They're

"Students are more at risk on the road than they are on the sidewalk."

— Paul Voorhoeve, Queen's Mountain Bike Club

However, safety concerns make some students weary about travelling on city roads.

"Students are more at risk on the road than they are on the sidewalk. Cars are obviously more reckless than bikes are," said Paul Voorhoeve, founder and executive member of the bike club.

Voorhoeve said he believes a city-wide awareness campaign on the relationship between cyclists and pedestrians would have been a more constructive initiative for the city to undertake than simply hiking fines.

"University students are not stupid. They generally will go in a straight line on the sidewalk," he said.

Voorhoeve said he has been riding on city sidewalks for the past three years and has never come into conflict with pedestrians. "We all usually get along," he said.

Schulz said the number of charges that Kingston Police actually dispenses to sidewalk cyclists is low. "We hope that the knowledge that there's a fine there and it's a hefty one will keep people off the sidewalks," he said.

New city bike laws intend to crack down on sidewalk cyclists in downtown Kingston.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Residents adjust to quarters

Continued from page 2

There was enough demand to fill each of these rooms and few problems were reported.

"Economy doubles were developed as an economical savings opportunity... $1,000 is a significant amount of money and is certainly why students and parents have been interested," said Brown.

"I'm getting along well with my roommate. Sure it's a bit small, but we've moved things around and we're getting used to it."

— Jeremy Gosh, first-year Gordon House resident others specified it as their second.

Jeremy Gosh, a first-year student in Gordon House, requested an economy double as his first choice and is happy with his room assignment.

"I'm getting along well with my roommate. Sure it's a bit small, but we've moved things around and we're getting used to it," he said.

Gosh, like many other incoming students chose an economy double for economical reasons. "I didn't have the cash to pay for a double. It made sense to me."

Economy double rooms leave little to the imagination.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Indeed, 83 per cent of students in economy doubles last year believed they were getting good value and would recommend economy doubles to incoming students, according to Brown.

On that basis, the pilot project was expanded to accommodate 296 students in economy double rooms in Leonard, McNeill and Gordon-Brockington residences this year.

Coinciding with this expansion has been a significant increase in demand by first-year students. According to Brown, approximately 150 incoming first-year students requested an economy double as their first choice and a large number of

A wedding in your future?
Or someone you know being married?
The Brides-To-Be are invited to a

WELCOME WAGON
since 1930

BRIDAL SHOWCASE
• Displays • Planning Guides
• Gifts • Valuable Prizes

Admittance is FREE,
but by invitation ONLY!
To receive an invitation,
please telephone hostess:
Maureen - 545-9415

When: Sunday, October 18, 1998
2:00 p.m. — doors open at 1:15 p.m.

Where: Kingston
Independent Nylon
Workers Union
Banquet Hall

The University Reunion Service

Sunday, 27 September 1998.
11:00a.m.
Morgan Memorial Chapel
Queen's University.

The University Chaplain,
Rev. Brian Yealland, will preach the sermon
Reunion.

Everyone is welcome.

The Downtown Workout From $27.00 a Month

55+ Classes Weekly
Open 6:00am to 11:00pm Weekdays

- Cycle Reebok
- Muay Thai
- Cardio Combat
- Registered Massage Therapy
- Supplements
- Personal Training
- Aerobax
- Yoga and Relaxation
- Ashtanga Power Yoga

110 Princess St.
549-1223

www.thedowntownworkout.on.ca

Teach English as a Second Language in Canada or Abroad

Enroll now to obtain your Certificate in Teaching English as a Second/Foreign Language

Queens University at Kingston

- Course instructors are experienced ESL teachers and experts in the field.
- Presentations cover instructional theory and methodologies in a variety of ESU/FL areas over different levels.
- Presentations provide information applicable to both Canadian and overseas teaching situations.
- Participants may observe ESL classes.
- Participants receive a variety of handouts as well as information on additional materials.
- Participants may tutor international students.

Registration Night
Monday, 28 September, 7-10 pm
MacCorry E229

Classes
Tuesdays and Thursdays
29 September — 22 October, 7-10 pm
MacCorry E229

Practice Tutoring
Saturday, 10 October and
Saturday, 17 October, 10 am — noon
MacCorry E229, E202, E230

Register early at School of English
96 Lower Albert Street
Tel: 545-2472 Fax: 545-6809
e-mail: seel@post.queensu.ca

Cost
$375 including materials
Pay by cash or *credit card at the School of English Office
*2% service charge must be added to all credit card payments

Your Parents ask that you :

Get Good Grades,
Save Money,
and Behave in Class.

We can help with the first two,
The last one's your problem.

Now Offering Custom T-Shirts and Mouse Pads
In Addition to Poster Design, Typesetting, Colour Copies
Course Packages, Binding, Faxing, and of course 6 cent copies.

The Publishing and Copy Centre
545-6543 545-0350
The centre of the lower JDUC

Need Food?

The AMS food bank is open Mondays and Thursdays, 4 p.m. to 6 p.m.

There's no application, no hassles.

Just free food.

We are located at 272 Earl Street, basement entrance (between University and Division). Please call 545-6972 if you have any questions or require any special arrangements.

A new breed of book

By LAURA MACINNIS

Business is booming at the Campus Bookstore this September, boasting 550 clients served per hour on peak days.

However, a significant increase in the number of professors ordering course packages, a compilation of photocopied articles and notes from a variety of sources, has changed the type of sales being rung through.

General manager Chris Tabor said the change could alter the way the book store does business. "It's less ordering, and more of a production issue," he said.

"The unit sales [for textbooks] are actually down," he said. "The custom courseware replaces, in the some cases, the need for two or three books.... It saves the students a lot of money."

For instance, a course package for Chemistry 112, replacing an $80 textbook, has saved the students $25,000, said Tabor.

"It really is a credit to the instructors," he said. "The students like it, because they use 100 per cent of the courseware instead of a small percentage of a textbook."

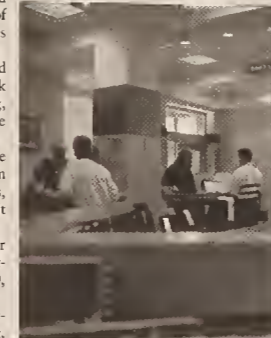

Course packages include readings previously kept on reserve only and have been offered in the book store before. "It's really taken off the past two years," said Tabor. Orders have increased 20 per cent from last year, and 15 per cent from the year before.

Course packages are also offered this year at the Publishing and Copy Centre in the John Deutsch University Centre, and at Copy Express on Princess Street.

"It's been phenomenally busy this year," said Steve Syrett, owner of Copy Express. "We're offering about 10 different packages, for courses in English and History."

"It seems like more and more professors are trying to put together course packages," said Greg Blackett, P&CC manager.

Campus Bookstore

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

The P&CC has 35 course packages available for students this year, and has dedicated an assistant manager to dealing with the increased demand.

Blackett said despite some problems of delays in the completion of ordered packages, the photocopied notes seem to be the preferred choice for students.

"We can offer a cheaper price than the Campus Bookstore most of the time."

Join
the crowd....

Since the launch of our new and improved website 2 weeks ago, almost 2000 people have visited....

Join us ....

- To increase your CQ (Career Quotient)
- For information on - Special events Workshops & Counselling
- For the dates of corporate visits, job descriptions for on campus recruiting and links to a variety of websites....

Check us out:

<http://careers.queensu.ca>

Brought to you by Career Services, St. Lawrence Building

The Campus Bookstore and Jostens

present

Alumni Weekend Ring Days

Save 10% On All Jostens Rings

A representative from Jostens Canada, will be at the Campus Bookstore, from Thursday until Saturday. There will be a 10% saving on all Jostens rings ordered. Jostens rings offer unmatched quality and provide a free full lifetime warranty and four year insurance coverage. The Campus Bookstore offers Jostens rings in a variety of styles and designs to suit students as well as alumni. No deposit is required on your order and Jostens rings will be available for pick up within 8 to 10 weeks. Do not miss your chance to save 10% on your perfect ring. Come see the Jostens representative this week.

Campus Bookstore • www.campusbookstore.com • Clark Hall

September 24-26

10% Off Jostens Rings During Alumni Weekend Ring Days

Campus Bookstore • Clark Hall • Weekdays 9-8, Saturday 10-8
www.campusbookstore.com • 545-2955
Owned and Operated by Students Since 1909

students!
club ck
 get a year's worth of savings with your club ck discount card!
 our downtown store is open 7 days a week
 Monday-Friday 9-9
 Saturday 9-5.30
 Sunday 11-5

.one hour photo .video .digital imaging
 .complete in-house photofinishing services
 .darkroom supplies .rentals .repairs
 .passport photos .used equipment .photo restoration

Camera Kingston
 photo source
 650 Bath@Gardiner's 114 Princess@Wellington
 384.3747 549.3747

Area will draw fans

Continued from page 1

world you can have beer at sporting events."

Many individuals associated with the Queen's Golden Gaels football team perceive the introduction of beer at home games as a positive initiative.

"This should make people's time at the game a little more enjoyable," predicted star tailback Paul Correale. "Maybe this will lessen the amount of people that come out to the stadium intoxicated."

"There is no real place for alumni to meet with people at the game. This will hopefully be a place for people to get together during half-time or during the game and catch up."

— Bob Howes, head football coach

Head football coach Bob Howes, who has been lobbying for this initiative for many years, perceives the existence of a hospitality area as a good way for people to socialize at football games. "There is no real place for alumni to meet with people at the game. This will hopefully be a place for people to get together during half-time or during the game and catch up," he said.

The introduction of the hospitality area is just one step in a larger campaign to make the football games more popular events.

"We need to get people in the gates and with improved concessions, better ticketing and easier access, along with beer being served, we can raise community awareness and draw some fans from the community," stated Jackson. "The more fans there are in the stands, the more gate revenue and sponsorship becomes available to the program," he said.

While for many this is a start, the fact that beer has to be consumed in the small area beyond the endzone does not sit well with some.

"I have been all around the O-QFC [Ontario-Quebec Intercollegiate Football Conference] and I've never seen students treated like three-year olds as they are at Queen's," said Gaels play-by-play broadcaster Nick Sinclair. "At Bishop's they sell cans of beer in the stands and they seem to have no problems."

"We are going to see if there is a sufficient need for business and we will observe if everyone acts in a civilized manner, which I am sure people will," explained McFarlane.

"This can be something for next year and can eventually become a tradition," said Armstrong. "It is up to students and alumni to act appropriately."

Regardless of what happens during the McGill game on Homecoming weekend, there will be a hospitality area during the next home game against the University of Ottawa Gee-Gees.

Gael offensive coordinator Steve Yovetich isn't worried. "The student constables and Kingston's finest will have no trouble handling every situation," said the former player. "Beer and football — it's a natural fit."

The AMS Board of Directors is hiring an

ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANT

for the 1998-99 year.

If you are interested in this flexible, part-time position, please contact Trevor Ogle, Board Chairman at 545-6000 ext. 4814 by Wednesday, Sept. 30, 1998.

The AMS Board of Directors is looking for

TWO MEMBERS-AT-LARGE

for its strategic planning committee.

If you are interested in corporate strategic planning, please contact Trevor Ogle, Board Chairman at 545-6000 ext. 4814, by Friday, October 2, 1998.

'No tolerance' policy

Continued from page 1

of Richardson Stadium. For this reason, Queen's Student Constables will be checking students as they enter and monitoring them while they are in the stands.

"There usually aren't any serious problems [at Homecoming games] — we patch people up and send them on their way."

— Jeff Coull, Queen's First Aid director

There will be no tolerance for possession of alcohol or illegal drugs, and projectiles will be confiscated.

The constables have been told to be on the lookout for people who arrive intoxicated, and entry may be denied, said Scott McCann, QSC manager. "We want to focus on everyone having a good time and if people are too intoxicated, they may ruin the fun for everyone else."

"We want to focus on everyone having a good time and if people are too intoxicated, they may ruin the fun for everyone else."

— Scott McCann, Queen's Student Constables manager

Campus Security and police officers will also be present at the Homecoming game. They will be patrolling around the track, maintaining radio contact with the student constables.

In the event that medical incidents occur, Queen's First Aid will be present. QFA Director Jeff Coull said "There usually aren't any serious problems [at Homecoming games] — we patch people up and send them on their way."

Coull said most accidents are alcohol-related and are usually minor, such as

"twisted ankles from when people rush the field [after the game]," he said.

Members from the Campus Observation Room will be accompanying QFA volunteers to the game to help fans who are overly intoxicated. Such fans will be removed from the stadium and sent to COR or to their homes.

A new attraction of Homecoming '98 is the hospitality area, where fans will be able to purchase alcohol.

"Everything will be on a larger scale, particularly the drinking as a result of the new beer garden at Richardson Stadium," said Coull.

Despite this, Sue Wager, campus security relations coordinator, expects the hospitality area will be run in a safe and responsible manner.

"The beer garden is not anticipated to be a problem safety wise. Since it's new, it is something that you have to experience before knowing what to expect. If respected, the beer garden will become a great attraction for future Homecoming football games," she continued.

Important numbers:
 Kingston Police: 549-4660
 Campus Security: 545-2552
 Detox Centre: 549-6461

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL READER AND FEATURES

short fiction

CONTEST

guidelines

up to 2,500 words
 any style of prose permitted
 open only to Queen's students

deadline

monday november 16

Watch The Journal for forthcoming information regarding judges and prizes. Three selected entries will be published in the November 27th Queen's Journal

submit your entries to:
 the journal short fiction contest
 545.2800
 272 Earl
 journal@post.queensu.ca

CLUBS NIGHT

SEPTEMBER 30TH
 &
 OCTOBER 1ST

GRANT HALL
 6 PM - 10 PM

The clubs are out there... X

Come dish the dirt

Come to a general contributors meeting on today at 5 p.m. in The Journal house at 272 Earl St., between Division and University Streets.

Kingston's One and Only Hard Rock Café

"Win Your Tuition" - a value up to $1500. Enter ballots now - draw to take place Thanksgiving weekend.

Sunday & Monday nights - open MIC with host Smitty.

Every night 6pm - 9pm
20¢ wings
(with the purchase of a beverage)

Fast Facts

In Here

Public council meeting

The Frontenac-Kingston Council on Aging is holding a grand jury meeting at Kingston City Hall on September 30 at 7 p.m. The subject of the question and answer session will be the recent cut-backs announced by the Community Care Access centre.

Ban Righ Centre open house

There will be an open house at the Ban Righ Centre at 32 Queen's Crescent tomorrow between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. Visitors can peruse the new student computer centre and the centre's expanding library of donated women's literature.

Take Back the Night

Women Take Back the Night 1998 will be held tonight, at Confederation Basin, across from City Hall, with a rally beginning at 6 p.m. and a march beginning at 6:30 p.m.

Out There

APEC troubles continue

Prime Minister Jean Chretien is under pressure to testify as to his instructions to the RCMP on how to deal with demonstrators at the APEC conference last fall. The RCMP pepper sprayed and arrested dozens of demonstrators to prevent them from being seen by the visiting heads of state. Documents show that the RCMP also gathered profiles on APEC demonstrators, including details on their political beliefs and sexuality. Other reports describe a six-person Indonesian commando unit being used as security for then-President Suharto. The unit breached several security rules during Suharto's stay, necessitating five of them being arrested at gunpoint by the RCMP. Chretien has yet to formally apologize for the incidents.

Clinton Testifies

The videotape of US President Bill Clinton testifying to a grand jury was broadcasted to millions of viewers on Monday, showing him to be defiant and evasive when questioned on the specifics of his affair with Monica Lewinsky. The four-hour videotape was released with over 3,000 pages of documents from independent counsel Kenneth Starr's investigation. Clinton's lawyers called into question the entire report, when it was learned that Starr did not include a statement from Lewinsky in which she denies having ever been told to lie, or being offered a job in exchange for her silence. Clinton's approval rating has risen from 61 to 68 per cent over the week, according to ABC News.

"Flo Jo" Passes Away

Triple gold medalist sprinter Florence Griffith Joyner died Tuesday, apparently of a heart seizure. The flamboyant American was 38.

Hurricane Georges hits Caribbean

A powerful Hurricane Georges devastated the northeast Caribbean on Monday, with winds of nearly 200 kilometres an hour. Thousands took shelter in Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands, where states of emergency were declared. Forecasts warn that the storm may hit Florida, and tourists were ordered to leave the southwestern Keys.

Fatwa on Rushdie may be lifted

The religious fatwa against author Salman Rushdie should be regarded as "completely finished," Iran's president said Tuesday, but observers reacted cautiously to the statement. It wasn't clear he meant the death threat issued years ago against the Satanic Verses author has really been lifted.

SCIENCE

McGwire's 'magic'

BY CRAIG MCKALL

THE INTERNATIONAL OLYMPIC COMMITTEE HAS declared war. The media has been scared into silence. The Americans simply do not care. So, what exactly is the drug Mark McGwire's been using over the past year and a half?

The top story in Major League Baseball for the 1998 season has been the home run race to beat Roger Maris's record of 61 home runs in one season. The favoured candidate to break the record, St. Louis Cardinal Mark McGwire, has admitted to using a "nutritional supplement" called androstenedione for the past year and a half.

This drug is allowed in Major League Baseball, but is a banned substance in the NFL, the NBA, the NCAA and the Olympics. Criticism of McGwire began to surface, and some even questioned the validity of his attempt to beat the record. A look at the characteristics of androstenedione may give us a better perspective on whether this criticism is valid.

Androstenedione is a steroid hormone that encourages the development of male sex characteristics. Androstenedione increases the testosterone level in the blood, resulting in increased energy, enhanced recovery and growth from exercise, greater sexual arousal and function, and an increased sense of well-being.

The capsule form of androstenedione is processed through the liver. There, a single enzyme alters the molecular structure of androstenedione, converting it directly into testosterone. A 50-mg capsule will increase

See Andro on page 13

When the pressure's on Queen's prof's work leaves peers 'stunned into silence'

BY ANGELA JAMES

GROUND-BREAKING RESEARCH AT Queen's may allow greater insight concerning the treatment of high blood pressure. Michael Adams, an associate professor with the department of pharmacology and toxicology, has been studying some puzzling aspects of ACE inhibitors, a family of drugs commonly prescribed for the treatment of hypertension.

Hypertension is a condition wherein blood pressure in the arteries is persistently elevated. When not effectively managed, hypertension increases susceptibility to stroke and congestive heart failure, as well as other dangerous ailments. Unfortunately, only one quarter of the individuals suffering from this disorder are receiving drug therapy that adequately controls the abnormally elevated blood pressure.

ACE inhibitors act to inhibit the formation of angiotensin, a hormone demonstrated to cause constriction of blood vessels, blood vessel thickening and changes in blood volume. By preventing the formation of this hormone, ACE inhibitors act to moderate resistance to blood flow, and therefore to treat hypertension.

The idea that kidney remodelling could account for the changes in arterial pressure carries implications for drug therapy.

Drug therapy for hypertension is typically carried out on a chronic basis over a lifetime. However, maintenance of arterial pressures below original hypertensive states have been noted following the discontinuation of ACE inhibitor usage. Though many speculations were advanced to explain this phenomenon, a conclusive explanation was lacking.

This is where Adams' research comes in. Much of his research in the development of hypertension has centered around the role of the kidney in creating this pathological state. To examine the possible contribution of the kidney in producing persistent ACE inhibitor effects, kidney transplants were performed between hypertensive untreated rats and hypertensive treated rats.

The rats were taken from a particular strain that possesses certain identifiable characteristics, including a genetically

See Kidneys on page 13

Science Spectrum

Science news from around the world and beyond

A game of GAT and mouse

Mice are breathing small sighs of relief and geneticists studying their development are cheering the advent of an imaging system developed by the Oak Ridge National Laboratory in Tennessee.

PHOTO COURTESY OF ORNL

The MicroGAT system is based on conventional GAT scanners, which use X-rays and sophisticated computer software to build three-dimensional images of the subject's internal structures.

The MicroGAT produces images of such high resolution, 10 times more detailed than conventional systems, that even the minute skeletal and soft-tissue structure of lab mice and other animals can be seen — without dissection.

That's not just good news for the mice. Because the animals are not sacrificed in the examination, the development of a physical trait can be monitored over time and the subjects can still be used for breeding.

MicroGAT could be used in the future in medicine, to screen women for breast cancer, and in industry, where X-ray images of precision parts are needed.

Toxic algal blooms may follow zebra mussels

Scientists at Michigan State University are studying a possible link between the invasion of zebra mussels in lakes and the bloom of blue-green algae that often follows. Microcystis, actually a photosynthetic bacterium, is one of the only things that zebra mussels won't filter out of lake water and eat. Because microcystis is left with virtually no competition for available resources, a brightly coloured bloom sometimes forms, looking like a slick of spilled paint. Microcystis can produce compounds toxic to native fish and other organisms — including people.

The MSU study will involve examining lakes known to contain zebra mussels, especially those where algal blooms have not occurred. A more aggressive phase of the study will take place next summer when enormous plastic bags, filled with varying concentrations of mussels, will be placed in previously invaded lakes to determine what effect on the microcystis population will result.

GEA

SATURDAY, OCT. 3

RASGALZ

ADVANCED TICKETS ON SALE NOW AT THE URS*

$8 IN ADVANCED $10 AT THE DOOR

Alfie's PUB

545-2003

UNDERGROUND FRIDAY

HOMECOMING

DOORS OPEN AT 4 PM

UNDERGROUND SATURDAY

KILL MC GILL

PRIE-GAME PARTY

DOORS OPEN AT 11 AM

HTTP://WWW.ALFIES.QUEENSU.CA/ALFIES

One week left!

The deadline for entries for the Miyagi Triangle contest is Friday, October 2nd at 12 noon. In case you missed it the first time, the solution to this puzzle is the relationship between the radii of the red circles on the left. Each circle is tangent to each of the sides of the triangle in which it is inscribed. A solution is possible for any right triangle, so put away your protractors. And good luck!

To Enter: By fax: 545-6728
By email: journal@post.queensu.ca
In person: The Journal House, 272 Earl Street

Win a $50 gift certificate to one of these stores!

the queen's journal reader and features

SHORT FICTION

contest

guidelines

2,500 words in length
any style of prose permitted
open only to queen's students

watch the journal for forthcoming information regarding judges and prizes. three selected entries will be published in the november 27th queen's journal

deadline

monday.november.16

submit your entries to

the journal short fiction contest
545.2800
272 Earl
journal@post.queensu.ca

Help us deliver

We're looking for reporters, writers, photographers and designers to join the journal team. If you have a flair for writing, an eye for a good shot, or a desire to get involved and have fun, come join us at 272 Earl Street, or call Laura,
Tara, or Keith at 545-2800.

You are cordially invited to a talk on

A LOGICAL PROOF OF THE EXISTENCE OF GOD

Causality, Composition, and the Origin of Existence

Presented by Dr. William Hatcher, author, philosopher and Professor of Mathematics, Laval University on Tuesday, Sept. 29th at 7:30 p.m. at Earl Hall/BioScience Centre, Rm. 1103.
The lecture is sponsored by the Campus Association for Baha'i
Studies, Queen's University.

Andro rules inconsistent Kidneys are the key

Continued from page 11

blood testosterone levels by 40 to 83 per cent above normal. A 100-mg tablet would raise these levels by 111 to 237 per cent.

The question of safety is a tricky one. The manufacturers of the drug state that the positive benefits can be gained without affecting normal testosterone production. However, no other possible health concerns are mentioned and no long-term studies have been conducted.

The jump in testosterone caused by androstenedione is only temporary. The testosterone level begins to rise after 15 minutes, peaks at one and a half hours and remains elevated for approximately three hours. The suggested dosage is one capsule per day, taken prior to physical activity.

One could take androstenedione in multiple doses throughout the day in an attempt to maintain a consistently higher level of testosterone. However, one's natural production of testosterone could be significantly depressed.

The use of androstenedione as a nutritional supplement does carry some negative side effects. Higher testosterone levels can result in acne, oily skin and gynecomastia, the development of breasts in males. The use of androstenedione by women is not recommended due to the effects of increasing male hormones in a female's body. Pregnant or lactating women and all those under age 18 should not use this supplement.

In the United States, androstenedione is legal for sale as a nutritional supplement, which means it is available over-the-counter on demand. In Canada, however, you need a prescription to purchase the supplement.

The origin of its usage in sports training came from the practices of the elite sport programs in East Germany during the 1980s. Currently, androstenedione is a popular "steroid alternative" for many

No other possible health concerns are mentioned and no long-term studies have been conducted.

athletes in the United States. At the current time, no study exists which examines the long-term effect of prolonged androstenedione use. A few unpublished studies have been or are currently being conducted by body-building or weight-training organizations. These primarily focus on the effectiveness of androstenedione compared to other substances in heavy training.

The issue of banned substances in sports involves more than simply evaluating the data. Whether a certain drug provides an unnatural boost to performance requires a moral judgment call on the definition of "unnatural." In the case of androstenedione, the Olympic committee has vehemently denounced the use of this drug, while Major League Baseball remains silently accepting. It is these opposing views that often leave fans wondering if they should cheer on McGwire or denounce him.

If nothing else, the publicity surrounding McGwire's use of androstenedione will provoke a healthy debate. Hopefully, this issue will raise the interest of scientists who might attempt to discover the effects of the prolonged usage of androstenedione on athletes.

Continued from page 11

based hypertension. Treatment of one sample of rats with ACE inhibitors occurred over ten weeks with another sample of rats not receiving drug therapy during this period. The treated group demonstrated significant decreases in arterial pressure whereas the untreated group remained hypertensive. Following the conclusion of the treatment, kidneys were transplanted between the sample groups, with these technically challenging surgeries being performed by Adams's research assistant, Cory Perry.

The results demonstrated a substantial role for the kidney in creating these continued ACE inhibitor associated effects. The arterial pressures obtained from the treated group following kidney transplantation from untreated animals actually mimicked the hypertensive pressures of the untreated animals. Conversely, the untreated groups instrumented with kidneys from the treated groups manifested the amelioration of blood pressure previously shown by treated animals. Since arterial pressures were determined by the treatment the kidneys received rather than by the treatment obtained by all other intact body systems, Adams concluded that the ACE inhibitors' hypertension attenuating actions predominantly included remodelling of the kidney.

"We've done some parallel studies showing the most accountable change is the structure of blood vessels — that they have decreased resistance to blood flow," said Adams.

The results of this study, presented at the International Conference of Hypertension in Amsterdam, were considered provocative. According to Adams, his peers at this conference were "stunned into silence" following lengthy attempts to challenge the protocols used for this study. The idea that kidney remodelling could account exclusively for the changes in arterial pressure seen in this model carries possible implications for further developments in drug therapy.

Michael Adams, Queen's researcher
PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

"It suggests that we need to have an understanding of how good a drug is at targeting the kidney... in terms of changing this structural basis for hypertension," said Adams.

Adams presents the discovery of novel drugs that can create permanent structural changes that attenuate hypertension is by as an attractive goal.

"A lot of these [current] drugs have side effects," he observed. "Removing risk forever would be still fantasy but something to work towards."

Stages

Monday Night Beach Slam '98

is there any better place to be?

THE PARTY CONTINUES!

FREE ADMISSION
TO THE MONDAY NIGHT BEACH SLAM TILL 11 with this pass!

SONY RECORDING ARTIST

MARIO MIXDOWN 98

LIVE!

WED. SEPT. 30

ADVANCE TICKETS $5

Indigo

STUDENT SUNDAY SALE

15% off all regular priced merchandise with your Queen's student card.

Sunday, September 27th
10 am to 8 pm.

There is always something happening at

Indigo
259 Princess Street 546-7650

Live Jazz every Friday Night from 9:00-10:30
Our Café is fully licensed to serve beer and wine
Kingston's Largest selection of Newspapers and Magazines
The finest selection of Classical, Pop, Blues and Jazz CD's in town
Save 30% all year around on our top 50 bestselling book titles

Walkhome Is Open!

8 p.m. - 2 a.m. Sun - Wed
8 p.m. - 3 a.m. Thurs - Sat

WALKHOME
545-2662

The AMS Walkhome service is provided free of charge to all students, staff and faculty of Queen's University in order to provide the option of being safely and comfortably accompanied while walking on campus and in the surrounding area.

So, if you would like a team to accompany you along your way, just give us a call!

Check out our webpage at <http://www.ams.queensu.ca/ams/walkhome/> to find out more about the Walkhome Service!

We would also like to thank our sponsors: Tardiff Communications for their radio support, and Cyclepath for our six Peugeot Bicycles!

Cyclepath
339 Princess St.
Kingston, Ontario K7L 1B7
542-3616

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

We didn't start the fire

MOST QUEEN'S ALUMNI would agree that over the years the Queen's Journal has not reflected one ideological bent or even maintained a consistent style of prose. In over a century of editorials, the Journal has espoused many contradictory beliefs and committed itself to countless controversial positions. While in hindsight many of the opinions expressed are striking, they also reveal how deeply life at Queen's has been transformed since the AMS began publishing The Journal in "Twelve Fortnightly numbers" in 1873. The following selections are intended to open a window into the Queen's community of the past, and demonstrate how the Journal perceived issues ranging from equality at Queen's to the cold war.

100 YEARS AGO...

One of the problems that forced itself upon the attention of those who took an active part in the recent campaign is the status of the lady students as regards the Alma Mater Society. (While) the solution would seem to lie in throwing open all our meetings to them... we hope the day is far distant when such a solution shall be applied.

While the solution would seem to lie in throwing open all our meetings to [women] we hope the day is far distant when such a solution shall be applied.

75 YEARS AGO...

It is, perhaps, not generally known that out of a relatively small enlistment, Queen's military units last year had more successful candidates in the examinations for officers' certificates than any other school in the British Empire... There are those who would fail to speak well of military training. Some may even be discovered among our own staff and students.

Bons Mots:

Subjects are the trouble — the dreary lack of them, I mean. Every day, it is drag, drag, drag — think, and worry and suffer — all the world is a dull blank, and yet the editorial columns must be filled.

— Mark Twain

50 YEARS AGO...

The same week that the board of governors of McGill proscribed political activity for members of its staff, students in a country founded by a university professor, Masaryk, were shot down for protesting against usurpation of freedom of the individual by a Communist government.

Those students had learned, as we are learning, the value and necessity of that freedom, of tolerance, of objectivity. They protested its destruction too late. This toleration... will be held a curse by those who lead us into the coming war.

30 YEARS AGO...

Golden Words has till now been a good presence on the Queen's campus. Why has it deserted its seriousness and relevance to be petty and incompetent? We strongly wish Golden Words a speedy and full recovery.

15 YEARS AGO...

The Board [of Trustees] seems to be little more than a rubber stamp, a group formal nod to decisions that have effectively already been made. The body that really pulls the strings of the Board and the campus is the Senate... Perhaps our efforts would be more productively spent in the long run by attempting to make changes at the Senate level.

LAST YEAR...

Students should remember that while the Senate meeting is important, the ultimate decision rests in the hands of the Board of Trustees who will meet on March 6 and 7. Last year, only a handful of students turned up for the Board's meeting. This year we should make sure the old white men sweat a little.

Watch your mouth

DURING MY FIRST YEAR AT Queen's, I was amazed by the amount of information students received about the blue light system, walkhome, and other various means to avoid sexual assault. I was amazed because everyone knows that it will never happen to them. Who are these people it happens to? Not me of course.

My beliefs about my safety and the safety of other females changed one day the summer after my first year. Returning from work in my hometown, I cut someone off while driving home. The driver of the other car followed me home, spit on my car, spit on me and in broad daylight in my driveway, pulled down his pants and told me to perform oral sex on him... while his mother, who was also in the car, held me from behind. It was after this event that I questioned my sense of security. An overwhelming feeling of vulnerability set in and lasted for many months.

It only takes one comment to throw off our entire sense of pride and confidence.

To counter this feeling of fear, I purposely walked home by myself last year from various locations in Kingston. I wanted to prove my life would not be dictated by disgusting males, whom I honestly believe are the minority. Eventually last year, my sense of safety began to return and I once again began to feel secure and comfortable.

Two weeks ago, however, when walking home by myself in the early morning, three guys stopped me and asked me for directions to a nearby street. After giving them directions, they proceeded to ask me where I lived. I refused and said, "I'm not going to tell you where I live." At this point one male turned around, put his hands on my shoulders and said, "Are you afraid we'll tape you?"

All males, but especially males in the ghetto, need to make a conscious effort to avoid screaming obscenities or making offensive jokes and comments to females while we are walking around campus and the ghetto. It doesn't take a lot of self-restraint to stop yourself from making an inappropriate comment or gesture. Although you may not get a good laugh from your male buddies, or a slap on the back for being a funny guy, you will be saving a female from feeling helpless, vulnerable and scared. It only takes one comment to throw off our entire sense of pride and confidence. Refraining from making these comments, whether it is sitting on your porch late at night, or coming home from a bar intoxicated with your buddies, will not necessarily make you a better person, but it will show that you're making a conscious effort to view females as your equals. I'm not demanding female equality on all levels from everyone. All I'm asking for is respect on our university campus and in the ghetto. These places are our home — and in our homes everyone should feel invulnerable.

Next time you feel you need to make any kind of offensive comment, remember that the female you're degrading could be your classmate, neighbour, or friend.

By SARAH CROSBIE

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF
Keith Gerein
Tara Manbridge
MANAGING EDITOR
Laura MacInnis
NEWS EDITOR
Fiona Stevenson
ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS
Shawn Brimley
Retee Huang
Vacant

EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
Paul Heiler
ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR
Stefan Murray
ASSISTANT ARTS EDITORS
Sarah Crosbie
Lilian Kim
FEATURES EDITOR
Sean Springer
OPINIONS EDITOR
Todd Jackson

SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Adam Kaminsky
ASSISTANT SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Robert MacNeil
MISC. EDITOR
Ken Butland
GRAPHICS EDITOR
Janice Chan
THE READER EDITOR
Jesse Craig Bellringer

SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT
John Bowman
SPECIAL PUBLICATIONS EDITORS
Elizabeth Frogley
Shandley McMurray
PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS
Alex Kronby
James Terjanian
WEB EDITOR
Marco Lui

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Kraft
SALES REPRESENTATIVES
Kari Brintnell
Andrew Cooke
Kristian Li
ADVERTISING MANAGER
Vacant
ADVERTISING DESIGNERS
Katherine Colbourn
Annie Ge
SYSTEMS MANAGER
Vacant

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Friday, September 25, 1998 • Issue 9 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.
Contents © 1998 by The Queen's Journal; all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Goss Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Gananoque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions.
Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year.
Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2H8
Telephone—editorial: 613-545-2800 advertising: 613-545-6711
Fax: 613-545-6728 Email: journal@post.queensu.ca
Internet: http://www.journal.queensu.ca
Circulation 9,000
Issue 9 will be published on Tuesday, September 29, 1998.

CONTRIBUTORS

WRITERS AND REPORTERS: Sarah Baumann, Robert De Bellefeuille, Tanya Foubert, Sean Gallivan, Ryan M. Hoffman, Angela James, Calvin Lam, Jocelyn Laporte, Julietta Loefler, Craig McKell, Jennifer Morrison, Nathan Sager, Eli Schuster, Nick Sinclair, Rebecca Steller, Rebekke Vilanova, Jim Whitnigton, Anna Maria Wilson, Tyler Wilson.
PHOTOGRAPHERS: Sue Holland, Jill Offenbeck, Sean Richmond

OPINIONS

Insensitivity is reality

BEING A MEMBER OF A MINORITY group, I have always been sensitive to the many forms of discrimination that plague our society. Queen's University is renowned for its members' diversity, so I was not surprised when one of my floor's pre-fresh week activities included a discussion on the finer points of political correctness.

It was during this discussion that the term "heterosexism" was introduced to me. Heterosexism was roughly defined as any interaction that presupposes a heterosexual orientation, in other words, whenever people assume that a person is straight. Heterosexist behaviour supposedly demonstrates how our culture is biased against gays at a fundamental level, and that moving our society towards the goal of acceptance and tolerance will require changes in the basic ways that we interact with one another.

The politically correct community is venturing to help every minority group feel more socially included. This enormous undertaking has clearly well founded motives, but a methodology that is highly misconstrued. When a straight person asks a gay man if he has a girlfriend, and the gay man feels uncomfortable answering truthfully, why is the straight person being "insensitive"?

Why does the politically correct movement harp on the interactions of otherwise tolerant people when there are still plenty of people that wait outside gay bars looking for someone to assault? Heterosexism is absurd because the

The gay rights movement has seriously fouled up their own progress by introducing the word "heterosexism." The whole idea of heterosexism ensures that gay people will never change the actual opinions of the majority, because they never have to lock horns with the issue, but will simply focus on semantics. This is a futile effort: changing people's opinions via their vocabulary.

When people ask me what I am doing for Christmas, I say, "I don't celebrate Christmas. I'm Jewish." It's that easy! And when there's an awkward pause in the conversation, and then the person says, "So, what are you doing for Jewish Christmas?" I would never consider shouting, "Help I'm being persecuted by the ignorant majority!"

While we are in the business of appending the English language, I will venture to introduce a new word, in hope of making our society more tolerant. The word is

"atachicism" and it means: "persecuting an individual based solely on his archaic language orientation." The entire politically correct community is guilty of archaicism, prejudging individuals based on their lack of linguistic acquiescence with not a shred of contemplation about what is actually being said. If the archaicists have their way, one day there will be neo-Nazis saying, "I would really like to physically disable a person of color, perhaps beat her or him over the head." As if changing our language will make the slightest difference in our overall level of tolerance.

RYAN M. HOFFMAN
ARTS '02

Letters to the Editors

Don't scare the skunks

Dear Editors,

Anyone who meets up with a skunk and screams in its' face and then starts running is just asking to get sprayed. First of all, if the skunk doesn't see you first you should talk in a normal voice and make your presence known, do not make any sudden movements. Chances are that skunk will be out of your way faster than you can run. The suggestions in the Friday Sept. 18 Journal (repair holes in porches, don't leave garbage around, etc.) are very good. They will probably still check out your place every night because you are on their 'route' but they'll be on their way as soon as they find out there is nothing there for them. Beware that a few hours later they may come back — on their route home. Relax, they aren't going to kill you, they are peaceful little things.

J.G. PHILLIPS
KINGSTON RESIDENT

Feature shows immaturity

Dear Editors,

When I picked up my free copy of The Queen's Journal in the dining hall this morning, I expected to be entertained, informed, and taught, but I certainly did not anticipate having my intelligence and maturity insulted.

In regards to the article appearing in the features section entitled, "Baby Bloom", I am quite annoyed, for several reasons. The first being a statement made by the author, upon learning that she was pregnant. "... My body had been hijacked by something beyond my control... the pregnancy had progressed to a stage where abortion was not an option." Does the author actually believe that when her son reads this article in twenty years, he is going to get a warm and fuzzy feeling from these phrases? Will he blame himself for "hijacking" his mother and being discovered too late to be aborted? Lovely message, dear author, for your first-born.

Using such grossly insulting terms as 'tits' and 'boobs' is not only a display of a lack of education, it is a sign of immaturity

My second source of annoyance is the fact that the majority of the article deals with the author's breasts — how they changed during and after pregnancy, and the author's woes in dealing with these "burdens." If I ever become pregnant, I sincerely doubt that my largest concern will be the embarrassment of leaking milk while at the bar.

Not to make judgement on the author's apparently thriving social life, but can it be considered exceedingly motal to use one's milk-enlarged breasts to tease and tantalize males? By the way, is there a mention of a - gasp - father in this article? I think not.

I am glad the author has found happiness with her body — that is essential for anyone's peace of mind — but perhaps she should have shifted the focus of the article to this point instead of the aforementioned rantings and ravings about her breasts. Her two-paragraph summation could easily have made an informative commentary on self-image.

However, if the article was faulted merely by these points, it would have been somewhat acceptable. The extreme outrageousness lies in her vocabulary. Using such grossly insulting terms as 'tits' and 'boobs' is not only a display of a lack of education, it is a sign of immaturity. Recall the saying, "You're only ready to have sex if you can talk about it openly and honestly?" Well, perhaps that maxim can extend to say, "You're only ready to become pregnant if you can discuss your body parts using the proper terminology."

I find this vocabulary offensive, obviously, and I am stunned that the editors of "The Queen's Journal" — a UNIVERSITY paper — would allow such words to be published. Please review more carefully next time before printing anything slightly resembling this article.

Sincerely,

KATIE EDWARDS
ARTS '02

Continued on next page

talking

HEADS

Why should Queen's kill McGill?

"Because we're better and we'll always be better."
MELANIE ADAMS
ARTSCI '01 PATRICK SMITH
ARTSCI '01

"Beer Tent"
J.D. KELLY
SCI '00 SHAWN BRAOY
PT '99

"Because engineers go crazy"
JOHN ADERSON
SCI '02

"It's another reason to party!"
GINNY CLARK
ARTS '00

PHOTOS BY SUE HOLLAND

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS POLICY

The Editors of The Journal want to hear from readers. All letters must include the writer's name, signature, and telephone number. Letters that are legible, legal, literate and held to under 400 words will be published if space permits. The deadline for Tuesday's issue is Sunday at noon. The deadline for Friday's issue is Wednesday at noon. Drop off letters to The Journal House, 272 Earl St., fax to 545-6728, or better yet, e-mail them to journal@post.queensu.ca.

Continued from page 15

ResTel Headaches

Dear Editors,

I have couple of tall tales to relay to you regarding the "Oh so wonderful ResTel system" that was implemented or should I say inflicted on the students by Queen's Residences. I had been told by the Residence Business Office that my ResTel phone would be fully functional (this included long distance service) when I arrived on August 25. Upon my arrival there was no phone in my room (fortunately I had brought my own and the phone appeared the next day), and I could not even make a long distance or collect phone call home to pass on my phone number to my family and friends. In the information package that we were given to read (I did not get a copy but I have read other's) it informed the students that we could choose our long distance carrier. This was not true, all ResTel lines were automatically signed up for ACC. Many of the early arrivals wanted the Bell Canada First Rate plan with the $20.00 maximum but because of the arrangement with ACC (a certain percentage of money collected by ACC from Queen's students and Alumni is given back to the university) and the vast number of extensions that were implemented it was impossible to get the Bell plan. Then ACC got the hint, probably because of the pressure from the students, and set up a $20.00 maximum plan.

I however, got fed up with the ResTel bill after 10 minutes and activated the Bell jack in my room. I still am unable to contact people who are in residence between 6 p.m. and 10 p.m. because of the flood of calls. I have already been told by Bruce Griffiths of the Business Office that I won't be compensated for my added expense.

As for the safety of the students travelling from West Campus to Main at night or vice versa, there use to be lift phones for the taxi companies by the front doors of each residence. They have been removed and their phone numbers are posted on the ResTel phone between the front doors. My question to the Director of Residences is: "What good is this phone if you can not get through to the taxi company?". I think that it would be a good idea to reinstall the lift phones for the taxi companies, this way every student would be able to get back to their residence safely, or to their destination in case of emergency. Does someone have to get hurt before the lift phones are reinstalled?

This phone system was a good idea but there was obviously not enough thought put into its implementation. The people behind this system should have overestimated this system's use rather underestimated it. For the students inconvenience I think that it would be beneficial to Queen's Residences image to refund a portion of the fee for the phone service.

LAURA BAILEY
B.ED '99

MISC was only a joke

Dear Editors,

Last week two friends brought an interesting article to my attention.

Letter to the Editors

Entitled "They're Lying To You Frosh," it was a MISC article from The Journal which, for the most part, poked fun at the engineers. We all had a good laugh and decided to let a couple of engineering friends have a read. Big mistake. Within seconds both engineers had been transformed from typically wild, uninhibited pseudofreecs into sullen critics bent on disproving the veracity of each and every statement which they deemed offensive.

But to not understand that such stereotypes are made in jest shows an unhealthy excess of self-induced superiority.

Shortly after, there ensued a string of arguments as to why the article was, in so many words, crap. I found this very dis appointing. It wasn't that their arguments were ill-founded, in fact some of them were well constructed and seemed valid. What disappointed me was the way in which these two engineers were reacting. An article had made them the butt-end of a tasteful insult and they couldn't take it. In the end, one of the engineers promised to write a scathing rebuttal.

Any rebuttal made to that article only weakens the ludicrous position that these engineers (and others that feel the same) are taking. Let me assure you, it will be an easy task to rebut the article. Rebutting such stereotypes is remarkably easy these days and it requires only rudimentary skills in arguing. I am sure that there are several great arguments which disprove the widely held belief that all film students are dressed in black and are "running around with cameras and talking about the aesthetic value of existentialism." But to not understand that such stereotypes are made in jest shows an unhealthy excess of self-induced superiority.

Maybe some engineers are angered by the accusation that they are unable to spell beer. Obviously, that is a false statement. It is about as accurate as the belief that all engineers will get high-paying jobs when they graduate (yes, that too is a lie). We all know the engineers can spell, for how else would they be able to generate charming free group titles such as "Snatch Dragons" and "2nd Cumming?" Or possibly the engineers feel that such an article may dishearten those young impressionable engineer frosh. I say maybe a little reality is okay — young Napoleons who have at least heard of Waterloo.

Engineers, where has all your outrageous humour gone? The "offensive" article is merely another part of the friendly (and sometimes not so friendly) bantering that goes on between ALL faculties. Everybody gets a slap in the face and it seems that, while faculties may (quite understandably) object to the stereotyping, they build some tolerance and learn that is an inevitable and enjoyable part of Queen's life. As a member of ArtsSci, a faculty which does have tolerance for these sorts of jobs, all that I can recommend to those disgruntled engineers who cannot accept that such things flow both ways is this: live with it and learn to take that which you dish out.

MAXWELL YOUNG
ARTS '02

SPORTS & FITNESS

The Peanut Gallery

ALL GOOD THINGS COME TO AN END

After going to work for 2,632 consecutive days, Baltimore Oriole iron man Cal Ripken walked into manager Ray Millar's office and said "I think the time is right." When the game started, Ripken was granted the ultimate complement when the entire New York Yankees team emerged on the top step of the dugout and tipped their cap to the classy third baseman. The fans at Camden Yards rewarded him with a lengthy standing ovation and would not sit down until he exited the dugout for a curtain call. Many said that Lou Gehrig's consecutive game record would never be broken, only to see it smashed by Ripken. This number will last for a very long time.

88 OLYMPICS REVISITED

Florence Griffith-Joyner, one of the most vibrant and successful track athletes in history, died in her sleep this weekend. Joyner, who holds the world record in the 100-metre and 200-metre dash and won three gold medals at the '88 Olympic Games, has had a history of heart problems. While some controversy continues to simmer over her alleged use of drugs, the other 100 metre winner in the '88 games, Ben Johnson, continues in his attempts to be reinstated, which was recently dismissed. Ben, your time has come and nobody cares about you any more, give up.

ONE BAD DAY

San Diego Chargers rookie quarterback Ryan Leaf, who was the second selection in the NFL draft, had a day to forget on Sunday. Visiting the hostile environment of Arrowhead Stadium, the home of the Kansas City Chiefs, Leaf completed one of 15 passes for a total of 4 yards. In the 23-7 loss he also fumbled four times and threw two interceptions. To add to his problems, he was videotaped in the locker room following the game acting like a baby while verbally accosting a reporter with a profanity-laced tirade. He is going to have to learn to have poise in the pocket, as well as when dealing with the media, to succeed in the NFL.

IF CHRISTMAS CAME EARLY

*Viking receiver Randy Moss would score against every team that skipped him in the entry draft.
*Queen's students would enjoy a beer in the stands at Richardson Stadium.
*Baseball's 1998 season would be remembered as much for the end of Ripken's streak as it is for the home run race.

Ready to 'kill'

By ADAM KAMINSKY

Homecoming, Kill McGill and a game with playoff implications all during one weekend — does it get any bigger than this?

In the topsy turvy Ontario-Quebec Interuniversity Football Conference, every game means a lot, and this chapter of the Queen's-McGill rivalry is no different. With the two teams in a log-jam near the top of the conference ledger, this game will help dictate who is on their way to the top of the chart and who is merely looking to make the playoffs.

The McGill Redmen (2-1) have started the season in extremely inconsistent fashion. After defeating the defending conference champion University of Ottawa Gee-Gees in the first game of the season 24-17 at Percival Molson Stadium, they were shellacked 29-2 by Laval on the road. While they were able to rebound against cross-town rival Concordia, 9-4 in a Shrine Bowl sleeper, statistically this team hasn't been impressive. Offensively, they rank last in passing yardage, second last in rushing yardage and last in total yards per game.

"They [McGill] have a few new things on offense," explained Gaels coach Bob Howes. "It seems to be taking a while to work things out."

Despite the poor offensive output, McGill still features running back Shaun Linden (4th in O-QFC in rushing), who has run all over the Gaels in the past.

"We expect Linden to run the ball, catch the ball, punt the ball and even throw the ball," said defensive coordinator Bob Mullen. "The only player that will touch the ball more than him is the center," he joked.

All kidding aside, the coaching staff says that the best way to stop the Redmen attack is to keep Linden under raps.

"Up in Laval, McGill fell behind early and couldn't throw to get back in the game... we need to force them to pass," explained Mullen.

On the defensive side of the ball McGill has had a little more

O-QFC FOOTBALL	G	W	L	T	P
Ottawa	2	1	1	0	4
Laval	2	1	1	0	4
McGill	2	1	0	1	4
Queen's	2	1	1	0	2
Concordia	2	1	1	0	2
Carleton	1	0	3	0	2

Gaels take a breather while preparing for the McGill Redmen. PHOTO BY SEAN RICHMOND

Please see Playoff on page 18

Finding a motive to move

By JULIETTA LOEFFLER

The biggest problem that both new and experienced exercisers have is to motivate themselves to start and keep moving. Once you have made up your mind to exercise, you still have to overcome the biggest barrier. The barrier of motivating yourself to get started, to keep focused and stay consistent.

Although motivation comes from within an individual, there are many ways to boost one's motivation and create a pleasurable experience. Eventually physical activity will become second nature and you will not think twice about working up a good sweat.

A useful motivational tool is a personal journal. In it, you can record the day you exercise, what activity you participated in and for how long. You should write down one sentence on how you felt before and after your workout. This will help you see the improvements in your mood and other mental benefits. This sentence will help you keep track of your progress.

A number does not define who you are and how you feel — only you can do that for yourself.

Progress is the key to staying motivated. It is easy to see improvements in your overall health, your level of physical activity and your mental well-being if you set goals. First set a long-term goal (running for 40 minutes), then break the long term goal into many short term goals (run 10 minutes in 2 weeks, 15 in 4 weeks, 20 in 6 weeks and so on). This goal setting is useful for weight training, building aerobic capacity and improving self-esteem.

Many people make weight loss their long-term goal. Rather than focusing on an ideal weight as a goal, it would be better to concentrate on how you feel. By using weight as a way to measure progress, you may never see a noticeable difference. A number does not define who you are and how you feel — only you can do that for yourself.

Exercising with a partner is extremely helpful in staying motivated. It is easier to stick to a schedule if you know that by not working out you may letting someone down. Partners can help you stick to a workout time and make you push harder while engaging in physical activity. They are also great people to talk to while exercising and they reduce your chances getting bored while exercising.

Whenever you reach a goal or have stuck to your exercise plan for a set amount of time, give yourself a treat. Buy a new magazine to read while exercising, a new shirt to go to the gym in, allow yourself full day in bed, a phone call with a friend you have not talked with in ages, whatever your heart desires. As long as it is something which makes you happy and keeps you wanting to go back to the gym for more.

The best part about participating in physical activity is the fun that you can have doing it. The key is looking for activities which you really enjoy. For example, basketball, volleyball or football. Or try something completely different, such as rock climbing. Everyone has what it takes to make physical activity part of his or her life, and you do too.

Women's rugby off to rough start

By CALVIN LAM

The Queen's women's rugby team opened the 1998 season winless in their first two attempts. After squeaking out a last minute 15-15 tie against arch-rivals Toronto on Thursday, the Golden Gaels were

Queen's	15	Toronto	15
Queen's	12	Western	34

miss the convert, both teams moved the ball up and down the field well but neither side was able to score. At the end of half, the Blues were nursing a 5-0 lead.

In the second half, the Gaels came out firing on all cylinders but still could not penetrate the bigger and stronger Blues' defence. Despite mounting several impressive attacks bringing them within striking distance of the Toronto goal line, the Gaels failed to capitalize on numerous opportunities. Instead, it was Queen's who suffered a defensive collapse, allowing Toronto another try. The 10-0 deficit appeared to be the wake-up call the Gaels needed. They responded with some solid passing and excellent ball control to allow rookie Dara Parker, a first year English student, to punch it in from a few yards out, putting Queen's on the board. Toronto answered quickly with another try putting them back up by 10 late in the second half.

Defeat seemed inevitable for Queen's, but the Gaels caught a break when Toronto botched a kick while trying to clear their

Please see Gaels on page 19

Ink in the Blood?

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

Is Hiring

Opinions Page Editor
We're in search of an energetic and self-motivated person to edit the Opinions section of The Journal — the only section dedicated entirely to voicing the thoughts, feelings and commentary of members of the Queen's community.

Advertising Designers
We're looking for creative and artistic people with an interest in advertising and layout. Experience with computers an asset.

Computer Systems Manager
Have expertise in networking and systems? Want to earn money on an on-call basis? We need help. Call us. NOW.

Assistant News Editor
We're looking for an enthusiastic and self-motivated person with same free time and an ear to the ground. Writing experience is definitely a plus.

Journal House Cleaner
We're looking for someone to clean The Journal house on a weekly basis.

Interested? Call 545-2800, drop by The Journal House at 272 Earl Street, or e-mail us at journal@post.queensu.ca
APPLICATIONS FOR OPINIONS EDITOR DUE OCT. 2, ALL OTHERS DUE TODAY AT 4 P.M.

Playoff preview?

Continued from page 17

success, but still rank fifth (out of seven) in all major statistical categories. This may not be a reflection of their talent on that side of the ball, as the Gaels offensive braintrust respect the unit.

"The defensive unit is big and good," said offensive coordinator Steve Yovench. "It has a bit more speed than usual, so we must come up with a big pass play to open up the run."

The McGill defence is once again led by veteran J.P. Darche, who was the most recent conference defensive player of the week. The All-Canadian linebacker leads the conference in tackles, and has even seen some action on offense as a 'Jumbo' Fullback. The defensive line returns strong with veterans Randy Chevrier and Audrey Wellington, who are complemented in the defensive secondary by Sal Brohi, who shares the career record for interceptions at McGill (13 picks) with Vince Colizza.

Queen's comes into the game on the heels of two consecutive losses, granted one was in last Saturday's exhibition game against the University of Alberta Golden Bears.

The Gaels also face tough decisions on the offensive line because veteran Rob Chalmers, who injured his knee against Bishop's, is out for at least another 2-4 weeks. Lee O'Neill will take over his offensive guard position, while huge rookie Chris Chesney will man the tackle position. With fellow rookie and Kingston native Jon Landon on the other side, that leaves the Gaels with two rookie offensive tackles.

"Both of these tackles have played well, they do not play like first year players," responded coach Howes to any question of the youngsters' abilities.

It is up to this revamped offensive line to open up holes for the Queen's running game, which ranks second in the conference. Statistically, the passing game looks good, ranking third in the conference, but in reality, it seems to have yet to hit on all cylinders. The emergence of receivers and Kingston natives Jason Wimmer and Paul Dirinaldo has been a pleasant surprise, but quarterbacks Beau Howes and Dustin Falscheer still have to find consistency in the air attack.

"It [McGill defence] has a bit more speed than usual, so we must come up with a big pass play to open up the run."

— Gaels offensive coordinator Steve Yovench

Defensively, the team has to stop the run more effectively, as they rank sixth in that category. The return of veteran defensive lineman Conrad Czeczak from injury will help shore up the front seven and allow coach Mullen to go to a five man front. The defensive secondary continues to play well, with veteran Max Turner making big plays in every game.

While the McGill Redmen come into this game with a reasonable record, they are simply not that good. They have been finding ways to win, but that will not be the case when they play at Richardson Stadium on Homecoming weekend. This will be an entertaining game with the McGill defence putting up a fight, but it will end with a very large oil thigh at mid-field.

Editor's Prediction — Gaels by a touchdown.

Foran national athlete of the week

ATHLETE PROFILE

By NATHAN SAGER

A drastic shift in the balance of power in the world of OUA women's soccer transpired in the nation's capital when the Queen's Golden Gaels defeated the powerhouse Ottawa Gee-Gees. In the midst of a spirited overall effort by the rising Gaels force, who are now a perfect 3-0 on the season, was goalkeeper Amanda Foran. Her shutout netminding earned her OUA and CIAU athlete of the week honours.

"Goalkeepers have to have a certain personality," explained Queen's head coach Dave McDowell when praising his netminder, who has flourished in the wake of the challenge put before her at the dawn of this season. "Amanda's very confident... We've been trying to get her to play wheel out in front of her net... promoting her play more balls with her feet, and be more vocal on the field."

"In some ways, [goalkeepers] have to be more explosive. It requires great aerobic and anaerobic capacity and takes a lot of endurance. If it helps me, that'll help the team."

— CIAU Athlete of the week Amanda Foran

Suffice it to say, Foran has thus far lived up to expectations, yielding but two goals through three games. This has been due in part, to her zealous approach to practice. McDowell is especially impressed by Foran's insistence on participating in conditioning drills which are customarily not mandatory for goalkeepers. "She's really vocal in keeping her teammates going during the last few wind sprints, helping us meet team goals," he said.

A second-year Phys-Ed student from Ottawa, Foran is modest about such compliments. "We're all in this together," she pointed out, shunning the notion her position is less physically taxing than others. "Goalkeepers need to be as fit as anyone else," she added. "In some ways, you have to be more explosive. It requires great aerobic and anaerobic capacity and takes a lot of endurance. If it helps me, that'll help the team."

Foran originally found her soccer calling in her early teens when pressed into action while toiling for a club team. "It's only over the last few years I've really begun to enjoy playing goalkeeper. It really depends on how much experience you have, how strong your judgment and decision making (abilities) are," she said.

Suffice it to say, Foran has thus far lived up to expectations, yielding but two goals through three games.

Called upon to bring a more verbal presence to the pitch, Foran has relished the opportunity. "By being vocal and being closer to the action, calling out to our forwards, I'm better able to keep myself in the game." Her steadfast focus has come in handy when her teammates allow their goalkeeper precious few shots to handle. Despite periodic bouts of inactivity, Foran has managed, in McDowell's estimation, to register at least one spectacular save per game.

Foran attributes her stellar performance to the camaraderie and familiarity amongst her teammates. "We just simply have great chemistry," she commented. Another aid has been the prodding provided by a talented understudy, rookie Laura Gibson. "We both push each other," remarked Foran. "Both of us will only become better because of the friendly rivalry we have."

One of Foran's off-season activities has inevitably become fodder for contrasts with the position she plays for Queen's. The goalie spent this past summer battling forest fires in northern Ontario. "I have very eclectic interests, and I like to try different things," she commented. "It was an exciting opportunity... you don't often get to ride in helicopters."

In the game

What Queen's athletes are doing

Men's soccer

The squad travelled up North to take on Nipissing and Laurentian. The Gaels defeated Nipissing by a score of 4-1 in North Bay. They continued on their northern trek to Sudbury, where they were handed a 3-1 loss at the hands of Laurentian. Mike Cowan netted the lone Queen's goal.

On Wednesday, the Gaels hosted Trent and demolished them 6-0 on hat tricks by both Eugenio Bernier and Mike Cowan.

Women's tennis

The team travelled down to play the University of Toronto, which they squeaked by with a four matches to three victory. They then crushed Laurier by a final score of six matches to one.

Men's tennis

At the R.M.C. tennis courts, Queen's started out well by defeating Western five matches to two and then smashing York University four matches to two.

Women's soccer

The team pummeled Trent University 5-1 at Richardson Stadium on Wednesday night. Angie Crockford tallied the hat trick, while Jill Kirching pitched in with two goals of her own. The team is now 4-0 and lead the OUA east division standings.

Queen's ends streak

By ADAM KAMINSKY

The aura of invincibility surrounding the University of Ottawa Gee-Gees women's soccer team was severely diminished this past Sunday.

The Queen's Golden Gaels travelled to Ottawa and handed the national finalist their first regular-season loss in three years, 1-0.

Queen's	1
Ottawa	0

The Gaels came into the game with a 2-0 record after defeating the University of Toronto and York at home, but this was the first real test faced by the team.

"We played well in spells, but we really settled down after a while," said coach Dave McDowell.

After a scoreless first-half, in which the smallest field kept all the players very tight and put a premium on one-on-one play, the Gaels emerged with fire in the second session and scored in the 11th minute.

The goal came off the foot of Angie Crockford who hustled to get into the play and take a cross from Laura Sheatet, which the mid-fielder deposited in the net from a sharp angle.

The rest of the game was played fairly evenly up until the last three minutes, when OUA and CIAU athlete of the week, goalie Amanda Foran really shone.

"[Foran] played well all game, but she made a full body stretch save with about two minutes left to keep the lead," described McDowell.

"There was more to this win than simply the three points.

"It has been over three years since we actually beat them, in terms of a mental block, the girls feel very good beating [the Gee-Gees]," explained the coach.

This win was particularly impressive since all-Canadian Judith Irepanier was out for the game.

"We are ecstatic about our start, getting nine points against top teams. We are now hoping to be able to nurse our injured players back to health for the end of the season," said McDowell.

This win puts the Gaels in first place in the division, but they will be playing these same Gee-Gees over Thanksgiving weekend.

This Alumni Weekend they will be very busy, taking on the Gaels' alumni, many of whom will be from the 1998 National Championship team, on Saturday. On Sunday, the women will play at 3 p.m. against Ryerson in a regular season game.

A try is scored while defenders helplessly look on during women's rugby play. PHOTO BY TIM GILLESPIE

Gaels outclassed

Continued from page 17

zone. This led to Queen's second try and closed a once seemingly insurmountable lead. Minutes later, the girls rushed down the field and it was Parker again who scored off a scrum and knotted the game at 15. It was an excellent day for Parker who was the primary driving force behind Queen's offense all day with two tries. The Gaels had a chance to win the game on the convert but failed to do so, leaving them 0 for 3 on converts for the afternoon. Nevertheless, when the final whistle blew, head coach Peter Reed was visibly pleased and explained, "I'm extremely relieved. Our first half was filled with pre-game jitters, but we showed a lot of character and heart in the second half to earn this tie."

Character and heart were not nearly enough on Sunday, as the Gaels were simply outplayed and outclassed by the powerful Western Mustangs. The Mustangs dominated on both sides of the ball, pouncing on several Queen's mistakes and quickly turned them into points. At half-time, the 18-0 lead served as testament to Western's reputation as one of the top teams in the province. Although Queen's played a much better second half with tries from Erin Rees and Amanda Huzarski and a convert by Beth Barz, it was too little, too late.

Despite the defeat, many of the women felt that a lot of positives could be taken from the game. Forwards Captain Kendra Court, a third year Phys-Ed student, felt that "the score was not indicative of the way we played. We worked hard and were all over the field today and I thought we played a great game." Even though the Gaels started slowly, hooker Alison Noble emphasized that the team "picked up our in the second [half]. We just need to maintain the same level of intensity throughout [the] entire game."

Assistant Coach Chris Ruskay also put the loss into perspective. "We're still a very young team with a lot of rookies. We have a tremendous amount of athletic talent on this team and I think that we're just lacking in experience," he said. The Gaels will have this week off before travelling to St. Catharines on Saturday in search of their first victory against Brock.

Expos' fans seeing red over stadium

From the Bleachers:

Over the last two decades, few organizations in Major League Baseball have developed talented players in as prodigious a fashion as the Montreal Expos. Yet weeks after putting the finishing touches on a five year contract with Vladimir Guerrero, perhaps the greatest gem the Expos have ever laid their hands on, the team's future seems as tenuous as ever. At the heart of the matter is the ball club's ongoing effort to raise funds for a new downtown stadium. Essentially the plan calls for $100 million of the project's $250 million cost to be raised through the sale of seat licenses. While team President and minority owner Claude Brochu has steadfastly maintained that he does not expect any level of government to write the Expos a blank cheque, the team expects that somehow, some way, public officials will provide the additional $150 million.

Ask Rusty Staub or Gary Carter if Montrealers want baseball. Both played elsewhere and said fondly that they had the time of their lives in Montreal.

The seat-license campaign has been less than fruitful. Notwithstanding, it has become abundantly clear throughout this messy process that the group least responsible for the current state of affairs is the ball club's fans. It is indeed true that attendance numbers in Montreal have rarely been anything to write home about, but considering the Expos' utter lack of any semblance of direction over the last decade, it is a wonder that the team still draws a handful of live, breathing people to Olympic Stadium. Consider that not one team in big league North American sports, save for the expansion Devil Rays and Diamondbacks, has failed to make it to the post-season since the Montreal Expos' last appearance in 1981. While the ball club has been remarkably consistent in its ability to stay competitive, management has been equally consistent in refusing to do what is necessary to leap over that last hurdle and into the playoffs. It is certainly understandable that an organization like the Expos, with negligible broadcasting revenues, has shied away from starting any season in the nineties with a large payroll. However, what cannot be forgiven is the fact that, in a business where forging a trustworthy relationship with one's customers is of paramount importance, Brochu and the current owners have never once made a mid-season trade to secure an established, big-name ballplayer. While their inter-league rivals in Toronto have acquired the likes of David Cone (1992) and Rickey Henderson (1993) to bolster their chances of reaching the post-season, the Expos actually tried to dump Dennis Martinez before realizing they were in the pennant race in 1993, and settled for the mighty Mark (not Al) Leiter in 1996.

Now the group of owners, a consortium consisting of powerful and well-heeled corporations such as Nesbitt Burns and the Quebec supermarket giant Provigo, expects a new stadium to be erected without investing a loonie of their own. Certainly they are correct in pointing out that American teams succeeded in similar heists. One need only look at the city of Baltimore's unrelenting aggressiveness in pursuing the Cleveland Browns (the city actually paid Art Modell a "transfer" fee on top of building him a new football-only facility). A few pages of this newspaper would be necessary to detail the many other instances in which U.S. based sports franchises have held a gun to the head of a local government and gotten exactly what they wanted. Nonetheless, to put matters as simply as possible, just because it happens in America does not make it acceptable in Canada.

Certainly one can come up with very sound arguments for public contributions to sports facilities. After all, stadiums and arenas can become part of a city's cultural fabric. The teams that play in them, while not public goods in a purely economic sense, often become institutions; just look at Montreal's other major sports franchise. Consequently, one suspects that most reasonable Montrealers would be able to digest a scheme that saw Brochu raising $100 million from his fellow owners, perhaps $75 million from the club's beleaguered fans, and then going to City Hall and the federal/provincial legislatures for the balance. But in offering no contribution of their own, while flatly demanding $150 million in government funds, and $100 million from sports' worst-treated fans, the Expos' owners have committed the unconscionable.

In a business where forging a trustworthy relationship with one's customers is of paramount importance, Brochu and the current owners have never once made a mid-season trade to secure an established, big-name ballplayer.

Ever since the ultimatum — build the park or we're gone — was issued, there have been those who have pointed to the fans as the critical component in the equation. Either they want baseball or they don't, people say. Ask Rusty Staub or Gary Carter if Montrealers want baseball. Both played elsewhere and said fondly that they had the time of their lives in Montreal. Better yet, ask Jackie Robinson whose professional baseball career began in the city that his wife still says is the only place where he was ever truly accepted. So Expos' fans haven't exactly jumped for joy about the idea of financing a stadium by buying seat licenses. Well, to those who question such wisdom, consider what a seat license really is: paying money now for the right to pay more money later, at which point you finally get a ticket. Enough said.

If Vladimir Guerrero prospers into a Triple Crown candidate in Virginia or Charlotte, it won't be because Montreal's sports fans did not want baseball in their city.

Nicholas Sinclair is the sports director at CFRC and the voice of the Golden Gaels.

VOLUNTEER WITH US

TELEPHONE AID LINE KINGSTON
TALK
544-1771

open every night 7pm-7am, weekends until noon

Telephone Aid Line Kingston (TALK), a distress, crisis, information and befriending line, is looking for new volunteers for its:
FALL 1998 TRAINING SESSION!

To find out more,
Reach us by phone at our Business line
531-8529.

Email us at talk@aracnet.net
or check out our webpage at www.aracnet.net/~talk

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
since 1873

Today is your day!

Opinions Page Editor

We're in search of an energetic and self-motivated person to edit the Opinions section of The Journal — the only section dedicated entirely to voicing the thoughts, feelings and commentary of members of the Queen's community.

Assistant News Editor

We're looking for an enthusiastic and self-motivated person with some free time and an ear to the ground. Writing experience a plus.

Advertising Designers

We're looking for creative and artistic people with an interest in advertising and layout. Experience with computers an asset.

Computer Systems Manager

Have expertise in networking and systems? Want to earn money on an on-call basis? We need help. Call us. NOW.

Journal House Cleaner

We're looking for someone to clean The Journal house on a weekly basis.

Deadline for applications:

Opinions Editor — Friday, Oct. 2 at 5 p.m.

All other positions — TODAY at 5 p.m.

Applications can be dropped off at 272 Earl St., faxed to 545-6728, or e-mailed to journal@post.queensu.ca. For more info., contact Keith, Laura or Tara at The Journal.

So you want to be a "BIG WIG" and you don't know how... HERE'S YOUR CHANCE!

The Queen's Pub (you know... that newly expanded place)

Is Hiring an Assistant Manager

for the fall term with the possibility of renewal.

Get your application at the AMS front desk. Applications are due Friday, October 2, 1998.

The Great GORETEX & POLARTEC SALE!

◆ We have a great selection of The North Face, Patagonia, Contour and more!

◆ All ON SALE for Homecoming!

◆ Also great reductions on DAY PACKS and HIKING FOOTWEAR!

TRAILHEAD

CLOTHING EQUIPMENT ADVENTURE

237 PRINCESS 546-4757

(across from The Body Shop & Gap)

FEATURES

Now and then

Queen's players hoist their helmets in pride after last year's playoff win against McGill (right); Alumni from the '20s and '30s at last year's annual Homecoming football game parade at Richardson Stadium.

JOURNAL FILES PHOTOS

Queen's VS. —

The Gaels, their opponents & THE BIG GAME

BY KEITH GEREIN

The date: October 31, 1992
The place: Richardson Stadium
The game: O-QIFC semi-final playoff game
The scene: Queen's 24, McGill 21 — the last minute of play

THE CROWD WAS GOING INSANE. With only seconds remaining and the home team up by a field-goal, victory for the Gaels seemed assured. All Queen's had to do was punt the ball, tackle McGill's returner and all would be well. However, it was Halloween and there was reason to suspect that all hell was about to break loose.

"That was the thing to do, to try and tear down the opponent's goalposts... Once they got it they'd pass it through the stands, and take it on to Bloor and Yonge, and even through Princess Street when they got it back to Kingston."

— Former Queen's Golden Gaels' coach Doug Hargreaves

With a desperate lunge, Redmen linebacker Benoit Major burst through the line and blocked the punt. Almost immediately, a swarm of yellow and red began a mad pursuit of the loose ball. But the man who reached the pigskin first was McGill's Erik Zvanitajs and, as the crowd watched in horror, he scooped up the ball and took it 64 yards to the Gaels' endzone.

The clock showed zeroes. Eyeballs bulged from their sockets. Jaws became unhinged. A shockwave of silence resonated through the stadium. And then, a miracle...

Look! Look, there's a flag on the ground. The referee is signalling. It's a penalty against McGill — blocking from the rear. No touchdown! Queen's wins! Queen's wins!

A joyous mob of students and alumni poured on to the field. As Redmen players and coaches launched a fruitless argument with the officials, Queen's players held their helmets aloft, joining the celebration of the tricoloured-painted throngs surrounding them. And over the din, a chant began, accompanied by a drumbeat... "Kill, kill, hate, hate, murder, murder, mutilate."

AS A YOUNGSTER GROWING UP IN CALGARY, I can remember some of the most intense emotions I have ever felt revolving around the fortunes of the NHL's Calgary Flames, especially when they played the hated Edmonton Oilers. When those two teams met, it was nothing short of a war. I'm talking about a rivalry so intense that players were actually afraid to go out on the ice because they had no idea what

Please see Historic on page 24

Homecoming hoopla C'mon shake it

BY STEFAN MURRAY

IT'S BACK

The lost weekend. The ultimate excuse for party central 1998 begins this weekend as scores of former students return to Kingston to recollect their college years, down in the limestone poetry littered throughout their campus institutions and observe us current students flailing around Division Street saturated in keg beer with Pita Pit tzatziki stains splattered all over our clothing.

Yes, our small patch of Queen's acreage will be sporting more than a few Arts '46, Eng '55 and Comm '73 jackets for the next few days. Learn from the wisdom circling in the air as a slight shift in the proportion of receding hairlines and eye wrinkles at The Shot occurs. Lookout for Grandma Moses pointing a haughty finger in the air while she does the funky chicken on the speaker at Stages. Let the evolution of dance moves improve your boogie repertoire: the bird dance, the hustle, the worm, the running man and the macarena. Will our campus and way of life be threatened by these strangers as they attempt to revive their youth? Who knows? Anyhow,

Continued on next page

One of those Arts '65 crowds makes the rounds at a Homecoming parade. JOURNAL FILE PHOTO

Continued from last page

today's Queen's students, who are quite apt at recognizing an opportunity for a good time, should be more than willing to hook up with uncle-aged strangers — so long as the beer is cold.

So, for those that are still enrolled here, Homecoming is a definite experience, albeit an experience with a formula. Thus, a short look at the history of Homecoming, which goes something like this.

WARMING UP

ALTHOUGH THE REAL PARTY begins on Friday night, most students are just itching for a three-day weekend. Moderate gatherings at Alfie's or the Trash are quite common on Thursday, followed by vampire-esque participants sleeping all of Friday away to prepare for the evening's activities.

That cherished activity being, at least since I've been here, the dual keg party. In the spirit of Queen's competition, the parties are usually hosted by both Johnson Street's "Mansion" and Earl Street's "Embassy" and, of course, the announcement of these parties are followed hard by the obligatory rumours that both parties have been cancelled.

A few short pecks at the Homecoming funky chicken

"Embassy" and "Mansion" organizers usually succeed in attracting and deceiving the same amount of students with these fabricated stories about their rival's parties to even out attendance at both. The keg party always seems like a fabulous idea, but once you pass through the gate, the $10 ticket doesn't seem like such a steal. You are forced to battle at least half-hour line-ups at each open keg, the element of rain (which rarely disappoints) and a bunch of arrogant, polyester muscle-heads who, in exchange for free beer, were hired to act as security for the evening.

"I've had it, I really have."
— Former Kingston Mayor John Gerretsen on Homecoming hijinks

The party kicks (an) ass until either the fleet of kegs are drained or some neighbouring whiner, with nothing better to do on a Friday night than complain about people having fun, calls the cops to break up the hoopla. However, on some special occasions, the pork products confine themselves to pestering squeegee kids and the party lingers on until the moonlight and the flat keg beer blur into a Saturday morning soaked in Purple Jesus.

THE BIG GAME

DING! Yes, it's Round II of Homecoming. A tag-team event featuring equal parts per million of alcohol and testosterone.

The football game. The Saturday afternoon classic pits our beloved Golden Gaels against some group of hosers, this year's victims being our arch-rivals, the McGill Redmen. Thousands of Queen's students, most who care more about sneaking booze into the game than any actual "score," encourage the Tricolour with slurred excitement. Whether the Gaels win or lose, no one really cares, so long as they get to storm the field for an oil-thigh. The night ahead towers over the students as they return home to wash the face paint, or purple dye, or whatever off their tired bodies.

It's Saturday, and this night, the second night of Homecoming, can never compete with the first. Most everyone battles a hangover while Queen's security throws fresh and rested staff out onto campus making the wildness of Friday night a difficult task to duplicate. Most students saunter off to a local watering hole or bowling alley, hopefully to take advantage of Homecoming drinking specials.

A LESSON IN HISTORY

SO QUEEN'S, THAT WILL likely be the ongoings of your weekend. (Note to the wise few who don't suine the weekend away: take advantage of your healthy constitution, steady cash flow and the spirit of Alumni Weekend.)

But here's some ideas stolen from years past, so you can do something new, or more technically old, this weekend.

On Friday or Saturday, try getting together with about 1,000 of your best buds, grab some contraband and head over to University Street for a private party. Yes, that's exactly what occurred in 1985 when a group of undergrads equivalent in size to the entire Arts '00 faculty congested University Street from Clergy to Earl for a super-cool time. The following excerpt is a quote from the October 18, 1985 edition of The Journal in an article entitled "Quiet street party draws few complaints."

"The only uprising occurred when the police drove an unmarked car through the thick of the crowd, hoping to disperse it..."

"Students surrounded the police car, banging on it, with cries of 'It just doesn't matter' and 'Rock the car.'"

Of course, the police showed up and 10 students spent the night in the cop-shop. So this

Continued on next page

An image from a Homecoming '89 banner tells us a little about the overall character of the crowd.

JOURNAL FILE PHOTO

Continued from last page

year, just in case, make sure you wear your super-fast Brooks running shoes.

Surprisingly enough, then Kingston Mayor John Gerretsen was "satisfied with the way things went." But his response was really just a contrast to the previous year when Gerretsen was quoted in The Journal saying, "I've had it, I really have" in reaction to excessive noise from an Open Air concert and a couple of ridiculous street parties.

Let's try not to give current Kingston Mayor Gary Bennett a stroke with any outlandish shenanigans, however, without committing vandalism or shady acts of violence, we should try to maintain this weekend as the party weekend of the Queen's community.

A cool example to follow could be the act set by students in the '60s after the BIG GAME on Saturday. The entire crowd marched down to Princess Street, pounded the pavement from store to store and started their own parade. In that time period, Kingston residents and Queen's students had enough respect for each other to actually coordinate this huge endeavour. The City would shut down the street and students just danced, sang and oil-thighed the day away.

A very popular activity, and immensely adventurous, is trying to outwit Queen's Security on one of their busiest weekends of the year. Keep your ear to the ground for rumours of elaborate pranks, and on-campus hooliganism from years past that might be relived by alums.

Another tip for weekend partys: If sneaking your micky into the game on Saturday is giving you a headache, pop two aspirins and get in good with the Queen's Bands. (Back in the '60s and '70s, band members were not searched with as much fervour as the average fan.)

Assuming that the tradition has continued, make friends with the guy who sneaks in the Baby Duck in his tuba.

To compliment this list of DO's, there are a few DON'T's you should keep ready in a readily retrievable part of your brain this weekend. Keep your distance from the campus observation room. It's not a lot of fun and you don't get to keep the pajamas. As well, on your way to a party this weekend, don't take travelling bottles 'o beer. Around every corner a member of Kingston's finest lurks on a ten-speed, itching to relieve you of your brew and at least $110.

So watch your back, Barney.

And, of course, don't spoil the spirit of Homecoming. Everyone's either here or "back to school" to appreciate the essence of a life at Queen's.

That's pretty much all I can tell you about the Homecoming tradition. So, remember to treat the returnees well because that alum will be you someday. Keep the tradition alive, and if you're trying to sleep and a couple of hundred students are whooping it up next door as the sun begins to peer over the horizon, put a pillow over your head and close the blinds — it only happens once a year.

So he tells us, Stefan Murray has a fetish for puddles.

Career Opportunities

Dofasco is one of North America's most productive and profitable steelmakers. Using the latest Basic Oxygen and Electric Arc Steelmaking Processes, we produce a full range of flat rolled steels for our customers in the Automotive, Energy, Pipe and Tube, Appliance, Container, and Steel Distribution Industries.

We are a company that provides our customers with steel solutions to meet their changing needs. As such, we're committed to exciting strategies for long-term economic growth, including investment in new technologies and the recruitment of exceptional graduates and undergraduates who can share our vision for the future.

We are offering permanent positions to 1999 graduates in a variety of disciplines, as well as employment to senior students prior to graduation. We will be interviewing on your campus soon. Check with your Career Placement Office for more details.

For more information about Dofasco, visit our website: www.dofasco.ca.

Dofasco is an equal opportunity employer.

Take on your Future. Let Canada's Youth Employment Strategy help. Call 1 800 935-5555

- Get work experience and internship opportunities here at home and abroad.
- Get the latest on-line career planning and labour market information.
- Find out about youth hiring incentives for employers.
- Get tax and interest relief on student loans.
- Get financial assistance through the Canada Student Loans Program.
- Get Canada study grants if you're a student with dependents.
- Get tax breaks on RRSP withdrawals if you're a mature or part-time student.
- Find out how the Millennium Scholarship Fund might work for you.
- Find out how the Canada Education Savings Grant assists parents saving for their children's education.
- Find out how the National Graduate Register helps private companies recruit recent grads for permanent jobs and students for summer, and co-op jobs.

You can also connect with Canada's Youth Employment Strategy by visiting the Youth Resource Network at www.youth.gc.ca

Canada

Footloose in Canada

Student Class Fares

Vancouver	from	$359
Calgary	from	$299
Edmonton	from	$299
Regina	from	$329
Winnipeg	from	$229
Halifax	from	$239
Saint John	from	$339
St. John's	from	$279

Insane Seat Sale

Vancouver	$229 - $299
Calgary	$229 - $299
Halifax	$149 - $199
Saint John	$149 - $199
Winnipeg	$149 - $199
St. John's	$149 - $199
Finshes Sept 28
Travel until Feb 28

ODYSSEY TRAVEL

186 Princess St., Kingston (at Montreal)
Leisure Travel 549-3553 Long Haul/Group Travel 549-3561
Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

City Sports
236 PRINCESS STREET (at Clergy), KINGSTON, ONT. Phone 542-4415
RACQUET & RUNNING SPECIALISTS

SQUASH RACQUET REG $109.00 SALE $69.99	LARGE SELECTION OF SWIMWEAR, GOGGLES & ACCESSORIES
NEW ARRIVALS OF QUEEN'S BACKPACKS, QUEEN'S SWEAT SHIRTS, QUEEN'S SHIRTS, QUEEN'S SHORTS
LARGE SELECTION OF ATHLETIC SHOES	AEROBIC WEAR BY NIKE, ADIDAS, FILA

TEAMS • FLOORS • CLUBS • FACULTIES
JACKETS • T-SHIRTS • RUGBY JERSEYS • GOLF SHIRTS • SWEATS
Baseball/Football/Hockey Jerseys • Custom Cresting at Very Special Prices!

A historic look at Queen's football rivalries

Continued from last page

new atrocities would be committed to honour the name of hometown glory. Ah, yes, there is nothing like a little hate to make some fireworks...

As we near the eve of a new millennium, it seems to me that these kinds of rivalries have been eroded to near-extinction. In an age of constant expansion, realignment and pre-occupation with the American dollar, (as well as idiotic team nicknames like the Mighty Ducks), the match-ups that used to get the blood boiling are becoming less and less meaningful.

At the university level, or at least at Queen's, this pattern seems somewhat muted. This is a school that at one time was (and maybe still is) part of some absolutely fierce football match-ups. As every "Kill McGill" or homecoming encounter testifies, the traditions of the past have not completely dissipated.

Football has been played at Queen's since the 1880s, and a lot of emotion and effort has been spent on the field and in the stands since that time. When discussing football rivalries at this university, it is not easy to know where to begin, but perhaps the Queen's-McGill match-up is as good a place to start as any.

Claimed to be Canada's oldest sports rivalry, Queen's and McGill first locked horns in 1884 (although no one seems to know who won that game as the score was not recorded). Since that time, the red and gold have played each other 174 times, with Queen's coming out on top in 97 encounters.

That's a lot of games against one school, and as one might guess the match-up produced some memorable moments, both on and off the field.

Here are some of the highlights (and lowlights) of this rivalry from the last 35 years.

1962 — The Redmen win the Yates Cup, and effectively spoil Queen's Homecoming by beating the Gaels 15-13 in a muddy slugfest.

1981 — In a playoff game, Queen's goes to Montreal to face an undefeated McGill squad with its sights on the Vanier Cup. After falling behind 16-1 at half-time, the Gaels roar back to deliver a devastating 26-19

All the fans in the stands, if you're with us stick out your tongue...

JOURNAL FILE PHOTO

defeat to the red and white.

1983 — McGill stuns the Queen's Homecoming crowd with a 34-33 victory, scoring the winning touchdown with no time left on the clock. The Gaels have the last laugh however, crushing the Redmen 36-5 two weeks later in a playoff game.

1988 — Montreal Riot police are called to Molson Stadium after Queen's fans tear down the east end goal posts. The pandemonium erupted after Gaels' all-star receiver Jock Climie scored the winning touchdown with only 49 seconds left.

1989 — In the notorious "fog bowl," a vastly overmatched McGill team uses the poor visibility to take an 17-2 lead. Fortunately for Queen's, the fog lifted in the second half, allowing the Gaels' potent offence to rack up 31 consecutive points en route to a 33-17 win.

1994 — In Montreal, Queen's Bands members are assaulted with a barrage of eggs and balloons filled with motor oil. The incident sparks a controversy as McGill security proves either unable or unwilling to remove the offending Redmen fans.

WHILE A COUPLE OF THE above incidents may sound intense (or perhaps even barbaric), Queen's football games of the early and mid-20th century could often incite far worse instances of hooliganism.

And McGill wasn't the only school Queen's contested with. For much of the century, Queen's, McGill, Western and Toronto were all fierce rivals with one another. Known as "The Big Four," the schools played out epic struggles for supremacy on the football pitch. More was at stake in these games than a shiny trophy. A university's identity, its level of pride, its morale, was dependent on the fortunes of its football squad.

Before one ruffle with Toronto in 1949, The Journal's sports editor, Don Brittain, claimed the Gaels would "...send 24 men out of the dressing room Saturday with but one purpose in mind — to eat plenty of raw, blue meat."

Led by pass rusher "Tip" Logan and wingback "Bobo" Penner, Queen's gave a

Continued on next page

1 OLYMPIC HOUR PHOTO

$2.00 OFF PLUS

FREE FILM OR
FREE 2NDSET
OR
FREE 5x7 ENLARGEMENTS

See Store For Details!

- Passport / Citizenship Photo
- Enlargements / Frames
- Camera / Films / Accessories

545-5998
346 Princess St.

"CUT ME OUT AND SAVE!"

There must be some way to avoid doing the same thing for the next forty years.

You'll be getting your degree from a top school. And you're ready to find a great job. The question is: which job? And can it interest you for your whole career?

At Andersen Consulting, it's our job to help clients change to be more successful. For you, that means opportunity and challenge.

Part of our business is anticipating the future. So come talk to us about yours.

Find out more about a career with Andersen Consulting.

Join us for our Information Session, September 28, 1998 at The University Club, 5:30 p.m.

Visit our web site at www.ac.com. Andersen Consulting is committed to Employment Equity.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

AN ORGANIZATION AS OUTSTANDING AS YOU.

Come visit our Campus Presentations "outstanding" really means.

MANAGEMENT CONSULTING
MBA CAMPUS PRESENTATIONS

DATE: September 28, 1998
TIME: 3:00 - 5:00 p.m.
PLACE: MacIntosh - C...
Lecture Theatre

PricewaterhouseCoopers is one of the world's largest business advisory and consulting organizations. It's the global organization that companies turn to for solutions to complex business problems. It's an organization where 140,000 of us are redefining unprecedented services to clients, global, national and local companies. 140,000 of us. And counting. PricewaterhouseCoopers is an equal opportunity employer. Visit our web site and find out how you can shape the future. <http://www.pwcglobal.com>

© 1998 PricewaterhouseCoopers. PricewaterhouseCoopers is a Canadian member firm of PricewaterhouseCoopers company limited by guarantee.

Continued from last page

valiant effort against the defending champion Varsity Blue Beavers, but lost a heartbreaker 22-21. The game was not a total loss however, as the Queen's fans in attendance at Varsity Stadium were able to make off with the goalposts.

"In the traditional struggle for the posts, Queen's was not to be denied," The Journal reported. "The Varsity defenders maintained a tight defence, but finally there was a concerted charge and all opposition was swept aside."

Doug Hargreaves, who coached the Gaels from 1976-1994, and played with the team intermittently in the early-to-mid 1950s, said he remembers the goalpost hunting after the game.

Doug Hargreaves, Gaels' football from 1976-1984.

REPRINTED WITH PERMISSION OF MERV DALBY

"That was the thing to do, to try and tear down the opponent's goalposts," he said with a laugh. "Once they got it they'd pass it through the stands, and take it on to Bloor and Yonge, and even through Princess Street when they got it back to Kingston."

Occasional injuries, either through the fight to get to the posts, or from posts falling on people, eventually led to the end of goalpost hunting.

The 1949 football Gaels struggled, losing their first three games before ending the season on a dignified note with two victories and a tie. But although the team had a losing record, the season was considered a success simply because Queen's managed to win its final game of the year, a 9-0 defeat of Toronto.

This victory was especially sweet for Queen's supporters as it was achieved on homecoming weekend and because it marked the first time since the 1930s that the Gaels had managed to defeat Varsity in Kingston.

The Journal, in its unbiased sports reporting of the time, was happy to announce that "downhearted Varsity students didn't bother to storm the goalposts, but stood in silence and watched as hundreds of gesticulating Queen's students stormed on to the field to start their celebration."

While home games usually attracted large crowds, Hargreaves said that road games were often more of a party. Hundreds of Queen's students would accompany the team to London, Toronto or Montreal for each road contest. In each city, dances, parties and a variety of other festivities took place.

As Brittain put it in 1949, "the train ride, the dances, the hotel rooms, the alcohol, the pep rallies, the track seats, the bands and the goalposts have all become part and parcel of the tradition that surrounds the epic contest."

"It was a real Archie comic book time," said Hargreaves. "It was a big social thing, to jump on the train and travel to the games with the team."

In 1949, as part of the Gaels' annual trip to Montreal, Queen's supporters were invited to a "tea dance" from 5-7 p.m., followed by a big dance where "the music of Johnnie Holmes and his Westernaires will be sure to keep the couples in the mood."

Those who showed up at the Queen's

Continued on next page

Education Information Fair

Thursday
October 1st
(11 am - 2 pm)

JDUC
Upper & Lower
Ceilidh

Meet Program Representatives

- Ontario Universities American Schools
- Brock Canisius College
- Lakehead Niagara University
- Ottawa State U of N.Y., Potsdam
- Queen's Australian & British Schools
- Toronto K.O.M.
- Western T.E.A.C.H.
- York

- information on programs offered
- answers to questions on admission requirements
- advice on teaching prospects and working out of province

Presented by Career Services
<http://careers.queensu.ca>

Share your voice with all of Canada

Do you want to discuss campus issues?
Do you have a concern about university life that needs to be shared?
Are you creative, artistic, imaginative?

The Journal is producing a nationally-distributed magazine and to do it, WE NEED YOU.

Your spirit, in art.
Your voice, in writing.
Your hands, in production.
Your skills, in project coordination.
Get your work in print, and have it distributed to a national audience!

Call Liz or Shandley at 545-2800 or stop by 272 Earl St. for more info.

Coming in March

Canada Computer & Electronics Inc.
2 - 211 Telson Rd., Markham, ON, L3R 1E7 360 Princess Street, Kingston, ON, K7L 1B6
Tel: (905) 946-9688 Fax: (905) 946-9733 Tel: (613) 542-8467 Fax: (613) 542-5709
Pacific Mall C68 4330 Steeles Ave. E., Markham, ON Tel: (905) 416-3553 www.canadacomputers.com

PENTIUM II ASUS PC-100 SYSTEM	MMX VALUE SYSTEM
ASUS P2B Intel BX Mainboard	Rouston M571 Mainboard 512K Cache
64 MB PC-100 Memory	32 MB PC-100 Memory
Quantum 6.4 GB EX IDEMA Hard Drive	2 GB IDE Hard Drive
Panasonic 1.44MB Floppy Drive	Panasonic 1.44MB Floppy Drive
Panasonic 32x IDE CD-ROM	24x IDE CD-ROM
Full Tower Case w/300 W ATX Power	Compact Mid Tower Case AT
Mattrox G200 8 MB AGP Video Card	16-bit Sound Onboard
Creative Labs SB128 PCI	4 MB Video Onboard
15" Proview Monitor .28mm	14" SVGA Monitor .28mm
104 Key Keytanic PS/2 Keyboard	104 Key Windows Keyboard
Logitech 3-Button PS/2 Mouse w/Pad	2-Button Scrollit Mouse w/Pad
Alien Landing ACS 48 Speakers w/Sub	60W Speaker w/Adapter
FREE Thrustmaster Joystick!	FREE Joystick!
Above Configuration w/Following CPU:	Above Configuration w/Following CPU:
Intel Celeron Pentium II 266 $1509	Cyrix M2-266 $720
Intel Celeron Pentium II 300 $1525	AMD K6-2 266 3D $780
Intel Celeron Pentium II 300A $1629	Intel Pentium 166 $715
Intel Celeron Pentium II 333 $1685	Intel Pentium 166MMX $789
Intel Pentium II 300 $1749	Intel Pentium 200MMX $795
Intel Pentium II 333 $1775	Intel Pentium 233MMX $805
Intel Pentium II 350 $1864
Intel Pentium II 400 $2119
Intel Pentium II 450 $2429

SUPER 7 AGP SYSTEM	PENTIUM II VALUE SYSTEM	PENTIUM II SYSTEM
Intel Pentium II 233MMX $584	Intel Celeron Pentium II 266 $598	Intel Celeron Pentium II 266 $1174
Cyrix M2-266 $650	Intel Celeron Pentium II 300 $589	Intel Celeron Pentium II 300 $1166
AMD K6-2 266 3D $650	Intel Celeron Pentium II 300A $1081	Intel Celeron Pentium II 300A $1295
AMD K6-2 300 3D $698	Intel Celeron Pentium II 333 $1138	Intel Celeron Pentium II 333 $1388
AMD K6-2 333 3D $1049
AMD K6-2 350 3D $1170
Intel Pentium II 233 $1075	Intel Pentium II 266 $1144	Intel Pentium II 233 $1296
Intel Pentium II 300 $1106	Intel Pentium II 300 $1166	Intel Pentium II 266 $1365
Intel Pentium II 333 $1212	Intel Pentium II 333 $1212	Intel Pentium II 300 $1465
Intel Pentium II 350 $1295	Intel Pentium II 400 $1398	Intel Pentium II 333 $1435
Intel Pentium II 400 $1598	Intel Pentium II 450 $1976	Intel Pentium II 266 $1515
Intel Pentium II 450 $1976		Intel Pentium II 400 $1770
		Intel Pentium II 450 $2100

All prices listed are discounted for Cash payment. Prices are subject to change with out notice.

Continued from last page

Hotel in downtown Montreal were promised a somewhat wilder experience. The Journal advertised that partiers would be treated to a sample of a special elixir called the Tricolour Titillator, a drink composed of one-third tomato juice (red), and one-third shaving lotion (gold). The remaining one-third was blue, the way one felt after drinking this hideous concoction.

It was also during these road trips that the worst excesses of bloodthirsty Queen's hooligans occurred. Hargreaves did not want to get into specifics, but called the activities "collegiate hijinks." Basically the point of these hijinks was to cause a substantial amount of damage (to stadiums, hotel rooms, train cars, etc.), infuriate the other school and generally to make a nuisance of oneself.

WHILE HARGREAVES DOESN'T miss this part of the Queen's football experience, he said that student passion and support for the game has diminished substantially since his days with Gaels.

He recalled fondly Queen's last Vanier Cup championship, in 1992. That game, broadcasted nation-wide on TSN, witnessed a mob scene of Queen's students and alumni celebrating all over the Skydome turf and throughout downtown Toronto.

"That was great to see," said Hargreaves. "But it's funny, that was the kind of thing you used to see every weekend."

"I think the students are missing out on a great experience," he continued. "It's really the best show in town. Football games are really the only function on campus where the student body can get together as the student body, to express the Queen's character en masse."

The ex-coach also had a suggestion to resuscitate interest in football: more Ontario content. In 1975, Queen's was placed in the O-QIFC, a conference of eastern Ontario and Quebec schools only. Although he claimed to have enjoyed the O-QIFC rivalries with McGill, and more recently Bishop's, Hargreaves said it would be beneficial to have Queen's take on more Ontario schools.

"It would be nice to get those old rivalries [with Western and Toronto] going again," he said. "Two-thirds of our alumni live in Ontario and yet they seem to have trouble even getting our scores."

With the Gaels scheduled to take part in an interlocking system (with the Ontario schools) next year, Hargreaves may get his wish.

"It used to be that everyone at Queen's felt you could go to a football game and have a good time," he said. "It would be nice to see that happen again."

That said,

Queen's. McGill.

Richardson Stadium.

TOMORROW, 1 P.M.

Watch for Keith Gerein at tomorrow's game wearing nothing but a large sombrero and silver spurs.

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Wrecking Ball hits AJ's

In a Wreck: Leadman Ian Thornley hits the crowd last Monday at AJ's.

Concert Review

By SHAWN BRIMLEY

ON MONDAY NIGHT, I got my ass kicked at AJ's. I got rocked so hard that I think my teeth bled and my eyes bugged out, all thanks to Big Wreck.

The show was sold out and the crowd was ready to go when Big Wreck made their presence known. Lead singer Ian Thornley started the show with a mad cackle into the microphone. Thornley, who stands at least 6'3", was dressed in black and towered over the audience. Opening with "Look what I found," the band pounded the audience with a groove-heavy rock riff right from the start. By the second song Big Wreck had won the crowd over, with Thornley getting up on the P.A. and enticing the crowd to, "Go fucking nuts!" From that point on, the crowd was Thornley's to control, grooving when he wanted them to and flying when he wished it.

The band was very tight, hitting the audience fast and furious, moving in and out of songs and jams that built up to impending climaxes.

The band played a set that displayed not only their prowess as musicians, but their talent in putting together a play-list with the right amount of groove-heavy rock riffs and songs that allowed Thornley to display his mastery of the guitar solo.

With thick, wah-drenched sustain, Thornley played his guitar with the which can be a common problem for guitarists. Thornley is also a phenomenal singer, with a vocal range reminiscent of Robert Plant.

Halfway through the show, Thornley's guitar strap broke in the middle of a song. Taking it in stride, he passed on the guitar to a technician and finished the song with just his vocals, using the opportunity to jump around and use both his hands to flail around in a mad attempt at compensation. The crowd responded with deafening cheers. Thornley commented with a laugh "I'm one of those guys who can sing without a guitar."

Big Wreck came crashing together in 1992, when Thornley, guitarist Brian Doherty, bassist Dave Henning and drummer Forest Williams met at the musical mecca that is the Berkley College of Music. Over five years, the band belief that a single note can be just as sonically effective as a continual attack of scales or chords.

Thornley is a formidable guitarist, taking most of the lead parts of the band's material. His expert use of time-based guitar effects such as reverb and delay did not bury the intricacies of his tone or the dynamics of the song.

played anonymous gigs in nameless bars and worked hard at perfecting their sound and stage presence. However, the band was more interested in the creative process, developing as a band, largely behind closed doors. Finally, Big Wreck released their debut album, In Loving Memory of, last year to instant success thanks to singles like "The Oaf," "That Song" and "Blown Wide Open" which is currently screaming up the charts.

Big Wreck is touring in support of their album, which is a collection of songs built on a foundation of blues and rock grooves. The album is not a typical rock endeavour, it features tempos and cadences that ensure that the listener will not lose interest.

The band was very tight, hitting the audience fast and furious, moving in and out of songs and jams that built up to impending climaxes, but would suddenly slow down and blend into a atmospheric groove that would excite the crowd even more.

Perhaps the greatest moment in the show was the encore. The band returned to play a Led Zepplin cover, "Immigrant Song." The audience was mesmerized as Thornley used a vocal delay effect to phase his different vocal parts, making it seem as though he was some sort of Shaman, preaching to his audience from a musical pulpit.

Big Wreck is a band that combines the best in classic anthem rock, with the lyrical introspection that an educated audience requires, making this group a must see, a must hear, a must feel.

"A remarkable and audacious book"
The Globe and Mail

Regularly $39.95

30% Off During Alumni Weekend
Only at the Campus Bookstore

"Brilliant"
Kirkus

Click (toll-free) weekdays 9 a.m. Saturday 10 a.m. 445-2805. After January 1st 512-4655. Owned and Operated by Students Since 1909. www.campusbookstore.com

Shop for eyewear at
Marc F. Raymond Opticians.

Then show them off - on us.

With every purchase over $50.00 we'll give you a $5.00 coupon good for food or beverages at Tir Nan Og.

FREE
$5.00 COUPON
good at ...

So, choose the right glasses for your hectic lifestyle and then celebrate on us.

We have frames for every occasion, Brooks Brothers for lecture hall, Esprit for casual, and MEXX for partying till dawn.

Marc F. Raymond Opticians
"More Than Meets The Eye"

324 King St. East, On The Market Square
549-2020

(Offer expires October 30th 1998)

Hot Air Queen's radio warms up to campus

Radio Preview

By SARAH BAUMANN

So you've finally figured out that no amount of antenna adjustment will let your radio pick up your favourite hometown station. Your CD collection is wearing a little thin, and that country music coming from your next door neighbour is starting to get on your nerves. It's time for a change. But where to get that particular combination of jungle and hip hop that you've been craving? Those new to Kingston will know by now that The Border is the major popular radio station in town... but if that just doesn't cut it, it's time to think 101.9 FM CFRC.

According to its mission statement, CFRC is a "campus/community radio station owned and administered by Queen's University. CFRC's function is to provide innovative and alternative radio programming that promotes and reflects the academic and cultural life of the University."

This is not simply a club that Queen's students can join. It is a full-fledged, volunteer-run radio station dedicated to providing the community with as much variety as possible. Types of shows range from rock, to classical, to spoken word to documentaries. There is literally something for everyone.

If the blues are your passion, try Buff Blues, every Monday night from 8-10 p.m.

"CFRC's function is to provide innovative and alternative radio programming."

— CFRC Mission Statement

Aboriginal Voices is a documentary show that is on every Tuesday, featuring the culture, music, artistry and language of the First Nations peoples. Want to have a little bit of everything?

Then you might tune in for Suspended Particulate (if only for its catchy name). The Kingston Arts scene is also well covered by CFRC in the shows On Stage, On Screen and Orphalese Bend, which

Please see Tune on page 30

Rotate this!

Rob Zombie
Hellbilly Deluxe
Geffen Records

By TYLER WILSON

Well it appears as though our little angel Rob Zombie is up to his old tricks again and spitting out yet another kick-ass album destined for greatness, the likes of which this listener has not seen since Yanni at the Acropolis. Basically speaking if you liked White Zombie's Astro-Creep: 2000 you'll like Hellbilly Deluxe. The first track, a cultist nursery-rhyme entitled, "Call of the Zombie," sets the tone for a dark adventure declaring, "away ran the children to hide in their beds, for fear that the Devil would chop off their heads." Cute isn't it?

The next three heavenly melodies are quite simply bitchin', especially the recently released single "Dragula," an easy air guitar for any standard dipshit. Track number five, an acoustic number isn't bad, but is followed by a couple of crappy songs. However, "Meet the Creeper" and "Spookshow Baby," two loud, angry songs (go figure) are pretty damn cool and not worth glossing over.

I can basically sum up the remaining four tracks on the album with one word: scary. Quick run down: Song number 10 made me want to join a cult; song number 11, I started my own cult; number 12, "Return of the Phantom Stranger" starts with a Latin liturgy, and finally, the final song on the album, most appropriate entitled "The Beginning of the End," is quite possibly one of the darkest Zombie songs I've ever had the pleasure of hearing. It was a fitting end to a fitting album. My two cents? If you have the coin, it's not a waste of money. If you don't — save it for something else and tape the good tracks off a fellow crackhead. Be it for a drive home, a kegger, or a Sunday school service, Hellbilly Deluxe is a welcome sound to open ears.

Dr. John
Anutha Zone
Virgin Records

By JIM WHITTINGTON

Dr. John's latest release Anutha Zone offers a spiritually enlightened retreat into the culture and history of the Mississippi River valley.

Backed by an array of talented musicians such as famous session guitarist Bobby Bloom, Dr. John is able to achieve a level of creativity and complexity lost in today's popular music. Each song can be looked upon as a window into Dr. John's musical upbringing and development.

With each track, Dr. John

More CD reviews on page 32

a part of Me-Mail

hotmail
from Microsoft

it's where you're @

Hotmail™ is free e-mail that you can use anywhere there's a computer with Web access. Get yours at www.hotmail.com

© 1998 Microsoft Corporation. All rights reserved. Microsoft and Hotmail are either registered trademarks or trademarks of Microsoft Corporation in the United States and/or other countries.

Know when to hold 'em

Damon's counting cards instead of numbers in new poker flick

Cleaning Up: Mike McDermott (Matt Damon) wins big in Rounders.

Movie Review

Rounders
Capitol Theatre

BY JESSE CRAIG BELLINGER

What makes a person a great poker player is their ability to control their emotions to the point where they appear to express no emotion at all. As such, Rounders is a film that proudly contains as little passion as it can. Flimsy contrivances and thin characters can be overlooked as simple excuses to take us from one poker table to the next; after all, this is a film more about the game itself than the players that make their living playing it.

It seems that director John Dahl is as enamoured with poker as his characters.

For what it's worth, however, some of the industry's finest actors populate the film and it is their charisma and charm that make Rounders a fine film despite ultimately adding up to less than what meets the eye. In yet another "young genius" role (but cast before the success of Damon's award-winning Good Will Hunting), Matt Damon manages to make his character thoroughly convincing, sprinkling gaming jargon through the story with ease and pulling off a difficult turn as the film's voice-over narrator.

The film's dark allure and evocative hues of psychological addiction are seductive to the degree that we almost forget that nothing else exists in this film other than poker.

Damon is supported by an illustrious cast, including John Turturro, John Malkovich, Martin Landau, Gretchen Mol and Edward Norton. Norton is particularly memorable in the kind of role usually brought to life by Sean Penn - vaguely philosophical, unexplainably charming and wildly mutable but ultimately corrupt. Malkovich's Teddy KGB, a Russian organized crime affiliate and gaming house proprietor, is made of equal parts over-the-top schlock and menacing restraint, the type of mixture that only an actor of his calibre could make convincing. Given that there is not much in the way of a story or character development to carry Rounders, it seems that director John Dahl is as enamoured with poker as his characters. The lack of such typical narrative features are only barely compensated for by Dahl's taut and unobtrusive direction, backing off at every opportunity where another director might stamp the film with a stylish and personal signature. The film's dark allure and evocative hues of psychological addiction are seductive to the degree that we almost forget that nothing else exists in this film other than poker. There is no family to be concerned with, no legal concerns (particularly curious as Matt Damon's Mike McDermott spends half of the film as an aspiring law student), no sexual relationships and no loyalty in any form whatsoever.

And that is precisely the fun of Rounders — there is nothing to stand in our way as we peer over Mike's shoulder and play along. Dahl manages to portray the kind of vivid concentration necessary to survive at a table peopled by seasoned card sharks by narrowing the scope of his film to exclude so many typical conventions. It all adds up to a film that is highly-charged and darkly moody, but ultimately (for the non-serious poker player, anyway) much like the game of poker itself: deceptive, lonely and entirely untrustworthy.

My So-Called Brain: Claire Danes isn't a big fan of Manila and now officials in the Philippines don't like her either. The Manila Council is planning to ban her movies there, after she told Premiere magazine she said, "Manilla smelled like cockroaches, with rats all over and there is no sewage system and the people do not have anything — no arms, no legs, no eyes."

Spit and stones will break my bones: Jim Carrey suffered a minor neck injury during an altercation while filming his upcoming movie about the life of late comedian Andy Kaufman. Carrey and professional wrestler Jerry Lawler were filming the last scene of the movie when as part of the script, the comedian spit at the wrestler. Lawler then attacked the Carrey, injuring him.

Golden Girl Remembered: Hollywood Squares is dedicating a week to Florence Griffith Joyner. She recently made an appearance on the newly launched game show. Each show for a week will begin with a tribute to the track star. Joyner won two gold medals at the 1988 Olympics. She died Monday, September 21 at age 38 from a heart seizure.

And so it goes... Paul McCartney, Bruce Springsteen and Billy Joel have been nominated for induction into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame for 1999. McCartney has already been inducted in 1988 for being part of the Beatles, but this time he'll be inducted as a solo artist.

Rush Hour for movies:
(Top hits for Sept. 18 weekend):

1. Rush Hour $31 million
2. One True Thing $6.6 million
3. There's Something About Mary $6 million
4. Rounders $4.8 million
5. Simon Birch $3.9 million
6. Saving Private Ryan $3.4 million
7. Blade $3.3 million
8. Ever After $1.7 million
9. Armageddon $1.2 million
10. Snake Eyes $950,000

IF HAPPENED TO SOMEONE WHO KNOWS SOMEONE YOU KNOW. YOU'RE NEXT.

URBAN LEGEND
WHAT YOU DON'T BELIEVE CAN KILL YOU.

IN THEATRES SEPTEMBER 25

Tune to CFRC

Continued from page 27
features local bands. And if you're ready to drop on Friday nights from a wild night of homework (okay, partying) then lie back and absorb some Unauthorized Cranial Hookup described by CFRC as, "aural cherry cola poured directly into the wiring of your brain." Wait, there's more! For those of you too lazy to make the walk out to West Campus to support the Gaels every Saturday, CFRC has live broadcasts of the games all season.

Should you be interested in radio as more than the backdrop to your late-night study sessions, then you'll find ample opportunity to get involved at CFRC. The station is currently accepting applications for their training courses, which last approximately six weeks, and provide experience in every aspect of radio production. They also have many "backstage" volunteer jobs available for those who just want to file some CDs, listen to some new music and soak up the cool, relaxed atmosphere.

Absorb some Unauthorized Cranial Hookup described by CFRC as, "aural cherry cola poured directly into the wiring of your brain."

For more information, contact station manager Maureen Plunkett at 545-2121, or drop by the station in the basement of Carruthers Hall. Fall Schedules will be available at Carruthers starting next week. Don't forget to check out the CFRC website at www.queensu.ca/CFRC. Comments are welcome, as are musical requests at 536-1019. Remember this is your "alternative" station! Try something new, and above all, have fun.

Jan Allen
Curator of Contemporary Art,
Agnes Etherington Art Centre

EMERGING FIGURES

SPEAKING ABOUT ART: REGULAR SERIES

Sunday
27 September
2 pm

Admission is free.

Agnes Etherington Art Centre

218 Barrie Street, Queens University
Kingston, Ontario K7L 3N6
Tel: 613 545-2190 Fax: 613 545-6765
<http://www.queensu.ca/ajeth/>

Sponsored by Wilton and Duncan Gordon Foundation

McGill

Faculty of Law

Come and Learn About McGill's Innovative New Law Program.

It's Law with an International Flair!!

Meet the Assistant Dean of Admissions,
Robin Geller, who will present and answer questions on the new McGill Law Program.

John Deutsch University Centre
John Orr Room (rm. 236)
Tuesday, September 29th, 1998
11:30 A.M. - 12:30 P.M.

The sky's the limit MacLeod and Michel chill at the Trash

Concert Review

BY ANNA MARIE WILSON

From Queen to Bob Marley to rap, Paul MacLeod and Danny Michel are exploding with musical talent. Playing a low key, but very enticing acoustical set at the Trasheteria last Tuesday night, Skydiggers band member Paul MacLeod, and his long time friend Danny Michel, offered up an evening of musical entertainment which would be difficult to top.

Playing behind a veil of candles, holiday lights and lava lamps, the duo displayed their wealth of talent in both guitar and vocal skills. MacLeod skillfully played a six string acoustic guitar as Michel danced his fingers across the neck of an electric guitar.

One of the opening numbers, entitled, "Biloxi" showed the pair's ability to improvise. Michel picked up the chords to the song (which he didn't know previous to the performance) while MacLeod sang the vocals. By the third verse, Michel had a good enough grasp on the song to take a rather impressive guitar solo. Not bad for only three minutes of on-stage rehearsal!

Another striking feature of the performance was the personification of each of their songs. Both MacLeod and Michel took on a character for each of their songs, making the performance more intimate and personal — allowing the audience a better understanding of the meanings behind the songs. Added to this was their incredible use of a simple but effective harmony. Michel has what could be described as a velvety voice with a raspy touch, while MacLeod was extremely clear and focused which allowed him to show off his incredible range.

Playing behind a veil of candles, holiday lights and lava lamps, the duo displayed their wealth of talent.

Though the crowd at the Trasheteria was relatively small, their response was both energetic and enthusiastic. After playing covers from such artists as Bob Marley, and an incredible version of "Under Pressure" by Queen, they received a warm reaction from the audience. As I looked around, there weren't many people who could be stopped from singing along or moving with the beat.

One of the most intriguing qualities about both Michel and MacLeod is that they are both just regular guys. They have fun on stage, and show a deep respect for each other's talent. They divide their time on stage, brilliantly accompanying one another, enhancing the performance.

Trasheteria manager, Mike Watt Jr., explained how much he loved to have them at the bar, "they are rock stars because their music is amazing, but they're also just great people!"

Watt explained that he has Michel and MacLeod perform for his own and his staff's enjoyment, as much as for the general public.

Both Michel and MacLeod have new albums now in stores — Clear by the former and Tell the Band to Go Home by the latter. Though they are great on their albums, there is nothing like seeing these two guys share the stage together. Above all, they are just a couple of old friends with complimenting talent.

Get Out There

Movies:

Playing at the Capitol Theatre until Tuesday, September 29: 546-5395

Ever After 7:05, 9:55
Armageddon 6:45, 9:45
Saving Private Ryan 8:30
Snake Eyes 7:20, 9:30
Simon Birch 7:10, 9:40
Rounders 7:00, 7:25, 9:35, 10:00

Playing at the Catarauqui Cineplex until Tuesday, September 29: 389-7442

Blade 7:10, 9:50
Rush Hour 7:20, 7:40, 9:40, 10:00
Knock Off 7:00, 9:10
One True Thing 6:40, 9:20
Something About Mary 6:50, 9:30

Playing at the Princess Court Cinema until Thursday, September 24: 546-3456

Smoke Signals 7:00, 9:00

Visual Art:

Kingston Regional Arts Council: 546-ARTS

On September 26 and 27 the waterfront location at the Tett Centre will be the home to A Country Fair in the City. The new Tett Centre is located at 370 King Street West. Demonstrations of painting, sketching, porcelain painting and pottery. Daily passes are $2 for all performances.

Theatre:

Grand Theatre: 530-2050
On Tuesday September 29 and Wednesday September 30, Universal Concerts Canada Presents: The Rankins. Shows start at 8 p.m. and tickets are $28.50.

Live Entertainment:

Jane Bunnett and orchestra will make their Kingston debut on Friday, September 25 at 8:00 p.m. Tickets are $9 for students.

Taking it One Step Beyond Acid jazz band lights up Clark

Concert Review

One Step Beyond
Clark Hall Pub

BY JOCELYN LAPORTE

Wednesday evening Clark Hall Pub kicked off its Alumni Weekend celebrations with a performance by jazz band "One Step Beyond." A chatty and spirited crowd of fans packed the pub to enjoy the funky jazz with a heavy R&B feel.

While their combination of sound is a treat for the ears, it is difficult listening to their upbeat, funky rhythms without feeling an urge to groove along with the beat.

The enthusiasm of the band is entertaining, yet their relaxed air provides a casual and familiar feel to their performance. Their music is a tantalizing combination of sounds which seem to come together playfully, and astonishingly, in a structured harmony. While their combination of sound is a treat for the ears, it is difficult listening to their upbeat, funky rhythms without feeling an urge to groove along with the beat.

The band is comprised of seven members and incorporates brass sounds with jazz guitar, funk style keyboard and strong percussion. One Step's musicians are all serious and talented, resulting in the delivery of a tight and synchronized set. Of particular excellence are the saxophone and guitar solos scattered among the songs.

"One Step Beyond" describe themselves as "jazzzy jazz" and say their influences stem from Jazz, Latin Jazz, R&B, Funk and Hip Hop. Over the past couple of years the band has been quite busy. "We have been touring for the past three years non-stop across Canada and the U.S." said member David Gouveia. The band has released two CDs already and a three song EP for J&B Scotch. "We will probably produce a new record in the new year," stated bass guitarist Sandy Mamane. They also have a video airing on Bravo Fact and other arts channels sometime within the next few weeks. The video is for their song "Life on Asteroid B-6-12" which was written by guitarist Andy Scott.

"I really like the rhythms that they play and the energy of the show" commented audience member Graeme Switzer.

"One Step Beyond" was, without a doubt, a crowd pleaser. "I really like the rhythms that they play and the energy of the show," commented audience member Graeme Switzer. The band dynamically set the stage as an opener to Alumni Weekend activities at Clark. Pub assistant manager Mat Hofferford commented on the success of the evening, stating, "tonight was a tremendous stepping stone towards a crazy weekend!"

Rusty Hub Toronto band hits K-town

Concert Review

Played at AJ's on Wednesday September 23.

BY TANYA FOUBERT

Personally I believe that there are certain qualities to a good rock band. Rusty, who rocked out at AJ's last Wednesday, is not lacking in this respect.

The foursome who hail from Toronto, proved that they possess a great deal of instrumental talent on Wednesday, a fact that became obvious during their intense guitar and drum solos. If all you can do during a concert is stare and think "wow," then you have yourself a winner. It's not a poetic appraisal in response to their talent, but hey, this isn't the symphony either.

My only previous exposure to them has been through television's ever-faithful Muchmusic. Their previous releases such as "Misogyny," "Groovy Dead," and "Empty Cell" are terrific tunes which have become personal favorites.

Another quality for a band is presence, and the lead singer Ken MacNeil has nothing but that — although if I were to encounter him on the streets of Kingston I would most likely expect him to hit me up for spare change. Everyone needs their own style, I guess.

A crucial prerequisite for live bands is a good audience. Without this the performance is just not the same for all involved. Regrettably the crowd at AJ's was quite scattered. The mosh pit was hardly at its best and was filled with guys who jumped around like apes trying to turn back evolution while slamming each other's pitchers of beer.

Coupled with the lack of supporters the band's lack of technical precision became an unfortunate downfall of the concert. If the audience cannot hear the lyrics the entire musical experience for the listener is dampened. To my dismay I could barely hear a thing, and although it is quite possible that the pounding music deafened me immediately, I highly doubt that my hearing was the issue.

So perfection or certain greatness was not written in the stars for Rusty on Wednesday night. There was good music, but also soft lyrics, badly engineered sound and a sparse audience. But despite the technical problems most of those who showed up at AJ's really enjoyed themselves, even my Shania Twain loving guest.

I must make a special note for the opening act Fifty Diamond Rocks, or FDR, as well. When I first arrived at the bar and noticed they were playing in front of a pitifully small audience, I felt they were, as bands go, a lost cause. However, they possessed terrific talent and played some incredible tunes.

Hopefully the next time either of these bands return to Kingston, the campus can spend a little less time at their desks and a little more in the mosh pit.

CFRC Listings

Top 10 albums

Artist	Album
Hell billys	Tied to a...
Rheostatics	Nightline...
Belle & Seb	The boy...
Elliott Smith	XO
Bob Mould	Last Dog...
Arab Strab	Week never...
Swirlies	Strictly
East...
TMBG	Severe
Tire...
Cos & Bach	Painted...
Squirrel Nut...	Perennial...

Time into CFRC-FM (101.9)

Marlin Queen's Spring Break

Farallon
D. Caribe,
Cuba $999

All inclusive p.p.

Call Betty for details.

549-4400 370 King Street East

No Damn Laces.

Blundstone
FOOTWEAR
Established Since 1920

Unisex styles. Women's size 6 up to Men's 13 1/2. Come slip on a pair and enjoy dry and comfortable feet. Any tougher they'd rust.

A-ONE CLOTHING • VISA
358 King St. E. • Mastercard
Kingston, ON • Interac
K7L 3B6

Rotate this!

Continued from page 27

dabbles in a variety of his musical tastes while paying tribute to many of his idols and contemporaries. Whether it be the strikingly Albert King-ish sound of "I don't wanna know," or the raxeful funky stylings of Curtis Mayfield on "Why Come," Dr. John remains true to the same blues, soul, and jazz influences that have guided him through his long and successful musical career.

However, fused with the mixture of musical genres is Dr. John's own unique new-age fusion style. The whole album could be described as being "busy." There is so much going on musically you could listen to the record a thousand times and still pick up on new stuff. The combination of keyboard layering, diverse instrumentation, and complex percussion provide an extremely rich sound to the whole album. Add in Dr. John's own unique vocal stylings and the dark theme of Bayou country and you get one unique sounding record that won't bore you after a few listens.

Amutha Zone won't be enjoyed by those who like catchy music. However, if you are someone who appreciates music this could become one of your best-loved records; one you'll keep listening to long after Third Eye Blind has gone the way of Extreme.

Dead Man on Campus Soundtrack
Various Artists
Dreamworks Records

By Robert De Bellefeuille

The noble Confucius once said, "you wish to become wer, join a polar bear club; you wish to become plenty grubby, frequent an Amsterdam brothel, but if your fancy is music, proceed with extreme caution." Never before have my friend's words been so poignantly relevant. The Dead Man On Campus soundtrack features the likes of many of today's top alternative acts such as Blur, Creed, and Marilyn Manson. A substantial number of tracks on the album are produced by the spin doctoring hepcats of the music industry, the Dust Brothers.

The two have administered their unique production style to several brand names including the Beastie Boys, Rolling Stones, and the delightful Hanson. On the stagnant Dead Man soundtrack, the brothers have concentrated on metamorphosing tracks through samples, distortion, and a droning wobble effect. In many cases, it proves to be inherently successful. Unfortunately, numerous tracks seem beyond the after school tutoring offered from the Dust Bro's.

The album's paramount track emerges from the freakish Marilyn Manson; Manson covers David Bowie's classic "Golden Years," in an effort which displays the Dust Brother's aptitude in the enhancement of the otherwise mundane. Punk band Goldfinger also contributes one of the few passing grades with, "Walking in the dark."

On the other side, a special thanks to rockers Creed and Blur for donating their discarded leftovers that evidently were deemed unworthy to be kept on their own album. The excessive electronic balderdash fest reaches its apex with the insipid song, "Super bon bon" by Soul Coughing. The track has about as much intrinsic merit as a raggedy-ass hobo has etiquette; and my mom says they eat out of our garbage. It would be irrational to condemn the entire album on the whole and this is due to the artists' achievement of flawlessly perfecting lack lustre uniformity.

If this soundtrack was a relative, it would be the scurrilous, alcoholic, bellicose, spouse-beating reprobate uncle. Now do you Queen's students wish to reveal this uncle to your fellow fastidious highbrows? This is indeed one sibling better off left in the closet.

I Got the Hook-up
Various Artists
Virgin Music Canada

By Eli Shuystrer

When I selected I Got the Hook-up I figured I had made a shrewd decision. I enjoy some rap music and this CD features 21 tracks from artists such as Snoop Doggy Dogg, Master P, Bone Thugs-N-Harmony, Ice Cube, Montell Jordan, Mack 10, and Ol' Dirty Bastard (not my favourite performer, but what a great moniker!) Dressed up like a movie soundtrack, the CD gave the appearance of a fun time. With so much talent and so many tracks, how could I possibly go wrong? Surely, there would have to be at least one or two really good songs on this puppy.

Inequality is a natural phenomenon, and yes, a few of the songs stand a little taller than the rest, but that's not saying much. I got the Hook-up struck me as a mediocre collection of songs which span the spectrum from forgettable (at best) to just plain annoying (at worst). Ok, that might be a little harsh. Mack 10's "Bang or Ball", and Ol' Dirty Bastard's "Who Rock This" aren't that bad, but are hardly worth the price of the CD. The 19 other selections are either sappy Montell Jordan-style love songs, or foul-mouthed gangsta' rap ditties. Take "Shake Somethin'" (please!) by Mystikal and Mia X. Some of the lyrics include: "shake that ass over here," "watchin' you bouncin' yo tities," and "you on a mission with yo' pussy."

Now, I have nothing against profanity. I use it sometimes, and Richard Pryor was a genius when he performed, yet somehow this seemed gratuitous. One could make the argument that gangsta' rap is merely a reflection of urban realities, but I think such an explanation is too often used as an excuse for bad music. It's a shame Mystikal didn't have his mouth washed out with soap a few more times when he was younger. Save your money. Don't get the hook-up.

Classifieds

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WONDERING ABOUT RELATIONSHIPS, career, etc.? Seeking direction? Experience greater self-awareness with tarot, palmistry, runes, and more. Clients say my readings are inspirational and very accurate. I also offer classes in meditation, Tarot, etc. For more information phone Kelly at 544-1909. Also available Fridays and Saturdays at "Harmony", 93 Princess Street. Walk in or pre-book at 544-7897. Tape included.

GET PUBLISHED! Queen's Health Sciences Journal is now accepting articles on any aspect of health and medicine to be published in the upcoming edition. Deadline - October 15th. Instructions at <http://meds.queensu.ca/hsj/> or e-mail hsj@meds.queensu.ca.

ADULT FRENCH COURSE Adult French for the workplace, an intensive French language course, offered mornings, daily at Loyall's Collegiate. No tuition fee. Details: 546-5575.

PRO-LIFE CLUB beginning this fall at Queen's. If interested, e-mail 6lrs@qink.com for more info.

MOODMASTER is a group for students who have been diagnosed with depression or bi-polar disorder. Its purpose is to provide mutual support for members and encourage lifestyles that promote health. If you want to know more... call the Counselling service at 545-2893.

GRADLINK is a service linking graduate students for mutual support. Call Student Counselling service for more information 545-2893.

INTERESTED IN CARD TRICKS, sleight of hand and illusions? You're not alone. Call 545-6061 for club info.

YOU JUST MAY HAVE TO take a cold shower afterwards. Don't miss out on what's going to be the most talked about sports extravaganza this year - the Queen's Marketing Association's Sports Marketing Extravaganza. This event boasts: Mr. Mike Allen, Director of Marketing, Nike Canada. Mr. Robert Hunter, Vice President and General Manager, Air Canada Centre. Mr. Peter Cosentino, Director, Communications, Toronto Blue Jays. Be sure to arrive by 12:30 this Friday, September 25th @ Sutherland, JDUCC. Cocktail reception following @ The QPI with $5 membership fee. Dress: Business casual.

COMING TO QUEEN'S FROM OUTSIDE CANADA? We buy most foreign currencies at very good rates without service charge or commission. Check our website: www.wellingtonfx.on.ca. Wellington Foreign Exchange, 153 Wellington Street, 531-8731.

PUNK ROCK! I play guitar and drums and I want to join or form a local punk band. Call Ken at 531-4582 for info.

PROFESSIONAL TUTORING AND EDITING. Are you achieving the grades you deserve? Improve your essay skills, editing, research and writing. E.S.L. a specialty. Phone (416) 280-6113, fax (416) 960-0240.

BRAIN POISON IN YOUR GAS TANK? Dr. John Donaldson (Ph.D in experimental medicine) will discuss the health hazards of the fuel additive MMT previously banned here, still banned in most of the U.S., but soon to be sold in Canada. Kingsotn Frontenac Public Library, September 28th at 7:15 p.m., the Wilson Room.

ROCK/ELECTRONICA BAND is in search for a bassist, synth player, drummer/percussionist, sampler and DJ. Influences: Prodigy, Tea Party. Must have own equipment and must be dedicated. Call Ian or Trung at 531-8391 or 549-9567.

PRIMA COMPUTER BOOKS: The most important peripherals you'll ever own. Ask in the campus bookstore. Fast and Easy. In a Weekend; Admin Guides and more...

LABATT BREWERIES - For your keg party inquiries and needs, contact campus rep Ryan Benedict at 531-3115.

FOR SALE/FOR RENT
FOR SALE: Desk and dresser. Also ArtSai jacket, great condition. Asking $150! For more information call Liz at 547-6976.

FOR SALE: Laptop Computer, AST Ascentia 900N. 486 Intel, 24 MB Ram, 300 MB removable hard drive, fax-modem, network card, external CD-rom, 3.5 floppy, updated Windows 95, active matrix screen. AC adaptor and battery. $1100. Kacey 547-6921.

FOR SALE: Almost new, solid pine futon with armrests. Would make a perfect couch for your "ghetto" home and it folds down in to a spare bed. Asking $300. Call 549-3032.

NEARLY NEW SALE: used clothing, records, jewelry, toys, antiques, household items, linens, glassware, accessories. Friday September 25 from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m., and Saturday September 26 from 9:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. J.K. Tett Creativity Complex. 370 King St. W. (at Morton). Sponsored by the Volunteer committee of the Kingston Symphony.

LOST AND FOUND

LOST: Maroon Fleece Vest, "Contour." Lost on campus, Thursday September 17. Daryn @ 530-3419 or e-mail 6gdm.Thanks.

LOST: Diamond engagement ring lost sometime after Wednesday September 2nd in the Johnston Street - Queen's area. Reward if found. Please call 536-1679.

FOUND: At the Campus Bookstore an envelope containing wedding photos. Thompson from Walmart. Can be picked up at the Customer Service desk.

PERSONALS

HAPPY BIRTHDAY Lilian and Renée! Hope your dreams come true... Love, from ??

BURGER KING FREE

BIG KING WITH PURCHASE OF A BIG KING

no coupon necessary

$99

whopper junior every day

UP TO THIRTY WORDS FOR ONE LOW PRICE. STOP BY THE JOURNAL HOUSE AT 272 EARL STREET OR CALL THE BUSINESS TEAM AT 545-6711 TO BOOK YOUR CLASSIFIED AD TODAY.

'THE JOURNAL' CROSSWORD

Canadian Criss Cross by Walter D. Feener

- |                                |                            |                       |
|--------------------------------|----------------------------|-----------------------|
| ACROSS                  | DOWN                | 29. Director Stone    |
| 1. Central                     | 1. Get along               | 31. Giraffe relative  |
| 4. Walk doggedly               | 2. Vex                     | 32. Nature goddess    |
| 8. Not fully cooked            | 3. Put an end to           | 33. Of hours          |
| 9. Sporty cars                 | 4. "The Gold Bug" author   | 34. Day before        |
| 11. Golf course                | 5. Illumination unit       | 37. de mer            |
| 12. Six-sided figure           | 6. October's birthstone    | 39. Fictional captain |
| 14. Eggs                       | 7. Nonchalant              | 43. Mouth part        |
| 15. Definite article           | 8. Actor Phoenix           | 44. Binary digit      |
| 17. Actress Turner             | 9. Menu planners           | 46. Fourth letter     |
| 18. Ask for charity            | 10. Of sound               |                       |
| 19. Log float                  | 11. Throw in a high arc    |                       |
| 21. One-horse carriage         | 13. Worn-out horse         |                       |
| 22. Penitence                  | 16. Zenanas                |                       |
| 24. Dry as wine                | 20. Court game             |                       |
| 25. Organ of sight             | 23. Checker pieces         |                       |
| 26. Compass point              | 24. Clergyman's discourse: |                       |
| 28. Male offspring             | abbr.                      |                       |
| 30. Orange and black butterfly | 27. Finger wipers          |                       |
| 34. Room extension             | 28. Argot                  |                       |
| 35. Jump a rope                |                            |                       |
| 36. Kippur                     |                            |                       |
| 38. Fruitless                  |                            |                       |
| 40. Put a question to          |                            |                       |
| 41. Bikini top                 |                            |                       |
| 42. Wrap up in                 |                            |                       |
| 45. Perfect model              |                            |                       |
| 47. Twins constellation        |                            |                       |
| 48. "Old Curiosity Shop" girl  |                            |                       |
| 49. Lasso                      |                            |                       |
| 50. Visualize                  |                            |                       |

Answers for last issue's puzzle.

The writing's on the wall.
It could be yours.

Submit your creative work and your thoughts about other people's creative work to the Queen's Journal Reader, a monthly supplement to the Queen's Journal. So dig up those old poems and essays and let us publish them before you wake up one morning and hear them being broadcast on CNN. It happens, you know.

Please forward all submissions and inquiries to:

The Queen's Journal Reader
545.2800
journal@post.queensu.ca

The Laundry Cafe

291 Princess St.
542-2282
OPEN TIL 1am.

---

Sunday Pasta Night

Salad, Pasta & Focaccia
$4.95

THE $10,000 QUESTION

THE $10,000 QUESTION runs like this: if someone were to come up to you and offer you ten grand not to drink until you're 30, would you do it?

For me, it's not some silly thought experiment. It happened to me when I was 13. The person who made the offer was my dad, and I accepted.

The deal is that I cannot so much as taste alcohol knowingly and voluntarily. That means that I'm okay if someone tells me they've handed me some "apple juice" and I drink it, or if a few people hold me to the ground and force a beer down my throat (although to clear things up, please do NOT try this!). If I can abstain for seven and a half more years, I will be presented with a cheque for $10,000 (in Canadian funds, unfortunately) on my 30th birthday.

$10,000 isn't going to have the same buying power in seven years, but I'm also saving hundreds, maybe thousands more by not drinking til then.

Here are the answers to a few other common questions:

Q: How would your parents know if you drank?

A: We're on an honour system. My parents trust that quilt would eat me up if I ever decided to drink and not tell them, and I trust that they will pay up when I turn 30. Gulp.

Q: So you've never tasted alcohol?

A: Well yes, I've tasted it, but that was way back before I made the deal with my dad, so it's a rather vague memory. And of course I've had the near-beer stuff with 0.5 per cent alcohol, but it's none too tasty. I feel sorry for beer drinkers if the real stuff is anything similar.

Q: What happens if you decide to drink? Do you owe them $10,000?

A: Nope. Crazy, eh?

Q: What are you going to do with the money?

A: Go on the most amazing bender of all time.

Q: Really? Are you going to drink once you turn 30?

A: Well no, probably not. And I think that's what my dad was hoping for when he made the deal.

The scientific evidence suggests that if you make it that far, the odds are that you'll never start.

Q: Why does your dad have such a problem with drinking?

A: Well, he doesn't. He enjoys the occasional beer, and as a physical and health education teacher he is aware of the evidence that alcohol in moderation can be good for one's health. But he's also aware that alcohol use can be a slippery slope into alcohol abuse. Plus, I have a feeling that he's trying to teach me something about self-control.

Q: Don't you think that this is a pretty bourgeois bet? I mean, how many parents have $10,000 to throw away?

A: Actually, nobody really asks this question out loud. But I agree with the sentiment. I think my dad's a bit nuts, because I doubt he even has $10,000 in the bank right now, but I respect his right to make the offer, so I'm not going to turn it down.

For me, it's a great deal. $10,000 isn't going to have the same buying power in seven years that it has today, but I'm also saving hundreds, maybe thousands more by not drinking until esting is his overt admission of peer pressure. "Everyone at Laurentian drinks," so he might as well, too. Otherwise he's facing four long years of ostracism and sobriety, I suppose.

"You can never ask me that question, understand?"

Dan's in the unique position of having The Deal be more than a thought experiment, but he's certainly not alone in his position. When I ask people the $10,000 question, even hypothetically, three quarters of them turn it down. Most people think they wouldn't make it, and many tell me they simply wouldn't want to try.

For me, riding through university on the wagon has not been nearly as hard as I thought it would be. Mind you, it might have been tougher if my only option on a Saturday night was to chat up the miners' wives at some Sudbury saloon. But here at Queen's, with all its diverse nightlife, I've found lots to keep me busy. And once my friends knew I simply didn't drink, they were all very accepting of that.

It might have been tougher if my only option on Saturday night was to chat up the miner's wives at some Sudbury saloon.

I think peer pressure is more of an issue for those who do drink occasionally. I have at least one friend who's told me that it's nearly impossible for her to go to a bar and say "I'm not drinking tonight." Everyone else jumps on her like she's just committed a crime. I feel bad for anyone in her situation. My own state of affairs is admittedly goofy, and I don't think that non-drinking should be enforced, but I'm not sure that drinking should be, either.

The $10,000 question is a fun one to toss around at bars, but I don't think that how you answer it reveals a lot about you. For me, it may even be covering up a lot of issues and providing easy answers every time I'm offered a beer. The true self-examination will come on my 30th birthday when I find that I no longer have ten thousand reasons to say no. I admire Dan for his determination to stop procrastinating from real decisions. I just hope that the slippery slope isn't that slippery for him.

By ANONYMOUS

TOUPEE OR NOT TOUPEE: MISC ANSWERS

PATRICK STEWART, Bruce Willis, Tyson Beckford. All good-looking guys. It looks like society has of late accepted the bald or balding man as a sex symbol — or so it seems. Stewart and Willis are both older, more mature men. Tyson isn't genetically bald, he chose it as his "look." In the real world, a fair percentage of men begin to lose their hair in their early to mid twenties. So where are all the premature balding sex symbols in the media? I don't see any on Melrose Place or Party of Five or Dawson's Creek. I can watch movie after movie without ever coming across a "hunky" yet follicly-challenged young, male protagonist. Calvin Klein or Gap models, forget it. They're all sprouting thick manes like genetically-engineered canfields.

So where or to whom does a younger guy turn? There appear to be four viable options (these exclude the decidedly unpopular old-man-combover and spray-an hair).

The first is to merely accept it. You lose your teeth, your memory, your libido and your hair. It's the way of the world, man. Some you just lose earlier and more rapidly than others.

You lose your teeth, your memory, your libido and your hair. Some you just lose earlier than others.

The second option is to get a hairpiece. But the idea of taping or gluing an expensive weave at squirrel fur to your bare scalp is unsettling to many. I think wearing someone's actual hair (probably from some guy off the street who needed the money) is even more disturbing, even "wack." In addition, though toupees might be the cheapest option initially, the bother and cost of upkeep, as well as the potential for embarrassing situations, far outweighs its advantages.

The third option is surgical hair transplantation, chiefly a procedure known as "grafting." The most economical graft involves cutting a bald-spot-sized semicircle into one's scalp and twisting it around, thus lifting the balding area. Finer grafting involves taking healthy hairs from parts of one's body be far superior to its competitor Rogaine, Minoxidil and the Canadian created Nisim. However, aside from its hefty price-tag of $45-60 (U.S.) a month (almost double that of its priciest competitor), the fact that it messes with hormones and may or may not make getting an erection difficult is a considerable deterrent.

Above: Nathan Sager, Arts '00, bemoans what he perceives to be his lot in life.

Having exhausted possibilities of hair replacement, here lies the problem: none of these options — sticking a dead animal or your own ass-follicles on your head, permanently altering your bodies' chemical makeup or rubbing foul-smelling potions into your scalp — are very appealing concepts. They are all, in fact, sick. So what's a guy to do?

And the social pressures are on. Remember the opening bit about the lack of young, prematurely balding sex symbols? Well here's something else to chew on. There's a smorgasbord of negative models to avoid out there. George Costanza, Newman, most of Donny Devito's roles, etc., etc. The media equates baldness with aging, slimy, pricks. Your stereotypical know. The point is that young, prematurely balding guys are damned if they do something about their problem and double damned if they don't. It's a depressing state of affairs.

This is the real world, where people gloat over their own thick, flowing locks and laugh black-heartedly at the less fortunate.

In a perfect world, people would show their support for the victims by partially shaving their heads, perhaps in addition to wearing a ribbon of some variety. Alternatively, all it would take is for a couple of celebrities to get their stylist to set their hairline back a few inches or give them a fair-sized bald spot in order to sport a balding trend. But this is the real world, where people gloat over their own thick, flowing locks and laugh black-heartedly at the less fortunate. In this world we deal with post-pubescent acne, cellulite and the like, that's life.

Below: Nathan chooses an economical and self-satisfying, yet fairly unconvincing aid.

supervillain is bald, and your average skinhead too. It appears people equate baldness with evil as well.

In fact, the only positive "sex symbol" I can think of is Woody from T.V.'s Cheers, and he is an idiot. Also he may not even be a sex symbol. I don't

For the young, prematurely balding guys getting discouraged out there, I can only console you with the fact that balding means you have more testosterone than fully-haired guys. And being really virile must have its advantages somewhere, crushing beer cans with your forehead and that sort of thing.

Other than that, it means little else than being out at the barber shop quicker.

This leaves you more time to try on hats.

Ken Buttand wishes he could have spent more time figuring out how to end this article on a more uplifting note, but he's too busy shopping for fezzes.

QUI EST?

For fame and prizes, identify the celebrity shown in the photo to the left.

In the following issues of The Journal, a less and less fuzzy version of the celebrity will appear.

[NOTE: Somebody already guessed it, and got a CD by this artist of his choice.]

If you guess right you'll get a poster of this person (not the guy who already guessed right — I mean the celebrity).

TODAY'S CLUE: HE'S A SINGER/SONGWRITER, BUT HE'S ACTED & DIRECTED TOO.

Drop off your answer at 272 Earl St. or send an e-mail to: journal@post.queensu.ca

You got where you are with hard work and smarts.

Plymouth Neon Expresso

Plymouth Voyager

Jeep TJ

Plymouth Voyager

Chrysler can help out with your driving ambition.

As a recent graduate, you're on the road to achieving the best life has to offer. At Chrysler, we're rewarding that kind of initiative by offering $750 toward the purchase or lease of a new 1997, 1998, or 1999 Chrysler car or truck (excluding Dodge Viper and Plymouth Prowler), over and above most current Chrysler incentives. And, if you finance with Chrysler Credit Canada we'll defer your first three months payments! This $750 Grad Rebate is available to all college and university undergraduates and postgraduates who have graduated or will graduate between October 1, 1995, and September 30, 1998, and all currently enrolled master's and doctoral students (regardless of final graduation date). From high-value subcompacts and minivans, to tough pickups and sport utilities, we've got a vehicle that's right for you. No matter where you want to go in life...we want to make sure you get there.

For more information, visit your nearest Chrysler Canada Dealer. Or, hit www.chryslercanada.ca or call 1-800-361-3700.

CHRYSLER CANADA
Official Team Sponsor

Some restrictions apply. See a Chrysler Canada Dealer for details.

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY THE JOURNAL

SINCE 1873

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1998

A Gael force weekend

Queen's mauls McGill

By NATHAN SAGER

They came, they saw, they got smoked. In the 175th edition of the longest running rivalry in Canadian sports, the visiting McGill Redmen were handed one of the most lopsided defeats in the 114 year history of football between these schools. Before a euphoric multitude of over 12,000 alumni and current students who filled Richardson Stadium to the gills, the Gaels were virtually flawless in pummeling the Redmen 36-0.

Queen's 36
McGill 0

The significance of the victory extended far beyond merely improving Queen's conference record to 2-1, it signaled a likely return to the national rankings, which the Gaels were mysteriously bumped from last week. Head coach Bob Howes put the idyllic afternoon into perspective. "It was an absolutely brilliant day. It's just been an exciting week for the entire university community," he commented. Coach Howes praised his players' rein in their emotions. "They were able to remain at that optimal point. They really know how to focus on the task at hand."

The Gaels dominated play from the outset, yet led only 1-0 after the opening 15 minutes, as placekicker Jonathan Taylor missed two field goal attempts wide left. "We moved the ball well early, but couldn't pull the trigger," said offensive coordinator Steve Yovetich.

On Queen's third possession, backup quarterback Dustin Fallscheer was inserted to operate the hurry-up offence and the Gaels marched 96 yards for the day's first touchdown. The drive was sparked by fullback Chris Robyn's outstanding grab on the last play of the opening quarter, where he won a battle for the football with Redmen defensive back Suheil Brohi. After a reception by wide-out Paul DiRinaldo put the Gaels first and goal at the McGill eight-yard line, Hec Creighton candidate Paul Correale scored on the Gaels' bread-and-butter weakside toss.

In the waning minutes of the first half, the Gaels struck again, scoring two plays after an interception by Dimitri Haddad, a former McGill defensive back. On the first play, quarterback Beau Howes faked a handoff to Robyn on a wingback reverse, and then hooked up with Correale for 27 yards. This set up a 34-yard touchdown pass from Howes to slotback James MacLean that gave the Gaels a 15-0 lead. The Redmen took the kickoff and began generating some momentum, but the promising

Fullback Chris Robyn runs over a trio of defenders in the Homecoming game. PHOTO BY ALEX GREEN

Storm rips through Kingston

By RENEE HUANG AND FIONA STEVENSON

This year's Alumni Weekend will be remembered not only for its unbelievable football game but also as one of the wettest and darkest Homecoming weekends in Queen's history.

"Any tree limbs weakened by the ice storm came down."

— Captain Bob Carr, Kingston Fire Department

At approximately 9 p.m. Saturday, just as the evening was gaining momentum, gale-force winds from all directions, measured at nearly 100 km/h, flung sheets of rain across the city. According to Captain Bob Carr of the Kingston Fire Department, more than 60 per cent of Kingston was plunged into darkness by the blackout that hit around 9:30 p.m. and stayed for most of the night.

Minor flooding in some campus buildings set off alarms that made up the bulk of calls to the fire department. "Queen's Security, to take a load off us, were checking residences," said Carr. There was much concern over "water getting high enough and getting into the electrical system," he continued.

"I have no official warning reports that a tornado touched down," Carr said, although a ravaged piece of metal roofing from the Royal Military College athletic centre lay twisted on a nearby RMC soccer field the next morning. Fire Chief Glen Gow said dispatch

Please see Disaster on page 3

AMS pubs lose $11,000 in weekend blackout

By FIONA STEVENSON AND RENEE HUANG

This Alumni Weekend may have turned one of the bleakest Homecoming revenues for campus bars, as a storm that ripped through Kingston Saturday night dampened festivities and lost Alma Mater Society pubs an estimated $11,000 to $12,000 in revenue.

"Considering they lost five and a half hours worth of sales, they did considerably well."

— AMS Services Director Sarah Armstrong

According to AMS Services Director Sarah Armstrong, Alie's management budgeted to sell $20,000 on Saturday and ended up selling $9,911.45, while the Queen's Pub hoped to sell between $2,500 and $3,000 on Saturday, and ended up selling $1,843.15.

Said Armstrong: "Considering they lost five and a half hours worth of sales, they did considerably well."

At the QR patrons in the full-capacity bar were plunged into darkness around 9 p.m. as 100-km/h storm winds knocked out power.

Jackie Leggett, Arts '00, was one of the on-call servers Saturday night. She said Scott Thompson, assistant bar manager, instructed the bartenders to stop serving alcohol. "Everyone was just hanging out at the bar waiting for power to come back," Leggett said. "It was pitch black and there was one little flashlight hanging from the glasses rack." After it was apparent the power was out to stay, patrons began clearing out and staff eventually left at 11 p.m., unable to use the computer

Please see Situation on page 2

index

Volume 126, Issue 9
www.journal.queensu.ca

News	.1	ABE	.15
Editorials	.6	Crossword	.18
Opinions	.7	Classifieds	.19
Sports & Fitness	.9	MSC	.19
Features	.13

WEATHERWATCH

Today Sunny with clouds High 20°C, Low 8°C, POP 10%	Thursday Rainy High 20°C, Low 9°C, POP 60%
Wednesday Rainy High 22°C, Low 11°C, POP 60%	Friday Sunny with clouds High 16°C, Low 5°C, POP 20%

Please see 'As Good' on page 12

AIDS Walk overshadowed by Homecoming

BY LIANNE ELLIOTT

On Sunday afternoon, 15 Queen's University students joined 85 Kingston-area residents to participate in Kingston's eighth annual AIDS Walk.

As one of the 55 Canadian communities running AIDS Walks this weekend, AIDS Walk Kingston, organized by HIV/AIDS Regional Services (HARS) and the Dawn House Women's Shelter, raised a total of $5,600. The money will be directed to HARS, a local organization which provides essential support services for individuals affected or infected by HIV/AIDS.

"Every dollar raised helps someone in [the local] community who is living with HIV or AIDS," said John MacFavish, co-chair of the Kingston AIDS walk.

Through the efforts of Alma Mater Society Social Issues Commissioner Naomi Brunemeyer, Queen's has attempted to take an active role in this year's walk. Brunemeyer posted flyers around campus, gave each faculty information about the walk, and sat on the AIDS Walk Kingston committee.

Brunemeyer has attempted to better publicize the event this year because she believes Queen's has had "poor showing" at previous AIDS Walks. Though the number of student participants increased from three to 15 over last year, she said she was still disappointed with the turnout.

It is "unfortunate that this year the Walk has coincided with alumni weekend."

— AMS Social Issues Commissioner Naomi Brunemeyer

"It's not that I'm disappointed in Queen's students," she said, "but there needs to be changes made so that the walk can be even better publicized."

Brunemeyer hopes to form a Queen's Walk committee next year so that members of each faculty can work towards increasing student awareness and participation in the AIDS Walk.

Brunemeyer added it is "unfortunate that this year the Walk has coincided with alumni weekend," since the Walk conflicted with some Homecoming events and activities.

AIDS Walk Kingston marks one of several HIV/AIDS fund-raising events planned for the upcoming year. HARS has organized a fund-raising dance on October 17 at the Lion's Club and the Social Issues Commission will also host various events during the National AIDS Awareness Week which falls at the end of November.

Balloons display the prominent red ribbon of the AIDS awareness campaign at Sunday's AIDS Walk.

PHOTO BY CHRIS GLOVER

Situation more drastic for Alfie's than QP

Continued from page 1

or dishwasher.

Mark Picketts, QP manager, said the blackout will probably affect September sales for the pub. "It really, really hurt, there's no doubt about it. We were sort of expecting [Saturday] night to be the greatest night of the year," Picketts said. "I would ballpark [the loss] anywhere between $4,500 and $5,000... Saturday of Homecoming should've been our biggest night."

Picketts does not think the Homecoming losses will affect the overall annual income of the pub or its operating budget. "We predicted a 66 per cent sales increase in our budget and all month we've been above that," he explained. "We'll really be able to know at the end of the month."

"I can whine and complain all year and say that an extra $3,000 would've been great but you gotta suck it up," he added.

"In terms of [this month's] budget, it looks like [the QP is] going to hit their mark by Wednesday," confirmed Armstrong, who said pub sales for the month have been considerably higher than anticipated.

Unfortunately, the storm meant much larger losses for Alfie's Pub. "At the rate they were going [prior to the storm], they would have exceeded the $20,000 mark, we're quite certain," said Armstrong.

The line to Alfie's Pub, already near capacity, stretched almost to Clergy Street when the storm hit shortly before 9 p.m. After flicking on and off several times, the power turned off completely around 9:30 p.m., said Armstrong.

Inside the pub, "It was obviously getting very hot and the air quality wasn't as good as it could be because the ventilation system was down," said Armstrong. Alfie's staff was instructed to stop serving patrons and to circulate through the bar. "In most cases, [the patrons] were pretty much staying still," she said.

"Anytime you're short roughly $10,000... it's going to carry over through the year."

— AMS Services Director Soroh Armstrong

Pub management contacted Queen's Security who informed them that there were tornado warnings in the area, said Armstrong. Once the tornado watch had passed, pub staff, security patrollers and Student Constables began letting people out of the bar in an orderly fashion, and at approximately 10 p.m. the area was cleared, Armstrong said.

Despite strong sales earlier in the evening, the early close prevented the pub from meeting target sales even halfway. "Obviously it will hurt [Alfie's management] when it comes to meeting their monthly budgets," Armstrong said, and likely in the months to come. "Anytime you're short roughly $10,000... it's going to carry over through the year," she said.

Armstrong is exploring the possibility of holding a mock Homecoming event at Alfie's later in the month, in order to compensate for the weekend's losses. "There's nothing saying we couldn't hold another full-day Saturday event."

Education goes private

BY RENEE HUANG

Education students can finally breathe a sigh of relief and settle down to do what they're meant to do: teach. Queen's University's Faculty of Education will seek alternative placements in private schools for the 33 teacher candidates affected by the ongoing Ontario teacher's strike.

"We were looking at October 6 or 7 before teachers would go back in the classrooms," said Brian McAndrews, practicum coordinator with the Faculty of Education. "It is in the best interests of our students to get back in school and get on with their practicum."

Faculty advisors met Friday afternoon for two hours when it became apparent the strike would continue, McAndrews said. Of the 33 teacher candidates, nine will return to the public schools they were originally assigned to, while the remaining 22 students will be reassigned to private schools close to where their previous public school placements would have been.

While students are not required to relocate to private schools, McAndrews said teacher candidates are encouraged to get "the right experience" in the time allotted for practicum.

Back to work legislation does not necessarily mean the issues at the heart of the debate are solved, McAndrews explained, especially if teachers are forced back into the classroom. A positive working environment is necessary for teachers, and it is frustrating when the whole practicum portion of the program is complicated by uncertainty.

Greg Frankson, Con-Ed '97, has been in an alternative teaching placement since the beginning of the strike. "They don't want to wait any longer in terms of putting us in temporary spots," he said. He worries that because the private school system is "totally different," it may have implications on his teaching certificate.

"It is in the best interests of our students to get back in school and get on with their practicum."

— Brian McAndrews, practicum coordinator, Faculty of Education

Ontario College of Teachers, the supervisory board overseeing teachers, however, has strict guidelines outlining "legitimate practicum experience," McAndrews confirmed. Interested private schools must have supervising teachers and principals that are members of the college of teachers. In addition, principals must have principal qualifications and schools must agree to an inspection by Ministry of Education officials.

Upper Canada College and Trinity College School are two of the private schools that have "graciously moved in during this difficult time," McAndrews explained.

Private schools are not traditionally used as teaching placements because they are "sometimes not what you'd call a typical experience," he said. "Compare an inner city school to Upper Canada College and I think you'll get a feel for the differences."

However, the need to have teacher candidates in the classroom certainly overrules the desire to teach in "as typical an environment as possible," he continued. "These are still good teacher situations."

Frankson is ready to rise to the challenge. "I was looking forward to teaching in the public school system," Frankson said, emphasizing that he is eager to learn and try something new. "It's still education and I'm willing to give it a try."

For the second time in 1998, trees are ripped out at the roots, this time behind Stirling Hall.

PHOTO BY CIMI ACHAM

Disaster recovery plan in the works

Continued from page 1

fielded approximately 80 calls that reported cars stranded under electrical wires and trees down all over the city.

People also reported transformers burning and wires arcing, Carr said. Arcing happens when wet branches land on power lines and conduct electricity from one end to another, he explained.

"There seemed to be a lot of dead branches from the ice storm" landing on power lines, Carr said. "Any tree limbs weakened by the ice storm came down."

It was an exciting night for Queen's Security, said Director of Security Louise Fish.

"In the event we have another major incident... it is very clearly laid out who initiates a lot of the recovery activities."

— Wiebke Wilkens, director of environmental health and safety

Although Fleming Hall, where the Emergency Response

Centre is located, is outfitted with an emergency generator, the generator didn't work once power was lost Saturday evening. Using flashlights and operating while its radio system and most of its phones were down, "The ERC was doing the best it could to try to coordinate activities," Fish said. "Basically it was a matter of getting help where needed without communications."

Since February, Wiebke Wilkens, director of Environmental Health and Safety at Queen's, has been working on a disaster recovery plan to deal with natural disasters such as Ice Storm '98. The creation of the plan was initiated so that "in the event we have another major incident... it is very clearly laid out who initiates a lot of the recovery activities," Wilkens said.

The plan, developed by a task force chaired by Wilkens, awaits approval by the Board of Trustees. The next stage, said Wilkens, is for individual groups including Information Technology Services, Security, and Physical Plant Services to draft individual disaster recovery plans. These must be finished by the end of December, she added.

Security proposes new personal alarm system

BY JENNIFER MORRISON

The Queen's Security Advisory Council is considering the installation of a personal alarm system at Queen's which would provide students with immediate access to emergency assistance anywhere on campus.

It would be just like "having a hotline with you," said Director of Queen's Security Louise Fish, who brought the idea to council. "If it works as well as the manufacturers say, it would be a good idea," she added.

"We're still in the very beginning stages of taking a look to see if this is what people really want to have."

— Louise Fish, director of Queen's security

The Council's proposal for a personal security alarm system wishes to have displayed. This information, entered into the system when someone subscribes, may include medical conditions and specific security concerns, such as having an abusive ex-partner. A security supervisor would be immediately dispatched to the subscriber's location to provide assistance.

Similar systems are already being used on university campuses in the United States where it has been estimated that subscription rates are approximately 70 per cent for women and 40 per cent for men, according to data collected by the International Association of Campus Law Enforcers.

Sophisticated systems of this sort are fairly expensive to install, Fish explained, although the council does not have a hard estimate at this time.

The service would likely be offered on a rental basis, with an annual fee of approximately $50 to those wishing to subscribe. Depending on the number of subscribers and the cost of the subscription fee, it usually takes anywhere between three and five years to repay the initial investment, Fish said.

"... everyone was very supportive of the idea but few people would want to pay for it."

— Alison Loot, AMS vice-president (university affairs)

Although the idea was generally well received by members of the AMS assembly, the economic aspect of the system raised some concerns. According to Alison Loot, AMS vice-president (university affairs), "... everyone was very supportive of the idea but few people would want to pay for it."

Feedback regarding the system is encouraged and can be sent though e-mail to fishl@notes.queensu.ca or by calling the Queen's Security main office at extension 6733, before the end of October.

ASUS HEY!

Do you love Queen's? Want to share your enthusiasm with 1700 new faces? ASUS is looking for a spirited, motivated, and responsible ArtSci to lead ...

ARTS AND SCIENCE ORIENTATION '99

HEAD GAEL

IT COULD BE YOU.

INTERESTED?

Apply at The Core, 183 University, 545-6278
Applications due Tues., Oct. 13

Have Pouch Will Travel.

ROOTS CANADA

The Roots Kanga Hoody
Regular $54.<sup>95</sup>
NOW $39.<sup>99</sup>

ROOTS KINGSTON

Canadian Made
100% Cotton
3 Colours
4 Sizes

229 Princess Street - 546 - 7668 - Open Sundays

QUEEN'S MODEL PARLIAMENT 1999

JANUARY 20 - 23, 1999

SING UP: JDUC	Mon. Sept. 28	11:30-2:30
	Tues. Sept. 29	11:30 - 2:30
Mac-Corry	Wed. Sept. 30	11:00 - 3:00
	Thurs. Oct. 1	11:30 - 2:30
	Fri. Oct. 2	11:30 - 2:30

COST: $105 + $10 (DAMAGE DEPOSIT)

QMP '99... A HOUSE PARTY!

Questions?
Call the Campus
Activities Commission
545-6000 x4819

Local women march against violence

BY LESLIE PRESTON

One half of all Canadian women have experienced at least one incident of sexual or physical violence according to a 1993 Statistics Canada survey, and 60 per cent of these women were the targets of more than one such incident. On Friday night women of the Kingston community joined together in the Women Take Back the Night March to take a stand against all forms of violence against women.

"In Canada two women die every week at the hands of their intimate partners."

— A sign at the Take Back the Night March

Many members of the Queen's community participated in the 17th Annual Kingston Women Take Back the Night March, organized by the Sexual Assault Crisis Centre (SACC), including contingents from the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society Women's Empowerment Committee and The Women's Centre. The march was held to educate and raise awareness of violence against women, and take a stand against it.

The march began with a rally at Confederation Basin. The rally included music, speeches and protest chants. Margaret Little, a Queen's professor and anti-poverty activist, denounced the provincial government's spending cuts to women's shelters and welfare cuts. Holding signs with anti-violence slogans such as "A single rape violates all womyn" and statistics such as "In Canada two women die every week at the hands of their intimate partners," while chanting messages like "However we dress, wherever we go, yes means yes, no means no," the rally mobilized. Approximately 150 women marched up Queen Street, along Montreal Street and down Princess Street.

"Education is prevention... and this is one way to take a political form," said the organizer of the march Ana Margaret.

Margaret said she was pleased with the turnout of women at the march and believes it gave women who might not venture out by themselves the opportunity to have a voice. She stressed the importance of being proactive and speaking out against violence directed at women.

Queen's student Taryn McCormick, co-chair of the ASUS Women's Empowerment Committee said, in addition to educating and raising consciousness, the march is "one of the few chances feminists in Kingston have to get together... on a night when it is socially acceptable for us to be loud and obnoxious."

Gemma Zelmanovits, co-chair of the Women's Empowerment Committee said, "The march is important as it symbolizes the strength and unity of women in Kingston... and that we will make our voices heard."

Outstanding Contributors: September

CARVIN

Stephanie Carvin has been an outstanding contributor to the news section this month. Her enthusiasm was evident from the moment she walked into The Journal house during Orientation Week and happily accepted three story assignments. Often contributing more than once per issue, Stephanie has also accepted last minute assignments and come to us with story ideas. An excellent writer and a strong reporter, Stephanie always puts her best efforts into her stories, and is a pleasure to work with.

STEPHANIE

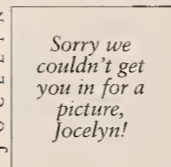

VILLANUEVA

Rachelle Villanueva has been a tireless contributor to the Features section. Her witty and wonderful cartoons brightened the page on a constant basis. Rachelle has been a great on-call contrib and never wavered from her incisive social commentary — no matter how weird the topic Sean put to her.

RACHELLE

LAPORTE

Sorry we couldn't get you in for a picture, Jocelyn!

JOCELYN

Jocelyn Laporte is the dramatic contributor for A&E. She has written numerous articles for the Arts and Entertainment and News sections. When the A&E section was stuck for a contrib for a last minute story, immediately we knew Jocelyn would be ready and willing. Her articles are always interesting, well-written and extremely polished. Jocelyn, we think you're a superstar.

Fast Facts

In Here

Walk for Red Cross

The Canadian Red Cross invites the public to participate in a walk Saturday, October 3 to celebrate healthy, active living. The walk will start at Red Cross House at 150 West St. behind the Frontenac County Court House at 9 a.m. and is sponsored by the Link to Health program of the Kingston and District Branch Red Cross.

Breast Cancer Action Kingston

Toronto's Act 2 theatre group will present a performance of "Handle with Care? Women Living with Metastatic Breast Cancer" before the annual general meeting and election of the Board of Directors. The performance and meeting will take place from 7 to 9:30 p.m. on Thursday, October 8 in the Wilson Room of Kingston Frontenac Public Library. Both are open to the public.

Out There

Torys fight for leadership

Hugh Segal and Brian Pallister fought for the conservative right, as Joe Clark leads the race for the PC leadership. Segal attacked Pallister's alleged sympathy for the Reform Party. The tactics suggest that Mr. Clark's support is solid.

Canadian profits to decline

Market experts warn that fourth-quarter profits from many major companies will be poor. Some companies have already issued warnings to investors, including BC Rail and Canadian Airlines. Some of the weakest companies are those which are heavily exposed to foreign markets, especially in southeast Asia. The Toronto-Dominion Bank is warning that the Canadian economy has "lost some momentum" as a result of the steep drop in commodity prices. The bank says that it expects the Canadian economy to grow by less than three per cent in 1998, and less than two per cent in 1999, after growing by almost four per cent last year.

Kohl out after 16 years

Gerhard Schroeder and the Social Democrat party defeated Chancellor Helmut Kohl as the first newly elected German government in a half-century. Kohl, the man who unified Germany and helped create Europe's common currency, took full responsibility for the loss and took responsibility for the defeat, resigning as chairman of the Christian Democratic Union.

Multideas Promotions

Screen Print and Embroidery.
In house Graphic Design.
More than 300,000
Promotional Products to choose from!

See us at the ALUMNI WEEKEND SIDEWALK SALE

Receive

$5 off!

Limit: 1 coupon per customer

Any clothing item
at the
Alumni Weekend
Sidewalk Sale!
Saturday, Sept 26th

Multideas
Promotions

530 Barnsley Cres. Kingston, ON
Tel: (613) 634-2437 Fax: (613) 634-2505
www.multideas.com
multi@adan.kingston.net

DOFASCO
Our product is steel. Our strength is people.

Career Opportunities

Dofasco is one of North America's most productive and profitable steelmakers. Using the latest Basic Oxygen and Electric Arc Steelmaking Processes, we produce a full range of flat rolled steels for our customers in the Automotive, Energy, Pipe and Tube, Appliance, Container, and Steel Distribution Industries.

We are a company that provides our customers with steel solutions to meet their changing needs. As such, we're committed to exciting strategies for long-term economic growth, including investment in new technologies and the recruitment of exceptional graduates and undergraduates who can share our vision for the future.

We are offering permanent positions to 1999 graduates in a variety of disciplines, as well as employment to senior students prior to graduation. We will be interviewing on your campus soon. Check with your Career Placement Office for more details.

For more information about Dofasco, visit our website: www.dofasco.ca.

Dofasco is an equal opportunity employer.

What's Happening

The AMS updates you on what's happening on and around campus

Back to the FUTURES FORUM! It's not about Michael J. Fox, but it is about grad schools and employment. It's on Oct. 13-15, and will include guest speakers, shmoozefests, and free stuff! Wanna volunteer? Contact Sarah Mills @ the Campus Activities Office: 545-6000 x. 4819. FUTURES (forum) MADE OF VIRTUAL INSANITY!

DINE WITH THE PM IN OTTAWA! QIAA/CIAA presents "Independent Partners: Canada, the USA, and the World" 15-17 1998, Chateau Laurier Hotel, Ottawa. Cost $30 membership fee, + $100 (transportation, accommodation, and registration). Contact 548-0104, or sign up at the OP Oct.2, 5:30-7:30.

Kaleidoscope allows you to make the difference in the life of a local elementary school student. Applications are available at the AMS office and the Infobank. Applications will be due 1:00pm, Oct.2. Contact kscope@post.queensu.ca for more info.

Give the gift of life. The Red Cross Blood Donor Clinic will be held Oct. 5-6, Grant Hall, 2pm-7pm. Volunteers and donors urgently needed. Contact Erica at 6ejd1 or 531-5266 for more info.

WE WANT YOU for the Queen's Inquiry Committee. Be on the front edge of AMS EXCITEMENT. Meet tonnes of cool people. Call 545-2732 or drop by the Communications Commission in the AMS. Don't be shy - CALL NOW.

DEATH! Come to the funeral service for accessible post secondary education. Outside JDUC, Wednesday, Sep. 30, 11:45

All the people be sayin' "What is the AMS?" Boyz & Girtz, the moment you have been waiting for is almost here Sept. 29 in the JDUC. Find out about volunteering positions or about the AMS Services. So be there, or die screaming.

Queen's Model Parliament: January 20-23, 1999 Sign up from 11:30-2:30 on these days: JDUC: Mon (28) and Tues (29) MacCorry: Wed(30 11-3), Thurs(1, Fri)(2) $105 + $10 damage deposit. QMP'99... A HOUSE PARTY! Contact 545-6000 x.4819.

Be a Street Captain! Applications due @ AMS Front Desk by Tues. Oct. 6. Committee Members due Wed. Sept. 30. Questions? 545-6000 x.5178

If you have something you want to tell the world then

phone the AMS Communications Commission @ 545-2732, or email Comm@ams.queensu.ca

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

Serving us respect

THIS WEEKEND'S HOMECOMING celebrations were a far cry from the rowdy street-parties of the 1980s, when the excessive drinking and destructive nature of the event graced headlines across Canada. Notwithstanding the hijinx of a few troublemakers, Queen's students responded to the limited re-introduction of alcohol at the football game with restraint and common-sense.

Seeing as the event was relatively unblemished and even the officially sanctioned Coke-a-cola horns were used as intended (and not as projectile weapons), perhaps it is time the administration consider allowing beer to be served in the stands.

Perhaps it is time the administration consider allowing beer to be served in the stands.

Allowing alcohol in the stands is hardly unheard of at Queen's. It was only in the aftermath of a decade of particularly unruly behaviour during Homecoming weekend that the Queen's Senate passed a motion on May 28, 1987 to ban all alcohol from Richardson stadium. The administration then agreed to forego breathalyzer tests and strip-searches because the few fans who still cared to attend regular season games were sufficiently complacent. Nonetheless, that year's Homecoming festivities reached new heights of depravity when a post-game party led to over a hundred arrests and thousands of dollars in damage.

In retrospect, the student's irreverent attitude for the law during Homecoming only began to improve after an awareness campaign was launched in the fall of 1988 by the AMS, the Alumni association and the administration. The campaign's success should be measured by the years of relative tranquillity that ensued, and especially the respect shown by this year's crowd in not rushing the field when only a fraction of a second remained on the clock.

Hopefully, the administration will show students the same respect by realizing that by allowing beer into the stands we will not reverse the progress that has been made in transforming Homecoming into a safe and fun event.

Stay off the concrete

SIDEWALKS IN KINGSTON SHOULD be no mystery for cyclists: they're found at the side of roads, and are meant for walking. As such, it's difficult to sympathize with those who protest the recent increase to the fine for riding bicycles on sidewalks as unfair. As Constable Mike Shultz so eloquently explained, "There's been a ban on sidewalks, almost since they built sidewalks."

There is a good reason highways have a different lane for passing than cruising: objects travelling at different speeds on a narrow stretch of road tend to crash into each other! Likewise, it seems inherently dangerous to allow cyclists to share the same five feet of concrete with much slower pedestrians. While an increase in the fine from $30 to $100 is substantial, especially for penny-pinched students, it should be seen as an attempt to deter cyclists from using the sidewalks, and not to impoverish them.

That said, it is important to recognize the danger that cyclists face from Kingston's increasingly reckless drivers. While cyclists certainly do not belong on the sidewalks, it seems almost as absurd to suggest they be abandoned to the mercies of taxi drivers and trucks. Perhaps a fair compromise would be the creation of a segregated lane on certain streets that would be dedicated for cyclists. Since other urban centers, such as Ottawa and Montreal, have already moved in this direction, the city of Kingston would be wise to follow suit.

Bons Mots: Doh it not show vilely in me to desire... beer?
— William Shakespeare

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF
Keith Gerin
Tara Mansbridge
MANAGING EDITOR
Laura MacInnis
NEWS EDITOR
Fiona Stevenson
ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS
Shawn Brimley
Renae Huang
Vacant

EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
Paul Heister
ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR
Stefan Murray
ASSISTANT ARTS EDITORS
Sarah Crosbie
Lilian Kim
FEATURES EDITOR
Sean Springer
OPINIONS EDITOR
Todd Jackson

SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Adam Kaminisky
ASSISTANT SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Robert MacNeil
MSC. EDITOR
Ken Butland
GRAPHICS EDITOR
Janice Chan
THE READER EDITOR
Jesse Craig Bellringer

SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT
John Bowman
SPECIAL PUBLICATIONS EDITORS
Elizabeth Frogley
Shandley McMurray
PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS
Alex Kronby
James Terjanian
WEB EDITOR
Marco Lui

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Kraft
SALES REPRESENTATIVES
Kari Britnell
Andrew Cooke
Kristian Li
ADVERTISING MANAGER
Vacant
ADVERTISING DESIGNERS
Katherine Colbourn
Annie Gie
STUDENT MANAGER
Vacant

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Tuesday, September 29, 1998 • Issue 9 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.
Copyright © 1998 by The Queen's Journal; all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Goss Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Gananoque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston's community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions.
Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2N8. Telephone—editorial: 613-545-2800; advertising: 613-545-6711; Fax: 613-545-6728. Email: journal@post.queensu.ca. Internet: http://www.journal.queensu.ca. Circulation 9,000.
Issue 10 will be published on Friday, October 2, 1998.

BY SHAWN BRIMLEY

Our moral stain

THE QUESTION OF LEADERSHIP IS being asked more and more on the public stage, as the issue of political morality and accountability become increasingly focused on the individual leader. With the soap opera that has become American politics, it seems that our tendency to look south has diverted attention from what will become one of the most important Canadian stories of the year. A grave injustice has occurred in our country, and yet, we seem much more inclined to focus on the moral stains of a foreign leader.

I cry shame on those who would not allow students the right to protest.

During last fall's Asia Pacific Economic Co-operation summit, the RCMP pepper-sprayed and arrested dozens of student protesters in order to prevent them from being seen by the visiting heads of state, including then Indonesian President Suharto. Documents have shown that in addition to being pepper-sprayed and arrested, many students were strip-searched and forced to sign agreements that they would no longer protest as a condition of their release. Not to stop there, RCMP officers inquired into the political beliefs and sexuality of the protesters they arrested.

These horrendous acts have been traced to the Prime Minister himself, who has refused to answer questions in the House of Commons regarding his role in the APEC security measures. These incidents should be inconceivable in Canada, a country in which the freedom of expression, association and the freedom from arbitrary arrest and detention is constitutionally guaranteed in our Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

It is regrettable that student organizations on campus are not taking this issue as their own, and bringing the media spotlight off Clinton's pants, and on to Chretien's own moral stain. Campus newspapers and student governments have a responsibility to address issues that affect students, issues such as the right to protest and speak freely, and not just the extent to which our education is 'accessible.'

These unforgettable and cowardly acts happened to students, just like you and I. Strip-searched, coerced into signing statements and degraded by the very national institutions that are supposed to protect our rights and freedoms.

I cry shame on those who would not allow students the right to protest, to the RCMP who obeyed obviously unconstitutional orders, to the Prime Minister who allowed such things to happen.

I humbly call upon our student government to publically protest the unconstitutional, inhumane and even savage treatment of fellow students, to stand up for the rights of each Canadian, and to show those in power that Queen's students stand behind those who wish to peacefully protest, regardless of their agenda or political beliefs.

Finally, if it is shown that the Prime Minister himself ordered the RCMP to take such extreme measures, to violate our entrenched and inalienable rights and freedoms, then I call for his immediate resignation.

BY SHAWN BRIMLEY

OPINIONS

Developing perspective The value of looking beyond the fishbowl

IPICKED UP A COPY OF The Toronto Star the other day and to my surprise there was a story on an event that was, without a doubt, one of the biggest in Canada this year. Nelson Mandela, soon to be ex-leader of the African National Congress, Nobel Peace Prize winner, and the humanitarian who led the fight against Apartheid in South Africa in a prison cell, was to visit the Skydome in Toronto. He was to speak to 30,000 school children on the fight against racism and how it is important to be tolerant in a multicultural world.

Then came a sinking feeling: it seemed that nobody at Queen's acknowledged the importance of the speaking engagement, or even knew about it in the first place.

Mandela, one of the most powerful and remarkable individuals of our era, should have more attention than he received. However, Mandela's speaking engagement and the lack of attention it received from Queen's as a whole has become a facilitator for my vocalization on internationalism here at our esteemed university.

As a world-class university, being academically world-class is coupled with a certain responsibility to have an international perspective. Therefore, it seems somewhat disconcerting that many individuals do not always recognize events happening outside of Queen's.

Skill Testing Question:

Can you find Queen's?
(for extra points, what is everything else?)

It is important to realize that in an era of globalization, all universities—including Queen's—must become more global in ideas and perspectives. This includes not only academic institutions, but the students attending university themselves.

Granted, the concept of "think globally, act locally" is a two-way street, full of misinterpretations and false pretenses about what it means to be "internationally-minded." However, there are many events here at Queen's to help develop more international perspectives. The Queen's Model United Nations is an excellent example of individuals that attempt to present a more worldly view of university life in general. The United, an International Society newspaper debuting this week is another example of this. This multicultural paper is attempting to foster greater acknowledgment of diversity here at Queen's, along with the promotion of various international cultural events and people.

While it is important to recognize the issues of domesticity here at Queen's, I truly believe that it is just as important to be thinking in the context of the larger worldview as well. We are not just individuals in a static, self-contained environment of academic and social interaction. All events, however finite in size, have an impact on the global scale of things. Therefore, one must approach international concepts with an open mind, a sense of acceptance and understanding. In our own small way, that is one of the best things we can do to help create a better world for our children and ourselves.

GREG HUGHES
ARTSCI '01

Letters to the Editors

Welcome to Queen's, Katie

Dear Editors,

I thought that it was unfortunate and perhaps a bit, um, revealing that Katie Edwards was so obviously made uncomfortable by Marte Natvik talking about her "tits." However, I don't think that this is any indication of immaturity on the part of those she accused. Quite the opposite in fact.

I'd like to extend a warm welcome to Queen's University to Katie. I hope she's ready for many more uncomfortable experiences, because it's been my experience that part of learning is being made to feel uncomfortable, and that learning doesn't stop at the classroom doors here.

Kudos to Marte for being willing to share such personal experiences and thoughts with the campus population at large. I wish you and your son all the best.

Sincerely,

Christopher Boodram
Arts '99

Leggett is not Suharto

Dear Editors,

James Worrall's article in The Journal on September 25 touched upon some very important issues facing Queen's students. Rising tuition and a seemingly perpetual stalemate between the administration and our student government are indeed worthy of serious examination. Unfortunately, while Worrall did manage to highlight these problems, his article was nothing short of profoundly morose and utterly devoid of any and all reason.

Worrall's article rested upon the premise that tuition fees are only going up because the satanic Principal Leggett and his greedy arch-demons are allowing them to. He compared our situation to that of the Indonesian students who rallied against Suharto's foul reign of terror, claiming that if they can make a difference, so can we. Tired of "compromising ourselves into bankruptcy", Worrall calls upon Queen's students to take some "strong action" to stop our impending financial apocalypse. Why, just like the Indonesians, we're oppressed and must fight for our very lives!

Well, fuck me! If I'd known all I had to do was grab my buddies and our pitchforks and torches and storm Leggett's home, I'd have done it years ago! Give me a break. To compare our problems to those of the Indonesians is absolutely ludicrous. We live in the best country in the world and have security they can only dream of. Suharto fell because he was a murderous dictator. I doubt Leggett meets the same criteria for daring to allow tuition to rise.

I think it's important to make a statement against buffoons like Worrall who spread fear and ignorance about tuition hikes. Tuition fees have been rising steadily since the 1980s. Yet, the percentage of young Canadians enrolled in university has continued to rise despite this. As well, thousands of Canadian students leave Canada each year to enjoy even higher tuition fees in the United States because they feel it is a chance at an even better education while very few Americans venture into Canada, despite our lower tuition levels. Furthermore, those of us that graduate university will be among the top income-earners in the country. Within a decade of graduating we will be able to pay back our loans especially under the Income Contingent Repayment Loan (ICRL) plan. James Worrall is in Med School! When he graduates he will be a doctor, one of the most highly paid professionals in the world. Where the hell does he get off bitching about already subsidized tuition levels?

Our governments are broke. End of story. They can not give us a free-ride in post-secondary education any longer. Worrall seems to think that by throwing a fit and having another student protest we'll manage to solve what discussions so far have not. Unfortunately for this hippie-wannabe, it won't work. We must accept the fiscal reality we now face and come up with intelligent solutions based on it. Changes in the student loan program, especially with regards to allowing students to pay back their loans once their income rises (i.e. they get a job) are the solutions we need to seek. Researching these answers may not be easy, but to follow the path of Worrall and others like him will only sink the level of debate to new lows. Not only can we do better than that, we must. We owe it to ourselves as some of the best and brightest students around the world.

Brock Jones
Arts '00

talking

HEADS

Is international news important to you?

KRISTI CAMPBELL
ARTSCI '99

KYLE TINNING
COMMERCE '99

CHRISTIEN LEDROIT
ARTS '99

MICHAEL STEWART
ARTSCI '99

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS POLICY

The Editors of The Journal want to hear from readers. All letters must include the writer's name, signature, and telephone number. Letters that are legible, legal, literate and held to under 400 words will be published if space permits. The deadline for Tuesday's issue is Sunday at noon. The deadline for Friday's issue is Wednesday at noon. Drop off letters to The Journal House, 272 Earl St., fax to 545-6728, or better yet, e-mail them to journal@post.queensu.ca.

"No, it doesn't affect me directly. Let's be honest, there's a select group of politically correct future lawyers who might pretend to be."

"Should be but it isn't. I want to know but I'm just lazy."

"What kind of stupid question is that? Of course it is. The world does exist outside of Kingston."

"Yes, because it helps me to understand the concept of my life in the bigger picture."

Co-operative education at Queen's - The Experience Option
TEO Information
Night
Thurs. Oct. 1 Stirling B 6:00 p.m.

Internships
Internships
Internships
Internships

Test your career choice

Learn the latest in business/technical know-how

Meet last year's interns

Earn while you learn

CLUBS NIGHT

SEPTEMBER 30TH

&

OCTOBER 1ST

GRANT HALL

6 PM - 10 PM

The clubs are out there...

X

SPORTS & FITNESS

Great game, great party

The Peanut Gallery

BIG MAC ATTACK

Thanks to Montreal pitchers graciously serving up fat pitch after fat pitch, Mark McGwire hit four bombs in his final two games of the season. This pushed the impressive number of home runs up to 70 for the St. Louis slugger, the new record. The red-head's slugging rival, Sammy Sosa, who had tied the race at 66 with three games left, was stalled at that number when the regular season came to its end. So after months and months of hype, the biggest, strongest and most popular slugger broke the record first and then raised the bar to a new level. Regardless of the outcome, both of these great players and men should be credited with putting on a great show and giving life back to the grand old game.

REAL SEASON BEGINS

With only the National League wildcard to be decided in a one game play off between the Chicago Cubs and the San Francisco Giants at Wrigley Field, the rest of the post-season picture has been painted. The winner of this game will have the pleasure of facing the Atlanta Braves and their 106 victories. In the other National League match-up, the surging Houston Astros will play their five game set against the San Diego Padres. In the junior circuit, the vaunted New York Yankees will face the Central Division champion Cleveland Indians. In the other series, the West Division winner Texas Rangers will take on the faltering wildcard Boston Red Sox. Let the games begin.

WONDERFUL HALLADAY

Toronto Blue Jays rookie pitcher Roy Halladay threw 8 2/3 innings of no-hit baseball against the Detroit Tigers before giving up a gopher ball to pinch hitter Bobby Higginson. Halladay was able to handle the final batter and complete the 2-1 win, his first, in only his second career major league start. While it was too little, too late for the Blue Jays playoff chances this season, Halladay's emergence looks very good for the Blue Jays pitching staff next year.

IF CHRISTMAS CAME EARLY

Post-season baseball would match the excitement of the home run chase.
 • The two-referee experiment in the NHL would go the way of the fluorescent haseball and the tricolour hasekball — extinction.
 • Every Queen's football game would be like Homecoming/Kill McGill.

Whar an afternoon. A sellout crowd, Kill McGill, a cool fall day and a spankin' new hospitality tent — it was perhaps the best homecoming game Queen's has seen in years. The students and alumni merged together and told their tales of past glories and future dreams over a nice cold cup of $3 draft.

The perfect day 'kicked off' at 1 p.m. and Richardson Stadium was eventually filled to capacity. The fans on the student side had an excruciatingly long wait to get into the stadium as Student Constables were frisking everyone. On the alumni side, however, service was swift and efficient without any hassles. Maybe security figured that the alumni were too old and tired to party with the current group of students. That judgement call, however, was quickly proven false.

With every touchdown scored, the happily hosed crowd responded by belting out a throaty 'Oil Thigh'

Once students and alumni made their way into the stadium, many found time to check out the hospitality area. Judging from the reaction of most of the participants, it was a resounding success. While there are still a few kinks to be ironed out (like the gargantuan line-ups and the one beer at a time policy), Queen's can hold its head up high for creating an area that provided so many good times without any altercations.

The best part of the hospitality area, besides the beer of course, was the mingling between alumni and students. Everyone was happy to be back and the stories and jokes flowed as freely as the draft. With every touchdown scored, the happily hosed crowd responded by belting out a throaty 'Oil Thigh' and performing a little highland dancing. Once most of the beer had been consumed, we realized that the game was almost over and thus staggered to the sidelines in anticipation. We had to carry on the tradition of charging the field and taking part in the biggest 'Oil Thigh' in recent years. After a false start with 0.4

seconds left in the game, the mad hysteria swept over the field and the heart of Queen's University shone through.

I've been to four homecomings now and this was definitely the sweetest. Maybe since this was my last one as student, I took a step back and really paid attention to the sights and sounds of the Queen's spirit. As every student knows, once in a while everything falls into place and the perfect partying day occurs. While those of us graduating this year will never experience this same sensation again, it was certainly satisfying while it lasted. Of course, many of us will be back next year as alumni when we can relive our younger days and pass on all of our worldly wisdom to those not yet baptized to Queen's spirit.

A big group of fans hang out and enjoy the festivities at the Homecoming/Kill McGill football game. Queen's won 36-0. PHOTO BY APRIL BOND

Soccer teams dominate Ryerson

BY MATTHEW GRANT

The Queen's men's soccer team savagely pummeled the Ryerson Rams by a mark of 8-1 on a humid Sunday afternoon. The win capped off a successful Alumni Weekend for Queen's varsity sports at Richardson Stadium.

Andy Westoll opened the scoring for Queen's and joining him on the scoresheet was teammate Mike Cowan and the Rams' frustration was evident late in the second half, when Ryerson's Tim Clark was ejected after a flagrant tackle on an attacking Queen's player. It was his second yellow card of the afternoon and the Gaels were able to roll to victory with the man advantage for the last 20 minutes.

"The alumni who came out to the game really gave us a boost," commented Miura. Miura spoke of a team dinner a few days prior to the game where there was mention of the '93 team. That squad was one that coaches felt was in a transition period, but then went undefeated for the second half of the season. Miura and the rest of the Gaels, many of whom are rookies, hope that this game can put them on the same path.

BY CALVIN LAM

With a 3-0 shutout versus the Ryerson Rams, the Queen's women's soccer team extended their win streak to five games and grabbed sole possession of first place in the OUA East division.

It was a great first half that allowed the Gaels to cruise to an easy victory. Co-captain Jen Sarginson opened the scoring with a quick goal just two minutes into the match. Then 25 minutes later, forward Angie Crockford made it 2-0 for Queen's, on a goal that was set up by a beautiful chip pass that put her on a breakaway. The Ryerson goaltender stopped her first shot, but Crockford was there to bang home the rebound. Queen's third and final tally came from the foot of midfielder Judith Trepanier who took a superb cross set up by Jill Kitching from deep in the corner and buried it behind the helpless goalie.

Queen's balanced attack proved to be too much for the Rams as the Gaels dictated the flow of the entire match. Their superior passing and ball handling skills were clearly evident as they spent much of the game deep in Ryerson territory.

The only serious threat to Gaels' goalkeeper and CIAU Athlete of the Week Amanda Foran's shutout came midway through the second half. A Ryerson forward managed to evade her defender and fired a point blank shot that was batted

MEN'S SOCCER		WOMEN'S SOCCER
QUEEN'S	8	QUEEN'S	3
RYERSON	1	RYERSON	0

Do you want to be part of your student newspaper?

The Journal is looking for an Opinions Page Editor

We're in search of an energetic and self-motivated person to edit the Opinions section of The Journal — the only section dedicated entirely to voicing the thoughts, feelings and commentary of members of the Queen's community.

Nominations are open for The Journal Board of Directors Staff/Contributor Position

If you would like to help guide the business operations of your student newspaper and you have written, taken photos, or contributed to The Journal at least twice since May, you are eligible to sit on The Journal Board of Directors as a voting member. If you are interested, please call Laura at 545-2800. Voting for this position will take place on Sunday, October 4 from 2:30 p.m. to 4 p.m. Everyone who has contributed to The Journal is eligible to vote. Come join us!

Deadline for applications:

Opinions Editor — Friday, Oct. 2 at 5 p.m.
Staff/Contributor Nominations — Wednesday, September 30 at 3 p.m.
 Elections will be held Sunday, Oct. 4 at The Journal House
 Applications for Opinions editor can be dropped off at 272 Earl St, faxed to 545-6728, or e-mailed to journal@post.queensu.ca. For more info., contact Keith, Laura or Tara at The Journal.

ROARING WEDNESDAYS NIGHTS OF UNBROIDLED HILARITY! COMICS

every other wednesday starting wed. sept. 30, 1998

HEADLINER: GEMINI NOMINATED

RUSSELL PETERS

Chalmers United Church
 212 Barrie Street (at Clergy)
 546-3263

A Caring Community,
 a Questioning Faith,
 a Grounded Hope

Worship every Sunday, 10:30 a.m.

We welcome Students,
 Faculty, and Staff!
 Join us, in person or by radio
 960 AM (CFPX)

Visit our web site: <http://web.canlink.com/ueckington/chalmers/>

Gaels undefeated

Queen's in action last Sunday.

PHOTO BY TIM GILLESPIE

Continued from page 9

away by an outstretched Foran. The keeper continued her incredible hot streak in net, posting her second consecutive shutout and allowing just two goals in her last five games. Her stellar net-minding capabilities have been a key reason for the Gaels' early season success.

While the team was pleased with their results, they were equally pleased that the match gave many of their starters a much needed break. "This was a good game for us. We're fighting a lot of injuries and we need some time to rest," commented midfielder Nuala Grieve, who herself was sidelined by an ankle injury. Like many of the other regular starters, Grieve expects to return to the starting lineup in Tomorrow's match against Carleton.

In the game

Men's tennis

The unbeaten squad had a perfect weekend at the RMC tennis courts obliterating both Brock and Ottawa 7-0 on Saturday.

Women's field hockey

In a spirited struggle, the field hockey team tied the powerful Guelph squad 0-0 in Toronto.

Women's tennis

The squad traveled to Toronto and won both of its matches in convincing fashion. The undefeated team beat Waterloo 7-0 and then beat York 5-2 victory.

Men's Lacrosse

In a tough outing, the team lost to rival York University 18-7 at West Campus. Neil Boon paced the attack with two goals in a losing cause.

Men's rugby

The first team remained undefeated by beating the going on the road and defeating the vaunted Western Mustangs 27-25. The second team had an easier time winning 43-3.

We regret to announce the death of Accessible Post-Secondary Education

Funeral services will be held
 Wednesday, September 30, 1998

Outside JDUC
 11:45am

Eulogy by Mr. Tom Stanley, AMS President

Executive Stationary
 - great for cover letters and resumes

Pubwear
 Alfie's PUB pub

Queen's Entertainment Card
RASCALZ
 Saturday, Oct. 3
 Live at: Alfie's PUB

Campus Event Tickets

It's all at ...

exchange

CDs Pubwear Tapes Crazy Books & Staff

Student Lounge
 Upper Ceilidh, JDUC
 545-2120
ubs@ams.queensu.ca
www.ams.queensu.ca/AMS/UBS

Bring your resume!

From Saturday, October 3, you'll only have 212 days to

get a job

after graduation. So why not come to IBM's career fair and get a head start?

open house

On Saturday, October 3, you're invited to IBM's headquarters to learn about the exciting opportunities open to you in almost all areas of the company.

Mark the date on your calendar. You don't want to miss this opportunity to get a sense of the buzz that comes from creating the staff that will change the world. Reps from various areas of IBM, along with the leading-edge technology being used by business today, will be on hand so you can get a first-person look at the kind of energy, inventiveness and breakthrough thinking that make IBM a great place to work.

Opportunities abound for comp sci, engineering, business and arts students in all areas of IBM — from our leading software unit to ISM Corp. to our IBM Global Services team. So stop by. Who knows, you could find yourself working on some of the coolest and most innovative projects in the industry — in just 212 days.

location

Dates: Saturday, October 3, 1998
Location: IBM
 3080 Steeles Avenue East
 Markham, Ontario

transportation

To make travelling to our career fair a bit easier, we've arranged for you to be picked up and dropped off by coach.

Time: 9:30 a.m.
Location: Mackintosh-Lorry Hall

register today!

Web: www.ibm.com/hr
Call: 1-800-IBM-CALL (1-800-426-2255), Ext. 710

IBM Solutions for a small planet®

COME CHECK US OUT

Our burgers are 6 oz with no fillers, preservatives or MSG added. Topped with lettuce, tomato and served on a Kaiser roll with fries or onion rings.

JJ's
Grilled Food
No inspire eating!

Our chicken breast is 5oz. & marinated in lemon juice, served on a fresh bun, topped with lettuce, tomato and served with fries or onion rings.

The Gourmet Burger & Grilled Chicken Specialists

A Variety of 20 "Mouth Watering" Burgers and 20 "To Die For" Grilled Chicken Sandwiches

GREAT PRICES • BURGERS
from $4.75-$6.50

GREAT PRICES • CHICKENS
from $5.50-$6.50

Also checkout ... JJ's

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Garlic Bread (5 kinds)</li> <li>Homemade Chili</li> <li>Nacho Dinners (5 kinds)</li> <li>Chicken Strip Dinner</li> <li>Chicken Caesar</li> <li>Cheesy Chili Fries</li> </ul>	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Don't forget our Desserts</li> <li>Cheesecakes (5 kinds)</li> <li>Sundaes (5 kinds)</li> <li>and our</li> <li>Old Fashioned Milkshakes</li> </ul>
---	--

409 Johnson Street at University Avenue
Kingston, Ontario Canada K7L 1Z1
(613) 547-3771

'As good as it can be'

Continued from page 1

drive was terminated. Jim Aru, who had a team-high 10 tackles, sacked quarterback David McKinnon 13 seconds before halftime.

The Gaels did not rest on their laurels as they emerged for the third quarter. They quickly put the game out of reach with three touchdowns, coming on a 52-yard pass from Howes to DiRinaldo followed by two Correale scoring runs. After this, the only remaining question was whether the defensive unit would retain its shutout.

Late in the final quarter, McGill reserve pivot Josh Summerfeldt took the Redmen to the Queen's three-yard line. However, the Gaels barred the door, thwarting two pass attempts and taking over on downs with 2:38 remaining.

The shutout, Queen's first since 1995, was vindication for a defensive unit that had previously been vulnerable to big plays. McGill did not have an offensive play over 20 yards, gaining a paltry 191 yards on the day with stand-out halfback Shawn Linden, the bane of the Gaels in recent years, kept to 65 yards rushing.

Haddad expressed empathy for his former teammate, commenting, "They don't have the experienced players they once had around him, on the [offensive] line in particular." On playing against his former team, Haddad added, "It was fun, and strange... I don't think I've had a more emotional experience."

Offensively, the Gaels even more devastating, accumulating 577 yards and moving the ball by whatever mode of attack they chose. This is a credit to the multi-talented offensive line, which did not allow a sack. "The line keeps getting better every week," remarked Yovetich. "They've risen to the challenge of having young guys playing, and having injuries. They're an example of what everyone on this team is."

"[Robyn's] just relentless and tireless. He did such a good job blocking at the point of attack."

— Tailback Paul Correale

"Everyone was trying to play every play," surmised coach Howes, particularly pleased with the fierce downfield blocking of his receiving corps, who had an outstanding day. Seven Gaels caught at least two passes, paced by MacLean, with five receptions for 124 yards.

Correale, who gained a game-high 156 yards from scrimmage and scored three touchdowns, praised the toil of Robyn, his backfield mate. "He's just relentless and tireless. He did such a good job blocking at the point of attack."

Surrounded by such an embarrassment of riches, quarterback Beau Howes had a field day. He completed 15 of 19 passes for a gaudy 312 yards, despite shating snaps with Fallscheer, who played well in relief.

"We have a beautiful team thing going," said coach Howes. "Today, every part was as good as it can be."

DOUBLE LETTER SCORE

Let's get it on!

The student's guide to getting your degree in love

BY SARAH CROSBIE

COULD YOU FEEL IT? Last Friday night, amidst an overhyped "Mansion" keg party, selected house parties and the plentiful porch hangouts, there was a feeling of love and romance wafting in the air.

No, crazy kids, it wasn't the scads of overflowing Sleeman's plastic cups in the streets that was giving our neighbourhood a warm fuzzy feeling — it was actual love — true, real, concrete, visible love. It wasn't emanating from us though, but rather from the Alumni. Colonies of love-filled adults roamed the streets, droning on about the sights, sounds and memories of their/our happy abode.

Never has our little village been invaded by so many people "in love." Males with Comm '73 jackets held hands and smooched their long-time girlfriend, or probably wife by now, female ArtSci '75. Female Sci '89 was quite happy to be piggy-backed around campus by their Sci '86 main squeeze. But now that Homecoming weekend has ended, I must ask: where's the love?

The Queen's love and dating scene is a convoluted enigma probably too tough even for Jojo's Psychic Alliance. More difficult than the last question on the PHYS 114 final exam is determining how to get the person you have the biggest crush on since NKOTB or Jennifer Love Hewitt. So here it is, some insights, observations, comments and suggestions on the Art of Love and Dating at Queen's.

Relationship #2 — "We seem to be normal, but really..."

— Beneath their peel of love we see that their relationship is controlled by some bizarre interest.

YOU CAN'T GET THROUGH much of university without hearing statistics such as "75 per cent of people meet their spouses at university," or "you're more likely to be hijacked on an airplane than get married after 35." Frosh: these tumours shouldn't scare you. Second years and above: these thoughts will or surely have entered your mind.

Relationship #1 — "We're not really together — we just have sex when we're horny."

In high school, many dream of getting to university and finding their soul mate, their perfect significant other — immediately. Whether you've been celibate in mind and body your entire high school career so that you can be completely free and ready to capture that perfect person, or you've broken up with your long-term partner of four years so that you can find "the one" — you'll realize very quickly, if you haven't already, that this ideal situation is not going to happen. Most envision that you're going to walk into PSYC 100 and the most yummy boy/girl is going to be saving a seat for you. Your allure results from your courage to style silk pyjamas pants with an inside-out sweat-shirt, complete with bedhead and stale beer breath from the night before. Does it ever happen? No.

What will happen? Well, it's always a bitch to generalize, however, this peak over the hills of the Queen's dating/love scene might just reveal some secrets about your previous, current and future adventures in love.

ALTHOUGH RELATIONSHIPS COME IN many different forms at Queen's, there are essentially four different types ranging from the most pathetic to the most cute to the most admirable.

Relationship #1 — "We're not really together — we just have sex when we're horny."

The Skinny: Possibly the most fun, yet also the most dangerous.

No commitment is involved and no mandatory phone calls or long billing hours. Those involved are not obligated to inquire about classes or how great band/football/jive practice was. It's nice because it's a toilet paper relationship — throw it away when you're done. But dangers lurk ahead when one becomes emotionally involved (and to dispel myths, it is not always the female). One person believes it's time for the "relationship to reach the next level" — fine if both parties want this, but disastrous if both don't.

Relationship #2 — "We seem to be normal, but really..."

The Skinny: The relationship that everyone thinks they want.

These cute couples hold hands, sit together in all areas of campus and they appear superficially interested in one another, but when their skins are peeled we see that their relationship is really controlled by some bizarre interest — both love refried beans — they eat them, play with them and use them in sexual foreplay. There's someone for everyone so enjoy your kinky fetishes.

Relationship #3 — "We think we're married"

The Skinny: Easily the most annoying relationship to ever exist.

Both believe and act like every trip to the grocery store is a walk down the aisle. They dress the same, cut their hair the same, take the same courses and spend every waking minute together. And if they live in close proximity (i.e. residence or your house) it's even more annoying. As they spoonfeed Swedish meatballs to each other in matching his and her bathrobes, your kitchen becomes the location of the makings of high class cuisine. They're so cute you want to puke, but you don't and you happily listen to them shower together every morning. Advice: a fun game to play is to see how many times you can flush the toilet during a shower shagging session.

Relationship #4 "This is it"
The Skinny: This is it.

For the small minority of people who've actually found their one true love and it is honest and sincerely "normal" — good for you. Hold on tight, work at it, enjoy it forever or while it lasts.

Recurring problems

WHETHER OR NOT YOU'RE currently hooked up, past experiences tell you that all relationships are plagued by problems and annoying idiosyncrasies. Physical appearance irritations are harmful, because well, unless you're willing to undergo plenty of cosmetic surgery, your image is your image. Ugly toenails, deformed nipples, or just way too much body hair are things we have to learn to deal with.

"I think blowjobs/head is the most appalling idea — I'm not ready for anything more than holding hands."

— A sure-fire way to put any troubled relationship on ice.

Talking about a personal sexual idiosyncrasy, whether your sexual repertoire is built upon a Cosmopolitan subscription or your only musical turn-on is a Saturday Night Fever soundtrack, you've got some work to do. (Hint: there's definitely something wrong if you're bruising your partner, or if you allot only 27 minutes to have conversation, foreplay,

Continued on next page

Education Information Fair

Thursday
October 1st
(11 am - 2 pm)

JDUC
Upper & Lower
Ceilidh

Meet Program Representatives

- |                      |                              |
|----------------------|------------------------------|
| Ontario Universities | American Schools             |
| Brock                | Canisius College             |
| Lakehead             | Niagara University           |
| Ottawa               | State U of N.Y., Potsdam     |
| Queen's              |                              |
| Toronto              | Australian & British Schools |
| Western              | K.O.M.                       |
| York                 | T.E.A.C.H.                   |

- information on programs offered
- answers to questions on admission requirements
- advice on teaching prospects and working out of province

Presented by Career Services
<http://careers.queensu.ca>

HYPE COMMITTEE

Volunteers Needed!
Committee Members

Tutors at K.C.V.I. and LaSalle at lunchtime.

One hour per week and occasional meetings

GREAT EXPERIENCE!

Applications available in front of the AMS, AMS office, M.A.C. Office, and Infobank. Due on Friday, October 2 by 4pm. For more information contact the M.A.C. office at 545-6000x5178 or municlpl@ams.queensu.ca

Continued from last page

"the deed," afterward and then more conversation).

Lastly, if your partner's eccentricity rises to a point that either they think they've dated you in past lives or they want to experience a golden shower with you — it's time to have a long serious talk (or run).

How to know when to let go

YOU'VE FOUND EACH OTHER, had some fun, but now it's time to let go.

Let go and let it end. Once it's over, it's over. Leave it alone and let it die.

Is this clear? The minute you begin to question your housemates, friends, or the security guards in the A&P parking lot, you know you're headed for trouble. The question, "What should I do?" is the most obvious indication that your relationship is in mud. Another sure sign is when everything the person does is flar-out annoying — the amount of gel they wear in their hair, they way they pick the poppy seeds off their bagel — everything and anything makes you cringe.

So... it just ain't working. Now what? The dump. Dump is the right word. No one ever truly means, "I really want to be friends." You're letting them go and hard. Don't feel guilty — everyone does it and if it hasn't happened yet, it will.

Ever feel like playing the Queen's field of dating is like blowing air into a popped balloon? Take care in knowing that you're not alone.

Recommended lines

"I really thought I was ready for a relationship, but I'm not."
 "I can't be involved right now, ENGL 269 is just too time demanding."
 "My housemate, whom I love to death, really likes you, so I can't be with you."
 "I totally think our astrological signs are compatible — come see a psychic with me."
 And if these poignant one-liners miss the bulls-eye, then it's time to get out the BIG GUNS. Just blow 'em away. No tact, sincerity or caring is involved in these break-up lines. If it were between the skunks and them, Pepe Le Pew would have to do.

Try these on for size (one size fits all):

"I love you — let's get married."
 "I love you — let's have a baby."
 "I think blowjobs/head is the most appalling idea — I'm not ready for anything more than holding hands."

 "I've slept with your brother."
 "I hate every bone in your body, except mine."

What's that? You don't fit into any of these categories? Congratulations! You don't have to worry about how to keep a relationship, nor how to dump one. Like thousands of other Queen's students YOU'RE SINGLE.

But on the downstroke, your situation isn't "socially acceptable." So everyone in your life plays the matchmaker to find someone, anyone for your romantic life. "But, I'm quite content with an empty bed," you reply, "except for my own personal toys, and no the 56-year old sitting across the table at Lino's is NOT more appealing than loneliness."

On the one hand, we have the precarious realm of dating. But, on the other, we have cucumbers and hairbrush handles. Which would you pick? So if you're single and happy, go with your toys.

It takes guts

THE PROBLEM AT QUEEN'S is not whether to be single or attached. It's a personal decision that only you can make. The problem is that everyone comes with absurd expectations. You're not going to find the perfect person unless either you're really damn lucky or you work at it.

Queen's is not a bad place to look for love as there is a good crop of dating candidates here. We're attractive, fun and smart (we do have the highest entrance levels in Canada) so why can't we all find someone to love?

It's all in the form of the relationship. Back when we were 14 and we started to "go out" with people, parents found this concept rather bizarre, always questioning, "Where are you going?"

The fundamental problem is that we're not going anywhere.

Dump is the right word. No one ever truly means, "I really want to be friends." You're letting them go and hard.

Relationships are stagnant and always failing to propel the individual to a heightened state of perpetual bliss. Honestly, how exciting is it to be with same person every day?

The system our parents had in the fifties and sixties worked a lot better and it's only two words that need to be re-introduced into our vocabulary — real dating. No one dates, but everyone wants to. Have we lost our courage? Everyone has that one cute person they're dying to have the balls to ask out for coffee/bowling/bingo, but you can't because that one call signifies you're in love with them.

It's ludicrous. Queen's should adopt a "serial monogamy" policy as follows:

Shopping on Princess Street is not a trip to pick out engagement rings.

A walk around the lake does not signify a walk down the aisle.

Dinner does not mean a rehearsal dinner for marriage. Date whomever you want.

There is no secret party that everyone goes to each Saturday night to hook up with their love interests. The parties are not advertised behind all the posters on the telephone poles — trust me, I've looked.

Be brave, call and if they say "yeah, see ya," call someone else. The first "Sure!" could surprise and perhaps even qualify for second date status. Just don't screw it up... unless screwing is your only interest.

When it comes to toys, Sarah Crosbie prefers the hairbrush handle.

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Exotic sax

Bunnett is musical, but not entertaining

Concert Review

By MICHELLE CHENG

Not stunning at Bunning. Bunnett and troupe tries moving the crowd.

The auditorium was almost full. The air was filled with excitement as the audience anticipated a night of entertainment; a night of warm exotic Cuban beats accompanying the sounds of traditional jazz.

The Jane Bunnett concert began on a low note because the show didn't start on time — usual with any concert perhaps. Eventually, the seven piece band filed in. It was composed of four native Cuban musicians, straight from Havana, and three "Northerners," as Bunnett stated, including herself. The band consisted of a pianist, an acoustic bass player, a drummer, a vocalist, a trumpeter (Bunnett's husband Larry Cramer), a bongo player and, of course, Jane Bunnett herself on the soprano saxophone and flute.

They started with a lively, energetic tune — indeed it was a mixture of two cultural elements. It was also an interesting mix of Cuban beats and jazz. It was obvious that Bunnett was careful in selecting the members of her band; all were incredible musicians, improvising extraordinarily. They performed various songs, ranging from those featured in Bunnett's first Afro-Cuban album Spirits of Havana, to a few traditional Cuban songs. The sound of many of the songs were well formatted, with beautiful vocal harmonies provided by members of the band. Their sound is definitely unique.

Bunnett's special sound was definitely interesting. It is best described as "Cuban bebop." Technically speaking, the drum beats were Cuban and tunes were bebop-ish. As such, the nature of the music isn't one that I could simply sit down and listen to for very long. Obviously some people in the audience also found Bunnett's music unappealing because approximately a third of the audience disappeared after intermission. Perhaps the audience left because Bunnett's music is an acquired sound, better appreciated by the more enthused fans of bebop jazz, such as those nodding heads in the audience.

It was unfortunate however, that Bunnett and company didn't try to gain more fans that night. When they first opened the show, the band lacked energy. They didn't seem to enjoy the music they were playing, nor did they take advantage of the audience's excitement to fuel their show. The band's energy only started climb during their third song, their energy like roller coaster ride that picked up over the course of the show. Bunnett, a Toronto native, was already an established musician before she embarked on her new journey of integrating jazz and other cultural elements. She had studied under several accomplished musicians such as Barry Harns, Steve Lacy and Don Pullen. In 1984, Bunnett took a vacation in Santiago de Cuba with husband Larry Cramer where she discovered her interest in bringing jazz across cultural barriers, namely Cuban. Since then, she released Spirits of Havana in 1991 for which she earned a Juno nomination. Six years later, Chamalongo was released.

Bunnett stated that her newest goal is to "incorporate the total roots of Afro-Cuban music. All of my past musical experiences have led me to Chamalongo — I know it's the most passionate and powerfully felt record of my career."

Overall, Bunnett provided a good musical jam session for her fans. It wasn't as much an entertaining show as it was a large improv session. Bunnett hardly entertained; she has a quiet presence, saying little, and simply seemed focused on playing the saxophone or flute. Bunnett, in her essence, was a musician, not an entertainer.

The little Rascalz

Band Interview

By GREG DOLE

When The Queen's Journal reviewed the Rascalz' Cash Crop album in 1997, the writer gave so much praise and respect to the Vancouver group that I had to check them out. The review was no exaggeration. The Van-City hip-hop crew dropped a hot album on the Canadian hip hop scene. The first single from the album, "Dreaded Fist" was fat with a "ph," and the group produced a spooky RZA-like video for that track as well. In short, the Rascalz were the real deal.

Some time later, the Rascalz joined up with hip-hop talent across the country to make the infamous track "Northern Touch." This Canadian hip-hop anthem featured artists such as Choclair, Kardinal Offishall, Checkmare and Thrust. The beat may have been borrowed from the 1970s BTE Express, but the song was distinctly their own. It ripped through mainstream music charts, trailblazing for the hip hop cause in this country.

Jumping ahead to the present day, the Rascalz hip hop love-train is coming to Queen's University. The group has gone from playing the indie circuit to mainstream crowds across Canada. Last Wednesday, the Rascalz brought their music to the Mch Music Video Awards. Before going home that night, they took away the "Best Rap Video" award. This time around, they accepted the recognition.

Earlier this year, the group declined their Juno award in order to protest the lack of support for urban music in Canada. The average Canadian takes no notice of the insignificant Juno awards ceremony, the Rascalz made the event newsworthy for the first time in years. At the same time, in giving the Canadian music industry the middle finger, the Rascalz apparently helped their chances of breaking into mainstream Canada.

Now the spotlight is on them; it took a week for the group to give me an interview! Rascalz MC Red-I attributed the success to the independent music scene, giving respect to college radio deejays across Canada. "Musicians seem to be the ones who are being shafted," he said.

The best way to earn success, he reckoned, is to do as much as you can by yourself. "Independent is the way to go. It costs mad dough to get it going, but we started Figure IV Records, we own it. Now by doing it our way, we come to the table in a better position when dealing with the record companies," continued MC Red-One.

However, the Rascalz probably didn't have much choice about whether or not to go independent. Rarely has hip hop had support in the Canadian music industry. Even in the wake of Maestro

A room with a view

Dolcini's art is entrancing because of colour and shape

PHOTO BY ALEX KRIMBY

Art Review

By ELLEN LEE

It is not difficult to become entranced by Catherine Dolcini's artwork. While gazing at her paintings, which are expressed as oil on panel, one is drawn into a warm dream-like state.

The main subjects the artist touches upon are domestic objects, such as antique furniture and the large airy rooms containing them. Through the use of feathery, undefined strokes and the application of soft muted colour, Dolcini manages to capture the cozy atmosphere of home.

One of the more colourful pieces present in her new collection is entitled The Yellow Bedroom at Warden House. This representation depicts a cheery bedroom bathed in sunlight. A whole spectrum of yellow hues, ranging from pale to deep golden yellow are reflected in the rug and the bedspread covering the lovely four-poster bed. This painting reflects the light and intensity which is present in all of Dolcini's paintings. Another vivid piece by Dolcini is entitled Mildred's Piano. Heather grey, light blue and subdued pinks are just a few of the examples of soft colours used around the edges of the piece. This technique allows the viewer to focus his or her attentions on the beautiful chestnut piano in the centre of the room. The hint of sunlight filtering in through a window in the upper right hand corner provides a subtle shadow effect.

I was drawn to the expansive ruby-coloured carpet, which is reminiscent of a regal estate home of days gone by.

My favourite piece is entitled Some Pieces from the Ward House. This painting shows a spacious hallway facing the front door, with doorways leading off to the left and right that open to additional rooms. A stately grandfather clock and mahogany chairs and tables are uniquely interspersed down the passage. However, what captivates the observer most is the plush red carpet lining the hall. I was drawn to the expansive ruby-coloured carpet, which is reminiscent of a regal estate home of days gone by. The predominant use of reds, pinks and browns in this piece provides the hallway with an atmosphere of luxury, as well as comfort.

Dolcini is no stranger to the world of art. The former Napanee resident attended the School of Fine Art in Chicago, and also taught at Loyalist College before graduating with a Bachelor of Fine Arts at Queen's in 1997. Along with nearly a dozen group and solo showings of her work, mostly Kingston based, she also possesses curatorial experience at Queen's own Union Gallery. Dolcini's new collection will be exhibited until October 18 at the Edward Day Gallery.

HUNGRY?!?

Then come on out to
"BREAK THE FAST"
 at the Hillel House; 124 Centre Street
 Wednesday September 30 at 7:45pm.
 FREE with an $18 MEMBERSHIP
 or
 $5 at the door

QUEEN'S HILLEL: THE HUB OF JEWISH STUDENT ACTIVITY

ESSAY STRESS??

FOR FREE TUTORIALS CALL
THE WRITING CENTRE
 140 Stuart @ University
 545-6315

Hit Canada Hard.

the most powerful Canadian search engine

www.altavistacanada.com

Presented by TELUS

Pesto's hard to swallow

Italian eatery's main courses disappoint

PHOTO BY SAYSUN WU

Restaurant Review

Frankie Pesto
167 Ontario St.

BY TANYA HAAS

There are several different excuses that allow you to escape from having to spend dinner eating at Ban Righ or in your grease-laden ghetto kitchen. One is the meal treated by the visiting family. The other is the awkward first date with that special someone. Frankie Pesto could be one of your future choices for either of these upcoming special dinners. My desire for a special dining experience sans family took me to Frankie Pesto, a young Italian eatery located across from the Cocamo in the Kingston core on Ontario Street. I invited my Gael to help me critique one of my first off-campus meals. Walking into this cozy, two-level restaurant, the artistic decor grabbed my attention. Vibrant art, along with the white lights intertwined with the dried flowers on the ceiling, created an artistic and unique atmosphere. Dim lighting, decorated sponged walls and eighties instrumental music added to the warm environment. The evening's hosts, Meg and Tim, both greeted us with ear to ear smiles. Our servers were very friendly, yet the constant questioning of "How is everything?" and trying to answer with your mouth full of salad became quite irritating. Frankie's service and ambience were impressive for such a young establishment.

Our meal began with a measly portion of caesar salad, which frankly is outperformed by the Marriot cafeteria version. Thankfully, our half litre of Verdicchio, the house white wine, cost $14, and easily washed down the salad. Indeed, the wine was a delightfully dry and sophisticated choice. Our order of garlic bread with melted cheese ($6.99) was a huge loaf but lacked the garlic taste we craved.

Dim lighting, decorated sponged walls and eighties instrumental music added to the warm environment.

The pieces were so big that we had to eat them with a fork and knife.

The meal continued with a large portion of Fruiti de Mare - shtimp, calamari, mussels ($12.99) and the Neapolitan pizza ($8.98). The large helping of pasta and seafood was generous, but after a few spoonfuls, the fishy taste lost its novelty. My thin crusted pizza had a mild tomato sauce with a heavy selection of toppings including eggplant, olives and mushrooms. I say heavy, because twice my mushrooms rolled off the pizza onto the table where they tottered onto the floor. Also, the eggplant was so chewy that I had to subsequently remove it from the pizza with my hands and chew on it for several seconds.

The important bathroom break was well rewarded with the cleanliness and spaciousness of the facilities. Walls covered with painted vines and flowers and good lighting was well worth the journey down the steep steps.

The meal ended with a perfect café au lait and coffee enjoyed with a moist Tiramisu and creamy Espresso Cheesecake (both $4.25). The desert, the wine, the service and the ambience were all highly enjoyable and satisfying. Frankie Pesto is an excellent place for a relaxing wine and chat, or coffee and dessert. However, until the main course becomes a little more exciting and easier to eat, I would not recommend heading there for that special meal — unless of course, you like collecting mushrooms (between your toes) while you're playing footsie.

Take on your Future. Let Canada's Youth Employment Strategy help. Call 1 800 935-5555

- Get work experience and internship opportunities here at home and abroad.
- Get the latest on-line career planning and labour market information.
- Find out about youth hiring incentives for employers.
- Get tax and interest relief on student loans.
- Get financial assistance through the Canada Student Loans Program.
- Get Canada study grants if you're a student with dependents.
- Get tax breaks on RRSP withdrawals if you're a mature or part-time student.
- Find out how the Millennium Scholarship Fund might work for you.
- Find out how the Canada Education Savings Grant assists parents saving for their children's education.
- Find out how the National Graduate Register helps private companies recruit recent grads for permanent jobs and students for summer, and co-op jobs.

You can also connect with Canada's Youth Employment Strategy by visiting the Youth Resource Network at www.youth.gc.ca

Canada

exchange
Alfie's & QEA present:
RASCALZ
w/ Kardinal Offishall
And Get Your:
Queen's Entertainment Car!
For access to great Queen's events!
Tickets Sold At:
exchange

Urbaniz-nation

New horror flick Urban Legends takes a chance at myth

Movie Review

Urban Legends
Catarqui Cineplex
Starring: Alicia Witt, Jared Leto, Joshua Jackson and Rebecca Gayheart

BY LILIAN KIM

Remember when your mother told you not to cross your eyes when you were a kid? She probably explained that it would permanently stay like that forever and that no doctor will be able to fix it. Fact or fiction? Well, my eyes ate not crossed.

In comparison, the vision myth is minor to the consequences that the film Urban Legends has in store for the young stars.

The fact of the matter is that the film does take an intriguing turn with an issue that will even have non-believers interested.

For first time director Jamie Blanks, Urban Legends could be somewhat of an unavoidable challenge. The film arrives in the wake of a string of horror-teen flicks that were spewed out for the last two summers. With the grossly large success of Scream and I Know What You Did Last Summer, both which are babying sequels, Urban Legends seems to have been stereotyped as part of a collective that it so desperately tries to remove itself from.

The film carries itself not only on the usual blood and guts, but with haunting mysticism and interesting folklore. The film stars Alicia Witt (Cybill), who portrays Pendleton University student Natalie, caught in the mist of deadly turmoil connected to the tales of urban legends. Jared Leto (My So Called Life) stars as Paul, the university's controversial reporter who attempts to piece together the strange deaths of several students. Natalie is the innocent link to need to live vicariously through an actor's/actress's "previously accomplished" status. All in good fun, but cliché.

Getting Spooked: Witt, Gayheart and Jackson get close in Urban Legends.

Urban Legends does make the whole

There is no knight-in-shining-armor deal, just everyone saving everyone's ass.

of idea of urban legends disturbing while at the same time alluring. But because Hollywood kingpins sign the cheques and set the rules, the film misses out on creating a original and distinct outlook that it has the potential of relaying, perhaps missing out on being a legend of its own.

Getting even closer: Witt and Leto try to figure out the murders.

level ground throughout the film. There is no knight-in-shining-armor deal, just everyone saving everyone's ass. The fact of the matter is that the film does take an intriguing turn with an issue that will even have non-believers interested. The only problem is that Urban Legends takes a creative plotline and feeds it too much commercial sugar that it explodes with the same sort of novelty that other horror films encompass. During two points of the film, a play on Jackson's involvement with hot ticket item Dawson's Creek was mentioned and Gayheart's Noxema cover girl position was obviously forced. A film strong enough to hold its own ground does not level ground throughout the film. There is no knight-in-shining-armor deal, just everyone saving everyone's ass.

The fact of the matter is that the film does take an intriguing turn with an issue that will even have non-believers interested. The only problem is that Urban Legends takes a creative plotline and feeds it too much commercial sugar that it explodes with the same sort of novelty that other horror films encompass. During two points of the film, a play on Jackson's involvement with hot ticket item Dawson's Creek was mentioned and Gayheart's Noxema cover girl position was obviously forced. A film strong enough to hold its own ground does not

BATTLE ROYALE

MR. ROGERS VS. STREET CAPTAINS

Called a neighbourhood his own you can too

Talked to his puppets you have LIVE neighbours

Had a corny cardigan you get a cool T-shirt

Took his shoes off in the house you wouldn't DARE

WOULDN'T YOU RATHER BE A STREET CAPTAIN?

THE MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS COMMISSION IS LOOKING FOR STREET CAPTAINS IN THE STUDENT VILLAGE. APPLICATIONS DUE @ AMS FRONT DESK ON TUESDAY, OCT 6, 1998. COMMITTEE MEMBERS NEEDED AS WELL. PLEASE APPLY @ AMS FRONT DESK ON WED. SEPT 30, 1998. FOR MORE INFORMATION PLEASE CALL THE MAC @ 545-6000 EXT. 5178

The Sale
Only Twice A Year
Across North America
Calvin Klein
underwear
SALE ON NOW! DON'T MISS IT!
Lola's room

Hip Hoppin'

Continued from page 17

Fresh Wes, Canadian hip-hop, did not really progress. With the Rascalz this time around, the situation may be different. "Northern Touch" was meant to shine a light on Canada, all the talent coast to coast," said Red-I. "Yes, many people think hip hop is strictly from T-dot-O. I've seen great MC's in every province I have been to."

He continued, "While I have never been there, I bet there are some dope MC's from N.W.T."

Besides giving out respect, the Rascalz are getting respect from other hip hop artists. When I interviewed New York rappers Lord Tariq and Peter Gunz, they were over the moon with praise: "They hot, that Northern Touch is hot, damn its hot," they said. Now they are working with KRS-One and a large group of other American hip hoppers.

The Rascalz are now in studio to record their third full length album. "Our album takes care to let people know we are from B.C. Van-City represents." The group has taken time out to play the Much Music Video Awards and Queen's University. Kardinal Offishall is slated to open for the Vancouver hip hop trio when they play at Alibi's Pub on Saturday, October 3.

You can still be a superstar A&E contributor! Call Sarah, Lilian, or Stefan at 545-2800

BURGER KING FREE

BIG KING WITH PURCHASE OF A BIG KING

no coupon necessary

99¢

whopper junior every day

Movies:

Playing at the Capitol Theatre until Thursday, October 1:
546-5395
(Evening shows only on Monday, Wednesday, and Thursday)

Ronin 7:00, 9:50
Armageddon 6:45, 9:45
Saving Private Ryan 8:30
Ever After 7:05, 9:35
Simon Birch 7:10, 9:40
Rounders 7:15, 9:55

Playing at the Cataract Cineplex until Thursday, October 1:
389-7442

Slums of Beverly Hills 7:25, 10:00
Rush Hour 6:45, 7:15, 9:10, 9:20
Urban Legends 7:35, 9:50
One True Thing 6:55, 9:40
Something About Mary 7:05, 9:30

Playing at the Princess Court Cinema until Thursday October 1:
546-3456

Smoke Signals 7:00, 9:00

Contributor Call:
Ultra-Violet is back again!

We need your creative

Get Out There!

submissions. Poetry, prose, art, photography and music. A drop box can be found in the Union Gallery located in Stauffer Library's ground floor. The deadline for the November issue is Friday, October 2. Please include your name, phone number, email address and a short bio blurb with your submission.

Theatre:

Grand Theatre:
530-2050

On Tuesday September 29 and Wednesday September 30, Universal Concerts Canada Presents: The Rankins. Shows start at 8 p.m. and tickets are $28.50.

Classifieds

Just $4 for students
$10 for local • $15 for national

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WONDERING ABOUT RELATIONSHIPS, career, etc? Seeking direction? Experience greater self-awareness with tarot, palmistry, runes, and more. Clients say my readings are inspirational and very accurate. I also offer classes in meditation, tarot, etc. For more information phone Kellye at 544-1909. Also available Fridays and Saturdays at "Harmony," 93 Princess Street. Walk in or pre-book at 544-7897. Tape included.

PROFESSIONAL TUTORING AND EDITING. Are you achieving the grades you deserve? Improve your essay skills, editing, research and writing. E.S.L. a specialty. Phone (416) 820-6113. Fax (416) 960-0240.

PRIMA COMPUTER BOOKS: The most important peripherals you'll ever own. Ask in the campus bookstore. Fast and Easy; In a Weekend; Admin Guides and more...

MOODMASTER is a group for students who have been diagnosed with depression or bi-polar disorder. Its purpose is to provide mutual support for members and to encourage lifestyles that promote health. If you want to know more... call the Counselling service at 545-2893.

GRADLINK is a service linking graduate students for mutual support. Call Student Counselling service for more information at 545-2893.

PROFESSOR MARGARET LITTLE will be speaking on Chretien's Legacy for Canada's Poor on Thursday October 1 at 191 Portsmouth. Registration at 6 p.m., Kingston and Islands NDP Riding Association Annual General Meeting at 7 p.m., speaker begins at 8 p.m.

CALLING ALL '02SI Open forum for year society elections Tuesday night at 6 p.m. September 29, Upper Vic Hall. Come out and hear what your candidates have to say!

GET PUBLISHED IN ULTRAVIOLET! UV Magazine is accepting creative writing (poetry or prose), art and photography for next issue. Drop off submissions in Union Gallery, located in Stauffer library by October 2.

PRO-LIFE CLUB beginning this fall at Queen's. If interested, e-mail 6is@qink for more information.

FOOD THAT MAKES CENTS: Learn how to make quick, tasty, cheap one pot meals at our "hands-on" cooking class Wednesday October 7th from 5:30 to 7 p.m. at the International Centre. Limited spaces so call 545-6712 to sign up. Brought to you by the Health Outreach program, Health, Counselling and Disability Services.

DRINKERS WANTED: If you patronise campus pubs, tend to drink responsibly and would like to contribute to on-going campus alcohol policy and educational initiatives we want to talk to you. Please call Diane Nolling at 545-6712 for more information about this volunteer opportunity.

COMING TO QUEEN'S FROM OUTSIDE CANADA? We buy most foreign currencies at very good rates without service charge or commission. Check our website: www.welingtonfx.on.ca. Wellington Foreign Exchange, 153 Wellington Street, 531-8731.

PUNK ROCK! I play guitar and drums and I want to join or form a local punk band. Call Ken at 531-4592 for info.

LOST AND FOUND

LOST: Diamond engagement ring lost sometime after Wednesday September 2nd in the Johnson street-Queen's area. Reward if found. Please call 536-1679.

FOUND: At the campus bookstore, a set of Wedding Photos in a Walmart envelope. Claim at customer service desk.

FOUND: Set of keys at Kill McGill football game. "Friend" is inscribed in the keychain. To claim, call Alison at 545-2729.

HELP WANTED

DR. COMPUTER IS NOW HIRING technicians for part-time employment. This is an excellent opportunity for Computer Engineers and Computer science students to gain hands-on experience. For more information please call Stephanie @ 544-2134.

PERSONALS

HAPPY BIRTHDAY TARA!! Hope your day is full of sunshine. See you at 5:30! With love from all of us.

Footloose in Canada

Student Class Fares

Vancouver	from $359
Calgary	from $299
Edmonton	from $299
Regina	from $329
Winnipeg	from $229
Halifax	from $239
Saint John	from $339
St. John's	from $279

Insane Seat Sale

Vancouver	$229 - $299
Calgary	$229 - $299
Halifax	$149 - $199
Saint John	$149 - $199
Winnipeg	$149 - $199
St. John's	$149 - $199

**Flashes Sept 28**
**Travel until Feb 28**

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
186 Princess St., Kingston (at Montreal)
Long Haul Group Travel
549-3553 549-3561
Website: www.odysseytravel.com

Looking for sources? Search a database at the Library.

Ask us!

Queen's University Libraries

MISC GLANCES AT HOMECOMING & DEATH

When home comes back and all the old people home, MISC decides to take a look deep into the future. For this issue members of Ed and were asked the probing question: Describe the closing lines of your speech as the last surviving member of your undergrad class. Here are the telling answers.

When I think back to what I learned at this institution, I realize that my first rate education helped me make the transition from Burger King Incooc to Dickie Dee Guy.
—Stefan Murray

My longevity is scientific evidence that excessive drinking and smoking are actually good for you.
—La. Frogley

I guess now that everyone's dead and gone, nobody will know what I mean when I confess... to being the masturbator at Stauffer Library in 1990.
—Fervent Old Man Brandy

And to those of you who sneezed at my steady diet of potato, saltcrust and beer—hope you enjoy being six feet underground with maggots.
—Prime Minister Robert MacNeil

It is truly difficult for me to believe that I am the last surviving member of the class of '98. Many, as I have said, have accomplished great things. Many have vanished into history, their lives left only as marks on the lives of those that survive them. I hope that I, as the last, do not mark the end of an era but the beginning of another, just as great, filled with new accomplishments made possible by the work of my peers.
—Tara Mansbridge

After all I've been through—three marriages, my Emmy, my Grammy (nomination), and exploring the woman I know was inside me—attending Queen's remains the highlight of my life.
—Chir-Girell
—on Butland

I am old and tired and have already forgotten which school I graduated from anyway. Go Western!
—Adam Kaminsky

I'd like to thank this marvelous institution of ours for providing me with the survival tactics and crisis management skills to get me through any natural disaster, ice storm or monsoon.
—Renee Huang
—Renee Huang

Now that I'm an endangered species, they've plopped me in a cage at a Queen's research laboratory to conduct tests for my longevity. I get all the bananas and pudding a 160-year-old old encl. of shit would want.
—Thanks Queen's!
—Sean Springer

THE DREAMER OF PICTURES HIMSELF, MR. NEIL YOUNG

YOUNG WINNER!

CONGRATS

To Seth Cullen (Who gets a Neil Young CD of his choice) & To Lori Gutoskia (Who gets a Neil Young Poster of her choice)
Thanks to all others who entered, burned out or faded away.

Miscellaneous Neil Young Timeline Tidbits

- *Born November 12, 1945 at Toronto General Hospital.
- *Survives Polio at age 6, has first Epileptic Seizure on stage at 19.
- *Writes the folk hit "Sugar Mountain" on 19th birthday.
- *Age 20: Illegally emigrates to the U.S. with five friends and a lot of pot in a beat up hearse named "Mort."
- *Performs at Woodstock with Crosby, Stills and Nash at age 24. Refuses to be filmed for the movie.
- *Two sold out performances at Carnegie Hall at age 25.
- *At 27, directs, musically arranges and stars in Journey thru the Past, his first feature film, which becomes a cult classic.
- *Nearing his 28th birthday, Neil is reported to have died of a heroin overdose.
- *During the 80's Neil releases a string of groundbreaking albums - Techno Rock, Country, Rockabilly and Big Band in variety - without much notice from critics or would-be fans.
- *Is inducted into Juno Hall of Fame at 37.
- *The 80's sees Neil with a comeback: a Grammy award, a Juno award, an Oscar nomination and a Rock and Roll Hall of Fame induction.
- *At 51, cuts finger trying to slice a ham sandwich in half, cancels leg of European tour.
- *At 52, Neil is still Rockin' in the Free World.
—Compiled by Ken Butland

THE JOURNAL CROSSWORD

Canadian Criss Cross
by Walter D. Feener

ACROSS

- Calf flesh
- Turf
- Blink
- Stand high
- Fred's partner
- Gauge out
- Lowest number
- Kitchen appliance
- "Little Caesar" director
- Put into service
- Freeze
- Greenish blue
- Remove seeds from cotton
- Boldness
- Beginning to exist
- Prehistoric
- Feel sorrow over
- Fishing boat
- Sedaka and Young
- Made a quick exit
- Forfeiture
- Black-tailed gazelle
- Choose
- Neck-and-neck
- Clear profit
- Vehement speech
- Foolish
- Victims of delusion
- Aquatic rails

DOWN

- Stag party guests
- Leg joint
- Prison room
- Solemn promise
- Fireballs
- Battery size
- Investigates
- Horse's gait
- Swift
- Bony sinus
- Length of life
- "Little Caesar" director
- Loamy deposit
- Glut
- Moved secretly
- Paradise
- Imitate
- Not prefix
- Grievous distress
- Violinist's need
- "South" (Nicholson movie)
- Left a place
- Hafin or Morrison

You are cordially invited to a talk on A LOGICAL PROOF OF THE EXISTENCE OF GOD Causality, Composition, and the Origin of Existence

Presented by Dr. William Hatcher, author, philosopher and Professor of Mathematics, Laval University on Tuesday, Sept. 29th at 7:30 p.m. at Earl Hall/BioScience Centre, Rm. 1103. The lecture is sponsored by the Campus Association for Baha'i Studies, Queen's University.

Answers for last issue's puzzle

MID PLOD
RARE COUPES
LINKS NEXAGON
OVA TNE LANA
BEG RAFT GIG
REMORSE SEC
EYE NNE
SON MONARCH
ELL SKIP YOM
VAIN ASK BRA
ENVELOP IDEAL
GEMINI NELL ROPE SEE

Alfie's

PUB PRESENTS

RASQUEALS

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 3

ADVANCED TICKETS AVAILABLE AT THE

Alfie's PUB

PRESENTED BY THE USA

TICKETS: $8 IN ADVANCE
$10 AT THE DOOR

CHECK OUT OUR WEEKLY UPDATED WEB PAGE
HTTP://WWW.ALFIES.QUEENSU.CA/ALFIES

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL

1873

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1998

Somber AMS officials made up the bulk of "mourners" Wednesday at the mock funeral for accessible post-secondary education. See story on page 3.

PHOTO BY PAUL HEISLER

Lab spill a wake-up call

BY RENEE HUANG

Staff and students at Botterell Hall have been breathing clean, circulated air in the week following the pyridine spill which shut the entire building for two hours. However, not all are satisfied with how the incident was handled.

Chris Mueller, associate professor of biochemistry, said the accident that happened in one of the cancer research labs was "a clarion call" for Queen's to have more safety measures in place to deal with emergency incidents.

"I think all of us were under the impression that there were safety measures in place," Mueller said. Part of the problem with the spill was that there are no hazardous material suits at Queen's, or people with adequate training to handle situations such as chemical spills.

If a larger spill were to occur, Mueller is concerned that Queen's does not presently have the resources to contain it.

"There's not a hazardous materials team at Queen's," he explained. "That's certainly been my wish to establish protocol to deal with this sort of thing... If Queen's doesn't have the resources, I don't think it's unreasonable to have some team contracted out."

A formal Queen's "Haz Mat" team, a short-form for hazardous materials, is unlikely at this stage due to "cost implications and training," said Wiebke Wilkens, director of Environmental Health and Safety at Queen's. Wilkens believes contracting out independent Haz Mat teams may be a feasible solution.

Mueller emphasized the need for Queen's to have a response team equipped to respond to an emergency of this type. "Occupational [Health and] Safety does not have the material, people and training to deal with this sort of thing... They have no contingency plan and they don't have the equipment."

As part of the disaster recovery plan, a strategy is in the works to delegate responsibilities in the case of future natural disasters, Wilkens said. She hopes the plan will clarify staff roles in the event of another accident. There was some confusion during the spill among chemical technicians as to "what magnitude gets dealt with by whom" but Wilkens said the revised procedures will improve future situations.

Mueller said pyridine is a relatively common solvent that is inexpensive to purchase. "Botterell is small pickings," Mueller explained. "A litre here is nothing. Spill 50 litres in [a chemistry lab] and you're in a whole other magnitude," in terms of cost and danger, he said.

Not all students were as concerned about the current level of safety or efficiency of procedures at Queen's.

"Accidents happen in labs," said

Please see "Warning" on page 5

Queen's ready to exterminate millennium bug

BY ROBERT CHOI

Queen's has embarked on a plan to tackle the year 2000 problem, a software "glitch" expected to confuse computers at the dawn of the new millennium. All departments at Queen's now have year 2000 coordinators to identify potential problems within their unit.

The year 2000 project will be costly, but Queen's hasn't set aside a formal Y2K budget. "Queen's will spend whatever it needs. Departmental budgets will be reallocated to solve this problem," said Bryan Thomas, the university's year 2000 coordinator.

"Essentially, what Queen's has done is to get the Principal and Vice-Principals involved in ensuring that Queen's is ready for year 2000," said Thomas.

The year 2000 problem, also known as Y2K, was caused by software programmers who used two digits instead of four to represent the year in computers' internal clock system. Programmers used 98 to represent the year 1998. Come the new millennium, computers will be confused about the meaning of 00, and their calculations involving dates will be unreliable. Systems which are hooked up to computers, such as bank machines and security systems, will also be affected by the Y2K problem.

In August, Latty Pattison, Physical Plant Services Y2K coordinator, expressed concern about Ontario Hydro's readiness for the Y2K problem. In his letter to Thomas, Pattison wrote: "Ontario Hydro has not been very forthcoming in regards to its overall year 2000 compliance. Based on feedback from equipment suppliers, we anticipate that Hydro may experience some problems at the turn of the century."

Pattison added in his letter that the interconnectedness of the North American

Please see Prepared on page 6

index

Volume 126, Issue 10
www.journal.queensu.ca

News	.1	In Focus	13
Science	.8	Sports & Fitness	15
Features	.9	A&E	17
Editorials	.10	Classifieds	22
Opinions	.11	MISC.	23

WEATHERWATCH

Today Mix of sun and cloud High 14°C, Low 3°C, POP 30%	Sunday Sunny with clouds High 13°C, Low 2°C, POP 20%
Saturday Sunny with clouds High 14°C, Low 4°C, POP 10%	Monday Mix of sun and cloud High 19°C, Low 7°C, POP 20%

Demand for aerobics leaps 450 per cent

BY ROBERT MACNEIL

The response from Queen's students to the free aerobic classes offered at the Physical Education Centre has been overwhelming. In fact, there has been such high demand that people are being turned away due to a lack of qualified instructors and limited space.

Last year, approximately 300 students participated in the aerobic classes but this year the numbers have ballooned to 1,350. The main reason for this is the novelty of free access and the flexibility of the aerobic schedules, according to Instructional Sports Skills

Coordinator Brenda Willis. Unfortunately, the extreme shortage of instructors is affecting the number of spaces available. One student expressed her frustration with repeatedly showing up to the aerobics class she wanted 30 minutes early, only to be turned away.

In an effort to accommodate all students, the PEC is now posting a list of the number of students who attended each class the previous week. Therefore, students are able to anticipate which class times are the most popular and do not waste time waiting to see if there are

Please see Classes on page 5

Education mourned at funeral service

By SHAWN BRIMLEY

Accessible post-secondary education is not dying, it's already dead according to the Alma Mater Society and the Society of Graduate and Professional Students.

A funeral service was held outside the John Deutsch University Centre on Wednesday, complete with a tombstone, that read "Average student debt load of at least 24,000 dollars." Student leaders called on the provincial government to show leadership and reinvest in post-secondary education.

However, student interest appeared to be low, with an estimated 15 students in attendance at the event.

"I wasn't extremely disappointed [with the low turnout] because it's not like this was a rally or something," said Stanley.

Members of the AMS council delivered fictional accounts about students unable to attend Queen's because of high tuition fees, and lit a candle in their honour.

"It is a sad truth that Ontario now ranks dead last in funding per capita of post-secondary education in Canada. This is hardly a distinction to be proud of," commented Tom Stanley, AMS president, in a eulogy address.

Chris Hales, SGPS president said,

"We look forward to the day when all persons, regardless of their socio-economic background can come to university."

"Even though graduate students didn't bear the brunt of tuition increases, we are supportive of all students," said Hales. "Law students got hit with a 25 per cent increase last year, and with the recent trend in deregulation, it is possible that within the next few years every one's tuition would be at the whim of the university."

Stanley agreed with Hales, saying, "There will be no surprises in tuition this year, because the levels were set last May. However, with this new environment of deregulation, it is important not to forget that this government continues to break its promises."

"Students need to come and participate in the fight for an accessible education," Milan Konopek, AMS academics commissioner added. "It's something we're all entitled to."

Stanley said the event was primarily intended to raise awareness on current issues in post-secondary education, and inform students how they can become involved in AMS activities.

"I think it went fine," he said.

CORRECTION

In the sports section of issue 9 of The Journal, Laura Gibson was not given recognition for having earned half of the shutout. The Journal regrets the error.

RASGALZ
THIS SATURDAY NIGHT

ONLY AT

Alfie's
PUB

GO UNDERGROUND

SATURDAY, OCT. 3
TICKETS
$8 IN ADVANCED
$10 AT THE DOOR

BEST RAP VIDEO 11 '98 MUCH MUSIC VIDEO AWARDS

16 YEARS ON CAMPUS

Speed Reading

Taught on campus in cooperation with the AMS (Academic Affairs).

$90.00 fee. Textbook is an additional $45.00

(A refund of $25.00, if book is returned.)

No charge for repeat course at later date.

Register on Thursday, October 8th, 1998 in JDUC — Sidewalk Café beside TD Bank Machine from 10:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m.

Call 1-905-775-3832

CLASS 1 2:30 - 4:20
Thursdays — October 15 to Nov. 19
Room 104, Fleming Hall (Pollock Wing)

CLASS 2 4:30 - 6:20
Thursdays — October 15 to Nov. 19
Room 104, Fleming Hall (Pollock Wing)

Sunday Pasta Night
Salad, Pasta & Focaccia
$4.95

STOPIT program combats harassment

By MANDY MARRIOTT

Forty-seven cases of e-mail harassment were investigated at Queen's University last year through STOPIT, a program created to deal with and reduce the incidence of e-mail harassment among members of the university community.

Queen's Information Technology Services, in conjunction with the Dean of Student Affairs, the Human Rights Office and Queen's Security, created STOPIT last year, in response to the increasing number of Queen's students experiencing harassment through electronic mail.

"We're really quite pleased with how it's working," said Margo Coulter, sexual harassment coordinator at the HRO.

STOPIT is modeled on an anti-harassment program used at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Initial program research was done by Coulter, who found that e-mail harassment was becoming an increasingly serious issue at Queen's.

"I was finding harassing e-mails were becoming part of the sexual harassment cases I was dealing with," Coulter said. Since the program was implemented a year ago, Coulter has found that she has "had much less of that this year."

Of the 47 investigated cases of e-mail harassment between September 1997 and July 1998, 32 per cent involved unwanted attention, anonymous threats and known threats. Such cases are usually investigated jointly through the HRO and ITS, but Queen's Security is also used to work in concert to resolve the issues.

In the end "the complainant dictates how it will proceed," Coulter explained.

Thirty-eight percent of the cases were labeled spammed e-mail. Spamming is when marketing groups send out unwanted material to large numbers of individuals. Spammed e-mail can also include pornographic material that has been sent to one or a number of individuals. This particular type of e-mail is investigated by Andy Hooper, manager of Data Network and Systems at ITS, who attempts to find the source of the message.

Last year, September, October and March were the months in which the greatest number of e-mail harassment complaints were reported, Coulter said. Incidents were also greater during periods of student stress throughout the year, she added.

Both Coulter and Hooper emphasized that unwanted e-mail messages are upsetting because they can make people feel very lonely and afraid. "What we are talking about is peoples' peace of mind and security," Coulter said.

In response, STOPIT is making a greater effort to publicize the service this year. Last year, STOPIT information was available on posters around computer terminals as well as e-mail postings on the university's Qlink e-mail system.

This year even more systematic messages will be posted on Qlink, and, in addition, a number of adds have been run in The Queen's Journal and The Queen's Gazette.

If students receive unwelcome e-mail it is important that they save the message. ITS will be unable to trace the e-mail if the message is deleted. Students can forward offensive e-mail to stopit@post.queensu.ca where it will be examined by ITS and traced back to the original server and sender.

AMS budgets for $30,000 loss

By JOCELYN LAPORTE

Despite anticipated gains from services and increased enrolment, the AMS has approved a budget which projects a net loss of $29,510.

Unanimously passed by the AMS Board of Directors, the budget offers the breakdown and planned expenditure of the $31.76 AMS Specific Fee, which is collected from every full-time undergraduate student. The fee, in addition to sponsorship and fund-raising money, is used by the AMS to support the six commissions and fund various activities such as conferences, awards and society development.

This year's assembly has committed to running a smaller surplus than last year, in which a large amount of money was left unspent. As well, the services have budgeted to perform $74,717 better than last year. "Basically we are trying to reverse what happened last year which was services losing money and assembly making it... the budget reflects this," said Moodie.

The bottom line of the AMS, reflecting the annual budgets of the AMS assembly, services and restricted funds, is projected at -$29,510, a modest increase from last year's actual AMS net loss of $32,271.

"The negative $30,000 drew a bit of concern, however, we feel this is reasonable considering the additional pressures we are facing this year," commented Gord Moodie, AMS vice-president (operations).

"We feel it is better to be conservative than make optimistic assumptions and then realize part way through the year that we don't have enough money,"

— Gord Moodie, AMS vice-president (operations)

These pressures include $40,000 of millennium money which has been directed to the John Deutsch University Centre fund and will go towards improvements to group and club space within the building. Also, the forecasted slow year in the stock market will mean an income reduction on the Advantage Fund investments, he said.

The bottom line of -$29,510 is reasonable given these pressures, but is not the target of the AMS, according to Moodie. Ideally the AMS will make a small surplus that can be reinvested in capital upgrades in the future, he explained.

"We feel it is better to be conservative than make optimistic assumptions and then realize part way through the year that we don't have enough money," Moodie explained. "This just gives us a picture of what reality might do."

"Last year the services budget was very optimistic and that obviously didn't have much bearing on the performance [of the services]," Moodie added.

Moodie said he believes achieving a surplus is not an impossible goal.

Although only 11,050 students were accounted for in the budget, awaiting final tallies, Moodie expects this number to be much higher. "With 150 more students enrolled we will have approximately $10,000 off the budget," he said.

In addition, AMS services are already exceeding their budgets.

One of these services is the Queen's

Please see Services on page 5

Campbell leaves advancement to Hood

By STEPHANIE CARVIN

Last year, Vice-Principal (Advancement) Florence Campbell announced she would be leaving the university to pursue other career and personal goals. Campbell has held the position since it was created in 1993.

"I feel very privileged to work in one of Canada's most distinguished universities," Campbell said. However, Campbell indicated she was looking to cut down the amount of hours that she devoted to her job.

"I don't want to have a full-time career any more," she said. "Now its time to do some other things as well."

The VP (Advancement) works with Alumni Affairs, Communications and Development and performs duties including fostering the relationships between the university and its alumni, organizing fund-raising initiatives, and promoting the university.

Prior to accepting the position, Campbell held key posts at the Conference Board of Canada, IBM Canada Ltd. and the University of Alberta. After she leaves this month, Campbell will return to the corporate sector and work part-time as a consultant in the fields of public policy, strategic planning and fund raising.

Campbell said she is proud, among other things, of the fund-raising activities that the university has undertaken while she has been here. Between May 1, 1997 and April 30, 1998, Advancement was able to raise over $27.5 million — a 26 per cent increase over the previous year.

"[Queen's] is in the top two or three schools in fund raising," she said, attributing the success to students and alumni. "The commitment of students to Queen's leads the country," she explained. "They are generous even while here as students."

Campbell said George Hood, who will be taking over her role as VP (Advancement), is an excellent choice for the position. "All successful institutions choose the right leaders for the right time," she said. "George is perfect for this point in time. He understands the university very well and has the dynamic energy that will be required."

By STEPHANIE CARVIN

Principal Bill Leggett recently announced the appointment of George Hood to the position of Vice-Principal (Advancement) for a six-year term.

The position of VP (Advancement), created in 1993, involves working with Alumni Affairs, Communications and Development. The VP leads a staff of more than 75 people, fosters relationships between Queen's and its alumni, develops fund-raising programs and promotes the university's stature in the external environment.

As VP (Advancement), Hood would like to "try and make advancement an integral part of the academic function of the university" and "build advancement components," he said.

Hood said he would like to see the university encourage life-long learning by offering interest and training courses to the public and appealing to retirees to take more university courses. "That will secure a base of university revenue streams from infrastructure," he said.

Hood earned a bachelors degree (honours) in political studies in 1978 and a masters degree in Public Administration in 1981. "I come from a large family of Queen's graduates," he said. "I am one of 13 members of my family to go to Queen's."

Hood's past roles include one year as the director of the Centre of Resource Studies, three years as the Associate Vice-Principal (Research) at Queen's and project director for the Canadian Foundation for Innovation and the Ontario Research and Development Fund. Hood's primary area of responsibility has been in the area of establishing research linkages with the private sector and government.

Hood said he felt very positive about the university and learning at Queen's. "Life leads us outside the classroom," he said. "As students you learn from each other. Your friends from university are your friends for life and that's what makes Queen's unique."

"Students should feel free to contact me at any time," Hood said. "I take what I do very seriously. I try not to take myself too seriously — I am not much of a stuffed shirt."

Florence Campbell

FILE PHOTO

George Hood

PHOTO BY CHRIS GLOVER

You got where you are with hard work and smarts.

$750
GRAD REBATE

Chrysler can help out with your driving ambition.

As a recent graduate, you're on the road to achieving the best life has to offer. At Chrysler, we're rewarding that kind of initiative by offering $750 toward the purchase or lease of a new 1997, 1998, or 1999 Chrysler car or truck (excluding Dodge Viper and Plymouth Prowler), over and above most current Chrysler incentives. And, if you finance with Chrysler Credit Canada we'll defer your first three months payments!*

This $750 Grad Rebate is available to all college and university undergraduates and postgraduates who have graduated or will graduate between October 1, 1995, and September 30, 1998, and all currently enrolled master's and doctoral students (regardless of final graduation date). From high-value subcompacts and minivans, to tough pickups and sport utilities, we've got a vehicle that's right for you. No matter where you want to go in life... we want to make sure you get there.

For more information, visit your nearest Chrysler Canada Dealer. Or, hit www.chryslercanada.ca or call 1-800-361-3700.

CHRYSLER CANADA
Official Team Sponsor

*Some restrictions may apply. Reg is a registered trademark licensed to Chrysler Canada Ltd. ©1998

'Good warning sign' New classes offered

Continued from page 1

Nicole Brufhato, a third-year biochemistry graduate student. "The university did exactly what they were supposed to do," she explained. "We work with dangerous chemicals and I've never heard of anyone getting hurt." In the meantime, Mueller said Botterell labs are operating normally, although a few experiments and culture cells had to be started again. "We basically lost a week's work," he said, "but we have back-ups." The Health Sciences' Joint Health and Safety Committee will compile a written report of the incident and present it to Vice-Principal Cowan next week, Mueller reported. "I think it's a very good warning sign... For this to have happened with this chemical — no one was injured, no one got hurt — it just pointed out weaknesses that we have at Queen's," said Mueller.

Continued from page 1

any open spaces. The listings can be found on the recreation bulletin board in the PEC. In addition, the PEC is now offering two more classes at 5 p.m. on Mondays and Wednesdays. Willis says that for the time being this is all that can be done. In response to the situation, the PEC has been trying to find qualified instructors within the Queen's community. "[We have tried] to employ as many Queen's students as possible, [but] the PEC has had to turn to the community," says Willis. The PEC has hired all those people who are qualified and have shown interest but it has not been enough. Willis is also asking for those students that feel they may be able to substitute for the full-time instructors to apply for positions as well. If this happened, classes would not have to be cancelled if an instructor fell ill or had pressing school assignments. In trying to keep up with the demand, Willis feels that one option "may be to build a new building." A more realistic option, however, might include renovating current buildings on campus, she continued. Willis has looked at rooms in Victoria Hall but since the floors are non-spring loaded, the participants could risk injury. Despite the problems that have arisen, Willis is very excited about the number of students that are trying to participate in these classes. "We are very positive that everyone [wants] to work out, this is just outstanding," she said.

Services to perform $75,000 better

Continued from page 3

Pub. The projected increase in revenue was 66 per cent, and so far the pub is meeting or exceeding that goal. "With the exception of Sundays we are selling anywhere from 50 to 150 per cent more than last year," stated QP Manager Mark Picketts. Said Alfie's Pub Manager Ben Bourke: "On our renovations this year we have spent well under $25,000, and the changes have significantly altered the atmosphere of the pub." These include the addition of a liquor bar along the main bar and draft taps to the bottle bar section, and a new food area, located where the former coat check was housed. "In general we have had a very good month at the pub, sales have been up significantly from last year... a lot of that has to do with these changes," stated Bourke. Homecoming weekend put a damper on Alfie's expected monthly profits when a power outage forced the pub to close early. "The loss of power was a disappointment but nothing that cannot be overcome," said Bourke. "It was also completely out of our hands." Alfie's is planning to hold another Homecoming Saturday, later in the month, where the pub will be open from 4:00 p.m. until close. "We are going to try to hold it on a Saturday when we have a home football game so anyone who missed out on homecoming at Alfie's will have a chance to participate," said Bourke. The Used Book Store Exchange is also aiming for an increase in revenue this year as a result of the additional merchandise it offers in conjunction with its book sales. "Our revenue has been increasing steadily over the past three to four years and is directly related to the fact that we are selling items other than books," commented UBS Manager Vanessa Gruben. Gruben is also anticipating increased sales for the Tricolour Express this year. They are continuing the six pack deal (six trips for the price of five) and are also selling tickets for a number of charters. The Publishing and Copy Centre management is also feeling positive about the year. "We have had the best summer ever as far as revenues so we have got off to a great start," commented P&CC Manager Greg Blackett. "We are expecting an increase in revenues over last year's actuals," he said.

Students sweat it out in a packed step aerobics class.

PHOTO BY SEAN RICHMOND

Kingston's One and Only
Hard Rock Café

"Win Your Tuition" - a value up to $1500. Enter ballots now - draw to take place Thanksgiving weekend.

Sunday & Monday nights - open MIC with host Smitty.

Every night 6pm - 9pm
20¢ wings (with the purchase of a beverage)

SUMMER CAMPS ASUS

Three camps.
One Executive Director.
You do the math.

ASUS is looking for an Executive Director to oversee three summer camps: Arts Adventure, Computer Discovery, and Science Discovery. Applications are due Friday, Oct. 16 by 4:00 at The Core (183 University). Please call 545-6000 x4622 with any questions. This is a full-time, paid position during the summer with a volunteer component during the school year.

ASUS NOW HIRING. ASUS

In Here

Women's Link Group

Women who have experienced emotional, physical and sexual abuse and who use alcohol or other drugs are welcomed to a free confidential program on Wednesdays from 2 to 4 p.m., between October 14 and December 2. Call 531-9898 to register or for information.

Alcohol and Drug Program

Men and women 16 years or older who are having problems with alcohol or drugs are invited to a 10-week program beginning October 7. Call 531-9898 to register or for information.

Scholar-in-Residence

Visiting Scholar in the department of mathematics and statistics Kathryn Fraughnaugh, professor at the University of Colorado at Denver, will be available for informal discussion in Chown Hall, common room east, on October 14 from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. and October 15 from 10 a.m. to 12 noon. Everyone is welcome.

Out There

600 schools may close

Liberal education critic Lyn McLeod told the provincial legislature that 600 schools, most of them in the public system, are likely to be closed as a result of Ontario's new school-funding formula. Most of the schools at risk are located in major urban centres such as Toronto or Ottawa. Dave Johnson denied the report, saying that closing schools is a school-board decision. McLeod ridiculed Johnson, saying that the Ministry of Education only provides enough resources, such as heat and light, to keep the number of schools they want open.

Starvation in Russia

An emergency appeal has been launched by the Red Cross, warning of a catastrophe that could lead to mass starvation and thousands of refugees. The economic crisis in Russia, caused by the collapse of the ruble and the banking system, could produce an urban disaster and a deadly winter for millions. The International Monetary Fund predicted yesterday that the Russian economy will decline by six per cent in 1999, sending it into a deep recession after a slight growth last year.

Prepared for Y2K

Continued from page 1

can power grid may also cause complications. "A fully year 2000 compliant Ontario Hydro could be unhinged by disturbances or outages in other jurisdictions. Remember the contingent-wide effects of the New York City Blackout," he wrote.

As far as mainframe systems go, Queen's is in good shape, Thomas said. "Back in 1970 and early 1980s, we redesigned our data bases. Don Jardin was very much aware of the Y2K problem," he said, referring to Queen's computer science professor who is now vice-president of Legasys Corporation, a company that specializes in Y2K solutions.

The factor which complicates the Y2K problem is the interconnectedness of computers. Even if a computer is Y2K compliant, it may experience complications when it comes in contact with a non-compliant computer. "In our administrative systems, we exchange data with Guelph. We know that we also exchange data with Stary Canada," said Thomas. Institutions that swap data with the university need to be Y2K compliant for Queen's to be totally Y2K-proof, Thomas added.

So is Queen's headed for an Ice Storm-like power failure in 2000. "I don't anticipate a major interruption at the university or at home," said Paterson. "But I have an alternate source of heat and light at home. It's prudent for people to be prepared," he added.

Opportunities abound at Salomon Smith Barney.

Some are satisfied to follow in the footsteps of others. Others want something more. They want to create. They want to make an impact. And make it today. As Winston Churchill declared, "History will be kind to me. For I intend to write it."

To those of similar persuasion we say, "Let's get to work."

Care to join us?

Please join us to learn more about career opportunities in Investment Banking, Sales and Trading and Research.

Monday, October 5
5:30 p.m.
Dunning Hall Room 14
Reception at Queen's Pub

SALOMON SMITH BARNEY
success is earned™

© 1998 Salomon Smith Barney Inc. Salomon Smith Barney is a service mark of Salomon Smith Barney Inc. Member SIPC. An equal opportunity employer.

A Member of Travelers Group

Campus Dining

1998 - 1999

Queen's University offers a variety of meal plans to its (non-meal plan) students living at West Campus, Graduate Residence, Harkness Hall and off campus.

When you sign up for the Campus Meal Plan, you are buying more than excellent food and courteous service at a reasonable price. You are buying:

Nutrition Your food not only tastes good, but every meal is nutritionally balanced.

Time You are buying yourself valuable extra time to pursue your education by letting us do the preparation and clean-up.

Security Your food dollars won't run out at mid-semester on any of our meal plans.

Flexibility You choose the meal plan that suits your needs.

Company You'll find this a great way to meet new friends and share new experiences. All of our dining halls are alive during meal hours!

Choice We have expanded the variety of items we offer as well as making it self service so that you may better enjoy the variety.

Savings Single Meal Plans represent a 20% savings over cash meal prices but are subject to 7% GST.

Any combination of two Meal plans (from type 2 or 3) represent a 25% savings and are GST exempt.

See next two columns for additional savings from Pre-registering.

IN ORDER TO ENSURE YOUR DINING SATISFACTION AND NUTRITIONAL WELL-BEING, OUR CHEFS BUY ONLY FROM THE BEST.

Minute Maid PREMIUM
McCaun PREMIUM

Priced as of October 5, 1998

Type 1 - FULL YEAR MEAL PLANS

5 Breakfasts	$481.25
5 Lunches	$840.00
5 Dinner	$985.00

Type 2 - FIRST TERM ONLY PLANS

5 Breakfasts	$275.11
5 Lunches	$468.05
5 Dinner	$550.55

Type 3 - SECOND ONLY PLANS

5 Breakfasts	$350.14
5 Lunches	$595.70
5 Dinner	$700.70

- Plans are valid Monday - Friday from October 5, 1998 to Dec. 18, 1998 (First Term) Jan. 11 to April 23, 1999 (Second Term)
- The purchase of any single meal plan is subject to 7% G.S.T.
- Once purchased, meal plans are non-refundable and nontransferable with the exception of academic withdrawal.

How to Purchase a Meal Plan
Meal plans can be purchased at the following locations:

Food Services Office
John Deutsch University Centre
Monday - Friday 9:00am - 4:00pm

NAYA MEAT SAUSAGE
McCain PREMIUM

HELLMANN'S

NABISCO EST. 1810

FOODSERVICE QUAKER

POUR VOUS OFFRIR DE LA BONNE NUTRITION ET VOUS SATISFAIRE A CHAQUE REPAS, NOUS UTILISONS QUE DES PRODUITS DE HAUTE QUALITE.

Important Note

Once purchased, meal plans are non-refundable, non-transferable and are not interchangeable except in the circumstance of academic withdrawal

Special Needs

We readily accommodate special diets and/or dietary restrictions. Please contact us at 613 545-2953 if you have any questions. We do however, require a prescribed diet and/or a statement of condition from your family physician.

Also, please call us if you require any specialized items such as milk supplements required to meet your dietary restrictions or medical conditions. We would be happy to assist you.

Win! Win! Win!

When you purchase your Meal Plan, you can enter a draw to be one of five lucky students to win your Meal Plan purchased. Full-year participants are automatically enrolled in two chances to win (1 per term).

Enter by 30 October for the draw to be made on 6 November, 1998.

Programme

To better serve the students needs of today, our dining plan has been modified and expanded significantly over the past couple of years.

SELF SERVICE

Ban Righ Hall, Leonard Hall and West Campus offer an all you can eat, serve yourself plan.

HOURS OF SERVICE

The hours of service have been expanded to better meet the needs of today's students. They are posted in Leonard Hall, Ban Righ Hall and West Campus and include longer continental breakfasts/branches and dinners.

Breakfast Wake up to a piping hot, nourishing breakfast: crisp bacon, country sausage or grilled ham with farm-fresh eggs; a tall stack of pancakes, waffles or golden french toast, cereals, fresh fruit, baked goods, hot coffee, ice cold milk and orange juice.

Lunch and Dinner Choose from a wide variety of hearty homemade soups and breads.

The Firehouse Grill offers a variety of items including hamburgers and hot dogs, topped to your request at Leonard Hall, Ban Righ Hall and West Campus.

Deli-Bars with a wide variety of sliced meats and cheeses as well as eight varieties of bread at Leonard Hall, Ban Righ Hall and West Campus.

Our Stir Fry Area at Ban Righ offers freshly prepared items as you watch. Every menu will include a variety of rice, vegetables and meat dishes.

Traditional entrees will be offered at each meal, as well as a variety of vegetables and potatoes at Leonard Hall, Ban Righ Hall and West Campus.

A huge Build Your Own Salad Bar is available with a seemingly endless variety of items, at all Residence Dining Halls.

SCIENCE

Red hot chili peppers

I'LL ALWAYS REMEMBER MY first (and to date, last) experience with Kung Pao chicken.

It was in a little Szechuan place at Spadina and College in good ol' T.O. I spotted the spicy dish on the menu and remembered the name from an episode of Sinfeld. Remember "George likes his chicken spicy"?

Now, I'm no chili neophyte. I like my vindaloo, my jerk chicken, my #13 at The Wok Inn. I really thought I could handle this.

Receiving my order, I scooped up a forkful of what I thought were black beans or slices of mushroom and carefully chewed them into a fine paste, making sure every part of my mouth could enjoy the delicious morsel. However, to my surprise, horror, and eventual agony, I discovered that those were not beans or mushrooms I had just consumed, but Magma-Hot Chinese Black Peppers of Death (probably not the accepted nomenclature, but it fits).

When the pain finally ebbed and I was able to think again (this was the following Monday), I considered three questions: why do plants produce a substance this pungent and painful, why do we humans react to it so violently, and why in the name of Kung Pao himself would we put this stuff in our food?

The substance in question is capsaicin, a chemical that occurs naturally in chilies, giving them their kick. The higher the concentration of capsaicin, the hotter the chili — from the mildest sweet bell to the hottest habanero. In its pure form, capsaicin is remarkably potent stuff: a dilute solution of one part capsaicin in 100,000 parts water is still strong enough to cause blistering on the tongue. So why do chilies produce capsaicin? Ironically, so that animals won't eat them. As with many of the plant-derived compounds we find tasty, useful, or intoxicating, capsaicin is a plant defence mechanism. A small mammal foraging for food that chooses a chili will remember that burning sensation in its mouth and avoid them in the future.

Scientists are beginning to understand why our brains perceive the presence of capsaicin as pain and heat. In the membranes of certain nerve cells, there is a protein which binds capsaicin, which was first cloned a year ago by scientists at the University of California at San Francisco. Because the capsaicin molecule contains a vanillyl group, they called the protein vanilloid receptor subtype 1, or simply VR1.

VR1 is a channel that, when activated, allows positively charged ions, especially calcium ions, to flow through the cell membrane. The presence of calcium ions within nerve cells opens more channels in the membrane and allows more calcium in, which, in turn opens still more channels. This positive feedback is the basis of the nerve impulse.

What do you do if you've had one too many Guatemalan Insanity Peppers?

So, when capsaicin is around, nerves fire. But, why does it feel hot?

I recently spoke to Gerald Morris, Queen's professor and head of the department of biology. He explained that there is still more to learn about the relationship between capsaicin and the VR1 receptor. To explain, he drew an analogy between capsaicin and another group of compounds which have a remarkable effect on humans: drugs derived from opium, such as morphine and heroin, collectively called the opioids.

"The obvious comparison is the opioids and the opioid receptors, where there are the drugs opium and its related compounds. When people looked in humans they found the edorphins." Edorphins are part of our natural pain suppression mechanism and are chemically similar to opium derivatives. Edorphins are the natural trigger, the endogenous ligand, for the opioid receptor, but opioid drugs will work too.

But as Morris pointed out to me, "there is no known endogenous ligand for the capsaicin receptor." So, it seems that we react to a completely non-toxic compound, produced by certain plants — with nothing chemically similar in our own bodies — as if our gums are on fire. Something doesn't quite add up.

"One idea," explained Morris, "is that this receptor is not only activated by capsaicin, it's [also] activated by heat." Indeed, the UCSF study showed that VR1 is sensitive to rapid increases in temperature, as well as to capsaicin. That would explain why spicy foods taste "hot" — both capsaicin and heat trigger the same receptor.

Incidentally, capsaicin doesn't just affect the tongue and lips. Any part of the body that has nerve endings is sensitive, including the entire skin surface, the length of the gut, and the eyes. Morris tells a story confirming that there are capsaicin receptors in our most delicate tissues. I won't recount the story here; let's just say that, for graduate students working with capsaicin, it is much more important to wash their hands before using the washroom than after.

All of this still doesn't explain why we subject ourselves to suicide wings and prairie fires. There has been some suggestion that capsaicin and other spices have some preservative properties, which would explain why so much of the spicy fare originates in tropical countries where, until recently, no method of refrigeration was available. Morris, however, favours the explanation that we use spices because they enhance flavours. And it's not just humans who think so.

"There was an animal study," Morris said, "where they gave rats plain food and... food which had quite a high dose of capsaicin in it. After a period [of a week], the rats were then given a choice. The ones that had had the spicy food — which enough to cause them discomfort initially — preferred it."

Certainly, capsaicin adds another dimension to an eating experience. Being odourless and tasteless, it stimulates parts of our mouths, and our brains, that blander foods don't.

Of course, no article on spicy food would be complete without the antidotes. What do you do if you've had one too many Guatemalan Insanity Peppers?

You've probably heard that water will do more harm than good, and other than the cooling sensation of the water, it's true. Capsaicin isn't very soluble in water, so the best it can do is spread the heat around. Each spicy-food culture has its own remedy. The Thais suggest sugar and the Chinese prescribe rice. Carbohydrates do seem to absorb capsaicin or mask its effects. Indian restaurants offer a selection of yogurt-based drinks and condiments to cool you down, and chili con carne and beer go very well together. Capsaicin is very soluble in both fats and alcohol.

Theoretically, then, the best remedy for too many chilies would be a very rich, very strong white russian, made with whole milk or heavy cream.

I'll have to try that next time I dare to take on Kung Pao.

John Bowman's mom doesn't like how all of his science articles end up mentioning booze.

From "Varsity Blues" to Tricolour hues

The transfer student story

By RACHELLE VILLANUEVA

Let's get this much maligned introduction out of the way (as anyone who has already met me has heard by now). My name is Rachelle Villanueva, I am a transfer student who has completed two years at U of T and am in second year Arts. I'm behind a year because I've switched half of my program and some of my credits could not be acknowledged by Queen's University.

It has been a long journey on the yellow asphalt road from Yonge Street to University Avenue and, of course, there's much more asphalt paved on my story than that.

So, I took three campus tours, making lists of pros and cons. It was like OAC all over again, except this time, I had a brain.

I can't even count the number of times since the beginning of frosh week that I've been asked, "So what didn't you like about U of T?" It's such a loaded question that each time I'm compelled to give a loaded answer: "U of T sucks."

So why did I leave? To be very honest, it's a question I ask myself everyday. After all, it took a lot of guts for me to pack up my bags and tell my dad that the 10-year-old family car was being forced to roll all the way from Mississauga to Kingston.

Yes, it was because I felt isolated at U of T (being one of 55,000 undergrads), and because life at U of T felt like high school all over again. However, instead of rambling on about the turmoil I experienced as an unspiced and dispossessed student in the mammoth University of Toronto, where "Varsity Blues" took on a whole new meaning for me, I will explain what it took to get here and what I think of Queen's University thus far.

BECOMING A TRANSFER STUDENT wasn't easy. In my case, it was a bitch to realize that after two years I was simply in the wrong university. Partially, it was a hunch. For two years I felt like I was trying to squeeze into something I wasn't meant for. As is the case with anything in life, when you force yourself to endure a period of drudgery, it's only a matter of time before your "inner self" bursts forth to kick you in the butt. It took a long spell of depression and the approval of family and friends before I requested the almighty OUAC (Ontario University Academic Centre) form and applied to three other universities — Queen's, Guelph and McMaster. In the meantime, during my last year at U of T, my marks were alright, but I was barely "there" and couldn't wait to get out. It got to a point where I felt invisible and would see ghosts of myself wandering the stale halls, asking me, "what are you still doing here?"

Transferring piled the stress high on my plate as it meant more OSAP and setting my graduation date back a year. And to think how badly I wanted to graduate in the year 2000 — a graduate of the millennium! Imagine yourself transferring from Queen's to another university — your first inclination is probably to say that it's unthinkable. Keep in mind, though, that priorities and opinions change over the years, and planning too far ahead could cement your boots in a lifestyle better suited for someone else.

SO, I TOOK THREE CAMPUS TOURS, making lists of pros and cons. It was like OAC all over again, except this time, I had a brain. Logic pointed to Mac, where I could pursue the same double major that I was taking at U of T, but my aforementioned inner self screamed, "Queen's!" Not wanting to be kicked in the butt this time around, I bowed to my intuition and made the irrevocable decision to come here. Broke and confused as I was, it was the hardest decision I've ever had to make in my life. I don't regret it one bit.

Although I hold with the sentiment that U of T sucks, it is a biased acclamation and I admit there were many good things about the school. In some ways I can even go so far to say that it is better than Queen's: U of T has more program options, a larger library system and still ranks as the best medical/doctoral school in Canada according to Maclean's (if you believe in that rating system).

More importantly, I have found that the University of Toronto, in comparison to Queen's, is more socially diverse. Sure, the race issue is taboo and most would rather not deal with it, but as a woman of Asian background, I've become sensitive to matters of race in environments I find myself in. That said, I must admit that I noticed a sea of primarily white faces immediately upon my arrival. Let's say that the Queen's "Tricolour" doesn't reflect anything but a flag.

Class issues also hit hard — I was astonished at the boxes being thrown out at my residence revealing the huge quantities of brand new furniture and appliances (computers, printers, stereo equipment) stacked outside of the dorm. As I lie buried under OSAP, I must admit that it sometimes gets uncomfortable and annoying surrounded by so many privileged people. However, I refuse to let these qualms defuse my optimism. Thus far, I have met many people with whom I have important things in common and feel comfortable.

FEATURES

In residence, my case of cold feet continues as my neighbourhood peers are almost entirely first-year students. Frosh week keg parties proved to be a popular phenomenon among my neighbours, while I felt I was too old (and a bit of an inadequate party machine) for those things. Some floormates I hang out with can't even go to pubs because they're not yet of age. Lastly, you can imagine how challenging it is for me to be single and older than all of the guys in my residence — I am starting to believe it is impossible to meet someone "datable" in my situation! Though this triggers a yearning for me to go out and meet people my age, my floormates are a good bunch (yah, Gordon 5!).

WHEN NEWT'S WEEK BEGAN (a unique version of frosh week), my estrangement lessened. I was relieved to be provided the chance to meet people in the same boat. A NEWT, for the uninformed, are New, Exchange, Castle and Transfer students, lumped together as an orientation group. (I like to refer to us as leftovers.) We experienced all the froshie things but with a bit more style and dignity, not to mention the privilege of chanting, "We're not Frosh!!!" We played games, painted coveralls and had tanning ceremonies (wherein I rubbed a U of T sweat on my butt), as all new Queen's students have to do. It was simultaneously fun and strange to participate in these rituals. Having come from U of T, where most are too busy to appreciate pride in their school, school spirit was a weird, intoxicating concept. Once, upon making a snide remark comparing froshies to lemmings, I was jokingly told by a fellow NEWT to leave my U of T cynicism in Toronto. Thus, I immersed myself in singing "Oil Thigh" over and over again to see what it felt like to succumb to the crowd mentality. It was the most fun I've had in a while and I must acknowledge the hard work of Mike Logan (the head NEWT) and all the Geckos (NEWT Gaels) who, for a short week, took the "transfer" out of "transfer students."

I must admit that I noticed a sea of primarily white faces immediately upon my arrival. Let's say that the Queen's "Tricolour" doesn't reflect anything but a flag.

ALL THINGS CONSIDERED, it has only been three weeks since I have been here at Queen's. I am still adjusting and have moments when I wish I wasn't such an exception. I am already behind in my school work (as I always was at U of T) but for different reasons — it's because I am involved in extracurricular activities, socializing, partying and sitting by the lake pretending to do readings. Is Queen's a better school than U of T? I guess anything is better than being "960813310."

Rachelle Villanueva is now 407-5476 and is still swingin' single on Gordon 5 as the floor matriarch.

Starklyng date at night?

Out for coffee with a friend?

Dark outside at night?

Then Don't Forget ...

Walkhome is Open!

Sun - Wed 8 p.m. - 2 a.m.
Thurs - Sat 8 p.m. - 3 a.m.

Our boundaries extend West to West Campus,
North to York St., East to Ontario St.,
And South to the Lake!

So Give Us A Call @ 545-2662

We would also like to thank our sponsors: Tordiff Communications for their radio support, and Cyclepath for our six Peugeot Bicycles!

Cyclepath
339 Princess St.
Kingston, Ontario K7L 1B7
542-3616

Asia Africa
... South America ...

'Home for the Holidays'
'Travelling for the Holidays'

Christmas space CRITICAL! Let us reserve now.

Tokyo from 1239	Round World 1869
Rio from 869	Bare Bones
Nairobi from 1499	Round World 2599
J'burg from 1349	via South Pacific
Quito from 649	South Pacific 1939
Bombay from 1369	via Asia
Bangkok from 1129	Circle Pacific 2399

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
186 Princess St., Kingston (at Montreal)
Leisure Travel 549-3553 Long Haul Group Travel 549-3561
Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

The Toucan
www.thetoucan.com

SPECIALS

1/2 price WINGS* sun-tues	1/2 price NACHOS* wed	$2.49 sunday BREAKY
---------------------------	-----------------------	----------------------

*with beverage purchase after 4pm

FRI OCT 2
RETROBUTION
"burnin' the house down" with the best of the 80's

Kirkpatrick's
76 Princess st. 544-1966

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

Tracking our safety

ON THE QUEEN'S CAMPUS OF THE future, Security may use personal transmitters and sophisticated software to track individual students who need emergency assistance. But at what cost?

Campus Security's idea to equip students with keychain-sized personal alarm systems is impractical, and the money would be better spent on other safety initiatives. A less expensive solution would be for a group of student volunteers to patrol our own neighbourhoods nightly. If significant sums of money are to be spent, however, we would be better off extending the boundaries of Security's patrols, installing more blue lights, and improving lighting everywhere Queen's students live, and not just on campus.

While the idea of giving each student the choice of using such a system seems fair, it could also have a detrimental effect on the way Campus Security operates. Rather than focusing on improving our safety through a preventative approach, the new system could lead to Security relying too much on reactive measures. The personal alarms could also insill a false sense of security among students who might otherwise make more prudent choices about their personal safety.

These objections aside, the system seems hopelessly impractical to implement. According to Security, at least two-thirds of the campus would have to be viable. Since it is unlikely that the majority of students on campus feel threatened enough to warrant carrying a personal alarm system, this quota would likely not be met. Those who may choose to carry the small devices with them would be prone to misplacing them or setting them off accidentally. The added risk of students getting the alarms off purposely could also offset the possible benefits of the pager program.

Considering that the costs of installing the system could be enormous, both in terms of fiscal and safety concerns, Campus Security would be wise to consider alternative ways to improve security.

Lethal weapon 12

MIKE HARRIS MUST BE regressing back into childhood if he thinks his government's decision to allow 12 year olds to handle firearms makes any sense. Ontario's new Hunter Apprenticeship Safety Program will put lethal firepower in the hands of children who are years too young to drive or even vote in an election.

While the program purports to make hunting safer by teaching children the proper use of firearms, it also serves to legitimize the use of guns by children who are clearly not old enough to handle them responsibly. There is a basic inconsistency in requiring people to wait until they are 16 years old before they can touch a steering wheel and allowing much younger children to legally fire a gun. While it is unclear what is a proper age to begin handling weapons, the government ought to realize that many 12 year olds have a romanticized notion of violence and guns in our society. No matter how much education or supervision given, there is a real danger that some children will use firearms inappropriately or even maliciously if given the chance.

The consequences of introducing guns to children are already disturbingly obvious in the United States, where three of the children involved in recent schoolyard shootings were enrolled in a similar apprenticeship program.

While it would be impractical to crack down on parents in rural Ontario who teach their young children how to hunt with rifles, it is irresponsible for a government that was elected on a platform of 'common-sense' to condone the practice.

Bons Mots: They that can give up essential liberty to obtain a little temporary safety deserve neither liberty nor safety.

— Benjamin Franklin

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF
Keith Gerin
Tara Mansbridge

MANAGING EDITOR
Laura MacInnis

NEWS EDITOR
Flora Stevenson

ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS
Shawn Brimley
Renee Huang
Vacant

EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
Paul Heisler

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR
Stefan Murray

ASSISTANT A&E EDITORS
Sarah Crosbie
Lilian Kim

FEATURES EDITOR
Sean Springer

OPINIONS EDITOR
Todd Jackson

SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Adam Kaminsky

ASSISTANT SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Robert MacNeil

MISC. EDITOR
Ken Butland

GRAPHICS EDITOR
Janice Chan

THE READER EDITOR
Jesse Craig Bellringer

SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT
John Bowman

SPECIAL PUBLICATIONS EDITORS
Elizabeth Frogley
Shandley McMurtry

PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS
Alex Kronby
James Terjanian

WEB EDITOR
Marco Lui

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Kraft

SALES REPRESENTATIVES
Kari Brinnell
Andrew Cooke
Kristian Li

ADVERTISING MANAGER
Vacant

ADVERTISING DESIGNERS
Katharine Colburn
Annie Ge

SYSTEMS MANAGER
Vacant

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Friday, October 2, 1998 • Issue 10 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alpha Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.

Contents © 1998 by The Queen's Journal; all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on the Goss Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd in Ganarogue, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions.

Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2H8. Telephone—editorial: 613-545-2800 advertising: 613-545-6711 Fax: 613-545-6728. Email: journal@post.queensu.ca Internet: http://www.journal.queensu.ca Circulation 9,000 Issue 11 will be published on Tuesday, October 6, 1998.

De-constructing prejudice

BACK IN THE SUMMER OF '97 I decided to abandon my usual office job and venture into the testosterone-filled world of construction work. I spend eight months of the year sitting at a desk staring at a computer screen and doing never-ending readings, and that's enough — spending the summer the same way would just suck. I was a little concerned about whether construction firms would be reluctant to hire a woman, but thought I'd give it a try.

What I want is to be judged as an individual, and be given a chance.

I heard back from a construction firm shortly after taking in my resume. Chris, the foreman, called to interview me for the job. He explained what the job was, asked a few questions, established that I was neither afraid of hard work nor a complete idiot. And then (nervous throat-clearing noise) "I've, ah, never hired a lady before."

I managed to resist the urge to laugh hysterically at this description of myself and mumbled a response. Despite his obvious trepidation about employing a lady to do manual labour, he asked me if I could start work on Monday, which I most definitely could. He also told me to let him know if the guys gave me any trouble. This worried me.

Turns out the guys didn't give me any trouble. At first I got easier jobs and was asked if I was afraid of heights, or knew how to use a Skill saw or swing a sledgehammer. After a couple of days, they stopped asking and just treated me like the other guys.

This summer, I again went to look for a job and again, I really wanted to work outside doing construction or maintenance. I discovered a community centre nearby was hiring, so I took my resume in with high hopes.

Later that evening, the woman doing the hiring called and politely told me: "The job involves some cleaning and gardening, and I'm not worried about that because girls can do that better than boys, but there is some heavy lifting, so we're really looking for a boy." The heaving lifting turned out to involve moving tables. You know, the plywood kind with the collapsing legs. They do not exactly require herculean strength to move, but she was sure it would be too much for me.

She reluctantly agreed to interview me, and when I arrived I discovered that she hadn't even glanced at my resume. She talked for a few minutes about how heavy those tables were, and then told me that since a boy had arrived for his interview, mine was over.

I wound up spending the summer as a receptionist, sitting behind a desk staring at a computer screen, severely disillusioned.

I don't expect everyone to be innocent of prejudice and welcome me to the love-in that is the real world. What I want is to be judged as an individual, and be given a chance to prove that ladies can do construction work.

BY LIZ FROGLEY

OPINIONS

The cost of learning

THERE IS PERHAPS NO ISSUE OF greater importance to students across Ontario than that of rising tuition and increasing student debt. Year after year we are warned of inevitable tuition hikes, and in fits of fear and ignorance we strike back at the government and demand it freeze tuition based on the implicit assumptions that these hikes are both unnecessary and immoral. Neither is true. Increasing tuition is both necessary and quite morally sound, and despite the abundance of empty rhetoric we hear to the contrary, there are very viable solutions to the extension of student debt they bring.

Tuition fees have never been dearer, but never has a higher proportion of young Canadians been in university. In spite of this fact, academics and student organizations perpetuate the view that as tuition rates rise people are denied a university education because they cannot pay. According to a Statscan study, despite rapidly rising tuition fees starting in the 1980s, an even greater percentage of young people than ever before are applying to university.

It is very important to understand what this demonstrates. Students value the rewards from a university education — specifically, better job prospects and higher future earnings. They are willing to pay for what they get. University graduates are among the top income earners in the country. The small price we pay for our university education is practically nothing in exchange for the gains it will bring us later in life.

Our governments are correct in shifting university costs onto those who are the chief beneficiaries: the students. Society not only gets more bang for the buck for each dollar spent on primary or secondary schooling, but as universities continue to depend on tuition fees they become more responsive to students. Already universities across Ontario are competing like never before to attract students. It is long overdue. We lose hundreds of thousands of dollars in the form of students who take their business to the United States and elsewhere proving that higher tuition does not discourage applicants. Furthermore, we cannot justify forcing low and middle-income earners to subsidize an education system that eventually rewards the well-off.

Inevitably many will complain that the inescapable evil of higher tuition is that those who cannot gain access to university in the first place will never have a chance to enjoy the benefits. The solution to this problem is two-fold. First, we need an Income Contingent Repayment Loan (ICRL) program. The ICRL spreads repayment of student debt over a person's working life, and is sensitive to fluctuations in income: the higher the income, the greater the payment. Below a certain income level, repayment is suspended altogether. The ICRL has a proven international track record. We should adopt it immediately. The second answer lies in corporate sponsorship. Universities across Canada have already reaped the benefits of this. Why waste public dollars when untrouched riches of private ones wait to be taken advantage of? The argument that it is immoral to allow corporate infringement on our "holier than thou" educational environment is preposterous. How is it more moral to deprive students of thousands in loans simply to keep both Pepsi and Coke on campus?

Henry Adams wrote that nothing in education is as astonishing as the amount of ignorance it accumulates in the form of inert facts. He could not have been more correct. It is almost taken as university gospel that tuition hikes are fundamentally immoral. They are not. When confronted with such issues as increased tuition, we owe it to ourselves to confront them bravely and take the time to research smart solutions. We have no right, however, to claim we are being treated unfairly. Nothing could be further from the truth.

BROCK JONES
ARTSCI '00

Letters to the Editors

Jane didn't bebop

Dear Editors:

I must say that I was thoroughly unimpressed by Michelle Cheng's concert review of Jane Bunnett and the Spirits of Havana's performance last Friday (The Journal, Sept. 29, 1998 pg. 15). I too was in attendance at Bunnett's concert, but unlike Miss Cheng, I truly enjoyed the concert. I do realize that everyone is entitled to their own opinion, especially when it comes to music. However I feel that "concert reviewers" for widely read publications, such as The Journal, should at least have some knowledge of the music for which they criticize. I can't say that I'm an expert in the field, but after reading her article several times, I questioned whether Ms. Cheng actually knew what Afro/Cuban Jazz is all about.

First, not all hand-drums are called bongos. In Bunnett's concert, her auxiliary percussionist played the congas. Interchanging the name of these two instruments is like calling a "cello" a "violin," and is sacrilegious in the percussion community.

Second, one cannot describe Bunnett's "tunes" as "bebop" or even "bebopish." With the exception of one piece ("Hole in One," a progressive jazz fusion tune), the pieces played at the concert were of the "straight up" Afro/Cuban Jazz genre. Bebop is an entirely different form of music. If you don't believe me, have a listen to any of Bunnett's albums and tell me if they sound anything like Charlie "Byrd" Parker or Dizzy Gillespie, two of the innovators of the bebop movement. I think one would seriously question the use of "bebopish" as an adjective in this context.

Third, Ms. Cheng stated that the band lacked energy. I am in partial agreement with her, in that Bunnett was not as energetic as hearing her play on her albums. (This was my first time seeing Bunnett live.) Nonetheless, Ms. Cheng failed to mention that Bunnett hosted the Canadian Juno Awards the night before the concert, and has been on a very busy performance schedule in the past week. I thought this fact should have at least been acknowledged before submitting Bunnett to such harsh criticism.

Finally, I was especially annoyed at Ms. Cheng's comment, stating that Bunnett's performance "wasn't as much an entertaining show as it was a large improv session." Perhaps Ms. Cheng needs to be reminded that Jazz, in all its shapes and forms, is improvisational music. That is the beauty of it; no two recordings or performances of a piece are ever played the same way. In addition, I fail to understand what Ms. Cheng was seeking in terms of "entertainment" at a Jazz concert. Granted there was no real stage show; Bunnett didn't hop around flailing her sax into amplifiers, whilst pyrotechnics light up Dunning like an overhead projector gone berserk. That would not be Jazz. Jazz is meant to be listened to, even if it is live. Furthermore, if the show wasn't entertaining, why did Bunnett receive a standing ovation before and after her encore?

I feel that Jane Bunnett and The Spirits of Havana put on a marvelous show. It is my hope that Bunnett never comes across Ms. Cheng's concert review, for fear that I will never see her

Continued on next page

talking

HEADS

How do you keep busy?

Singing "King of the Road" and "Brown Eyed Girl" while my son is in school.

JOHN
(single parent/busker)

"I just like to hang out -- eh?"

YVONNE
(Kingston local)

... the methodane program ...

CIDER & JAMES
(on the streets of Kingston)

PHOTOS BY MARTE NATYK

Want to edit this section?

Applications are being accepted for the Opinions Editor position.

Deadline — TODAY at 5 p.m.

All applicants welcome!

Drop your resumé off at 272 Earl St., e-mail it to journal@post.queensu.ca, or call Laura, Keith or Tara at 545-2800 incident, but I think that it is important that you give the people who weren't in the building a reason to care about the accident and that it doesn't happen again. Investigative reporting should require the writer to report more than that the incident just happened. What is next? A front page article about this week's power outage? Just give me more than the obvious, that is all I ask.

Continued from page 11

FRASER MCINTYRE
COMM '00, ARTSCI '00

EngSoc shows hypocrisy

Dear Editors,

I am writing with regards to

Keith Stewart's (Engineering Society President) letter to the editor in the September 18 edition of The Journal. Stewart was responding to a MiSC piece by George Reinblatt which characterized Queen's engineering students as "the biggest group of geeks ever to walk the planet." Certainly Reinblatt's article went too far in this vein and incited general contempt for a very diverse and accomplished bunch of future professionals. It is quite appropriate that Reinblatt's article be criticized. However, I resent the fact that the publisher of Golden Words says one thing, but acts in a very different manner.

Many of you remember that the March 18 issue of Golden Words contained an article entitled "The Queen's LSS is run by a bunch of sneaky assholes." The piece was full of mean, gratuitous abuse directed at me and another LSS official as well as against law students in general. In addition, it made innuendo and claims which simply are not true. That did not seem to matter to the author or to the editors of GW. No one contacted me for a response or to check the facts. An editor of GW, Peter Lynn, confessed to me that it was likely that no editor had read the piece before it was printed. He said that happened all the time — press night was a zoo. Essentially, the conduct of GW was worse than that of The Journal which Stewart now attacks.

You can see how when Stewart writes "I cannot comprehend what could motivate the writer to take such blatant shots at one specific group of students and their culture," I have to remind him that I said exactly the same thing to him last April.

Keith, your publication hurt me and many other law students for no good reason. You defended Golden Words' lies and tactics. You suggested that I formally seek an apology. Last year your "suicide issue" demonstrated to all of us what a GW apology amounts to. No thanks, I'd rather not give GW another opportunity to victimize me. Furthermore, the reasons for the apology should be blatantly obvious to you. Do the right thing without having to be forced to.

As Stewart himself states, the lesson is that "there is an obligation on all members of the university community to be welcoming, especially those members in a position of responsibility." No person's dignity or respect should be unfairly compromised. Can you honestly say, Keith, that the principles you espouse in your letter are the same ones which guide you and EngSoc in your responsibility to our community as publisher of Golden Words?

CHRIS ELLIS
LAW '99
PRESIDENT, LAW STUDENTS' SOCIETY

Constable concerns

Dear Editors,

Queen's Student Constables are a team of peer supervisors who are dedicated to ensuring the safety of everyone involved at football games. Our duties include frisking for alcohol and projectiles at the gates, as well as maintaining crowd control throughout the stands. As a team, we are disappointed at suggestion that constables at the gate are "often arbitrary and patronizing" in regards to what constitutes a projectile.

Due to past incidents regarding intoxication levels and student injuries at football games, a specific set of guidelines was set up by members of the Athletics Department, Queen's Administration and AMS Officials. This written policy took effect after the particularly boisterous homecoming celebrations of 1994, during which a few students were injured. Among other things it states that constables will not allow anything that can be used as a projectile into the stands.

This being said, constables realize that articles such as pop cans and baby dolls make pretty lame projectiles, yet there are valid reasons for confiscating them. First, Marriott is the only service licensed to sell non-alcoholic beverages on the premises, and does not take kindly to people bringing in their own pop. Also, contrary to the author's belief in arguing that students "will succumb to the temptation to hurl anything that is not tied down." The author does not take in to account the effects of alcohol on students' inhibition levels, or the fact that when people get together to celebrate an event such as a football game inter-faculty rivalries become a problem. Emotional energy is in high gear at these times, and accordingly the potential for mischief is increased. It is with these concerns that Constables, as a proactive service, ensure that otherwise mundane objects are included in the list of potential missiles.

Student Constables ultimately derive their "list of potential projectiles" from a set of guidelines that was set up by the Administration and students alike, and thus cannot be considered arbitrary.

One more thing, Gord Moodie does not conform to any type of projectile that the constables recognize.

SCOTT MCCANN
CONSTABLE MANAGER

photo by Alex Kronby

photo by Alex Kronby

photo by Alex Kronby

HOMECOMING 1998

photo by Alex Green

photo by Alex Green

photo by Alex Kronby

photo by Alex Kronby

photo by Alex Green

photo by April Bond

photo by Alex Green

photo by Alex Green

photo by Alex Green

photo by April Bond

SPORTS & FITNESS

BEST OF THE 'BATCH'?
 Charlie Batch, the second round pick of the Detroit Lions, has taken over as starting quarterback from overpaid Scott Mitchell. After the Lions started 0-2, the former Eastern Michigan star was given the nod at quarterback and after losing his first start led the team to a win against Tampa Bay on Monday night. While his numbers were not that impressive (12-23, 123 yards) he threw no interceptions and did not lose the game for his team. His fellow starting toolies, the more highly-touted Peyton Manning and Ryan Leaf could learn from his mistake free example. The top two draft picks lead the league having thrown 11 and 8 picks respectively. In the future it is likely that these two celebrated rookies will surpass Batch, but for now he is doing more.

THE CAT CLAWS BACK
 Toronto Maple Leafs goalie Felix Potvin is extremely distraught about his position as back-up goalie and he is beginning to voice his displeasure. With the signing of high profile goaltender Curtis Joseph during the summer, the highly paid veteran Potvin has been on the trading block, but the Leaf brass have yet to find a deal to their liking. Recently, after an exhibition game in his hometown of Montreal, Felix 'The Car' let the press know of his intention to possibly split from the Leafs' camp until he is traded. Come on, Felix. Don't you know that sitting out is not going to make management's job of getting market value for you in a trade any easier?

STOPPAGE LOOMS
 With the NBA lock-out going strong and no end in sight, it looks like basketball will lose its first regular season games to labour disputes. With exhibition games already being canceled and talks on hold until October 8, things do not look good. It is a shame that a league with so many good things going on in the last fifteen years has to deal with the greediness that so much of America despises. On the other hand, the NHL must be loving this situation, as their tv ratings can only go up with no NBA competition.

IF CHRISTMAS CAME EARLY...
 • NASCAR would go back to being a redneck, southern sport and stay off TV.
 • Questions about Florence Griffith-Joyner's drug use would die with her.
 • One NFL team would set a record in futility—go winless for an entire season.

Baseball takes centre stage

Queen's sweeps weekend

By JOURNAL SPORTS STAFF

The Queen's baseball team showed this weekend that there is more to baseball in Kingston than the playoff games on TV. With a four game sweep of George Brown College and York University, the squad burst into the national rankings at number four.

The team beat George Brown 11-6 and 11-0 in their Saturday doubleheader and followed that up with 10-5 and 9-5 victories against York in the Sunday twin bill.

The stat of the weekend was undoubtedly Chris Cartile who went 9-13 with three home runs and twelve runs batted in. He also pitched a complete game victory for good measure.

After splitting the first eight games of the season, the trip to Toronto saw the team elevate its record to 8-4 with four more games left in the regular season. The team will play two doubleheaders at Megafin Stadium against Durham College and University of Toronto starting on Saturday and Sunday at 1 p.m. respectively.

Pundits make fearless playoff predictions

By NEATE SAGER

By NICK SINCLAIR

By ROBERT MACNEIL

In the National League, the Atlanta Braves will sweep the overmatched Chicago Cubs in three games. In the other division series, the San Diego Padres will edge the Houston Astros in five games. The determined Padres will then edge Atlanta in a thrilling six-game showdown for the National League pennant, as the Braves' reliance on the long ball will prove foolhardy against a good Padres' pitching staff.

In the junior circuit, the Yankees will easily defeat the pitching-thin Texas Rangers in three games. In a matchup of two clubs long on slugging and short on reliable pitching, Boston's power tandem of Vaughn and Garciparras will carry the Red Sox past the Indians in five games, into an LCS showdown with the hated Yankees. However, the Curse of the Bambino will live to see another Opening Day, as the Sox succumb in five games.

In the World Series, the upstart Padres will give the Yankees a fight, but cooler heads will prevail. The Bronx Bombers, whose current roster has combined for 22 series rings, will triumph in six games to get the franchise's record 24th world championship.

When this spectacular season is over, 1998 will go down as the year of the Atlanta Braves. Save for back in 1995, the perennially favored Tomahawk Choppin' boys have tended to wilt in the post-season limelight. This time around nobody seems to be picking them, and yours truly suspects that this may offer a psychological edge. The Cubbies, whilst not the losers we are accustomed to seeing at Wrigley, have neither the pitching nor the hitting to offer much resistance. On the other side of the NL bracket, Houston is simply too deep, especially at the plate, to not overcome the Padres. In the NLCS, the Astros will be exposed as a team, that, even with Randy Johnson, simply don't have enough top-notch pitching to get by Atlanta. The Big Unit wins you maybe two games, the rest go to the Braves.

Over in the Junior circuit, the vaunted Bronx Bombers will walk all over Texas while the Red Sox slip by the Tribe setting up an ALCS between arch-rivals. In a shocker, the Sox, behind the pitching of Pedro Martinez will exorcise the demons of Bucky Dent by sneaking by the Yanks in seven. At this stage the Sox will be gassed; they will not have enough to beat another Goliath.

The American League features the best team in baseball, a wild-card team that backed into the playoffs and the best of two bad divisions. While Texas has a powerful line-up, they do not have the pitching to take the team all the way. The Indians play in the pathetic AL Central, and can't handle the big boys. The Red Sox are cursed and will never, ever win. This leaves the New York Yankees, with their 114 wins and business-like attitude, as the American League representative.

The only thing that is clear in the National League playoffs is that last year's champ, the Florida Marlins will not win. The Braves will not make the World Series because Bobby Cox's managerial skills are non-existent. San Diego does not have enough offensive depth, while Houston's only pitching is found in Randy Johnson. This leaves the Chicago Cubs lead by Sammy Sosa and their deceased broadcaster Harry Carrey. The legendary Carrey passed away last year without ever seeing the Cubbies in the big game. Look for the Cubbies to upset the Yankees in a classic showdown and hear Carrey call from the heavens as the final out is recorded. "It could be, it should be, it is!"

Gaels ready for Ravens

By ADAM KAMINSKY

The Queen's Golden Gaels, coming off of their biggest win of the season over McGill, hit the road to take on the bottom-feeding Carleton Ravens.

While one week ago Carleton would have been seen as an absolute joke, their win last Sunday in Quebec City against Laval has leant them a great deal more respectability.

O-QUE FOOTBALL STANDINGS

Team	G	W	L	T	P	A	P
Queen's	4	1	1	1	1	1	6
Carleton	3	2	1	0	0	0	4
Laval	4	2	2	0	0	0	4
McGill	1	2	5	0	0	0	4
Concordia	1	1	2	0	0	0	2
Carleton	1	1	1	0	0	0	2

(Queen's vs Carleton) 3 p.m. Sat on five on KFRB, 101.5 FM. Pregame 12:30

The Ravens (1-3), started the season losing three consecutive games in dramatic fashion, being outscored 124-39. At risk of rendering their season meaningless, they came back to win on a dreary day 19-17 against Laval.

Carleton on the offensive side of the ball is clearly a passing team. They throw upwards of 40 times a game and invariably play

Please see Queen's on page 16

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL HOCKEY POOL

- RULES
1. Pick three forwards, two defencemen, one enforcer and one goalie. Enforcers will receive one point for every five penalty minutes. Goalies will be given two points for a win and three points for a shutout.
  2. Pool is open to Queen's students, faculty and staff only. No cost to enter but only one entry per person. Deliver entries to The Journal house at 272 Earl Street. Once entry has been received, no changes will be permitted. Deadline for submissions is Friday, October 16 at 4 p.m.
  3. Points will be tabulated from start of regular season to Mar. 12. Standings will be published occasionally in The Journal. Winners will be announced March 19. Top three scores will receive prizes.

NAME _____ FACULTY/YEAR _____
 PHONE NO. _____ E-MAIL _____

Forwards (pick 3)	Goalies (pick 1)	Defence (pick 2)
<input type="checkbox"/> Ron Francis, CAR <input type="checkbox"/> Joe Sakic, COL <input type="checkbox"/> Jaromir Jagr, PIT <input type="checkbox"/> Mike Modano, DAL <input type="checkbox"/> Mats Sundin, TOR <input type="checkbox"/> Zigmund Palffy, NYI <input type="checkbox"/> Peter Forsberg, COL <input type="checkbox"/> Sergei Fedorov, DET	<input type="checkbox"/> Rostislav Tkachuk, PHO <input type="checkbox"/> Wayne Gretzky, NYR <input type="checkbox"/> Eric Lindros, PHI <input type="checkbox"/> Paul Kariya, ANA <input type="checkbox"/> John Leclair, PHI <input type="checkbox"/> Peter Bondra, WAS <input type="checkbox"/> Teemu Selanne, ANA <input type="checkbox"/> Alexei Yashin, OTT	<input type="checkbox"/> Chris Osgood, DET <input type="checkbox"/> Patrick Roy, COL <input type="checkbox"/> Martin Brodeur, NJ <input type="checkbox"/> Mike Richter, NYR <input type="checkbox"/> Curtis Joseph, TOR <input type="checkbox"/> Dominik Hasek, BUF <input type="checkbox"/> Olaf Kolzig, WAS
<input type="checkbox"/> Oleg Tverdokh, PHO <input type="checkbox"/> Ed Jovanovski, FLA <input type="checkbox"/> Sergei Gonchar, WAS <input type="checkbox"/> Vladimir Malakov, MON <input type="checkbox"/> Roman Hamrlik, EDM <input type="checkbox"/> Bryan Berard, NYI <input type="checkbox"/> Brian Leetch, NYR <input type="checkbox"/> Scott Niedermayer, NJ <input type="checkbox"/> Sander Ozolinsh, COL <input type="checkbox"/> Sergei Zubov, DAL <input type="checkbox"/> Niklas Lidstrom, DET <input type="checkbox"/> Al MacInnis, STL <input type="checkbox"/> Rob Blake, LA <input type="checkbox"/> Kevin Hatcher, PIT <input type="checkbox"/> Steve Duchene, LA <input type="checkbox"/> Larry Murphy, DET
Enforcers (pick 1) <input type="checkbox"/> Paul Law, FLA <input type="checkbox"/> Matthew Barnaby, BUF <input type="checkbox"/> Chris Simon, WAS <input type="checkbox"/> Tie Domi, TOR <input type="checkbox"/> Sandy McCarthy, TB <input type="checkbox"/> Donald Brashear, VAN

Entries due by Friday, Oct. 16 @ 4 p.m.

Deliver entries to 272 Earl Street For more info call 545-2800

Queen's hits road

Continued from page 15

our of the shotgun formation. The problem is that they are still not very good at it. Quarterback James Baker has thrown more than twice as many interceptions as touchdowns and the passing game as a whole ranks fifth in the conference. The Ravens have even less success running the ball, ranking last in the conference at 69.8 yards per game.

On the defensive side of the ball the Ravens have had a little more success of late, but on the whole have been most easily compared to a sieve.

Offensive coordinator Steve Yovetich is not as confident.

"[The Ravens] will show three different game plans in their three games, who knows what they will bring to the table for this game," said the second-year coordinator.

The strength of the Ravens lies in their special teams. Punter/kicker Jimmy McMillan is leading the conference in punting and is converting on long field goal attempts. Matt Stenson is doing a great job returning kicks, so the Gael coverage teams have to contain him.

The Gaels (2-1) come in with the league's top ranked offence and is running on all cylinders. They have had a few problems winning at Keith Harris Stadium in the past, but based on how they are playing and the quality of their opponent, this game will be a wipe-out.

Editor's prediction — Gaels by 17

ATHLETES OF THE WEEK

Crockford kicks

Female

The first Queen's Journal female athlete of the week of 1998 is varsity soccer's speedy forward Angie Crockford.

The third-year life science student has gotten off to a quick start with six goals in five games, which leads the OUA. The team has followed suit, winning all five of those games to place themselves first in the OUA East.

Head coach Dave McDowell is extremely pleased with the way Angie has come out of the chute for this season.

"She has always been fast, but now she looks explosive, and she is making much better decisions as far as finishing."

— Head coach Dave McDowell

Crockford, a native of Whitby, had a very productive week, scoring three goals against Trent and then following that performance with a goal against Ryerson.

When asked about her recent success, the forward is quick to credit her teammates.

"I'm getting balls that I like, far down the wing where I can use my speed," explained Crockford. "It is just a matter of me running it down and scoring on a breakaway."

O-line dominates

Male

line, true rookies Landon and Chesney, have been quickly accepted by this small fraternity.

"When Chris and I came in, they adopted us immediately and we began to learn from the guys," explained Landon.

Due to an injury to all-conference fifth-year guard Rob Chalmers two weeks ago, others were forced to step up and Chesney was thrust into the starting line-up.

"Everybody is bigger, faster, stronger [in the CIAU]. In high school, I just had to show up and get in the way," said Chesney of his high school days in St. Thomas.

Despite the fact he sat out the McGill game, the linemen are quick to credit Chalmers with playing a role in their success.

"The fact that we were able to play well shows that we have great depth and have learned a lot from [Chalmers]," commented Markham-native Moad.

When discussing the success of the line, the group begins to dole out praise to the backfield.

"Beau [Howes], Dusty [Falscheer], Corrales and Robyn have all done a great job of paying attention and helping us do our jobs," explained Webb, who hails from Cochrane, Alberta.

The last word comes, as it does in most conversations involving this unit, from the centre.

"We are the engine that drives the machine," says Preuter.

The two newcomers to the

Fall Recruitment 1998

Do you have First Aid & CPR certifications?

VOLUNTEER WITH QUEEN'S FIRST AID!

For more information, call our office at 5-15-6100 ext. 5373

Applications available at Student Health Due October 16th

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Just a little Crush: Leadman Trevor Hurst grips the crowd Wednesday night at AJ's.

Concert Review

IT WAS WEDNESDAY, a school night but AJ's was still packed. Why? Simple — Econoline Crush. The "industrial-flavoured" band hailing from Vancouver were in Kingston as part of a tour to promote the release of their second full length album, The Devil You Know.

The show began with a surprise when Joy Drop, rather than B.T.K., was delivered to the crowd as the opening act. However, this had no effect on the overall show because Joy Drop made their presence known. The band had no frontman but rather a front woman, and I must say she made the crowd forget the name B.T.K., with her stage presence and her band's musical ability.

JoyDrop, who has been touring with Econoline Crush, successfully warmed the crowd up for the main act. Joy Drop's first single for their new album Metaxsexual was "Beautiful" — a song of changing pace which echoed with the lyrics of the chorus "I'm not beautiful like you, I'm beautiful like me." But enough said about the enticing opening act, and on to bigger things, mainly the headliners of the night, Econoline Crush.

The crowd was ready and waiting for the entrance of the band they had come there to see. For lack of a better word that the audience was "pumped." When Econoline Crush took the stage the energy level in AJ's immediately soared. As the band broke into their first song the crowd packed the front area and began to dance, not the sort of dance you would find in a typical dance club but the kind inspired by the full sound of "rock n' roll." A few songs into the set, the band played the title track of their new album called "The Devil You Know." This song sent the crowd into a frenzy. Following the song, lead singer Trevor Hurst called the audience "fuckin' crazed," but of course, that was only the beginning of Hurst's interaction with the crowd. A frontman with huge presence and charisma, Hurst truly knew how to work an audience, either by shaking their hands or commanding them to scream, and the audience responded and obeyed.

Electronic rock electrifies AJ's

Econoline played an all-out energetic show. The song "Wicked" with its lyrics, "you don't feel, you don't care, you're so wicked," along with the well known song "Sparkle and Shine" brought the crowd to new heights right before the end of the set. Luckily, Econoline Crush didn't wait more than two minutes to get back up on stage for a tireless four-song encore, consisting of the famed "All That You Are," which perhaps the crowning touch of the great show.

Although Hurst's backing band, consisting of Robbie Morfitt and Ziggy on guitar, Ken Fleming on bass and Robert Wagner on drums were amply talented, they did little to overshadow the magnificent Hurst. Unfortunately for Hurst, the level of his mike was lower than that of the instruments. Luckily, this affected few songs because Hurst's vocals more than rose above it.

A frontman with huge presence and charisma, Hurst truly knew how to work an audience, either by shaking their hands or commanding them to scream.

The Devil You Know is Econoline Crush's second full-length album following up on the acclaimed Affliction. The new album is the band's attempt to capture the energy and spark of one of their live shows. Well, all I can say is if the CD accomplishes this then it is a CD worth buying.

"You don't feel, you don't care, you're so wicked."

Rotate this!

Marilyn Manson Mechanical Animals Nothing/Interscope Records

BY JIM WHITTINGTON

Everyone's favourite little Christian soldier has resurfaced and reinvented himself once again to bring us his latest Mechanical Animals. Yes, that's right, Marilyn Manson and his side show cronies are back to spread their twisted gospel to misguided youth everywhere. You just can't keep a good sadist down.

The album has the usual Manson stamp on it. Lyrically, the band is as bleak and angry as ever, spewing out the usual anti-God, anti-life, pro-drug themes that have made them so popular with parent groups everywhere.

Musically, the album is rather diverse. Its almost like Twigg Ramirez wrote a third of the music with the last album in mind, and then turned around and wrote the last two thirds after listening to a bunch of retro-electronica, powerpop, and Radiohead.

As for highlights — "Great Big White World", and "Mechanical Animals" have some cool instrumentation and arrangement. "The Dope Show" has a sort of glam rock feel to the chorus, and "I Don't Like the Drugs (But the Drugs Like Me)" has a bit of a funky sound going for it.

Less appealing songs include "The Speed of Pain" which is a nice attempt at an acoustic number, but Manson's voice sounds like crap and the lyrics, guitar line, and cheesy backup vocals just don't mesh at all. "I Want to Disappear" sounds like one of those bad eighties electric drum driven songs, and "User Friendly" and "Fundamentally Loathsome" are just garbage.

I don't think the average Manson fan will have a problem with the band's new sound since they are more attached to the personality than the music. In fact, I could see a few new fans being drawn into the fold by this new release.

So don't get scared off by the CD cover, ignore a few songs, and give it a listen because it really isn't that bad.

During the interlude of track seven, Tatyana explains that she "wanted to make an album

Tatyana Ali Kiss the Sky Sony Music

BY VIRGINIA WIGMORE

Tatyana Ali, better known as Ashley Banks from the long running sitcom, Fresh Prince of Belair, has just released her debut album, Kiss the Sky — letting the world know that Will Smith is not the only cast member you can get jiggy with. Despite the stigma of having a long term colleague, Smith, as one of the executive producers, this CD does have the potential to vault Ali to the ranks of Brandy or N Sync — artists who have managed the stress of both television careers and being a Border favourite.

During the interlude of track seven, Tatyana explains that she "wanted to make an album about love, not only in the sexual sense, but also the love that comes from friendship, companionship and God."

Her work is meant to demonstrate the metamorphosis of a relationship. The first half of the album is representative of new young love, while the second half depicts love that has reached a more intimate, mature level. Despite this apparent "change of seasons," all the songs on this CD sound very similar and are virtually interchangeable. The catchiest tune is track number five "Daydreamin'," which, not surprisingly, is the single that was released first.

Kiss the Sky has the required mix of sappy love songs interspersed with phrases such as "we became intimate mentally," which is spoken in a deep male voice. However, even this simple formula, which has worked for artists such as Backstreet Boys and Boyz II Men in the past, is not able to save this CD from mediocrity. So, while Ali may become a Border favourite, and Smith seems to have a "fascinating belief and sometimes unsettling confidence" in her, my recommendation is to save your money and just tune in to the station that serves two nations.

Snoop Dogg Snoop World No Limit Records

BY MARTE NATYK

In Snoop Dogg's Snoop World, the listener is exposed to the world as dog boy himself sees it.

It's clear what's important in this gangster's life — he's a soldier for money, power, drugs, sex and lots of misogyny. Lyrics like "the bitches, they'll break you... keep you dick in your pants, cause they'll play you," adorn every song. It's obvious that dog boy has some hard core resentment towards women. This album is nothing too original or different from any other of his albums. The themes that he barks about in all of his albums (including this one), are

Continued on page 20.

Chez Piggy Restaurant

There once were some students at Queen's, whose habit was weiners and beans, 'til they tried Piggy's Brunch one Sunday for lunch, now they're scoffing smoked salmon and greens.

Sunday Brunch at Chez Piggy
A groovy new habit you can afford.

FROM $6.95 AND your 15% student discount applies!!***

Chez Piggy Restaurant 68R Princess Street 549-7673
*with ID, not valid with other discounts or promotions

Laugh it up!

Peters entralls and entertains

Comic Relief. Funny man Russell Peters bowls over the crowd.

PHOTO BY KELLY HISHON

Comedy Review

By JEFF CHILD

So, for those who are feeling the boredom of the mid-week lull, fret no more as The Shot has brought world class comedy to Kingston's doorstep.

And I nearly shit my pants laughing. As I moped around my ghetto dwelling, wondering what the hell I would do with my Wednesday night, the telephone rang. It was my editor calling to see if I could cover an event that promised to save us all from a melancholy autumn. I jumped at the chance to cover The Shot's maiden voyage of Roaring Wednesdays—a comedy showcase of top notch Canadian performers.

It couldn't have been a better scene. I walked into The Shot to be welcomed by a buzzing crowd of humour seekers. The smoke hovered around the stage as we all waited eagerly for the first comic to spout their jokes into the lone microphone. I was excited to see Don (the resident heckler) walk by with his cigar in hand, ready to assist the comedians. It was definitely going to be a good night.

Peters's brand of comedy kicks dirt at political correctness and racial prejudice, forcing you to laugh at yourself and the uptight society that we all live in.

At 10:30 The Shot's co-owner Paul Scheib took the stage to greet the overwhelming crowd. The night got off to a

Please see Laughing on page 19

COME CHECK US OUT

Our burgers are 6 oz's with no fillers, preservatives or MSG added. Topped with lettuce, tomato and served on a Kaiser bun with fries or onion rings.

JJ'S
No inspire eating!

Our chicken breast is 5oz. & marinated in lemon juice, served on a fresh bun, topped with lettuce, tomato and served with fries or onion rings.

The Gourmet Burger & Grilled Chicken Specialists
A Variety of 20
"Mouth Watering" Burgers and 20 "To Die For" Grilled Chicken Sandwiches

GREAT PRICES - BURGERS from $4.75-$6.50

GREAT PRICES - CHICKENS from $5.50-$6.50

Also checkout... JJ's
Garlic Bread (5 kinds)
Homemade Chili
Nachos Dinners (5 kinds)
Chicken Strip Dinner
Chicken Caesar
Cheesy Chili Fries

Don't forget our Desserts
Cheesecakes (5 kinds)
Sundaes (5 kinds)
and our
Old Fashioned Milkshakes

JJ's 409 Johnson Street at University Avenue
Kingston, Ontario Canada K7L 1Z1
(613) 547-3771

The Queen's Entertainment Agency Presents:

RASCALS

with special guest:
KARDINAL OFFISHALL
Saturday October 3, 1998
Doors open @ 8:30pm!
Tickets $8 in advance or $10 at the door.
Available at Alfie's, the UBS Exchange, and the QEA Office!

Alfie's PUB

QEA
QUEEN'S ENTERTAINMENT AGENCY

www.ams.queensu.ca/qea

ARTS & SCIENCE '99 FORMAL

Somebody needs to organize the most HAPPENING event of the graduating year.

That somebody could be you.

The Arts and Science Undergraduate Society (ASUS) is currently accepting applications for Formal Convener(s). Applications are due Tuesday, Oct. 13 by 4:00 at The Core (183 University). Please call 545-6000 x4622 with questions. ASUS will also be searching for volunteers to organize Food & Alcohol, Publicity, Entertainment, etc.

ASUS JUST RUN IT. ASUS

Logical Theories

Perverto's Theorem transforms the Union

By CHARMIAN LOVE

Currently featured at the Union Gallery is an exhibition that will both challenge and excite art critics at all levels. Fourth-year Fine Arts students Mark Beldan and Giuliana Racco (assisted by Alessandro Racco) have teamed up to create an intriguing environment, combining installation sculpture with oil canvases.

Part of the fascination of this exhibit is its difficult title. In a guide to the works, the artists explain that Perverto's Theorem and its Manifestations is: a) the belief that every moment is as significant as the next, and b) all circumstance creates meaning. The manifestation is the new work by Beldan and Racco; the installation of paint, resin and other materials. The challenge of the show is to consider these two factors and tie them together, applying one's own personal reflections and reactions of this theorem and its manifestations to the art exhibited.

Beldan, who participated in the Ground Zero exhibition at the Union Gallery, provides the canvas portion of the show. A noticeable theme in his oil paintings is the sky from various earthly anchors. In a piece entitled, "Reserve and Ranger" the perfect mid-afternoon deep blue of a cloudless sky is achieved. Most of his works are painted to look blurry, almost as if we're squinting at the subject. This technique gives the inevitable hard edges of any work a softer, more warming sense. Even in his three darker paintings entitled: "Begin to Live Like A Human Being," he applies this gentleness to downplay the harsh, gloomy industrial scenario.

Another interesting feature of Beldan's paintings are the way they run off the canvas. This gives a sense of continuity, and shows that what he is choosing to reveal to us is not necessarily the whole truth, but merely a slice of life. This idea can be directly related to his Perverto's Theorem — that the circumstance is what creates meaning.

Different Strokes: Fine Arts students decorate Union Gallery.

PHOTO BY SAMSON WU

The overall effect of these paintings is brought out by their unavoidable comparison to the installation of Racco, whose work is not contained by the canvas, but rather by the room as a whole. Racco, who has worked on such projects as the mural at the Summerhill subway station in Toronto, creates the most captivating part of the show — the atmosphere. The Union Gallery is transformed into a surreal space. Through sound effects which range from a monotone drone, to running water to a mumbling that sounds like the teacher from Peanuts, we are forced into appreciating the gallery as an entire space of expression and not simply the small surface area that the objects physically occupy.

The shadows that they cast reflect against special screens and empty walls.

The blimp shaped polyester resin and mixed media objects provide the show with enrapturing pieces, transforming the space into a forest of hanging structures. Reminiscent of Alexander Calder's famous mobiles, Racco has taken it one step further by encouraging the viewer to step into the middle of these hanging objects and become even more involved. Upon closer examination, you begin to see that each contains something special like rainbows, personal pictures, rubber duckies, dried flowers and Sailor Moon paraphernalia. Perhaps these resin blimps are supposed to be mini time capsules.

The effect that these hanging objects have on the room is more than just a compliment to Beldan's work. The shadows that they cast reflect against special screens and empty walls, projecting the illusion of fish swimming. This is part of the manifestation of the theorem, knowing whatever meaning you can deduce from the objects is because of the circumstance you are in.

Perverto's Theorem and its Manifestations is a thought-provoking exhibit which not only provokes the viewer, as most art does, but also justifies every reaction that can possibly be deduced, through the theorem itself. Nor only will you be challenged by this show, but you will also walk away satisfied by your experience.

Perverto's Theorem runs from September 26 to October 17 at Union Gallery.

Laughing Shot

Continued from page 18.

roaring start as Sheib forgot how to properly pronounce his last name. The crowd eagerly laughed at anything and with the stellar line-up of comics that The Shot assembled, the laughter did not stop at Scheib's good-spirited antics.

The Shot spared no expense in bringing quality comedy to Kingston. The night began with the young and portly master of ceremonies Gavin Stevens. Stevens use of quick wit and brutally honest humour worked the crowd into a frenzy, while opener, Ron Jossel kept the momentum going.

Russell Peters, who could possibly be Canada's best young comedian, highlighted the evening. The comic has appeared on CTV's comedy now, CBC's Comics, the Montreal comedy festival Just For Laughs and has also received a Gemini nomination. This young man can work a crowd as well as any big-ticket comic. Peters's brand of comedy lacks dirt at political correctness and racial prejudice, forcing you to laugh at yourself and the upright society that we all live in. By the end of his performance my jaw muscles were aching from non-stop laughter.

The Shot has a gem. Roaring Wednesdays is the only way to combat the mid-week monotony. The $4 cover charge is well worth paying. Congratulations to The Shot for bringing world class entertainment to Kingston.

Shop for eyewear at Marc F. Raymond Opticians.

Then show them off - on us.

With every purchase over $50.00 we'll give you a $5.00 coupon good for food or beverages at Tir Nan Og.

FREE $5.00 COUPON good at...

Prince George Hotel, 200 Ontario St.

So, choose the right glasses for your hectic lifestyle and then celebrate on us.

We have frames for every occasion, Brooks Brothers for lecture hall, Esprit for casual, and MEXX for partying till dawn.

Marc F. Raymond Opticians
"More Than Meets The Eye"

324 King St. East, On The Market Square
549-2020

(Offer expires October 30th 1998)

THE LOCALS KNOW THE GOOD STUFF IS WORTH A HIKE!

Skis and Boards

K2	Burton
Rossignol	Sims
Volk	Ride
Volant	Winterstick

& More!

Clothing

Sierra Designs
Patagonia
The North Face
Oakley
Sessions
Burton

& More!

13 Montreal Street
Downtown, just off of Princess
542-4558

Take the Short Walk to Princess
— It's worth it!

Rotate this!

Continued from page 17

still about gettin' some pussy, and about all of the money and power he has. The style is still his signature sensual and lyrical type of gangster rap — it's like the soft porn equivalent of hip-hop. The songs themselves are easy to listen to. They are a slower and funkier kind of west coast hip-hop which makes them more accessible to the ear — the kind of hip-hop that you'd hear at bars like Alfie's.

Summed up, I would have to say that he's a dog "with a gold flea collar" who has an okay sense of melody, but nothing really new to offer his listeners. His lyrics, on the other hand, need a short leash. If you take offense easily, don't listen to this album.

With all things said, those who liked his previous albums won't be disappointed with Snoop World.

tained the refreshing sound that patented his sister and father, singer Neneb Cherry and songwriter Don Cherry, while managing to create a musical genre as unique as his name.

The music on Desireless has an unusual emphasis on acoustic and electric guitars. Coupled with the steady backbeat of the bass and drums, the guitars create a new-age atmosphere that is both intimate and surreal. Many songs have additional sounds such as the Hammond organ, Gnawan guitar, Diddgeridoo, cello, trumpet, and tablas which allows for greater sound differences and variability within each piece.

Coupled with the steady backbeat of the bass and drums, the guitars create a new-age atmosphere

In addition to being a talented musician, Cherry is an excellent lyricist. In his songs, he simply describes emotions and situations while still conveying the ardent importance and personal value of the topics. Cherry's first release "Save Tonight" refers to his last night together with his girlfriend, and his passion for wanting to preserve that night is vehement. His message to the listener is to "fight the break of dawn" and make the most of every last night you ever have. Other songs, such as "Shooting Up In Vain" and "Indecision," touch more serious topics like drugs and street gangs.

This album is an excellent, polished debut effort from Cherry. I may be somewhat biased, since over the summer I met him backstage after his concert in Los Angeles and can attest to his charm and warm personality. However, his talent and depth are inherent and can certainly be witnessed both on his album and on-stage.

Fuel
Sunburn
Epic Records

By MIKE BURGESS

Sunburn, the debut release by alt-rock band Fuel, can only be described as energetic and powerful. As their name suggests, this four member band injects their music with intensity, emotion and raw power. Fuel combines this energy with great lyrics and memorable riffs to produce a sophisticated and impressively crafted album.

This level of sophistication, in both composition and performance, is what sets Fuel above the other bands in the alt-rock scene. It is fairly simple for a band to cut a couple catchy rock tunes, surround them with several more guitar-driven tracks and call the result an album. The more difficult task, one which Fuel accomplishes, is to produce an album with a definitive sound that is also diverse enough that each track is different. On Sunburn, Fuel uses innovative chord progressions and tempo changes, and explores the full range of their vocals and instruments. In addition. The members of Fuel are also skilled musicians. Carl Bell, Jeff Abercrombie and Kevin Miller provide a solid rhythm section, pushing the limits of their instruments without overshadowing each other. Brett Scallions' rounds out this talented foursome with his powerful vocals which range from delicate to gritty. The result is a collection of original, polished songs which resonate long after they stop playing.

Among these quality tunes, several tracks stand out, such as the exceptional hit "Shimmer," which got considerable radio play this summer. The catchy first verse, in which Scallions' voice is backed simply by a guitar and cello, creates a tension which is sustained and then released with the introduction of the rhythm section. "Shimmer" then rages on without losing its softer, emotionally packed melody. "Sunburn" and "It's Come To This" are other such tunes which use tempo changes, fade-ins and acoustic instruments to create powerful but sensitive guitar grooves.

Sunburn also contains plenty of harder, guitar-driven tracks to satisfy any alternative rock fan. Particularly worth mentioning is the first track "Untitled," which has an intensity and diversity that sets the tone of the album. "Bittersweet," "Song for You" and "Ozone" recapture an intense feeling, each time taking it in different directions with incredible results. In short, Sunburn is a solid first effort by a talented band who is sure to enjoy continued success. So if you're looking for a quality alternative CD, put a little Fuel into your system — it will really get you going.

Get Out There

Movies:

Playing at the Capitol Theatre from Thursday October 8:
546-5395

Ronin 1:15, 4:05, 7:05, 9:55
7:00, 9:50
Antz 12:15, 12:45, 2:30, 3:00, 4:40, 5:10, 7:00, 7:20
What Dreams May Come 1:30, 4:20, 7:15, 10:00
Night at the Roxbury 1:00, 3:10, 5:15, 7:30, 9:45
Simon Birch 1:35, 4:05, 7:10, 9:50
Saving Private Ryan 3:30, 8:00

Playing at the Cataract Cineplex from Thursday October 8:
389-7442

Rush Hour 6:45, 7:15, 9:10, 9:20
Urban Legends 7:35, 9:50
One True Thing 6:55, 9:40
Something About Mary 7:05, 9:30
How Stella Got Her Groove Back 7:05, 9:40

Playing at the Princess Court Cinema from Friday October 2:
546-3456

Smoke Signals 7:00,
Studio 54 9:00

Contributor Call:
Ultra-Violet needs you! We need your creative submissions. Poetry, prose, art, photography and music. A drop box can be found in the Union Gallery located in Stauffer Library's ground floor.

Present this ad for a FREE CAPUCCINO OR ESPRESSO with purchase of an entrée. Please present coupon before ordering.

"Kingston's Premier Greek Restaurant"

located downtown at 248 Ontario St. (near City Hall)
548-4654

Chalmers United Church
212 Barrie Street (at Clergy)
546-3263

A Caring Community,
a Questioning Faith,
a Grounded Hope

Worship every Sunday, 10:30 a.m.

We welcome Students,
Faculty, and Staff!
Join us, in person or by radio
960 AM (CFPX)

Visit our web site: <http://web.canlink.com/ucckingston/chalmers/>

ARTSCI JACKETS

ORDER NIGHTS

NEXT WEEK!!

TUESDAY OCT. 6
WEDNESDAY OCT. 7
6:30 - 9:30

WALLACE HALL, UPPER JDUC
$200 DEPOSIT NO PERSONAL CHEQUES,
ONLY CASH, MONEY ORDER, CERTIFIED CHEQUE

LAST CHANCE BEFORE XMAS

MONDAYS ARE QUEEN'S DAY
AT
THE MARKET SALON
327 KING ST. EAST
(JUST 5 MINUTES FROM CAMPUS)

Bring a frosh for a haircut and you will get a free manicure.
QUEEN'S IDENTIFICATION REQUIRED

Call For Details
549-2110

Eagle-Eye Cherry
Desireless
Sony Music

By JACKIE MCLACHLAN

Eagle-Eye Cherry has accomplished much with his debut album Desireless. He has main-

United Way Smoker at Alfie's Pub

Friday, October 2nd
10:30 p.m. - 12:00 p.m.
Don't Miss It!!

City Sports

296 PRINCESS STREET (at Clergy), KINGSTON, ONT. Phone 642-4415
RACQUET & RUNNING SPECIALISTS

SQUASH RAQUET
REG $109.00
SALE $69.99

LARGE SELECTION OF SWIMWEAR, GOGGLES & ACCESSORIES

NEW ARRIVALS OF QUEEN'S BACKPACKS QUEEN'S SWEAT SHIRTS
QUEEN'S SHIRTS
QUEEN'S SHORTS

LARGE SELECTION OF ATHLETIC SHOES

AEROBIC WEAR BY NIKE ADIDAS
FILA

TEAMS • FLOORS • CLUBS • FACULTIES
JACKETS • T-SHIRTS • RUGBY JERSEYS • GOLF SHIRTS • SWEATS
Baseball/Football/Hockey Jerseys • Custom Cresting at Very Special Prices!

Canada Computer & Electronics Inc.
2-211 Telford Rd., Markham, ON, L3R 1E7
Tel: (905) 946-9818 Fax: (905) 946-9733
350 Princess Street, Kingston, ON, K7L 1B8
Tel: (613) 542-4467 Fax: (613) 542-5709
Pacific Mall C68 4330 Steeles Ave. E., Markham, ON
Tel: (905) 416-3563
www.canadacomputers.com

PENTIUM II ASUS PC-100 SYSTEM	MMX VALUE SYSTEM
ASUS P2B Intel 6X Mainboard	Houston M571 Mainboard 512K Cache
64 MB PC-100 Memory	32 MB PC-100 Memory
Quantum 4.4 GB EX UDMA Hard Drive	2.6GB IDE Hard Drive
Panasonic 1.44MB Floppy Drive	Panasonic 1.44MB Floppy Drive
Panasonic 32x IDE CD-ROM	24x IDE CD-ROM
Full Tower Case w/300 W ATX Power	Compact Mid Tower Case AT
Matrox G200 8 MB AGP Video Card	16-bit Sound Onboard
Creative Labs SB128 PCI	4 MB Video Onboard
15" Proview Monitor .28mm	14" SVGA Monitor .28mm
104 Key Keytronic PS/2 Keyboard	104 Key Windows Keyboard
Logitech 3 Button PS/2 Mouse w/Pad	2 Button Serial Mouse w/Pad
Attec Landing ACS 45 Speakers w/Sub.	60W Speaker w/Adapter
FREE Joystick!	FREE Joystick!

Above Configuration w/Following CPU:

Intel Celeron Pentium II 266	$1599	Cyrix M2-266	$720
Intel Celeron Pentium II 300	$1525	AMD K6-2 266 3D	$780
Intel Celeron Pentium II 300A	$1629	Intel Pentium 166	$715
Intel Celeron Pentium II 333	$1685	Intel Pentium 166MMX	$789
Intel Pentium II 300	$1749	Intel Pentium 200MMX	$795
Intel Pentium II 333	$1775	Intel Pentium 233MMX	$805
Intel Pentium II 350	$1864
Intel Pentium II 400	$2119
Intel Pentium II 450	$2429

SUPER 7 AGP SYSTEM	PENTIUM II VALUE SYSTEM	PENTIUM II SYSTEM
ASUS P2B Intel 6X Mainboard	Houston M571 Mainboard 512K Cache	ASUS P2B Intel 6X Mainboard
64 MB PC-100 Memory	32 MB PC-100 Memory	64 MB PC-100 Memory
Quantum 4.4 GB EX UDMA Hard Drive	2.6GB IDE Hard Drive	Quantum Digital 5.1GB UDMA Hard Drive
Panasonic 1.44MB Floppy Drive	Panasonic 1.44MB Floppy Drive	Panasonic 1.44MB Floppy Drive
Panasonic 32x IDE CD-ROM	24x IDE CD-ROM	Panasonic 32x IDE CD-ROM
Full Tower Case w/300 W ATX Power	Compact Mid Tower Case AT	Full Tower Case w/300 W ATX Power
Matrox G200 8 MB AGP Video Card	16-bit Sound Onboard	Matrox G200 8 MB AGP Video Card
Creative Labs SB128 PCI	4 MB Video Onboard	Creative Labs SB128 PCI
15" Proview Monitor .28mm	14" SVGA Monitor .28mm	15" Proview Monitor .28mm
104 Key Keytronic PS/2 Keyboard	104 Key Windows Keyboard	104 Key Windows Keyboard
Logitech 3 Button PS/2 Mouse w/Pad	2 Button Serial Mouse w/Pad	Logitech 3 Button PS/2 Mouse w/Pad
Attec Landing ACS 45 Speakers w/Sub.	60W Speaker w/Adapter	Attec Landing ACS 45 Speakers
FREE Joystick!	FREE Joystick!	FREE Joystick!

Above Configuration w/Following CPU:

Intel Pentium 233MMX	$964	Intel Celeron Pentium II 266	$956
Cyrix M2-300	$950	Intel Celeron Pentium II 300	$969
AMD K6-2 266 3D	$960	Intel Celeron Pentium II 300A	$1058
AMD K6-2 300 3D	$990	Intel Celeron Pentium II 333	$1128
AMD K6-2 333 3D	$1049
AMD K6-2 350 3D	$1170

Above Configuration w/Following CPU:

Intel Celeron Pentium II 266	$1174	Intel Pentium II 333	$1286
Intel Celeron Pentium II 300	$1168	Intel Pentium II 350	$1465
Intel Celeron Pentium II 300A	$1295	Intel Pentium II 400	$1625
Intel Celeron Pentium II 333	$1358	Intel Pentium II 450	$1770

All prices listed are discounted for Cash payment.
Prices are subject to change with out notice.

Classifieds

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WONDERING ABOUT RELATIONSHIPS, career etc? Seeking direction? Experience greater self-awareness with Tarot, palmistry, runes, and more. Clients say my readings are inspirational and very accurate. I also offer classes in meditation, Tarot, etc. For more information phone Kellye at 544-1909. Also available Fridays and Saturdays at "Harmony", 93 Princess St. Walk in or pre-book at 544-7897. Tape included.

BLUEROO FARM a get-away for Queen's students and their families. Half an hour away. Visit our website - www.ikweb.com/blueroo or call Kim Ondaatje at 374-2147

PROFESSIONAL TUTORING and Editing. Are you achieving the grades you deserve? Improve your

BURGER KING FREE
BIG KING WITH PURCHASE OF A BIG KING
no coupon necessary
99¢
whopper junior every day

essay skills, editing, research and writing, E.S.L. a specialty. Phone 416 280-6113, fax 416 960-0240.

PRIMA COMPUTER BOOKS The most important peripherals you'll ever own. Ask in the Campus Bookstore. Fast and easy. In A Weekend, Admin Guides and more...

DO YOU HAVE A NIGHT CLASS? Well if you would like someone to walk back home with you after class just give Walkhome a call at 545-2662! Our boundaries extend north to York St., east to Ontario St., west to West Campus, and south to the Lake.

FOOD THAT MAKES CENTS: Learn how to make quick, tasty, cheap one pot meals at our "hands on" cooking class Wednesday, October 7th 5:30-7:30 p.m. at the International Centre. Limited spaces so call 545-6712 to sign up. Brought to you by the Health Outreach program, Health, Counselling and Disability Services.

GRADLINK is a service linking graduate students for mutual support. Call Student Counselling service for more information at 545-2893.

MOODMASTER IS A GROUP FOR STUDENTS who have been diagnosed with depression or Bi Polar disorder. Its purpose is to provide mutual support for members and to encourage life styles that promote health. If you want to know more...call the Counselling service at 545-2893.

STUDYING LATE? OUT WITH FRIENDS? JUST WANDERING ABOUT? Walkhome is here to serve you for whatever your late night walk-

GET PUBLISHED! Queen's Health Sciences Journal is now accepting articles on any aspect of health and medicine to be published in the upcoming edition. Deadline - October 15th. Instructions at <http://meds.queensu.ca/hjs/> or email hjs@meds.queensu.ca

ROCK/ELECTRONICA BAND is in search for a bassist, synth player, drummer/percussionist, sampler and DJ. Influences: Prodigy, Tea Party. Must have own equipment and must be dedicated. Call Ian or Trung at 531-8391 or 549-9567.

FOR SALE/FOR RENT
FOR SALE: Almost new, solid pine luton with armrests, would make a perfect couch for your "ghetto" home and it folds down into a spare bed. $300.00. Call 549-3032.

FOR SALE: Large desk and dresser. Both in great condition. No reasonable offer refused. Call Liz at 544-9698.

WANTED

DRINKERS WANTED: If you patronise campus pubs, tend to drink responsibly and would like to contribute to on-going campus alcohol policy and education initiatives we want to talk to you. Please call Diane Nolting at 545-6712 for more information about this volunteer opportunity.

HELP WANTED

DR. COMPUTER is now hiring tech-icians for part-time employment. This is an excellent opportunity for Computer Engineers and Computer science student to gain hands on experience. For more information please call Stephane at 544-2134.

SCHOOL-AGED CHILD CARE for before and after school. Call 548-8513 after 4:30.

LOST AND FOUND

LOST: Diamond engagement ring lost sometime after Wednesday September 2nd in Johnson St.,

Queen's area. Reward if found. Please call 536-1679.

LOST: Maroon fleece vest, "Conlour". Lost on campus Thursday September 17th. Please call Daryn at 530-3419 or email Ggdm. Thanks

FOUND: At Kill McGill game a set of keys. To claim, call Alison at 545-2729.

FOUND: At the Campus Bookstore an envelope containing wedding photos. Thompson from Walmart. Can be picked up at the Customer Service desk.

Sexy but no lace.

Blundstone
Unisex styles. Women's size 6 up to Men's 13 1/2. Come slip on a pair and enjoy dry and comfortable feet. Any tougher they'd rust.

A-ONE CLOTHING
358 King St. E.

MISC. SPEWING FOR SUCCESS

The first thing you need to know about me is that I'm not a huge fan of the Queen's persona. I don't own a jacket, I haven't seen my coversalls since the end of first year and, to tell you the truth, I've forgotten all the words to the 'Oil Thigh' that come after 'Oil Thigh...'. To me, Queen's spirit is something like Kingston's electrical system: It looks good on your average day, but it's so full of discrepancies and contradictions that at the earliest sign of adversity it collapses.

I like the way that Homecoming completely takes over the campus and the ghetto. It virtually forces everyone to participate. If you didn't throw up on someone's front lawn last weekend, then somebody probably threw up on yours. And the best part is that it wasn't only the usual fools like me throwing up on people's lawns. There were a lot of much older, wiser fools who had no excuse for not knowing better. Therein lies the beauty of Homecoming.

In a perverse and admittedly hypocritical way, there is something extraordinarily comforting about watching a middle-aged man in a Sci '78 jacket throwing up in the middle of University Avenue at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. I look at that wretchedly disturbing sight and it puts my entire life in perspective, rationalizing my laments and soothing my worries about the future. It's almost like Homecoming is the only time that Queen's is honest with its students.

Every Irish week all the frosh are packed into Grant Hall to listen to the keynote speech from some Queen's grad who has made it to some high and mighty position in the 'real world.' The faces and occupations change, but I imagine the speeches are virtually identical.

"I was once a frightened frosh sitting in this very auditorium just like you... and I got involved on campus... Queen's was the most important building block in my life," and so on and so forth. While at the time it felt good to know I might have been sitting in the very same loud-up chair this speaker had sat in before he or she learned all those clichés, I was alarmed when I realized that somewhere between that moment and the one when I graduate, I was going to have to mature at an exponential rate in order to make it in the "real world." These fears were reinforced by experiences in my first couple of years here. Every high table dinner, on campus event and alumni newsletter my parents received combined to form this idea in my head: that people came to Queen's as idiots like me and left ready to conquer the world. Unfortunately, three years later I feel like I'm far more than one quarter

ple come to Queen's like me and leave like the speaker. They don't. Some come to Queen's with their shit already together, and leave with it even more so. Others of us show up as idiots like that old puker, leave in much the same manner, and still do just fine. Apparently some idiots even get good jobs and have big families, something that seems inconceivable if you listen only to the keynote speaker types. Idiots can do quite well for themselves, a fact we wouldn't hurt to be reminded of every now and then. I'm all for ambition, but let's be realistic, there's a limit on how much people can possibly mature in four years.

For every Karyn Walmark who gets a million percent and does every extra-curricular activity she can, there is an Ewan Reid who must take the opportunity Homecoming affords him to show his penis to stranger after conlused stranger.

For every AMS commissioner there's a student unaware that AMS commissioners even exist and a hundred more who've no idea what a commissioner does.

Sure there are alumni running the world right now, but there are many others who aren't and are doing just fine — like my friend the puking alumnus. I like Homecoming because it's the only time I get to see these other alumni in all their repugnant filth and glory.

I really learned something from that guy puking in the street — much more than I ever learned from all those keynote speakers Queen's tosses in our faces. They tried to convince me that people come to Queen's like me and leave like the speaker. They don't. Some come to Queen's with their shit already together, and leave with it even more so. Others of us show up as idiots like that old puker, leave in much the same manner, and still do just fine. Apparently some idiots even get good jobs and have big families, something that seems inconceivable if you listen only to the keynote speaker types. Idiots can do quite well for themselves, a fact we wouldn't hurt to be reminded of every now and then. I'm all for ambition, but let's be realistic, there's a limit on how much people can possibly mature in four years.

For every Karyn Walmark who gets a million percent and does every extra-curricular activity she can, there is an Ewan Reid who must take the opportunity Homecoming affords him to show his penis to stranger after conlused stranger.

For every AMS commissioner there's a student unaware that AMS commissioners even exist and a hundred more who've no idea what a commissioner does.

Sure there are alumni running the world right now, but there are many others who aren't and are doing just fine — like my friend the puking alumnus. I like Homecoming because it's the only time I get to see these other alumni in all their repugnant filth and glory.

Jeremy Shtern is always finding interesting new places to put Queen's spirit.

FUN! FUN! OOH-WHEE! GAME IN THE CORNER

Count the engineers about to tear the highlander apart.
(Note: don't forget to leave the other faculties out of your total)

BONUS GAME!

For extra fun, identify the gender of the "naughty" engineer in the photo to the left.

QMUN '98

Queen's Model United Nations

November 19 - 22, 1998

Exploring the Issues that Face the Global Community

3 Days of Stimulating Debate
3 Nights of Fantastic Partying

SIGN UP: Mac-Corry
Tues. Oct. 6 11:30 - 2:30
Tues. Oct. 7 11:30 - 2:30
Thurs. Oct. 8 11:30 - 2:30

Questions? Call the Campus Activities Commission 545-6000 x4819

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY STUDENT GOVERNMENT AMS

CAC

Toronto $23

Miss/Oak $27

Kitchener $35

Montreal $25

Ottawa $18

London $40

Don't go home without it.

→ Unlimited tickets ← available before noon Thursday

Tickets & Schedules
only at:

exchange
CDs • Fabrics • Texts • Cuffs • Books • More!

Student Lounge
Upper Ceiling, IDUC
545-2126
ubs@ams.queensu.ca
www.ams.queensu.ca/AMS/UBS

Tricolour Express
545-6863
Always Your Best Ticket Home

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

READER

OCTOBER 2, 1998

literary artistic celestial cultural philosophical discovery

THE JOURNAL Reader

"As to love, who have I ever loved? I am too insane to love anybody else but me, but I have decided to change."
— Jack Kerouac

EDITOR
Jesse Craig Bellringer

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF
Keish Gerein
Tara Mansbridge

MANAGING EDITOR
Laura Macinnis

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Kraft

DESIGNERS
Katherine Colburne
Arlene Ge

TECHNICAL CONSULTANT
John Bowman

CONTRIBUTORS
Greg Betts, Jason Cullimore,
D.A. Cunningham, Gabrielle Fenney,
Paige Holmes, Robert McGill,
Sean Springer, O.L. Windell

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL READER

Friday, October 2, 1998 • Issue 1 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of The Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.
Contents © 1998 by The Queen's Journal, all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Goss Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Gananoque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions. Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2N6. Telephone—editorial: 613-545-2800; advertising: 613-545-6711; Fax: 613-545-6728. Email: journal@post.queensu.ca. Internet: http://www.journal.queensu.ca. Circulation 9,000
Issue 2 of The Reader will be published on October 30, 1998. Cover, interior design and photography by J.C. Bellringer

Discovery

There is nothing more challenging than a blank page, nothing so ashamed of its own innocence. Nothing that calls out in such a strong voice, begging us to embarrass ourselves and daring us to be great.

A direct connection with an ancient lineage is formed with each word we lay upon an empty space. The violent howl of protest, the utilitarian scrawl of a work order. The formal signature of authority, the familiar imperfections in a lover's tender hand. The fierce ambition of a young writer.

These ubiquitous markings are stories themselves. Full of unexpected drama, heroic achievement and mundane recognition, we find inference and identity in the most meagre of symbols. But language itself is a story without a plot, the act and art of writing is detached from the act and art of emoting. Writing is expressing, not merely emoting.

We all begin as confessional poets, spilling out deepest, most furtive feelings onto pages that would duck and hide from our advances. Armed with only the most feeble of skills, we cannot help ourselves; we find we are willing accomplices, eager to defile the page for reasons we would be too embarrassed to admit.

Is it catharsis? Is it the hope of redemption that honest expression is known to grant? Or is it the promise of glory, of fame, of immortality? Is it fair to blame an abstract impulse to fill what is empty for all of the poetry, fiction, memoir and other literature of the world's libraries?

If writing is therapy, it is wildly ineffective. Communication, sincerity and education heal wounds and allow progress. Memoirs and biographies, for all of their voyeuristic value and vicarious pleasure, are acts of reporting, passive and distant. Even the immediate, desperate cry that is our recounting of our civilization's worst atrocities relies on those events for its identity and its readers for its meaning; events occur and locations exist, but our words are mutable and subject to interpretation. Diction can be mined for reason, meaning, motive. Texts can be re-examined, deconstructed, reconsidered. Literature is untrustworthy.

And it is not for glory. There is no such thing as a literary celebrity. There is publication and there is silence. In between is hard work, loneliness and many failures. Writing, because it is not merely cathartic, and since it is not immediately gratifying, is a losing battle. But many of us are caught in the perfect orbit of this timeless form and stare ever more intently at its faraway centre. Some of us find comfort and identity in our struggle. And some of us play to lose.

The Reader exists as a forum for the Queen's and Kingston community to hack it out, to dig, swing, push and pack it in. It is here for discovery, for voices diverse and familiar; it is whatever you make it. The following pages, no longer innocent, bear the words of fellow students, writers and wanderers who are searching, following, losing themselves and blazing new trails. Five blank issues lurk in the upcoming months. Let's see what the Queen's community has to offer them.

history

Short Fiction by D.A. Cunningham

... and now was the moment of fulfillment. His eyes closed, his arms reaching, they kissed. And then his grasp was slipping, the crowd came between them; the pavement, the metal, the bus. She was looking out the window through the 6 a.m. drizzle. Was she crying? It was hard to tell.

The press of people was constant. Some were weeping, others laughing, still more were silent, wandering in a daze. And then the bus moved.

Round the bend and back, it was leaving to the west. Jacob squinted to catch a final glimpse of her. Fading, fading.

— well, that's over, he said. Now I'm empty, and he collapsed in the midst of his strange friends, friendly strangers.

epilogue

street man, strange guy, poor old bastard

Andre shook himself from sleep. Sitting up, he pulled at his beard and smacked his lips. He groped inside his luggage for a few seconds and produced a tooth brush, a bottle of water and some toothpaste. He moved over to the street grill, brushed and swished a few times and spat. Satisfied, he collected his belongings and sat on a bench he considered his own and considered where to go next.

It was hot today. Too hot, in fact, for Andre's lined parka, but he could manage. That was his profession. Survivalist. There were cars and birds and all manner of things that happen in the bustle of early morning urban life. Andre continued to sit, lost in his own thoughts that others could only guess at. They said he would mumble to himself about his present condition, or that he would pretend that he still existed in his former life, now so long ago. But it wasn't these things. The place that had produced Andre was big enough to be unfriendly but small enough to notice it; he was enigma only because he was the only one of his kind.

His mind was presently occupied with something that no passer-by would expect. It required such intense planning and concentration that he failed to notice the approaching group of people approaching him.

They were dressed in assorted colours, although the blue-greys and lapels were predominant among the male members. The women wore a meagre variety of dull dresses, ancient blue, antique pink, dying yellow. For the most part they kept their distance on the sidewalk, milling about and talking together in close circles.

— Manon, come here, look at this!

Andre continued thinking, straining to remember something that he could nonetheless sense was eluding his memory. He was near the edge of the mountain, about to look down and into a valley, but he could not make the footsteps he needed to recall what was lying over the nightfall of his subconscious.

— Isn't this brilliant?

He was a man in his forties, standing in front of Andre, dressed in a navy blue suit, pinstriped, with a paisley tie and matching handkerchief. His hair was greying slightly near the temples. His tie was red. He was staring intently at Andre, but his gaze did not rest exactly on Andre; rather, it passed through him. He was accompanied by a woman apparently of the same age, white blouse and blue slacks.

— And they say New Realism is dead, she said.

— God, look at this! I'm afraid to touch it! But just what did they make that beard out of? This even more convincing than Duane Hanson.

— This isn't really like Daniel Ayling, is it dear?

The suit pondered this for a moment.

— No, this isn't like his style, he said. But putting it outside the gallery like this is truly supurb.

Continued on page 6

"A remarkable and audacious book"
The Globe and Mail

New From
McGill-
Queen's University Press

Regularly
$39.95

Now
30% Off

At the Campus
Bookstore

"Brilliant"
Kirkus

Clark Hall - Weekdays 9-6, Saturday 10-8
545-2955 - After January 1st 533-2955
Owned and Operated by Students Since 1969
www.campusbookstore.com

Advice from a coffee-shop scribbler

Thoughts and wisdom from the post-Queen's world

Greg Betts, former assistant Arts and Entertainment editor at The Queen's Journal, accepted a position with Toronto's Captus Press following his graduation from Queen's University last spring. What follows is the first in a series of articles solicited from various writers concerning their "out-of-Queen's" experiences.

BY GREG BETTS

SO YOU WANT TO BE A WRITER? You figure you've got the fictional virus? Welcome to the biz, grab a number, step in line, and make sure your pen keeps moving the whole time you're waiting.

Writers often feel like they are alone in their pursuit for glory and rent money, and for the most part, they're right. Once you get over the crap and drivel of high schoolminds and diary poems, the playing field of writers is still a jam-packed jamboree. And only a hand-full will be able to survive by the pen.

The first cognitive schism that you have to cross in entering the writing industry is the idea of waiting. There is no such thing, and smack anybody who begs differently with your overgrown pile of Columbia House deaththreats and Queen's loan reminders.

The longer you hold on to the notion that time slowly snakes its comfortable way into the future, the fewer cappuccinos you're going to be able to afford to curb the 3 a.m. writer's block. Carry a note-pad, use a tape-recorder. Capture any interesting thought and work it into something usable. The more you do this, the easier it becomes to produce something that you are passably comfortable with. Or better yet, something that could be published.

As Morley, dear, dear Morley Callaghan once said: "A writer is always writing, when they look they are recording." This is as much out of necessity as it is out of drive. And everything around you is available.

The next big issue that I hear people complaining loudly (and wittily) about is the industry clique. How do you break into a sphere without any doors or windows? Read this quote from a struggling writer with only a pittance of publishing credits and try not to laugh: "I can't believe Harper's just rejected my story. I loved that story." Sad, isn't it? Okay, I'll admit that that quote was from me, but the point is: why should they be interested in my peculiar tale when people like Alice Munro are submitting material as well?

You build a name by frequently publishing at the lowly levels and slowly moving up the ladder. Sounds annoying and trite? So do rejection letters. The great socialist poet Dorothy Livesay adopted a helpful motto: "Publish everything you can." Sounds better than a line I caught from Randy Hoffman, president of Captus Press in Toronto: "Fiction writers in Canada pay for the privilege." Yech. But I think both quotes come packed with an honesty that is helpful. You must know what it takes to survive in the mean streets of coffee-shop scribbings.

Or you can go the route of Mordecai Richler. Once heralded as the great to-be of Canadian literature, he now supplements his income with regular drivings and rants in Canada's dailies and weeklies. Try not to hold it against him — journalism keeps your pen moving and helps clear the route from your brain to your pen, even if your subject matter is only an overblown lament on the defecation of the Montreal Canadiens glorious history. Journalism will also keep Columbia House at bay.

There are no immediate rewards to joining the writing community. There is no quick money, no exceptional link to glory, and, despite Aristotle, no direct social power. The motivator lies within and the trophies are strictly personal. But, if you've caught the virus, may God bless you with good luck. And don't give up your day job.

Greg Betts, the writer, lives in Toronto.

Saturday, October 3, 1998
Queen's University
Grant Hall
8:00 p.m.

The Luzern Concert Band from Switzerland, directed by Franz Schaffner, and the Queen's University Wind Ensemble, directed by Gordon Craig, will present a concert benefiting the Queen's Wind Ensemble and the Kingston Youth Orchestra. Music will include pieces by Holst, Becancon, Balissat, Grainger, Makris and de Haan.

ADMISSION AT THE DOOR: $8 ADULTS;
$6 STUDENTS & SENIORS

Hey ArtSci '01

COME OUT TO THE INAUGURAL

SMOKER

Saturday October 3rd
@ AJ's Hanger
$4 Until 11:00pm

Strange, Relevant, Speculative Fiction

Latest Banks novel populated by flawed, tragic characters

Inversions

Iain M. Banks
Orbit, $22.95

BY JASON CULLIMORE

THE NOVELIST IAIN M. BANKS has received much praise in the British press. His style reflects his vivid and complex imagination, and the often surreal worlds that he crafts benefit from a foundation that is profoundly human. As such, his work is at once both fantastical and relevant to the present time, convincing in a manner uncommon among contemporary science fiction authors.

Inversions, though set on a distant world, involves human characters whose political structures are modeled after the kingdoms of the early Renaissance. Two parallel stories are told; one of a female doctor in the employ of a king, and the other of the male bodyguard to the ruler of a distant "protectorate." These two central characters are foreigners in their respective lands, and each possess knowledge and wisdom that surpass the scientific achievements of their adopted homelands. While the origin of their advanced learning is never entirely disclosed, Banks focuses on the relationship between these enlightened individuals and the deceptive, often barbaric rulers to whom they serve.

The more successful of the two stories is the one involving the doctor. It is recounted in the words of her young apprentice, and Banks conveys the youth's complex relationship with the sensitive doctor in a sincere and effective manner. Banks' development of his characters is remarkable. Both the doctor's strength and the fragility are portrayed while developing the precariousness of her courtly position through the eyes of her apprentice. The apprentice himself is an interesting character, unable to rectify his feelings for his master or fully comprehend the danger posed by the scheming Nobles. These characters are among Banks's most compelling, as they are flawed and tragic yet possessing more nobility of spirit than any of the Dukes whom they serve. Inversions is worth reading simply on the basis of these remarkable and elegant characters.

Continued on page 11

A+ Editing and Proofreading

FOR ACADEMIC REPORTS AND BUSINESS COMMUNICATIONS

JANE RODGERS
(613) 946-6618

203 Mowat Avenue
Kingston, Ontario
K7M 1K6

Help to Promote Literacy!!

Frontier College:
Queen's Students for Literacy

General Meeting

For all those interested in Volunteering for "Read 4 Fun" and the "Prison Literacy Initiative"

Monday, Oct. 5 — 6-6:30 pm — Kingston Hall 101
Tuesday, Oct. 6 — 6-6:30 pm — Kingston Hall 201

For more information, contact our office at 545-6000 ext 7428 or 7667

the function of love at the present time

ROBERT MCGILL

you'd think we'd have learned but this morning i would have auctioned off bessy for a can of beans and a wrist watch
if you'd told me to not that juliet or jesus would go green at my fashion of human sacrifice but the docks go back next week and the budget's lean we'll do our loving when we can so whisper, love

don't wait for me to stop there's room for two voices in here providing they're soft and slow funny how words you wouldn't expect become constructive criticism here, lower, wait

like reading a book, maybe or michelangelo
head full of paint fumes and vertigo administering a tongue-lashing to an inattentive choir boy strange how after a long commute there's a remedy for claustrophobia in hair, lover, weight

the only place the irony dissolves is here in your embrace matthew, matthew did you know even a century ago

the rapture of the last kiss is never knowing it is the last

Speedy Love

GABRIELLE FENNEY

I'll sneak you out my backhatch, baby,
We'll plummet through the clouds
Or dream for hours in your fast car,
Swerving among the stars.
Speedy love we make at night,
Faster still our daylight grows,
As music fills the ears of wind,
The present blurs, and on we roar.
The dull thick sound of urgency.
Centrifugal force removes our tears.
The pressure of the frantic pace,
Oh, the pressure of your hands!
Pull me in as we fly,
Faster, higher, as we fly,
I'll sneak you in my backdoor, baby,
For this speedy love.

De Memoria et Reminiscentia

PAIGE HOLMES

Temporary lovers whisper and unknowingly love the smell of the new-found morning-fresh as dawn spills sunlight-streams on naked flesh, they sigh deeply, and neglect to inhale this memory that will soon be secretly cherished and exhaustingly lost forever.

Transient love is a quiet, still side-road,
snow-covered, misty, three-fifteen a.m.
the designated time one chooses to flee from wet-spots, room-service and promises vowed:
guilt and doubt — no strangers to the love affair,
sit and wait for time to step aside.

Today and Tomorrow, more astringed are they,
than either can be enticed to confide.

When She is With I

GREG BETTS

I fall into her reach the abyss, through my fingers,
and walk time-scraped bridges carve
skeleton tears out of fear with Neptune's coral chalk make drums of her bones tapping rumble-clumble talk-walk above

the human cave, sour light
city,

where night means nothing, is just the same

She tickles my chin
and I fall through her,
burnt, consumed
lounging somewhere without language
pitching its gloss and spreading human gloss
I am sometimes without her and rest dazed.

history

Continued from page 3

— Aren't they afraid that it will get damaged out here?
He paused again before answering.

— No. People realize what it is. Art, Manon. A profound social statement.
She laughs.

— People are smarter these days, Manon. Oh, they're going in now.
Come on.

With one last admiring look, the couple moved in with the crowd.
Andre was still trying to recall the events, the faces, the face . . . there was a flash of maroon that made him look up.

It was the dark eyes, knowing eyes and heavysset jaw covered in a black beard. The face was there and it was gone in a spasm of purple robes. Transfixed, Andre moved from his bench and followed them, his bags trailing behind him and out of the shadow of the gallery

was not only a source of tourist revenue but a centre of culture for the local area. Its international design had, no doubt, been derived from the greats of the Bauhaus from Germany. The tall central spire acted as a hub, allowing the semi-globes that surrounded it to become a wheel of artistry. One exited only by the same door that one entered. No more.

A press of people were moving past the gallery's grand foyer of the first globe, past the gift shoppe and promotional displays for the major Daniel Ayling exhibit that were being displayed in the central tower. But off in a corner, in one of the gallery's most neglected rooms, a man stood studying a series of quiet paintings with solemn reserve.

He was a collector and a private person. Nothing gave him so much joy as to simply walk quietly through an aesthetically pleasing environment and take in the expressions of so many people at so many different times in their lives.

He stood close to one wall of the room, staring steadily at one of the most famous paintings his country had ever produced. It was Tom Thompson's

the jackpine

was a reminder of the virgin wood, in spite of the hydro lines that had been strung around it like a noose.
It wasn't a grey day but it should have been; black dragons and long-boats moving across a sea of sky to battle with the treetops and winds.
But the sun was rising and beaming, pleased with her own reflection in the lake below and Jacob watched without sensation. Sitting next to the water, he looked around and dreamed of finding a Claudius to kill. The poison of Laertes was slowly consuming him while he sat and rotted like the rest of the court.

— I'm Hamlet's pooh, he muttered.

He had been coming here too often, perhaps because he had realized that it was a place of rest. When he rested he grew stagnant; he withdrew from the world and watched it recede. A purpose! What more could a person ask for? He could write or paint or sing a song to this lake, but for fear. For fear. Fear of failure. It could have been a spaceship of a dance or a conference. Where had his friends gone?

— I rejected them. So now I'm here. I'm no-where.

D.A. Cunningham is a graduate of Queen's University currently at large in the wilds of Ontario. More of his short story, "history," will appear in future editions of The Queen's Journal Reader.

Financial Assistance for Study at the International Study Centre
at Herstmonceux

Funding is still available for winter term study at the International Study Centre. Contact the Student Awards Office for information and applications.

Dr. Alfred Bader International Study Centre Award (several awards available)

Claire L. Leggett International Study Centre Award (one award available)

Friends of Herstmonceux International Study Award (several awards available)

John Greer Nicholson International Study Centre Award (one award available at $560)

Franklin G.T. Pickard Memorial International Award (one award available at $2900)

Allan R. Taylor International Study Award (six awards available at $1500 each)

Sutton International Study Award (two awards available at $4000 each)

International Study Centre Award (six awards available at $4000 each)

*Please note: award values shown were those at the time of publication

Are you looking for...

...leadership opportunities?

...the chance to network with important faculty and alumni?

...a way to gain experience in public relations, fiance, chairing a committee, or running a program?

...an opportunity to meet new (and impossibly cool) people?

Student Team on Alumni Relations

If So, then S.T.A.R. wants to hear from you!

The student Team on Alumni Relations (S.T.A.R.) is a joint venture between the Alma Mater Society and Alumni Affairs. Our mandate is to act as a liaison between current students, alumni, and faculty as well as to administer related programming. (Which is just a fancy way of saying that we hang out with the major players at Queen's!)

Interested? C'mon out to our first general meeting, which will be held on October 19, 5:30 pm. Summerhill parlour (that's be the mansion in the middle of the campus... talk about ritzy!)
We even provide dinner!

Call Laurie at 545-6000, ext. 7520 to RSVP for the general meeting or to find out how to get involved!

Babble On, Buddy, Babble On

Scott Thompson finds there is life after Kids

BY SEAN SPRINGER

ALL HE EVER NEEDED was an attentive audience to set the stage for an intimate and engrossing comedic monologue. So, we turn the door handle, apply some force and assume a seat near the front of Buddy Cole's gay bar establishment, Buddy's. Inside, Charles Butterick "Buddy" Cole sits cross-legged on a wooden barstool sporting a "quilted satin Mao jacket... cotton drawstring karate pants, a jade cock ring" and a pair of "white tap shoes."

As the ex-smoker tilts a dry martini in one hand and waves effeminate gestures with the other, he shares some advice for those reading his new autobiography, Buddy Babylon — a homonym for "Buddy, Babble On."

"My goal is not to shock and horrify," he begins, "but to tell the truth..." The fabulously gay celeb then steals a gulp from the glass and beams: "and if that truth shocks and horrifies, well maybe you should get out more." Which is exactly the point of Buddy's tall tales from life as a young "fag" with 12 brothers and sisters on a pig farm to his failures as a playwright, model and actor (or actress as he often prefers). And then there are the fast times in La-La Land, married to fictitious actress Tandy Porter, mother of the two-headed demented tandem Suzanne and Plechette.

Thompson's knowing take on his own sexuality allows the manic, over-the-top comedy that characterizes Buddy Cole to work as effective satire.

Yes, Kids in the Hall fans, it's vintage Buddy Cole self-indulged in his own spectacle and seeking to either tickle your bottom pink with laughter or, for those that need to get out more, force you to squirm in your seat as he offers social commentary on homosexuality, illicit drugs, family life and HOT, HOT sex. Scott Thompson (Buddy Cole in front of the camera) and former Kids writer Paul Bellini collaborate to produce this dense text of taboo topics featuring soak-your-pants one-liners: "Both of us resisted the impulse to be the first to go to the other. And then I gave in. I didn't want to be the first to blow this opportunity. Well, actually, I did."

Thompson's knowing take on his own sexuality allows the manic, over-the-top comedy that characterizes Buddy Cole to work as effective satire. The humour erupts on the pages, "coming" from the mouths of Buddy and his eccentric, politically incorrect companions of gays, lesbians, celebrities, Canadians and Americans. Read as Buddy cavorts in hilarious episodes involving an interview with adult contemporary music star John Tesh, a tough tête-à-tête with a psychotic Roseanne Barr and a visit from Muskoka cottager Goldie Hawn.

Be enlightened as Buddy seduces with his provocative views on:

Politics — "For my American readers, Sir John A. Macdonald was the first prime minister of Canada. He's sort of like our version of George Washington, and just like George, he had a terrible haircut, too."

Body anatomy — "If only asses fell out of trees, I'd be in the woods all the time."

Lovers — "The first time he came instantly. Now he couldn't come at all. That's what I think I loved about Ralph — variety."

Despite these clever quips, the book isn't simply a collection of monologues glued together by a skit-like storyline. Rather, Buddy has a beguiling story chock full of substance that's quirky and silly (he wins the Prettiest Feet in Quebec contest as a teenager), but also of an alluring yet obscene nature (he passes out one night only to awaken to a sight of two friends having sex while a man lies dead in his bathtub). Still, one gets the feeling that Buddy might babble on for an awful long time without complaint.

Which reminds me of a Kids in the Hall skit where Buddy plays out a courtroom drama ending with a lawyer's (played by Bruce McCulloch) remark directed at Buddy, "And I think your monologues are a little long!" Buddy Babylon extinguishes any qualms that a Buddy Cole monologue ever continued past the point of no return. And if you think otherwise, then, well, you should get out more.

Sean Springer is Features editor of The Queen's Journal and former recipient of 1st Prize in the province's annual "Prettiest Feet in Ontario" contest.

Turk's

A GREAT PLACE TO SHOP FOR:

- used furniture
- antiques
- new & used CD's
- imports
- records
- tapes
- books

281 Princess St.

The Book Shop

New & Used Books
(French & English)
Magazines
Newspapers

Come visit us in our new location:
122 Princess(basement)

Wallack's ART Supplies

Quality Art Materials

for all

Ages & Stages

271 Princess Street, Kingston, Ontario

549-5806

Contemporary Literature Goes to the Dogs

Woof, yip woof, yip yip. Arf-Arf!

By JESSE CRAIG BELLINGER

IT SEEMS EVERYBODY'S doing it doggie-style these days. Dogs, long regarded as mere servants of only limited intelligence, are now the hottest commodity among the bright-lights, big-city literary world. At last, cry the canines of the world, we're out of the dog-house! What follows is only a brief survey of what our long-neglected "best friends" have been up to lately:

Lives of the Monster Dogs

By Kirston Dakis
(Warner, $16.25)

Walking upright and possessing prosthetic hands and artificial voiceboxes, the cruelly-named Monster Dogs inhabit a neo-gothic castle in the middle of Manhattan. This is the story of the brave human journalist who penetrates the secret veil that surrounds the superdogs (as they should be called, in my humble opinion) to reveal a dark and hidden secret. Classified as non-fiction, but visit NYC and decide for yourself.

A Dog's Life

By Peter Mayle
(Vintage, $16.99)

The story of "Boy," an adopted dog. Yes, even dogs sometimes lose touch with their birth parents.

Dog Soldiers

By Robert Stone
(Mariner, $16.95)

While this book managed to win the 1973 National Book Award, dogs play a frustratingly small role in the narrative.

Heeling The Canine Within

A DOG'S SELF-HELP COMPANION

by Max and Scooter

Authors of

10 Stray Things Dogs Do to Make Up Their Lives

The Dogs of Winter

By Ken Nunn

(Washington Square Press, $20.00)

Despite the promising title, the book has no visible dog connection. Such gratuitous use of canine-linked vocabulary is giving all writers a bad name, even those who have dogs of their own.

In the Jaws of Black Dogs

By John Bentley Mays

(Penguin, $13.99)

The most forceful and gripping memoir concerning depression ever written in English. Black dogs has strong jaws, indeed.

Knitting WITH Dog Hair

Better a sweater from a dog you know and love than from a sheep you'll never meet

KENDALL CROLIUS / ANNE MONTGOMERY

Mike Harris Made Me Eat My Dog

By Linwood Barclay

(ECW, $17.95)

Even our canine friends have reason to fear Mike the Knife.

Dogs Never Lie About Love

By Jeffrey Moussaif Masson

(Three Rivers Press, $19.50)

If her Oprahness mentions this book one more time on air, I will pay good money to see this woman muzzled. I will admit, however, that the author is correct. My dog, Bronte (pictured below), has never lied to me about love or anything else.

The Dog Who Knew Too Much

By Carol Lea Benjamin

(Dell, $7.99)

Sad-eyed Akita is the only witness to a brutal murder. I hope dogs never lie about justice, either.

The Hidden Life of Humans

By Erika Ritter

(Key Porter, $19.95)

The story of a woman's life as told from her dog's perspective. It's always good to have your biographer look up to you.

Lives of the Dog Strangers

By Simon Mason

(Random House, $22.95)

Take this for what it's worth, but the good people at Random House assured me that no dogs were harmed in the writing of this book.

Musical Dogs

By George McWhirter

(Oberon, $14.95)

Not a variation upon the popular children's game, as I had hoped, but merely a provocative title meant to sell books. I put aside my disappointment just long enough to pay for my copy.

variations

RANDOM THOUGHTS

King Louis XIV of France is reported to have indulged in just three baths in his entire life.

47 per cent of the cat population is overweight. The heaviest pumpkin known to exist weighed 124 lbs.

37 is the number of degrees Celsius considered "normal" for a human body. It is also the number of metres per minute escalators in European airports travel (those in North American malls generally carry passengers at a rate of 27 metres per minute). William Shakespeare wrote 37 plays.

There are 1,585 daily newspapers in the United States of America.

Capital punishment is legal in 92 countries

73,884 persons were killed in the American bombing of Nagasaki, Japan, 9 August 1945.

The word "girl" appears just once in the King James Bible (Joel 3:3)

Sources: Various, many in William Hartson's Book of Numbers

Strange, Speculative Iain Banks

is not entirely engrossing.

Continued from page 5

The central character of Inversions's other story, the bodyguard, is calculating, often detached, and obsessed with the welfare of the ruling "Protector" that he, ironically, is sworn to protect. Banks opts for a third-person narrative in this case, and the prose is more like the tone of the central character: detached and concrete. In many ways, the story is complementary to that of the doctor; the bodyguard is enlisted to protect the Protector from harm and possesses uncommon learning. Yet the "inversion" of the book's title is reflected in the story — the bodyguard must kill instead of heal, forced to action where he prefers passivity, and unlike the opinionated Doctor, keeps his ideas to himself.

Unfortunately, the characters in this second story lack much of the vitality of those in the earlier one. The strength of the plot is in the complexity of the conflict within the bodyguard himself, as the Protector begins to behave in a manner that the bodyguard finds unacceptable. The writing is cerebral, with less emphasis on the vivid imagery at which Banks excels; nevertheless, the story is fascinating, even if it

While this book is not strictly science fiction, Inversions does portray the effect of technology in our lives, alternately suggesting the horrors that arise from advances in weaponry and glorifying the magical powers that medicine can provide. In this case, the technological arts involved would be commonplace in a contemporary setting, yet in the world of Inversions they seem as mysterious as witchcraft. What sets Inversions apart from much other science fiction is that the focus is not so much on how technology changes the lives of people in a fictitious world but instead upon how people who envision another way of living and wish to effect change can be thwarted by the cultural norms of "developed" society. The satisfaction felt in reading this book was not due to the particular successes and failures of the characters involved; rather, it was in the way that Banks displayed the tenacity of the human spirit, vividly and compellingly, when it simply tries to rise above itself.

Jason Cullimore is currently completing his Masters in psychology at Queen's University.

December 6, 1989

The deaths of fourteen women at Ecole Polytechnique brought violence against women to the forefront of our national consciousness. It's important to keep it there.

On December 4, 1998 The Journal will publish a supplement commemorating the 9th anniversary of the Montreal Massacre. We're looking for women and men to contribute experiences, thoughts, poetry and art related to violence against women. For more information, call Liz or Shandley at 545-2800.

Copy...
...do not be an original.

T-shirts & Mouse-pads

If we can copy it, we can make it into a T-shirt or mouse-pad, in colour or black & white.

- colour laser copying • self-serve copying • we-serve copying •
- laser printing • graphic design • transparencies •

545-6543 545-0350
The centre of the lower JDUC

The Publishing and Copy Centre

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY THE JOURNAL

1873

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1998

Our New Regular Hours Are Designed To Serve You Better:
Monday-Friday 9 AM - 8 PM
Saturday 10 AM - 5 PM
And Always Open At:
www.campusbookstore.com

Student leaders debate alignment

BY ERIK MISSIO

Despite some student leaders' reservations about the advantages of alignment and the alignment process, the Alma Mater Society is proceeding with its bid for Queen's to join a provincial lobbying group.

The leaders of both the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance (OUSA) and the Canadian Federation of Students Ontario (CFS-O) spoke at the October 1 meeting of the AMS assembly. OUSA Executive Director Andrew Buggs and CFS-O Chair Joel Davison Harden (both former Queen's students) were each granted approximately 15 minutes to present the benefits of their organizations, before fielding questions from assembly for more than an hour.

Although the AMS invited both groups to speak at the meeting, the AMS executive has favoured OUSA throughout their campaign. The fundamental difference between the two organizations, according to AMS Academic Affairs Commissioner Milan Konopek, is that the CFS-O has traditionally been considered the more aggressive of the two lobbying groups, often staging protests, while OUSA is known for its back-door lobbying techniques.

While Queen's has been a member of both organizations in the past, the history between the school and the two groups has been rocky. In March 1992, nearly 80 per cent of Queen's students voted in a referendum to leave the CFS-O over conflicting issues, such as zero tuition policies deemed "unrealistic" and the group's focus on issues extraneous to post-secondary education, wrote AMS President Tom Stanley in a letter to assembly members.

These issues have also alienated the CFS-O from Premier Mike Harris' administration, said Konopek. He recalls a CFRB radio interview with the Premier during which Harris said he found the CFS-O "silly" and mocked their bid for an essentially free university system.

While the ideology of the CFS-O conflicted with the wants and needs of Queen's students, the split with OUSA was based on financial, not ideological, concerns, Stanley said, and it would make sense to consider OUSA now that those financial concerns have been cleared up.

AMS Deputy Commissioner of Academic Affairs Aaron Lazarus disagreed. "I don't think Queen's students want

Please see Assembly on page 5

Saturday's Chillifest attracted a large crowd to Confederation Basin in a festival of colourful sights, sumptuous smells and mouth-watering tastes.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Queen's@Home.irks.queensu.ca

BY RENEE HUANG

Due to an unanticipated increase in the number of users, the efficiency of the Queen's at Home cable modem has not been up to the high-speed level of service originally touted by Queen's Information Technology Services and Cogeco, its creators.

The cable modem was created last year and marketed to private subscribers for a $30 monthly fee and $25 for each additional user, supposedly as a faster modem option for those seeking a constant Internet connection without the inconvenience of dialling in through a phone line.

However, many users have found that the system is slow, inconsistent and often crashes, hardly living up to expectations of providing continual and quick Internet access.

"We're 100 per cent pissed off."

— Steve Burmaster, Arts '00

"We had equipment that had to be replaced... The modem broke down on us," said Danielle Chanda, Con-Ed '00.

Chanda said she also found that customer service at Cogeco was lacking. "The Cogeco system is highly inaccessible. Phone lines are always busy. Calls are not returned," she said.

However, many users have found that

Steve Burmaster, Arts '00, and his housemates have also experienced many complications and frustrations with Queen's at Home. Last year, they had all four computers in the house hooked up to the service at a cost of more than $100 a month. The cable modem was very slow, and "you'd lose it four or seven days of the week... it was down half the time," Burmaster said.

Technicians at ITS and Cogeco have explanations for the slower service. "We've exceeded our expectations... we got more [subscribers] than we expected," said Andy Hooper, ITS systems administrator. "We have over 700 new subscribers and over 100 from last year," he said.

"Response for Queen's at Home

Please see Splicers on page 4

Dean's list reveals faculty differences

BY JOSHUA WIESENTHAL

The 1997-1998 Dean's List has arrived, revealing the Queen's students who attained the highest grades in their respective faculties. However, large distinctions between faculty marks indicate that qualifying standards for the list vary between disciplines, something that the administration may seek to reform in the future.

Due to confidentiality, the Faculty of Arts and Science and the Faculty of Applied Science would not identify the highest marks and the students who achieved them in each faculty for every year.

These numbers were, however, disclosed last year, and revealed significant grade discrepancies between the faculties. In the School of Business, the top marks for each year averaged 89.4

Please see Changes on page 3

Queen's smoking policies:
The class of 2003 could be living in smoke-free residences.
Alfie's debates selling cigarettes.

Please see the feature on page 6

index

Volume 11, Issue 6
www.journal.queensu.ca

News	1	A&E	17
Editorials	8	Crossword	21
Opinions	9	Classifieds	22
Features	6	MISC.	23
Sports & Fitness	13

WEATHERWATCH

Today Sunny with clouds High 15°C; Low 3°C; POP 10%	Thursday Rainy High 17°C; Low 8°C; POP 80%
Wednesday Rainy High 19°C; Low 9°C; POP 10%	Friday Sunny with clouds High 17°C; Low 8°C; POP 30%

ARTSCI
JACKETS

ORDER NIGHTS
THIS WEEK!!

TUESDAY OCT. 6
WEDNESDAY OCT. 7
6:30 - 9:30

WALLACE HALL, UPPER JDUC
$200 DEPOSIT NO PERSONAL CHEQUES,
ONLY CASH, MONEY ORDER, CERTIFIED CHEQUE

LAST CHANCE BEFORE XMAS

C
R
O
S
S
I
N
G

Work/Study Abroad Fair
Wednesday, October 7

Presentations

Music Listening Room, 2nd Floor, JDUC

- 10:30 EF International Language Schools
- 11:30 Youth Challenge International
- 12:30 The VIEW Foundation
- 1:00 Odyssey Travel
- 1:30 Northern College Aberdeen
- 2:30 University of Maine at Presque Isle
- 3:30 WUSC

McLaughlin Room, 2nd Floor, JDUC

- 10:30 Canada-US Fulbright Program
- 11:30 Australeam
- 12:00 TEACH
- 12:30 Interact Nova Group
- 1:30 Queen's University Career Services
- 2:30 AFS Interculture Canada
- 3:30 Queen's University Exchanges

Display Tables
Upper & Lower Ceilidhs, JDUC
10:30 - 4:30

The International Centre
Tel: (613) 545-2604
http://www.quc.queensu.ca

B
O
R
D
E
R
S

16 YEARS ON CAMPUS

Speed Reading

Taught on campus in cooperation with the AMS (Academic Affairs).

$90.00 fee. Textbook is an additional $45.00
(A refund of $25.00, if book is returned.)

No charge for repeat course at later date.

Register on Thursday, October 8th, 1998 in JDUC — Sidewalk Café beside TD Bank Machine from 10:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m.

Call 1-905-775-3832

CLASS 1 2:30 - 4:20 p.m. Thursdays — October 15 to Nov. 19 Room 104, Fleming Hall (Pollock Wing)	CLASS 2 4:30 - 6:20 p.m. Thursdays — October 15 to Nov. 19 Room 104, Fleming Hall (Pollock Wing)
---	---

Rector announces upcoming resignation

By FIONA STEVENSON

Ian Michael announced his upcoming resignation from the office of Rector last Thursday, after serving two years of the office's three-year statutory term.

"I think I almost always enjoyed it despite it being actually much more difficult than I at first thought," said Michael, Law '99. "I think I underestimated the conflict which the position inherently has, being both a student and a governor."

Along with the Chancellor and Principal, the Rector is one of the three officers of Queen's. In addition, the Rector is one of the three student members of the Board of Trustees, sits on various committees, is an observer to Senate, and ensures that student concerns are addressed.

"There were definitely some big challenges," Michael said of his term. Michael mentioned money as the biggest issue he faced as Rector. "With the first tuition debate, I learned very quickly how difficult the position would be — that sort of took me off guard," he said.

"The challenge of being both the trustee and the student meant forcing myself to walk two roads at once," he continued.

The role of the Rector is quite different than those of the presidents of the Alma Mater Society and the Society of Graduate and Professional Students, Michael explained. "The Rector has to be more flexible in what they say and do.... They're elected by all students so that they have to be able to assist graduate and undergraduate students at the same time," he said.

"The challenge of being both the trustee and the student meant forcing myself to walk two roads at once."

— Rector Ian Michael

However, Michael said he believes the position of Rector, unique to Queen's, adds immense value to the university. "It just gives a different feel to the way Queen's operates," he said.

Although the Rector's term is set at three years, no student Rector since the first, elected in 1969, has held the position for more than two years.

Michael said holding an election every two years is appropriate given that there is nearly a complete turnover in undergraduate enrolment every four years. Doing so ensures that "more people know the position and it means that the position is technically more accountable," he explained.

Michael's resignation will take effect from the date a successor is elected, most likely in November, he predicted.

CORRECTION

In the Sports & Fitness section of issue 9 the opponent of the men's rugby team was misidentified. The team played McMaster. The Journal regrets the error.

Professor discusses women and poverty

By MARTE NATVIK

Margaret Little, an anti-poverty activist and Queen's women's studies professor, spoke about women and poverty last Thursday in a speech entitled Chrétien's Legacy for Canada's Poor.

Two core beliefs are at the heart of Little's fight against poverty. Poverty is not always an individual's fault and people have the right to a certain standard of living, she said.

Twelve per cent of Canadians live in standards below the poverty line, Little said, adding that Prime Minister Jean Chrétien's government is responsible for "this embarrassing fact." More precisely, Chrétien's revamping of the social assistance program to the Canada Health and Social Transfer (CHST), is what Little said has caused the direct "erosion of monies and the erosion of the rights of the poor."

Under the CHST system, money is given to each province in a lump sum, Little explained. There are no rules set in place so the provinces can spend the monies on whatever they choose, and do not have to invest money on the poor. Because the poor do not carry a strong political voice, it is easy to cut money to welfare recipients, she said.

According to Little, in 1965 the existing Canada Assistance Plan was much more supportive of the rights of the poor. All citizens had the right to welfare based on economic need, the right to apply and the right to appeal any welfare decision, she said. In her research, Little has found that today people interested in applying for welfare are often told they are ineligible when they are in fact eligible. Appealing such decisions is often next to impossible, she added.

"Economic independence is important for gender equality."

— Morgorett Little, Queen's women studies professor

Changes to list under discussion

Continued from page 1

per cent. For the Faculty of Applied Sciences, the top marks averaged 93.5 per cent. Science students averaged 92.4 per cent, while arts students had the lowest average of 85.6 per cent.

"The faculties are clear about what marks mean," said Bob Crawford, dean of student affairs. "We attempt to maintain rigour, but at the same time fairness." Crawford said lower marks achieved by arts students are due to a "narrow-ranged marking scheme used by the humanities such as english, history and politics. These [courses] are much more subjective than the mathematics and sciences."

To make the Dean's List, students must attain certain academic goals designated by each faculty. Full-time students in the Faculty of Applied Sciences and the School of Business must achieve a minimum grade average of 80 per cent. The Faculty of Arts and Science derives their academic honorees from the top students ranked separately from science students. Part-time students, and fine arts, music and physical health education majors are also ranked as individual disciplines.

Bronya Rose, the coordinator of undergraduate services for Applied Science, said "generally 60 to 80 engineering students in all years achieve a grade average over 80 per cent."

"There is a culture of marking systems between faculties. Arts cannot artificially inflate grades to match the other faculties. This is to the students' benefit," said Rob Beamish, associate dean of the Faculty of Arts and Science. When applying to graduate and professional schools, overly high marks are questioned and would "hinder the students' chances," he explained.

"I doubt that the Dean's List would ever include every student who gets over 80 per cent."

— Rob Beamish, associate dean of the Faculty of Arts and Science

Arts and Science has limited its Dean's List to the top three per cent of students for many years. Beamish said "there was some discussion within committee departments about altering the [requirements] for the Dean's List. If we changed the requirements so that any student who got over 80 per cent was placed on the list, there would be about a quarter of fourth year students on the list. It would lose its distinction."

Crawford explained, "There is, however, an attempt to align the grades of different faculties. Within the Faculty of Arts and Science, Queen's is specifically conscious of the distribution of marks across the disciplines, and this is fully understood when scholarship decisions must be made."

The political studies department has developed an honour roll specifically for their department. Students completing a politics major who achieve an average mark greater or equal to 78 per cent in their politics courses, are placed on the politics honour roll.

Steve Page, head of the political studies department, explained that "it is so unbelievably difficult to get on the Dean's List [in the Faculty of Arts and Science]. It doesn't reflect the accomplishments of our students."

The politics honour roll is not published because there are too many students on the list, but students who qualify are notified through e-mail at the end of the academic year. Last year there were 12 students from second year, 16 students from third year and 36 students from fourth year on the honour roll.

There has also been discussion about creating two honour rolls, a "List of Distinction" (top 10 per cent) and the faculty would also keep the Dean's List (top three per cent), said Beamish. "I doubt that the Dean's List would ever include every student who gets over 80 per cent," he said.

Assigning students percentile rankings rather than grades has also been mentioned as a more equitable alternative, said Crawford. This is why, on Queen's transcripts, students can roughly see where they are ranked in their class. "Queen's University must use a system that is fairly widely recognized. If you go to a system that is unique, you have to be concerned about the students' well-being," Crawford explained.

According to the professor, women have been hurt doubly by these changes. Sixty per cent of single mothers live below the poverty line and, according to Little, this increasing gender disparity is a result of many dynamic influences.

Little explained that female welfare recipients undergo invasive questioning and are made to show "exhaustive certification of eligibility" that they are in essence not being "kept by a man," or that there is a "man in the house," she said.

Little stressed that if financial dependence shifts from the family, essentially the male breadwinner, to each individual being considered a separate economic entity, caring work will no longer interfere with a woman's ability to be economically independent. This "economic independence is important for gender equality," she said. At this point, however, women are still "financially expected to provide and care full time," she said.

Not all countries have such gender disparity in the levels of poverty, Little explained. The Netherlands has made very liberal reform which includes payment for all mothers, thereby establishing "caring for children is important," Little said.

Little emphasized that Canada should "look more to Europe and less to the United States" when modeling social reform and stop the "demeaning of the poor as part of election platforms."

Old and new residents happy with Eng Floor

By CRYSTAL BONA

It looks like Queen's is going to have to get used to a floor occupied entirely by first-year engineering students.

After a successful trial year, the third floor of Brockington Hall has again been filled by a new group of Applied Science students.

Made up of approximately 50 students, the goal of the "Eng Floor" is to provide an academically supportive atmosphere for first-year students in the engineering program. Graham Brown, Director of Queen's Residences, said he was very pleased with the floor's first year.

"Applications were doubled this year for the engineering floor. We certainly regard it as a successful first year in the pilot project."

Although students living on the floor last year achieved the same grades, on average, as other first-year students in Applied Science, they were pleased with the helpful atmosphere provided by their peers, said Brown. This sentiment has been echoed by the new residents of Brock 3, most of whom are very pleased to be spending their first year on the Eng Floor.

"We go to classes together — in most classes you'll find a whole row of seats taken up by Brock 3. It's the same thing in the cafeteria," said Nathan Clute, Sci '02 year president. "Everyone has similar interests, we're all doing the same work, and the floor provides a constant support system."

Matt Reid, Sci '02, suggested that people may regard the floor as a clique, but he explains, "Most floors have two sets of friends — faculty friends and floor friends. For us, it just happens that the two groups are the same."

Jeremy Gaudet, Sci '01, lived on the Eng Floor last year. He now shares a house with friends he made on the floor, and expressed nothing but praise for his residence experience last year.

Gaudet said he also found the floor helpful with regards to meeting people in other faculties. "I find that [having only engineering students on] the floor makes you want to go out and meet people from other faculties," he said.

Mark Chabor, ArtSci '01, also lived on the floor last year, and said that it may not be a good place for shy individuals, because residents on the floor tend to only interact with each other.

Reid remarked that it's unfortunate more people can't take part in faculty-specific floors like the engineering floor, although he acknowledged that it might lead to divisions between the faculties.

Both Clute and Reid were skeptical about the effectiveness of other faculty-specific floors. "The difference between us and a faculty such as ArtSci is that we share all the same classes and the same workload. ArtSci is so diverse that [an ArtSci floor] may not work out," said Reid.

Gaudet was more open to the idea of faculty-specific floors. "It works well for engineering because first years all have the same classes. It seems like a good idea for other faculties that have a common first-year program."

A student on the Eng Floor hits the books.

PHOTO BY JAMES BOAKE

Students have fun learning crash avoidance

By SHAWN BRIMLEY

The parking lot behind Mackintosh-Corry Hall smelled of burning rubber last weekend, as 125 students learned how to avoid accidents at high speeds with the Labatt Road Scholarship program.

A participant in the Labatt Road Scholarship program swerves to avoid a pylon in the parking lot behind Mackintosh-Corry Hall Saturday afternoon.

PHOTO BY SAMSON WU

Each class was run by professional drivers, some of whom had backgrounds in stockcar racing and test driving. After a short introduction and video, the students were divided into groups of four, each group sharing a Chrysler 300M. The next couple of hours were spent braking at high speeds and turning to avoid pylon obstacles. "The Labatt Road Scholarship has been going for 10 years, and has taught approximately 15,000 students all across the country," said Ross Bentley, chief instructor. "It's all about Labatt's commitment to promoting the responsible use of alcohol... They love the fact that people drink their beer, but they want them to do it responsibly."

"Everyone had a blast and took the message in a positive way," said Sarah Armstrong, Alma Mater Society services director. "Chrysler and Labatt certainly weren't preaching don't drink and drive, but allowed the students to see for themselves the possible dangers."

"It gave me a great chance to do something that I normally wouldn't do," said David Callum, ArtsSci '99.

"There was a study done that showed that with one more second of reaction, 80 per cent of all car crashes could be avoided."

— Ross Bentley, chief instructor, Labatt Road Scholarship Program

Each class learned crash avoidance techniques through three exercises. The first exercise consisted of driving a short distance at top speed, and then braking hard on wet pavement, to experience the effects of anti-lock braking. The second exercise allowed students to weave through pylons, while watching for a signal from an instructor to bypass a certain pylon, making the student aware of how far ahead he or she was looking. The final exercise combined both high-speed braking and turning to avoid obstacles.

"There was a study done that showed that with one more second of reaction, 80 per cent of all car crashes could be avoided," said Bentley. "There are some really basic things you can do to gain that one second, things like holding the steering wheel properly, sitting properly behind the wheel of the car, and looking far ahead down the road."

"It's all those little things that add up to one second, and you can throw all that out the window with one drink," Bentley said.

Splicers will be charged

Continued from page 1

service is four times the amount we had last year," agreed Mike Abrosimoff, technical operations manager at Cogeco.

More than 800 subscribers on a system designed for 600 users has taken its toll on Queen's at Home, slowing down service at peak times when more people are using their modems. Hooper said restrictions limiting the amount of data transferred in a 24-hour period have been introduced to remedy the clogged network.

"We've started a monitoring of actual usage and set limits on heavy users," said Hooper, referring to the amount and size of files being downloaded through the cable, not the time of usage. When people are sending or receiving files that take some time to load, the cable modem becomes clogged with information and the service slows down significantly for everyone else using that same cable, Hooper said. "One person downloading file after file all month long will [limit] the capacity for others."

Cable modems are organized according to geographic location of users, Hooper said. ITS and Cogeco have monitored usage for a few weeks to determine the peak hours of usage and the shared capacity in each area. "Cogeco split one of the networks last week and will split another this week" to relieve the congested flow of information, Hooper said.

"Part of the speed issue may not be our system," Abrosimoff added. He said people who illegally splice into the cable modem slow the network down significantly, affecting the quality of service for paying users. "If anybody on your node is a hog through data downloads or tapping into the system, that affects your speed," he said.

People caught splicing into the network will face serious consequences, he continued. "When we do find them, we're not going to be as light as before," he warned. Splicers will be charged for their usage and the police will be called.

This year, Burmaster's house has been waiting for more than a month and a half to be reconnected to Queen's at Home. "We're 100 per cent pissed off," he said. Despite his frustrations, Burmaster said he will continue to subscribe because he sees the system's ability to download files that are large or complex as a necessity. Many courses now offer notes on the Internet and it is less expensive to print notes at home than at a public computing site, he added.

"If there's any competition, [Cogeco would] lose every customer," predicted Burmaster. He and his housemates plan to hook up only one computer to Queen's at Home this year.

Chanda is opting to avoid Queen's at Home completely. "I gave up on the Queen's at Home system. I found it too expensive, especially when it's being geared towards students," she said. "I chose the alternative, Queen's pay line." With the toll line, users are charged 75 cents per hour of Internet or e-mail time. Although it may be a disadvantage to some who dislike dialling into the system, Chanda appreciates the economical side of only paying for the time on-line.

Hooper implores Queen's at Home users for patience and cooperation. "I know we asked for the same thing last year but this is more than double last year's [capacity]," said Hooper. "We will get the problems cleared up but it will take a while."

Abrosimoff said backlogged installations should be hooked up by the end of the week. As for the speed of the network, "splitting of the nodes will help the system and balance it out," he said.

Assembly 'cautious'

Continued from page 1

necessarily the same things they wanted then," he said. "The political climate has changed."

Nevertheless, the AMS is proposing a 'yes/no' referendum question regarding OUSA, rather than a choice between the two provincial lobbying organizations.

In a written statement, Lazarus said he "would hate to see the small circle of government types that make up the AMS make such a broad-scale decision without proper input from students... The process of alignment has been somewhat hidden so far... It would be a shame for students to wake up one morning part of a lobbying organization they didn't ask for or necessarily agree with."

Retaliated Stanley: "The executive council has a paid responsibility we were elected to fulfil... This includes making judgements and putting forth choices for students."

Konopek said the AMS "has been as open as it can, [bringing] speakers to assembly [and] never hiding anything." Konopek said having only one provincial lobbying organization on the proposed referendum ballot does not eliminate choice because it is the AMS's duty "to provide some sort of leadership and historically, referendum questions have been yes or no."

Assembly will decide whether the question of alignment should be put to referendum at the October 15 meeting. If the request is denied, the AMS will consider the alternative method of obtaining a referendum question — acquiring 600 signatures.

So far, according to Stanley, individual assembly members have been taking a responsible and cautious attitude towards alignment.

During the assembly meeting, an allegation was raised that alignment may benefit OUSA more than Queen's. However, Konopek and Stanley said they believe the relationship between Queen's and OUSA would be symbiotic, as opposed to the more top-down structure in the CFS-O. Should OUSA benefit from Queen's prestige or resources, Queen's and all other OUSA universities would then benefit from OUSA's success, they said.

Lazarus warned that OUSA membership at this time would be a possible mistake. He said the AMS "is rushing full steam ahead towards alignment and [I am] certainly not convinced there is a demonstrated need to rush this decision."

Lazarus said the job Queen's has done on its own since 1995 is more than adequate.

Stanley pointed out that alignment has been an AMS executive issue for at least three years. He agreed that Queen's has done an admirable job in terms of solo Parliament Hill representation, but stated that aligning with OUSA would mean a stronger voice for Queen's.

Konopek cited several examples of OUSA's success record, including the formation of the Ontario Advisory Council on Student Financial Assistance (OACSA), a group which will advise the provincial government on allocating financial assistance from the Millennium Fund, and hopefully in the future, OSAP.

Stanley said OUSA "will make effective representation, has sound, reasoned policies and will improve lobbying for Queen's, OUSA and ultimately the entire student movement."

Are you looking for...

- ...leadership opportunities?
- ...the chance to network with important faculty and alumni?
- ...a way to gain experience in public relations, finance, chairing a committee, or running a program?
- ...an opportunity to meet new (and impressibly cool) people?

Student Team on Alumni Relations

If So, then S.T.A.R. wants to hear from you!

The student Team on Alumni Relations (S.T.A.R.) is a joint venture between the Alma Mater Society and Alumni Affairs. Our mandate is to act as a liaison between current students, alumni, and faculty as well as to administer related programming. (Which is just a fancy way of saying that we hang out with the major players at Queen's!)

Interested? C'mon out to our first general meeting, which will be held on October 19, 5:30 pm. Summerhill parlour (that's the mansion in the middle of the campus... talk about ritzy!) We even provide dinner!

Call Laurie of 545-6000, ext. 7520 to RSVP for the general meeting or to find out how to get involved!

Interested in Graduate Studies/Summer Employment/Research Projects in Physiology?

OPEN HOUSE

Tuesday, October 13, 7:00 pm
Physiology Library
Botterell 4th Floor
Room 449

Meet Faculty and Graduate Students
Tour the Labs

Refreshments Available

Open New Doors with a Uvic LL.B.

Find out from the experts what the University of Victoria Law difference is all about. Discover what to expect during law school and the exciting career opportunities that await LL.B. graduates.

UVic Law Dean, David Cohen, and alumna Laurie Goldbach, Clerk at the Ontario Court of Appeal, will be there to provide information and answer all your questions.

Friday, October 9, 1998
12:30 - 1:30 p.m.
Sutherland Room
John Deutsch University Centre

Sponsored by Career Services <http://careers.queensu.ca>

Asia Africa ... South America ...

'Home for the Holidays'
'Travelling for the Holidays'

Christmas space CRITICAL! Let us reserve now.

Tokyo	from 1239	Round World	1869
Rio	from 869	"Bare Bones"
Nairobi	from 1499	Round World	2599
J'burg	from 1349	via South Pacific
Quito	from 649	South Pacific	1939
Bombay	from 1369	via Asia
Bangkok	from 1129	Circle Pacific	2399

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
186 Princess St., Kingston (at Montreal)
Lecture Travel 549-3553 Long Haul/Group Travel 549-3561
Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

What's Happening

The AMS updates you on what's happening on and around campus

Kaleidoscope allows you to make the difference in the life of a local elementary school student. Applications are available at the AMS office and the Infobank. Applications will be due 1:00pm, Oct. 2. Contact kscope@post.queensu.ca for more info.

Give the gift of life. The Red Cross Blood Donor Clinic will be held Oct. 5-6, Grant Hall, 2pm-7pm. Volunteers and donors urgently needed. Contact Enca at 6ejd1 or 531-5266 for more info.

WE WANT YOU for the Queen's Inquiry Committee. Be on the front edge of AMS EXCITEMENT. Meet tonnes of cool people. Call 545-2732 or drop by the Communications Commission in the AMS. Don't be shy - CALL NOW.

Be a Street Captain!
Applications due @ AMS Front Desk by Tues. Oct. 6. Committee Members due Wed. Sept. 30. Questions? 545-6000 x.5178

Learning Strategies Workshops: Health, Counseling, and Disability Services - Call 545-2893 to sign up!

First Year Transition Workshops
Monday October 5, 9:30-10:30
Tuesday October 6, 9:30-10:30
Learning Strategies Series
Tuesday Oct. 6 (time), 1:30-2:30
Tuesday Oct. 13 (lectures), 1:30-2:30
Tuesday Oct. 20 (texts), 1:30-2:30
Library Research and Essay Writing
Thursday October 8 in Stauffer

Are you an Infomaniac?
All those who want to get down and dirty in the infobank (translation: Do you want to volunteer?) call 545-2732 to get in on the action.

Futures Forum is Oct. 13-15! We still need YO HELP! to make it PHAT-tastic. Sign up by calling Sarah Mills at the CAC 545-6000ext.4819

Fall into the CAC. That's the Campus Activities Commission, the Kooliest place to party and get involved! We run all the phat AMS events, and still need groovy people to plan Welcome Back Week, United Way Events, Charity Ball, Futures Forum and sooooo much more. Call us. You know you want to. All the Kool Kidz are doing it... Weekend

If you have something you want to tell the world then
phone the AMS Communications Commission @ 545-2732, or email Comm@ams.queensu.ca

Waiting to inhale

As the university looks to ban smoking in Queen's residences, Alfie's Pub debates selling cigarettes.

~Freedom to smoke versus freedom from smoke~

BY ERIC MORRIS

WITH MOST STUDENTS FOCUSED on their spring exams and summer job prospects, university administrators and student representatives quietly began weighing some dramatic changes to the university's smoking policy. In April, work began on banning smoking in Queen's residences. Months later, Alma Mater Society Council, the student government's inner circle, discussed an idea proposed by the managers of Alfie's Pub to start selling cigarettes in the bar. While the latter, amid concerns about promoting smoking and a rise in second-hand smoke, is no longer being considered, the former is gaining momentum, and a complete ban on smoking in residences could begin as early as next September.

Sarah Armstrong is the services director at the AMS and oversees the finances and planning of Alfie's Pub. She was first approached by Alfie's management in June, and again at the end of August. "At first," remembers Armstrong, "I thought, 'sure, let's sell them.'" Armstrong then decided to raise the issue with AMS Council in August. AMS Council is made up of the president, vice-presidents, commissioners and directors. Council usually doesn't get involved with the day-to-day operations of the services, however, there was a feeling that the decision of whether or not to sell cigarettes involved more than a simple business decision by one service.

Tom Stanley, AMS president, was one of the more outspoken critics of the proposal. "I have this personal reservation... about actively promoting cigarettes." As well, Stanley expressed concern about an increase in second-hand smoke. Others felt that since smoking is legal, and is allowed in Alfie's, there is nothing wrong with selling cigarettes at the pub. One suggestion was to allow Alfie's to sell cigarettes for a fixed period of time, and re-evaluate the policy later. Armstrong, however, concedes that it would be difficult to offer the service and then take it away. After some discussion, the majority of Council did not think that Alfie's should sell cigarettes. "We came to the decision with Council," Armstrong explained, "that if Alfie's wanted to pursue it they'd have to make a presentation to [AMS] Assembly."

GRAPHIC BY JANICE CHAN

More than a month has passed since that meeting. Alfie's has not taken the issue any further, and their manager says they have no intention of doing so. "The general consensus is... it would not be a good idea to sell cigarettes at the pub," says Ben Bourke, head manager of the pub. "We're not going to pursue it any further."

The reasoning behind the proposal, Bourke says, is not financial, at least not directly. Preliminary figures from a tobacco company, whom the pub contacted, predicted cigarettes would not be a significant source of revenue for the pub. Instead, it would be more of a service for those who did smoke. "Patrons do occasionally ask to purchase cigarettes," says Bourke, estimating that on a busy night the bar could have as many as 20 such requests. If someone were to run out of cigarettes at Alfie's after eleven, the closest convenience store still open is on Princess Street. Bourke says that many who make the walk may decide to go home afterward, or to another bar on Princess Street. Selling cigarettes would keep the patrons, and any money they'd spend that night, at Alfie's.

As for concerns about an increase in second-hand smoke, Bourke isn't convinced. "I don't see a significant increase in smoke if cigarettes were to be sold here," he said, explaining that the bar's ventilation system already handles current levels of smoke extremely well. And with respect to the broader concern, that the AMS would somehow be promoting smoking which might increase the number of smokers at the bar, Bourke said he believes students are adults, and have already decided if they're going to smoke or not.

But if Stanley and others are indeed concerned about the health risks posed by second-hand smoke, and that's one of the reasons why Alfie's should not sell cigarettes, then why is smoking allowed at all at Alfie's? "Maybe we're at a bit of a middleground now," Stanley suggested. Middleground, or contradiction? Stanley certainly prefers the former. "I don't think it's a contradiction that requires immediate and pressing attention."

"As long as it's legal, how can we not allow them to smoke at our pubs?" asks Armstrong. "It's very hard to eliminate it entirely." This is where Armstrong and others begin to waver. They recognize the health risks posed by second-hand smoke, yet aren't sure what should be done about it. Certainly, for a pub the size of Alfie's, banning smoking could be a logistical nightmare. Student constables have enough trouble keeping track of people stepping out of the bar to make a phone call or use the bank machine. Groups leaving for smoke breaks would only make things worse. At the same time, though, she agrees that the potential harm to employees at Alfie's from smoke is really no different than worker exposure to cancer-causing emissions at a factory.

So is Alfie's going to ban smoking? "It's not in my game plan, and most definitely not in the managers'," she responds.

Finances are also a concern. The bar, which has struggled to break even the last few years, would almost certainly be worse off financially if the bar was smoke-free. "A smoking bar is more of a draw than a deterrent," Bourke says. He adds that it's important to give Queen's students a number of choices when it comes to partying on campus. The other two student-run pubs, the Queen's Pub and Clark Hall Pub, are both non-smoking. Students, he says, should be given a smoking alternative.

Continued on next page

"I don't see a significant increase in smoke if cigarettes were to be sold here,"

— Ben Bourke, Alfie's manager

PAUL HESLER

ALFIE'S IS EXCLUDED FROM ALL OTHER smoking policies on campus because a distinction exists between workplaces and places of entertainment and recreation. Implemented in July, 1988, the provincial government's Smoking in the Workplace Act meant smoking had to be prohibited in at least 75 per cent of the workplace.

Wiebke Wilkens is the director of environmental health and safety at Queen's, and ensures that the act is followed properly. In 1987, with about a year's notice that the province was going to impose strict anti-smoking legislation, Wilkens says the decision was made by the university to ban smoking outright. This, she says, was done in hopes of "providing for a safer work environment for everyone."

"One of the factors that was key in recommending a ban on smoking is that there had to be an alternative place to smoke."

— Andrew Hightet, Associate Director of Residence Life

One might think this policy would have angered smokers and produced quite a backlash, but Wilkens insists that this wasn't the case. The university even offered courses for the first couple of years after the province passed the act to help those on staff quit smoking, although neither Wilkens nor the Kingston Frontenac Lennox & Addington Health Unit, who organized the classes, kept figures as to how many university employees took advantage of the program.

The legislation has meant that the only places left on campus where people can smoke are bars (Alfie's and the Grad Club choose to allow smoking) and residences.

And for the most part, says Wilkens, people abide by those rules. She receives only two or three complaints a year from people who smell smoke in buildings.

Sometimes it's the result of people smoking outdoors close to the entrance where smoke drifts through the doors or vents, while in other cases it's people smoking in washrooms. The chain of command is usually a staff or faculty member reporting a smoking complaint to the department head, and should that person be unable to solve the problem, Wilkens would intervene. If the problem persists, Wilkens could conceivably call in a representative from the Ministry of Labour to fine the smoker, although she has never had to do that.

THE UNIVERSITY NOW SEEMS determined to take the crusade against smoking to the next level. Ban Right Board, the group that oversees Queen's residences on behalf of the university's Senate, passed a resolution to look at the viability of a residence ban on smoking. The resolution was approved by Main Campus Residence Council, Royce Hall Council, Harkness Hall Council, and the Graduate Residence Council, and would affect the undergraduate and graduate residences.

"People are bothered by the smoke," says the Associate Director of Residence Life, Andrew Hightet. "There's no question about it."

The issue of a complete ban on smoking in residence has come up before, Hightet says, but this is the board's first serious look at the issue. Hightet says prior to about two decades ago, residents could smoke just about anywhere. The policy gradually evolved, first banning smoking in floor common rooms, then, about 10 years ago, smoking in main residence common rooms was also banned. That left smoking in bedrooms only, a policy which remains in effect today.

Hightet says the resolution to ban smoking outright was passed, albeit with a catch. "One of the factors that was key in recommending a ban on smoking," he explains, "is that there had to be an alternative place to smoke."

Certainly, the lessons learned at the

ALEX KRONBY

Left: Andrew Hainsworth, a first-year history major living on the fifth floor of the Gordon residence, could be among the last crop of students to smoke inside of their rooms; Above: A Shot employee displays the bar's cigarette stand, which saves bar patrons a midnight trip to the nearest convenience store.

The Ban Right Board's preliminary estimates for:

each outdoor smoke shelter — $16,000-$22,000

each indoor smoke shelter — $40,000-$70,000

University of Western Ontario are fresh on Board members' mind. Like Queen's, residence administrators at Western had student support in banning smoking. While this posed no problem for smokers during the fall months, in the winter, smokers lit up close to the entranceways. The smoke drifted into the building, prompting complaints not only from the annoyed non-smokers indoors, but also the cold smokers outside.

Western's solution was two outdoor smoking shelters, one outside residence Saugeen Maitland, the other outside Delaware Hall. Similar to a bus shelter, the smoking kiosks are glass, about ten feet wide and five feet deep, complete with ventilation. Senior Director of Housing and Food Services Susan Grindrod says the shelters, located 20 feet away from residence entrances, are far enough away that smoke doesn't filter into the building, yet close enough that students don't find them to be a nuisance.

Determined to provide Queen's smokers with an alternative smoking location, the board is studying two options: outdoor smoking shelters and indoor smoking rooms. "Nothing's been taken off the table," Hightet said.

These smoking alternatives do not come without a price. The board was told last Thursday that an outdoor, "top of the line" smoke shelter would cost between $16,000-$22,000, which includes ventilation, heat, and some sort of blue-light-like emergency system. Expensive, perhaps, but that compares quite favourably with the estimated $40,000-$70,000 it would cost to convert a room in residence to a smoking room.

Bruce Griffiths, associate director of residence services and director of food and beverage services, sits on the Ban Right Board. Some residences, like Jean Royce, simply have no space available for smoke rooms, opening up the possibility, according to Griffiths, that Queen's could introduce a combination of indoor and outdoor alternatives.

It's also difficult to say how many of these alternatives — indoor or outdoor — will be needed. Residences in close proximity could share smoke rooms or smoke shelters, but that all depends on how many students use them. While Residence Life surveys incoming residents about their smoking habits, Hightet says such stats are notoriously unreliable. Parents often take a look at these forms before they are mailed to the university, prompting many students to answer less-than-honestly about their smoking habits.

Similar to a bus shelter, the smoking kiosks are glass, about ten feet wide and five feet deep, complete with ventilation.

At Western, Grindrod said one of the reasons their residences became non-smoking was for administrative reasons. "It's very difficult to put smokers and non-smokers in the same room," which is only complicated, she says, when those who said they were non-smokers on surveys turned out to be smokers.

IT NOW APPEARS THAT it's no longer a matter of if, but when Queen's residences will become non-smoking. In the coming months, Ban Right Board will have to make a decision as to how many different locations will require smoking alternatives, and what those alternatives will be. With the project to cost a minimum of tens of thousands of dollars, the issue is now essentially a budgetary one. Griffiths says that around the new year, the budgeting process will begin with the costs and benefits of these shelters weighed against other pending residence projects. If there is money freed up, which should be decided within six months, construction would begin next summer, and a non-smoking policy in residence potentially in place for the class of 2003. With the exception of Alfie's and the Grad Club, Queen's would be all but smoke-free heading into the next millennium.

Eric Morris, the non-smoker, is a fourth year sociology major.

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

The editorials that appear in the space below represent the views of the editorial board of The Queen's Journal. The editorial board meets every issue and chooses the topics for discussion, arriving at the position expressed in the editorial through a democratic process.

Lobbying for choice

SHORT OF PITCHING A TENT in front of Queen's Park and making a permanent nuisance of themselves, there appears to be little more Queen's student government can do on its own to impress upon the government the need to save accessible education in Ontario. Considering the looming prospect of more deregulation and increasing tuition fees, Queen's students would benefit from aligning ourselves with a provincial lobbying group such as the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance or the Ontario wing of the Canadian Federation of Students.

Ultimately, the entire student body, and not the AMS executive or assembly, must make the final decision on which group to join.

Participating in a student lobbying group with other Ontario universities would be a more effective way to ensure that provincial legislators pay attention to our concerns. While the AMS has been successful in having its voice heard at Queen's Park, it would be advantageous for as many students as possible to speak with a united voice against tuition hikes.

While our lobbying efforts could only benefit from the added resources of a larger organization, it is also necessary that the views and policies of that organization reflect the beliefs of a majority of Queen's students.

Before any decision to apply for membership can be made, the student body must have an opportunity to weigh the advantages and disadvantages of both groups. Only after a comprehensive information campaign by both OUSA and CFS-O will we be able to make an informed choice in a campus-wide referendum. Ultimately, the entire student body, and not the AMS executive or assembly, must make the final decision on which group to join, or whether to join at all.

Saving the rookies

QUEEN'S VARSITY ATHLETES HAVE to be pretty tough to side-tackle a 250 pound linebacker, or pitch a baseball almost 80 miles an hour... or perhaps even to survive their notorious rookie-nights. It's hard to say because unlike Orientation Week, the rookie night ritual is kept under wraps by the participants and is not overseen by any external body or individual. Coaches seem to tolerate the infamous event as long as they neither hear nor read about the consequences.

Seeing as rookie nights have a notorious reputation at Queen's for irresponsible drinking and sometimes dangerous activities, it is inappropriate that they be completely immune from outside scrutiny. While not an official function, these one-night initiations nonetheless involve many first-year students and are often perceived as mandatory by aspiring varsity athletes. Since there is a very real danger of someone getting injured on a rookie night, the athletics department needs to assume some responsibility for the event. While autonomy is an important part of what is for some an invaluable bonding experience, it should not endanger the safety of those involved. Coaches of athletics teams need to stop looking the other way and begin reminding their athletes that there are limits to acceptable behavior at rookie nights. If coaches took even this minimal role, they could curb the risks of rookie nights without compromising the team-building benefits of the event.

It would be wise for the administration to act now, before something tragic happens.

Serving your country abroad

WHILE BACKPACKING THROUGH England, Scotland and Ireland this summer, I learned many important lessons:

1. Never attempt to ride London's underground with your pack on during rush hour.
2. Always stick to YHA (Youth Hostel Association) hostels to avoid sleeping in bug-infested beds under blood and urine stained sheets.
3. Do not try to get away with taking "illegal" pictures in St. Paul's Cathedral when your camera has an automatic flash.

complaints about the Yankees have to do with more personal matters.

For example, when aboard a train heading from York to Edinburgh, I was seated with three British army sergeants. Behind us was a group of seven obnoxious American teenagers on a student exchange. Their vexatious conversation rebounded off the walls of the train, making the words seem even louder than they actually were. These kids had absolutely no respect for those passengers who were sleeping, or trying to sleep, let alone for those who were attempting to enjoy the beautiful scenery.

Because of their annoying behavior, my army friends and I started in on a heated debate about Americans. They stated that this display confirmed their original negative assumptions about U.S. citizens. Through the piqued tone of the argument, I became immediately aware of the international stereotype of the American citizen: loud, irritating, demanding and self-righteous. Nothing I said could change their unflinching opinions.

What is most disturbing about this whole event is the fact that seven irritating teens were enough to convince three British men to continue believing their tainted views of American citizens.

Hence, an important lesson I learned while traveling is that you become the sole representative of your country. Your every action represents the behavior of all Canadians to the many foreigners who think that all Canucks live in igloos and have a pet moose. You are, in a sense, a Canadian ambassador.

People treated me badly until I told them that I was a Canadian.

These three points aside, however, the most common agreement between many international travelers is their unquestionable dislike of American citizens. For instance, it is a known fact that if you don't put a Canadian flag somewhere on your clothing or baggage when traveling through Europe, you won't be treated with respect. When touring Italy a few summers ago, I had various experiences with people who treated me badly until I told them that I was a Canadian. After that, they were as sweet as could be and gave me whatever directions I needed.

Having dual citizenship with our neighbors to the south, however, I am quite troubled by this international animosity. Obviously, there are many political reasons behind people's resentment of Americans, but many of the everyday

BY SHANDLEY McMURRAY

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF
Keith Gerin
Tara Mansbridge

MANAGING EDITOR
Laura MacInnis

NEWS EDITOR
Fiona Stevenson

ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS
Shawn Brinkley
Renée Huang
Vacant

EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
Paul Heisler

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR
Stefan Murray

ASSISTANT A&E EDITORS
Sarah Crosbie
Lilian Kim

FEATURES EDITOR
Sean Springer

OPINIONS EDITOR
Todd Jackson

SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Adam Kaminsky

ASSISTANT SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Robert MacNeil

MSC EDITOR
Ken Butland

GRAPHICS EDITOR
Janice Chan

THE READER EDITOR
Jessa Craig Belringer

SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT
John Bowman

SPECIAL PUBLICATIONS EDITORS
Elizabeth Frogley
Shandley McMurray

PHOTOGRAPHY EDITOR
Alex Kronby
James Janjanan

WEB EDITOR
Marco Lui

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Kraft

SALES REPRESENTATIVES
Kari Brintnell
Andrew Cooke
Kristian Li

ADVERTISING COORDINATOR
Mark Fucella

ADVERTISING DESIGNERS
Katherine Colbourn
Amie Ge
Rachelle Villanueva

SYSTEMS MANAGER
Vacant

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Tuesday, October 6, 1998 • Issue 11 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of The Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers. Please direct editorial concerns or comments to Laura MacInnis, Keith Gerin, or Tara Mansbridge. Contents © 1998 by The Queen's Journal; all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Goss Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Ganaroque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions. Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 East Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2H8. Telephone—editorial: 613-545-2800; advertising: 613-545-6711; Fax: 613-545-6728. Email: journal@post.queensu.ca. Circulation 9,000. Issue 12 will be published on Tuesday, October 11, 1998.

CONTRIBUTORS

WRITERS AND REPORTERS: Geoff Ashenbust, Crystal Bona, Paula Bush, Audrey Giles, Julietta Loeffler, Bob McGill, Eric Missik, Eric Morris, Marie Navik, Karin Prochaka, Neate Sager, Joshua Wiesenthal.
PHOTOGRAPHERS: Cimi Achiam, James Boske, Cheryl Cheung, Madeline Core, Chris Glover, Luke Myyagannan, Karen Simpson, Sarason Wu.

OPINIONS

Starving our self image

THIS PAST SUMMER I WORKED ON Baffin Island in the Northwest Territories (soon to be Nunavut). No, this piece is not about my trials and tribulation of my Northern experience. Rather, it is about the shocking reality in which I found myself upon my return to the glorious "South."

Let me be blunt. Ladies, we are one sick group of individuals. I am referring to the cadaverous bodies that surround me as I stroll down University Avenue or Princess Street. I, for the first time in my life, have come to the conclusion that not only is our current collective state of health dangerous, but it is definitely not normal.

I'll admit it, I was probably the skinniest person in Cape Dorset, NWT, population 1,200. However, I suddenly found myself in the position of going from the "ideal" weight, to one that was worthy of ridicule. As a varsity runner, I ran almost every day of my "Northern Exposure." On a regular basis I had some child or adult call out "SKINNY BONES!" or something to that extent as I ran by. For a person who has struggled with weight issues, this was a confusing occurrence. After all, couldn't they see my less than rock-hard body parts? Didn't they realize that there were some days I would tag on an extra few kilometers to keep my weight in check? Evidently not. I was surrounded by considerably more robust female figures all summer, and (surprise) not once did I hear a soul complain that she was having a "fat" day, or had to lose some weight.

In the North, carrying a healthy body has many advantages—the most obvious one being that you do not get as cold as quickly. As an added bonus, it seems to (perhaps shockingly) attract the opposite sex!

and the size of Gap khakis into which you can wedge (or slide) yourself. So many of us are failing to nourish our bodies, and thus failing to nourish our minds. Consider how many minutes/hours/days of your life that you have spent (and I argue wasted) worrying about food. If that precious time were spent on school work, or some other equally worth cause, I am sure that our collective satisfaction with life would improve tremendously.

Many of us have seen tough times, struggling as our weight rode the hellish roller coaster called Anorexia or Bulimia. Please know that you are not alone. I'm hear to say that life doesn't have to be that bad. I'm hear to say that I gained weight and that the sun has continued to rise. In fact, I've never been happier. So, the next time that you are trying on clothes or looking in the mirror and thinking that you are too fat, I encourage you to be a tad more objective. As students, we are encouraged to think critically, and to question society and all its ideals. As women, we have a responsibility to create a new and healthier ideal, one that does not advocate skipping meals and spending quality time with the bathroom scale. A wise woman once told me the following: "You can feel happy. You can feel sad. But fat is not an emotion. It's a state of mind." These are words to live (and not) die by.

Women of Queen's, I have a message for you: there is so much more to life than worrying about calories, fat grams and the size of Gap khakis into which you can wedge (or slide) yourself.

This has made me wonder about the reason why so many female students at this institution of higher education feel compelled to walk around in a near skeletal state. Just like those the North, I can't see any particular advantage in being half-starved (except to get between Stauffer's compact shelving units). And please, don't give me the whole "I do it to attract a partner" line. Do we sincerely believe that others are going to find us attractive if we hate our own bodies? (Hint: I'm a firm believer that no one will love you until you love yourself.)

Women of Queen's, I have a message for you: there is so much more to life than worrying about calories, fat grams,

AUDREY GILES
PHE/ARTS '01

Letters to the Editors

Love your body Katie

Dear Editors,

I feel the need to defend my honour in response to an overly judgmental letter by Katie Edwards. She obnoxiously made ignorant assumptions about something she knows nothing about. How dare she put words in my mouth about something as sacred to me as my own motherhood. That's right Katie Edwards – sacred – so lets get some facts straight.

Nowhere in my article did it state that my son was discovered too late to be aborted. It simply states that abortion was no longer an option. There's a big difference, my intelligent reader, between having an option and making that choice. And it's certainly not your right to put sanctions on that choice nor on how I choose to express my experience. In twenty years I want my son to know about some of the darker issues in life – the same issues that you find annoying and un-entertaining.

As for the mention of a – "gasp" – father, the relationship between my son and his father is irrelevant in an article about body image.

In Katie's eyes, I might be considered shameful for discussing female body issues with light anecdotal humour. But don't hate me because I'm liberated, Katie. In my opinion, you and all of the soldiers of "putting women in their place" need to relax. It's because of people like you that I would never beaste feed in public – you would probably love the opportunity to say something real nasty about a woman baring her breasts openly. It seems to me that for this reason, you are the one who needs to talk openly and honestly about sex, not me. But I don't entirely blame Katie for her letter, because one of the greatest evils of patriarchy is that it brainwashes women into seeing each other as enemies. Like the good preacher, she would rather condemn and scorn me instead of relating to me as a woman. This fact saddens me deeply.

So I will implore my intelligent reader to consider this: by putting sanctions on other women's bodies and how they express themselves, the only thing you will succeed in doing is putting sanctions on yourself – if you see me as the evil temptress, how do you view your own sexuality?

Sincerely,

MARTE NATVIK
ARTS '98

Assumptions are unnecessary

Dear Editors,

I am writing you in response to Mr. Hoffman's article, published in The Journal under the title "Insensitivity Is Reality." While I commend you, Mr. Hoffman, on being able to articulate your thoughts, and I recognize that you have put consideration into your arguments, I still feel that you have overlooked, or perhaps were not aware of, some of the realities of being gay.

You argue the similarities between being gay and being Jewish; they are both "invisible" minorities. You draw an analogy between being a Jew asked what he is doing for Christmas, and a gay man being asked if he has a girlfriend. In both cases, you contend that the slighted individual should be forthright, and correct the wronging party. I assert that this is a lot harder to do for the gay man than for the Jew, and that this is because of the way our society currently operates.

I would ask you, as a Jew, to imagine how forward you would be in a society in which words such as "Yid" or "Christ-killer" were shouted at you out of cars as you walked home from synagogue.

I would ask you, as a Jew, to imagine how forward you would be in a society in which words such as "Yid" or "Christ-killer" were shouted at you out of cars as you walked home from synagogue. Think of a society where phrases like "he Jewed me out of a quarter" were common, or the phrase "that's so Jewish" was a child's belittling taunt. In a world where the word "Jew" brings to mind a red-haired, big-nosed man making matzoth from the bones of unbaptized children, how comfortable would you be saying you didn't want to go to the cafeteria because you were fasting

Continued on the next page

talking

HEADS

What's the best rookie night story you've ever heard?

"My friend ended up with one eyebrow, vaseline in his hair, and blue and orange fingernails – and this was after he washed off the make-up and marker from all over his body."

CARRIE HOPE
SCI '02

"It would have to be the baseball team last year wearing jock straps and bras while dancing on the speakers at AJs"

MATT MACKENZIE
ARTSCI '99

"For basketball, Keith had to shave the MVP's balls."

LINDSAY JONES
ARTSCI '01

TIM GORHAM
NURS '02

PHOTOS BY CIMI ACHIAM

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS POLICY

The Editors of The Journal want to hear from readers. All letters must include the writer's name, signature, and telephone number. Letters that are legible, legal, literate and held to under 400 words will be published if space permits. The deadline for Tuesday's issue is Sunday at noon. The deadline for Friday's issue is Wednesday at noon. Drop off letters to The Journal House, 272 Earl St., fax to 545-6728, or better yet, e-mail them to journal@post.queensu.ca.

Letters to the Editors

Continued from previous page

for Yom Kippur? Believe me, it is a lot easier to be open about my religion than my sexuality. I think a lot of this has to do with the support systems that are available. Being Jewish usually implies that you have a Jewish family who is, to some extent, proud of the fact. In addition, you have probably been raised Jewish, and had the experience of coping with the ignorance of others from a young age. There is the added advantage that ignorance is probably the worst thing you have had to deal with when being openly Jewish. The chance that you will meet up with someone at Queen's who will actively dislike you because of your religion is probably pretty small.

The gay experience is different. Many do not realize their sexuality until their later teens. "Puberty for gay men starts at 17," I was once told jokingly, but it rings with a bit of truth. A gay man or woman often lacks a familial support network, and does not have a childhood of experience in dealing with comments and attitudes from others. In addition, the chance of meeting someone at Queen's who will be made uncomfortable by the mere fact you are gay is far greater. At a showing of In and Out I attended downtown, the woman ahead of me hid her eyes in her boyfriend's arm and exclaimed fearful cries of "Oh my God!" any time there was even the slightest potential for a male/male show of affection. To hear her cries during the movie's on-screen, same-sex kiss, you'd think you were sitting in a horror movie, not a comedy. More personally, off the top of my head, I can think of at least three people who, to different extents, were outwardly bothered by my sexuality. This has ranged from extreme discomfort and unease, to outright dislike.

It takes a great strength of character to be "out." As, historically, Jews may have gone to Church, and gone through the motions of Communion, today many gay men take girlfriends to "keep up appearances."

How does one work to make the world a better place to live? How does one ensure that people can be open about their sexuality? Education is a good step. For example, did you know that the slang word "fag" meaning gay male comes from the same

I am Jewish. I am also gay. Believe me, it is a lot easier to be open about my religion than my sexuality.

place as that meaning cigarette? In both cases, they refer to bundles of wood. In the case of the cigarette, the slang evolved because a cigarette looks like a bundle or "fagot" of wood. In the case of the gay man, well, they were historically used along with the bundles of wood to feed the fires for witch burning.

Education is important, since hatred stems from ignorance. To educate, however, one must have words to communicate ideas. Now, you assert that "the gay rights movement has seriously fouled up [its] own progress by introducing the word 'heterosexism.'" In my mind, this is like saying that the term "anti-Semitism" works against the acceptance of Judaism by members of other religions. "Heterosexism" and "homophobia," like "anti-Semitism" are words allowing us to communicate ideas. Without the words, we could not address the actions and beliefs associated with them any more than we could adequately describe water without the word "wet."

I would ask you now to consider that, as a ballpark estimate, 10% of the people you meet at Queen's will be gay or bisexual. I would guess that the percentage of practicing Jews at Queen's is lower. I could be wrong on my estimates, but one way or another, I would like to return to your example of two guys meeting, and one asking the other if he has a girlfriend, or one asking the other what he's doing for Christmas. You say that, in both cases, the questioner is making an assumption based on a majority chance. I ask why he should assume at all when there are a number of different approaches. If you are not sure whether a person is Christian why not ask what he's doing over the holidays/winter break? Likewise, if you are not sure he's straight, just ask if he's seeing anyone. Insensitivity may be reality, but nothing dictates that reality can't change.

Yours truly,

JASON SILZER
SCI '99
EQUALITY ISSUES CO-CHAIR, ENGINEERING SOCIETY
BOARD OF DIRECTORS
MEMBER, KLGBA

Liquor laws are provincial

Dear Editors,

I am writing with information relevant to the editorial contained in the September 29, 1998 edition of The Queen's Journal, "Serving us respect".

Some months ago when discussion concerning alcohol service at football games began, the administration did consider the option of service in the stands. As holder of the liquor license for the university I was asked to investigate this as well as other options.

In reviewing the Liquor License Act, section 80(1)(a) states that the license holder may serve and sell alcohol to patrons in tiered seating during a professional sporting event. University sporting events do not meet this criteria and therefore section 80(1)(a) does not apply. I confirmed this interpretation with the Alcohol and Gaming Commission of Ontario by telephone.

I am aware that service in the stands does take place at McGill home games however liquor laws are a provincial matter and may vary between provinces.

Yours truly,

BRUCE GRIFFITHS
ASSOCIATE DIRECTOR
(RESIDENCE SERVICES)/ DIRECTOR, FOOD & BEVERAGE SERVICES

Jones needs a dose of reality

Dear Editors,

Over the past few years I have had the misfortune to watch as the so-called intellectual elite (a.k.a. Upper Canada College educated) stoop to new lows of ignorance. Brock Jones has been allowed to misrepresent the student situation for far too long. I am writing in regards to his latest piece of right wing rhetoric in The Journal on

Continued on the next page

the New Rules

The New Rules.

A new company. A new era.

And a whole new set of rules.

Your rules. So maybe you'd better sit down.

Because we're reinventing the business world.

And don't you think it's about time?

www.pwcglobal.com
Grab your free CD at the Student Placement Centre on Campus

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

Letters to the Editors

September 29. Brock has proved his ability to state facts without doing what university is supposed to teach us to do - analyze them. The percentage of young people going on to university has increased in the face of rising tuition - score one for Brock. What he didn't mention was whose these new young Canadians are. Perhaps because his argument would be ruined if he told everyone that the new students are mostly upper-class rich kids like himself who can afford Queen's and not 'average' young Canadians.

Brock's compelling argument in favour of higher tuition is reassuring because at least now those of us who are in debt will have the Income Contingency Repayment Loan (ICRL) plan to ease the pain. I suppose if all Queen's wants to turn out its doctors and corporate lawyers then the average income of graduates will be fairly high and then we will all be able to pay off loans promptly. However, a diverse society like Canada can only be diverse if universities turn out more than the traditional careers. But a plan such as the ICRL discourages people from entering low paying careers because, although we have longer to pay back the money, we still owe it in interest. Since Brock loves economics so much he can do the math: paying off a loan in 10 years with interest or paying off a loan in 15 years with interest. Which costs less? So we have longer to repay but ultimately we pay more in interest and our education ends up costing more.

In fear of encouraging Brock to respond to this letter I hesitate to pose a question. How can Queen's justify raising tuition in an effort to attract top students when our admissions averages have been consistently falling year after year.

I'm sure the next edition of The Journal will contain a condescending reply from Brock, informing the Queen's community that a silly leftist girl like me shouldn't be allowed to even attend such a prestigious institution. In a peremptory rebuttal I wish to tell him that I and those in similar situations have taken on more responsibility for our educations than most people realize. We took responsibility for our own education and our beliefs in education the day we signed for our loans. My social consciousness resulted from racing reality. When will Brock face the same reality?

CARRIE REID
ARTS '00

Soc article clarified

Dear Editors,

I'd like to amend a couple of potentially misleading points in the article starting on front page of 22 September that concerns scheduling and accessibility of courses in Sociology, which also refers to CCIT, a program offered jointly with Film Studies.

Arts '01 is not the last class of CCIT students. Students of Arts '02 who entered Queen's this September and who have registered in CCIT will be able to complete requirements for their degree. As of next academic year, first-year students will no longer be able to register for CCIT, and the program will be phased out as students are graduated.

The CCIT student quoted in the article says, "...now that CCIT has dissolved, I have to rely on sociology." The exact meaning of this statement is unclear to me, but in response to its implication I way to reassure current CCIT students that instructors and counsellors in Film Studies maintain our commitment to them, as we do to all students enrolled in courses we offer.

Sincerely,

BLAINE ALLEN
DEPARTMENT HEAD
FILM STUDIES

"A BONE-CHILLING TALE"

-Dennis Dermody, THE PAPER

from the director of
THE USUAL SUSPECTS

from the author of MISERY and THE SHINING

IAN MCKELLEN
BRAD RENFRO

BRYAN SINGER
Apt
Pupil

PHOENIX PICTURES PRESENTS A BAD HAT HARRY PRODUCTION
IAN MCKELLEN BRAD RENFRO "APT PUPIL" BRUCE DAVISON
ELIAS KOTYAS AND DAVID SCHWIMMER WITH JOHN OTTMAN COSTUME DESIGNER THOMAS D-SANTO PRODUCTION DESIGNER TIM HARBERT EXECUTIVE PRODUCERS BRANDON BOYCE BASED ON THE SCREENPLAY BY STEPHEN KING
DIRECTOR OF PHOTOGRAPHY JANE HAMSHER, DON MURPHY, PRODUCED BY BRYAN SINGER, WRITTEN BY BRYAN SINGER

AT THEATRES THIS OCTOBER

NEW YORK
CHIROPRACTIC COLLEGE

A Healthy Investment in Your Future

If you're looking to continue your education with an advanced degree in health care, consider New York Chiropractic College. It's a solid choice and a wise investment in your future.

NYCC:

- Boasts a curriculum with an excellent balance among the Art, Science, and Philosophy of Chiropractic.
- Employs talented and diverse faculty.
- Features modern, state-of-the-art facilities.
- Is a fully residential campus located on 286 acres.
- Is conveniently located in the scenic Finger Lakes region of Central New York.

Come see us on October 22 from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m.
Professional Schools Fair, John Deutsch University Centre
Upper & Lower Ceilidh, Queen's University

Call us today at 800-234-NYCC (6922) to schedule a visit of our beautiful 286-acre campus in central New York.
Admissions Office, 2360 Route 89, Seneca Falls, NY 13148
Website: www.nycc.edu 1-(800)-234-6922

Any tougher they'd rust.

Blundstone
Fitted to last since 1872

Unisex styles. Women's size 6 up to Men's 13 1/2. Come slip on a pair and enjoy dry and comfortable feet. No damn laces.

A-ONE CLOTHING
358 King St. E.
Kingston, ON
K7L 3B6

a part of me-mail

> Hello, mystery person! I just found your e-mail address in my favourite jeans — are you the girl I danced with at Alan's party, until you spilled your very red wine on me? Well, I'm trying to get you to speak to me at one of those parties with cappuccino. Sure hope these jeans I bought in Europe, Oregon, and Earlton, home of anatomically correct 40-foot statue between and boy, I know

hotmail
from Microsoft

it's where you're @

Hotmail™ is free e-mail that you can use anywhere there's a computer with Web access. Get yours at www.hotmail.com

© 1998 Microsoft Corporation. All rights reserved. Microsoft and Hotmail are either registered trademarks or trademarks of Microsoft Corporation in the United States and/or other countries.

SPORTS & FITNESS

Gaels ravage Ravens

FINAL FOUR
Baseball's first round is complete and the next set of match-ups has some interesting encounters. The Cleveland Indians extended Boston's Bambino curse after winning their series in four games. The New York Yankees, upon hearing of Darryl Strawberry's diagnosis of colon cancer, continued their dominance and beat the Texas Rangers in three straight. In the National League, the Atlanta Braves continued firing on all cylinders as they defeated the Chicago Cubs in three straight games. The final team to squeeze into the second round was San Diego, who defeated Houston in four games.

LARRY LEGEND
As a culmination to a great career as a player, Larry Bird was inducted to the Basketball Hall of Fame on his first ballot. The French Lick native is widely regarded as one of the three saviours of basketball along with Magic Johnson and Michael Jordan. He spent his entire career (1979-1992) with the Boston Celtics, winning three league championships, three regular season MVPs and two NBA finals MVP awards. Also inducted into the Hall was Atlanta Hawks coach Lenny Wilkins. He is the winningest coach in basketball history with 1,120 victories. Wilkins becomes the first professional to be inducted in two roles — he was first inducted in 1989 as a player.

SURPRISE, SURPRISE
After five weeks of the NFL season, there are a number of surprises both good and bad. The Redskins are the biggest disappointment. After going on a spending spree with defensive tackles Dana Stubblefield and Dan 'Big Daddy' Wilkerson, the team still can't stop anyone, giving up 114 points in their first five games, losing all of them. The biggest surprise is the New Orleans Saints, who won their first three games, despite losing starting quarterback Billy Joe Hobert for the season. Ditka's boys have a way to go, but 3-1 with Danny Wuerffel at quarterback is a good way to begin.

IF CHRISTMAS CAME EARLY...
• Darryl Strawberry would make one last improbable comeback.
• The Boston Red Sox and Chicago Cubs would eventually overcome all jinxes and win a World Series for the first time in an eternity.
• Cleveland manager Mike Hargrove would be limited to three pitching changes an inning.

By ADAM KAMINSKY

The beat goes on. The Queen's Golden Gaels (3-1) football team followed up their huge Homecoming victory with a blowout of similar proportions against the Carleton Ravens (1-4). The tricolour travelled to Keith Harris Stadium Saturday and ruined Carleton's Homecoming by pummeling the hapless Ravens 40-8 for their first road win of the year.

Queen's	40
Carleton	8

The game on Saturday was an exhibition of near perfect football. The Queen's offensive unit, ranked first in the conference coming into the game, lived up to their billing with 423 yards of net offence. The passing game, which misfired earlier in the season, found its bearings with 336 more yards through the air, despite the quarterbacks being put under constant pressure. While the offence was impressive, the defence was awesome. Coach Bob Mullin's crew held the Ravens to only 108 yards of total offence and only 15 of those came on the ground.

With Carleton coming off of a big win last week at Laval, the Gaels felt they had to come out strong, and they did so by scoring the first 24 points of the game.

Queen's opened the scoring midway through the first quarter on a 53-yard pass and run play from second string quarterback Dustin Falscheer to Paul Dirinaldo (3 catches, 91 yards). It was the second straight week that a Falscheer-led drive has opened the scoring for the Gaels, as the coaching staff continues to give him an opportunity to run the hurry-up offence.

O-QUEC FOOTBALL STANDINGS

	G	W	L	T	P
Queen's	4	3	1	127	43	6
Ottawa	4	3	1	144	65	6
Bishop's	4	3	2	111	117	6
Concordia	4	2	2	79	80	4
Laval	5	2	3	129	103	4
McGill	5	2	3	40	107	4
Carleton	5	1	4	66	181	2

Queen's at Ottawa, Saturday 1 p.m.
Listen live on CFRG 101.9 FM. Pregame: 12:30

The second touchdown of the game, this time a short three-yard reception by Dirinaldo, was thrown by starter Beau Howes. This score was set up by an interception by veteran defensive back Andy Miners, who picked the ball at mid-field and returned it to the Ravens' 20-yard line.

Chris Robyn, a third-year fullback, added the third major score of the half with a seven-yard reception, which was followed a few minutes later by a 33-yard Ken Radcliffe field goal to stake Queen's to a 24-0 lead.

The Ravens were able to break the shutout with nine seconds left in the first-half after an errant snap on a Gaels punt attempt turned the ball over deep inside Queen's territory. Carleton was able to capitalize quickly and score on a 10-yard pass from back-up quarterback Gerry Moysey to Darryl Ray.

Knowing that the Ravens came back from a big deficit the previous weekend in Quebec City, the Gaels did not want to let up in the second half, even with a 17-point lead.

The third quarter was quiet on the scoreboard and was marred by numerous penalties to both teams. Each team

Please see First place on page 14

Queen's scrum-half Dave McCully emerges from the scrum with the ball during Saturday's 26-10 pounding of Western. PHOTO BY CHRIS GLOVER

A long wait for revenge

By KEITH GEREN

Although the weather was warm, the Queen's men's rugby team served up a cold dish of revenge on Saturday afternoon, defeating the Western Mustangs 26-10 before an enthusiastic crowd at Kingston Field. The game was a rematch of last season's title bout which saw the Mustangs defeat Queen's in a London mudbath, snapping the Gaels' four year championship dynasty.

MEN'S RUGBY

Queen's	26
Western	10

"There was definitely a lot of build-up to this game," said Emmet Connolly, the Tricolour's captain. "We had been thinking for 11 months about this game so we're quite happy to get the win against these guys."

While the victory earned Queen's some redemption, the game meant just as much in terms of league standings and playoff implications.

Both the Gaels and the Mustangs entered the match with perfect 3-0 records. By beating Western, Queen's took sole possession of first place in the OUA and now has an excellent chance of securing home-field advantage throughout the playoffs. Should both teams win their remaining games, the Mustangs will be forced to defend their title on Kingston Field, a setting that has frequently been unkind to visiting teams, especially in the playoffs.

The opening minutes of the game exhibited a level of intensity expected from a match-up of two top teams. Aggressive tackling and punishing forward drives soon caused tempers to flare. A Western back was the first victim of a hot head, sent off the field after kicking Queen's Pat Brooks in the back.

"We had been thinking for 11 months about this game."

— Queen's captain Emmet Connolly

Despite being down a man, the Mustangs picked up their game. After Gaels' fly-half Paul Hemmings opened the scoring with a penalty, Western put together an impressive drive, breaking through the Queen's defence for the first try of the match. The unconverted major gave the visitors a short-lived 5-3 lead, their only one of the game. The Tricolour responded with two more penalties and then a try of their own near the end of the first half. Prop Steve Elliot scored the major, concluding a forward drive off a line out. The try was unconverted but Queen's headed off at halftime with a 14-5 advantage.

Queen's seized control of the match with another offensive outburst early in the second half. A push to the right corner of the Mustangs' endzone was stopped just short, but the Gaels reversed their attack and whipped the ball horizontally across the field. The ball was eventually fed to wing Matt Hodgeson who slammed home the try in the left corner of the endzone.

Reeling from a 19-5 deficit, Western started to push forward with more authority. The Mustangs drove into Queen's territory several times, but were

Please see Sweet on page 15

First place showdown

Continued from page 13

scored a single point on missed field goals in this period, allowing the Gaels to maintain their 17 point bulge.

The final stanza saw a bit more scoring as Ditaldo collected his third touchdown of the day, on a 35-yard pass from Howes. A one-yard touchdown plunge by Falscheer with only six seconds left rounded out the scoring.

Head coach Bob Howes was happy that his team played with intensity for a full 60 minutes. "We are trying to play full games, that is why we went for the touchdown right at the end of the game," said Howes.

"We really want to beat them [the Gee-Gees], we hate these guys."

— Andy Miners

While the overall offensive numbers were impressive, the distribution of the offence is even more encouraging. With seven different receivers catching balls, both Robyn (55 yards) and Correale (66 yards) carrying the ball effectively and two efficient quarterbacks, this unit has become very tough to defend against.

The win puts Queen's in a tie for first place with the hated Ottawa Gee-Gees (3-1), the team they take on next weekend at Frank Clair Stadium in a potentially entertaining match-up.

As explosive as the Gaels' offence has been over the past few weeks, the Gee-Gees' offence has been even better. Led by quarterback Phil Coté, a Hec Creighron favourite, the Ottawa passing game is ranked first in the nation. The diminutive quarterback has thrown for over 1,200 yards and 10 touchdowns and only one interception. He has also collected six major scores rushing. While the Queen's defence will be focused on stopping him, it will be easier said than done with the outstanding Gee-Gee receiving corps. Veterans Chris Evraire and Rob Harrod are ranked first and second in the conference in receiving, with Ibrahim Tounkara ranked fourth.

The Ottawa defence has done their job, holding opponents to only 65 points, which is second to Queen's in the O-QIFC. That is a fine defensive job when your offence has put up 144 points.

The upcoming game is about more than just first place this year, it's also about the growing rivalry between these teams, stemming from recent playoff encounters. They last met in the conference championship last season, which the Gee-Gees won en route to their Vanier Cup experience. Revenge is undoubtedly on the minds of the Queen's players.

"We really want to beat them, we hate these guys," said all-conference defensive back Andy Miners.

Steaming off stress

By JULIETTA LOEFFLER

Have you ever had one of those days where everything goes wrong? When, all in the same day, your computer crashes and deletes your entire 4,000 word essay, you step in dog dodo, you have a fight with your best friend and you almost get in a fist fight with one of your housemates? Since it is unhealthy to have so much frustration and anger building up inside you, you must release it. There are many ways to blow off steam, ways to help you become a calm and rational person once again.

Built up stress has many negative effects on your body. Stress is a physiological and mental response to something in our environment that causes us to become uncomfortable. Chronic or persistent stress has been linked to elevated blood pressure, hormonal imbalances, reduced resistance to disease, eating disorders and emotional disorders. Stress management is an important part of both physical and emotional health.

Anti-stressors can be quick and easy and can leave you feeling like a whole new person.

One suggestion is to take a bath. Yes, a warm bath with a good book or magazine is a great way to forget about your present problems. The running water has soothing effects and it will take your mind off your worries. A problem arises if you live in residence and there are no bathtubs around (or if they are crawling with germs). If you look around, I am sure that you can find another source of water.

The closest and largest water supply around is the lake. Taking a walk or running by the water works wonders for your mind and body. If you have no desire to walk or run, just sit. Watching the waves is also a very effective relaxation activity.

When all else fails, you can always go to the PEC. There you can get on a treadmill and walk or run, or you can hop on a bike and pedal your anger away. Exercise will help your body to detach itself from your mind. Lifting a few weights is also a great way to vent anger.

It's possible that you are so enraged that the mere idea of leaving your room angers you even further. If that is the case, throw yourself on the floor and start doing push-ups. Do as many as you can and then do a few more. Imagine your anger leaving your body with every push-up.

What if you are too mad to even think about lying down on the floor? Well, just place your favourite eighties song into your CD player and dance. The crazier the dancing, the better. Bonus de-stressing points if you dance in front of a mirror.

Remember that stress and anger do not help to solve problems nor do they make you feel better. Allow yourself a venting period and do something nice for your body. Keep yourself healthy by releasing the stress in your body. Remember that you are the most important person in your life and you must treat yourself like a king or queen.

Sweet revenge

Continued from page 13

thwarted in their attempts to get close to the endzone. Leading the Gaels' defensive stand was fullback Mark Beauchamp, who made a triumphant return from an injury with an impressive display of tackling.

Western did manage one more try with 10 minutes to go, but Queen's Steve Cummings iced the game on a long run down the left sideline just before the final whistle.

Although Queen's won by a convincing 26-10 score, Connolly said that Western may have had an off day.

"Losing the player at the start, it's hard to say how much that affected things," he commented.

Still, the captain was reluctant to take anything away from his team's performance.

"We felt infinitely confident," he said. "We felt we had a better team than last year because it's basically the same guys, but we're a year older."

Queen's goes on the road this weekend for a game with York, a team that was the victim of a 50-11 drubbing by the Tricolour in the first match of the season.

Note: The Gaels second XV also had a good Saturday afternoon, soundly thumping the Mustangs' seconds 45-5.

In the game Queen's athletic wrap-up

Women's soccer

The team, ranked second in the nation, travelled to Toronto and played both the University of Toronto and York. The team defeated U of T on Saturday by a score of 1-0. Raelene Dunne scored the lone goal on a penalty kick, while the shutout went to Amanda Foran. The squad followed that win with a 2-2 tie at York. Angela Crockford kicked with both goals. The soccer team's record is now 7-0-1 and leads the OUA East division.

Men's tennis

It was another weekend without a single match defeat for this juggernaut. Queen's defeated both Waterloo and McGill by identical 7-0 scores. This elevates their record to 6-0 on the season.

Women's tennis

At the RMC tennis courts, the team remained undefeated by thumping the University of Western Ontario 6-1 on Saturday.

Men's Lacrosse

In a successful two game home stand, the squad defeated Brock's second team 11-9 and followed that up with a 13-2 thumping of Wilfrid Laurier. Neil 'the scoring machine' Boon dominated the weekend with eight goals on Saturday and nine on Sunday. Jeremy Scheetz also pitched in three goals. The team is now 4-1.

Men's hockey

In the Dutch Cup, a tournament hosted by Queen's, the Gaels defeated both Brock 5-3 and Concordia 5-1 to win the gold medal. The star of the tournament was Rob Mailloux, a former Kingston Frontenac, with four goals. This was the teams' first action of the year.

Queen's struggles

Men's baseball

By NEATE SAGER

Despite winning only once in four home contests last weekend, the Queen's baseball team remains optimistic as they await the impending post-season.

"We had a good regular season," commented Queen's first baseman Chris Cartile, who went yard twice on the weekend. "We're entering the playoffs confident... we can beat anybody."

The Gaels dropped both ends of a Saturday doubleheader to Durham College, 9-7 and 13-6. Cartile, in his second role as a hurler, and Bryan McMillan both gamely went the distance in defeat. "We beat ourselves," remarked Queen's coach Perry Conrad. "There were a number of errors... and the bats weren't working."

In Sunday's doubleheader versus York, the Gaels exploded for six runs in their initial licks of the afternoon, on three-run homers by Cartile and outfielder Shawn Morris. Winning pitcher Phil Darling pitched a complete game for the victory, whiffing nine York batsmen, as the Gaels sailed to a 13-5 win.

In the first inning of the second game, with the Yeomen ahead 1-0, the Gaels were victimized by a ghastly call that irrevocably altered the contest. With the bases full, York's Lennon Findlay poked a high fly down the leftfield line which obviously hooked foul before clearing the outfield wall. Mystifyingly, it was ruled a fair ball and the grand slam staked the visitors to a 5-0 lead.

After the unfortunate beginning, Queen's southpaw Scott Hodgkinson discovered his control and pitched capably through five innings, giving the Gaels a chance, however faint, of a comeback. Queen's rallied for three runs in the third inning, with catcher Aaron Collins, who homered in the first game, stroking a two-run single.

"We're entering the playoffs confident...we can beat anybody."

— Queen's star Chris Cartile

In the last of the sixth, the Gaels brought the tying run to the plate. York pitcher Troy Weston bore down, dismissing Gael hopes by inducing two infield outs. In the seventh, a pair of fielding miscues by Queen's shortstop Henry Shiau led to two unearned runs, making the final tally 8-3 for York.

With a final regular season record of 9-7, the Gaels must await the results of games being played this week before knowing their first-round opponent in the Ontario East division playoffs, which commence next weekend.

THE LOCALS KNOW THE GOOD STUFF IS WORTH A HIKE!

Skis and Boards

K2	Burton
Rossignol	Sims
Volkl	Ride
Volant	Winterstick

& More!

Clothing

Sierra Designs
Patagonia
The North Face
Oakley
Sessions
Burton
& More!

13 Montreal Street
Downtown, just off of Princess
542-4558

Take the Short Walk to Princess
— It's worth it!

Have Pouch Will Travel.

The Roots Kanga Hoody
Regular $54.<sup>95</sup>
NOW $39.<sup>99</sup>
Canadian Made
100% Cotton
3 Colours
4 Sizes

229 Princess Street - 546-7668 - Open Sundays

Hit Canada Hard.

www.altavistacanada.com

the most powerful Canadian search engine

ALTA VISTA Canada Presented by TELUS

Q E S E C
Queen's Engineering & Science Environmental Coalition

wants a WORD with you!

Be involved in Queen's only technical environmental solutions group!

FIRST GENERAL MEETING
Thursday October 8, 6:00pm
Stirling Hall

"Solutions are not found by discussion alone."
Come see what we're all about!

Queen's MBA for Science and Technology

Can't decide between work and grad school?
YOU CAN DO BOTH!

Consider the MBA for Science & Technology Preprogram Internship. Work for Celestica, Nortel, Netron, Eli Lilly or Glaxo Wellcome for 2 years and then be guaranteed a position in Queen's 12 month MBA for Science & Technology.

Required .....

- Engineering, Computing Science, Biology, Chemistry or Life Science degree
- 'A' average in last 2 years
- Commitment to Queen's MBA for Science & Technology
- GMAT

Learn more at the Information session
Wednesday, October 7
5:30 p.m.
MBA for Science and Technology Facility
B118 Mackintosh-Corry Hall or call (613) 545-2302 or (613) 545-2373 for more details

GRAND OPENING WEEK COMING SOON!
IF YOU BUILD IT THEY WILL COME

WEEPING TILE OCTOBER 15TH

OCTOBER 16TH CRAIG GARDIFF BLUE SCREEN WHITE NOISE TOUR

Here's a little bit of debauchery to help the wait go by a little faster.

Tuesday night

PHAT BEATS ENTERTAINMENT

PIRA Spin out funky shi! @ # +!

Wednesday

Bev & Party

Thursday & Friday

CARLITO'S WAY UNTOUCHABLES
GETTH GANGSTER ON UP ACC

The Hurt Penguins Are Coming!
 Starting Tuesday October 13th.

SMOKE DAMAGED

MISPRINTED

UNCOVERED

DOG EARED

BENT

Every year the Campus Bookstore presents the Hurt Penguin Sale, consisting of a huge assortment of books that are publishers overrun or discontinued items. It's your chance to find great books at the great price of only $3.00 a piece! It starts on Tuesday, October 13th and won't last long so be sure to visit before they are all gone.

Campus Bookstore · Clark Hall · Weekdays 9-8, Saturday 10-5
 www.campusbookstore.com · 545-2955
 Owned and Operated by Students Since 1909

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Feeling the Northern Touch

Kardinal Offishall and the Rascalz steam up Alfie's on Saturday night

Concert Review

The Rascalz with Kardinal Offishall
 Alfie's Pub

By GEOFF ASHENHURST

I recently attempted to explain my attraction to hip hop music to a friend, but I found considerable difficulty articulating my thoughts. I came to the conclusion that good hip hop is an amorphous blend of several elements. The flow of the beats, the tone of the rhymes, the content of the lyrics, all have to be there. One of my favourite descriptions characterizes it as music that you have to touch and feel.

On Saturday night approximately 400 faithful Kingston fans gathered at Alfie's for what proved to be an evening of Hip Hop at its best.

When encountered in a live environment another element is added: energy. Good hip hop projects an extraordinary energy that every music fan should experience at some point. On Saturday night approximately 400 faithful Kingston fans gathered at Alfie's for what proved to be an evening of hip hop at its best. A surprise quartet of Toronto MCs, Solitaire, Y-Look, Kardinal Offishall, and Juno-award winner Choclaire, established the atmosphere for the evening: fast and furious. The high-calibre act showcased the skills that make them the best of the Toronto underground scene. They relentlessly attacked the audience with a mixture of their own solo tracks and old-school freestyles. Their intensity on the stage got the crowd on its feet — where it remained for the rest of the show. The Rascalz wasted no time in taking the stage, capturing the momentum laid down by the openers. Kemo laid down some hard beats while B-boy dancers Dedos and Zebroc displayed their graphin' styles, pumping the crowd up even further. MCs Red 1 and Misfit took the stage by storm, churning out intense renditions from their debut CD Cash Crop. The hour-long set featured a selection of their finest tracks including "Solitaire," "Fitn Redi," and "Dreaded Fist." Fans were also treated to a sneak preview from the band's forthcoming album, which gave every indication that they will continue their reign as the heavyweights of the Canadian hip hop music scene.

Fists pumped, bodies slammed and lyrics were screamed out by an enthusiastic audience.

Unlike their previous visit to Kingston last September, the name Rascalz was not new to the majority in attendance. Fists pumped, bodies slammed and lyrics were screamed out by an enthusiastic audience. This unity was most evident during the finale when Choclaire and Kardinal took the stage, assembling the Northern Touch All-stars a.k.a. the best of Canadian hip hop. Everybody in the house shook for the powerful version of their hit single "Northern Touch." Hats off to Queen's Entertainment Agency for recognizing the interest in this overlooked musical form, Kingston music fans for their enthusiasm and Rascalz for bringing together all the elements to create a night of pure hip hop to remember.

Taking the Q from StudioQ

Student television takes on a new name, new face for a new year

Television Review

The Q
 Cablenet 13

By PAULA BUSH

Studio Q enters their new season with a positive outlook on what promises to be a ground-breaking year. The essence of the show will remain the same: offbeat comedic sketches, student films; anything but news, sports and weather.

But, Studio Q has made some changes. The student-run show, which has been renamed The Q, will take a slightly different turn this season. Included with the growing trend of "real TV" interspersed with sketches will be behind the scenes clips of the show's production. Along with The Q, Studio Q has created Video Factory, a production company where you can order a video which will be filmed and edited by the staff.

Proving that the small staff of six or seven could rise above the situation, [StudioQ] created a new format and increased viewership tremendously.

Last year, after removal from opt-outable status led to funding loss, Studio Q overcame what could have been the end of the show. Proving that the small staff of six or seven could rise above the situation, they created a new format and increased viewership tremendously.

The referendum last March saw students vote to return Studio Q to opt-outable status. Lurleen Manning, co-anchor of The Q understands that the show is still in transition "Everything we did well [last year] we'll do it again. Things we didn't do well, we'll try and change."

One change that is a priority to Manning is making the show more accessible. "The more people on and involved with the show, the more people will watch," stated Manning.

A larger staff is intended to encourage new ideas while training new students through volunteer meetings. Volunteer

"walk through" sessions will be held Monday nights at 6 in the Studio Q office, located in the JDUC, to educate students in all aspects of putting together an episode. This is to ensure that The Q will be a consistently stylized show.

"Everything we did well [last year] we'll do it again. Things we didn't do well, we'll try and change."

— Lurleen Manning, co-anchor of The Q

Another change which is intended to raise the quality of the show is altering the schedule. New episodes will run every two weeks, as opposed to every week, allowing time for a larger staff to produce quality programming.

When asked about goals, executive producer Ariel Goldblatt said that she is "mostly concerned with breaking even," referring to the debt incurred as a result of last year's season without student funding.

In terms of creative goals, the idea of pushing the envelope is something that appeals to all involved. When Manning described last season as "getting comfortable" and this season as "pushing it a little," Goldblatt laughed. One has to wonder what is in store for the new season.

The Q airs Fridays at 9:30 p.m. and again on Sundays at 8 p.m. on Cablenet 13.

Alpine horn intrigues Grant

Luzern Wind Orchestra moves mountains

Concert Review

BY KARIN PROCHAZKA

Have you ever experienced the sound of an alpine horn? If not, you weren't at Grant Hall last Saturday night when the Blasorchester Stadtmusik Luzern (Luzern Wind Orchestra), from Luzern, Switzerland, played an excellent concert and brought their alpine horn with them.

The concert began with a little musical appetizer. Five drums played a fanfare in front of the stage just before the scheduled start of the concert. This military-style performance was perfectly in unison and the clear crisp sound of the drums was a great prelude to what was yet to come.

The Queen's Wind Ensemble, for whom the concert was a benefit, began the show with a short set consisting of only two medium-lengthened pieces. They put in a valiant effort despite the fact that the concert was planned at the last minute and the wind ensemble has had only two weeks of rehearsal so far this year. The beginning was somewhat shaky but they progressively became more synchronized as the concert went along. The solo sections of both pieces were excellent, particularly the work of Heather Henderson on clarinet.

After a long period of appreciative applause, the significantly larger Blasorchester Stadtmusik Luzern orchestra took the stage. From the beginning, the audience was searching for the alpine horn as it was listed in the program.

Blowing in the wind. Grant Hall gets a taste of the symphony.

PHOTO BY CHERYL CHEUNG

The Blasorchester Stadtmusik Luzern orchestra played a longer set than the Wind Ensemble, with a repertoire ranging from the standard (Second Suite in F op.28/2 by Gustav Holst) to the more exotic. It was a piece of the latter category which particularly struck my attention. Die Kliene Schelm (The Little Knave) by Andre Becancon, a contemporary composer, was a delightful piece with an amazing use of percussion that gave it a very unique charm. The vast use of temple blocks, tambourine, marimba, castanets and slide whistle, in addition to the more standard percussion instruments, worked well in combination with the Grant Hall acoustics, and produced a pleasing effect.

The vast use of temple blocks, tambourine, marimba, castanets and slide whistle... worked well in combination with the Grant Hall acoustics, and produced a pleasing effect.

Towards the end of the last piece on the program, the audience was getting a bit restless; the concert was almost over with no sign of an alpine horn. The program ended and then the alpine horn was brought out for an encore. The soloist and his horn took up half the width of the stage. The orchestra, with alpine horn solo, played a piece written by the late director of the Blasorchester Stadtmusik Luzern. Witnessing the alpine horn in action was a rare treat and was well worth the wait to the end of the evening.

All in all the concert was a success. Although attendance was somewhat sparse, as is typical of Queen's School of Music concerts, it could have been much worse. Both ensembles performed well and the audience was appreciative of the fine effort.

If you are interested in seeing Queen's School of Music concerts, the next ensemble showcase takes place Wednesday, October 21 at Grant Hall. The show begins at 8 p.m.

Sheila Gregory

TRAVELLER

ARTIST'S TALK

Wednesday 7 October
noon - 1 pm

Admission is free.
Exhibition continues to 1 November.

Presented with the financial assistance of The Canada Council, the Ontario Arts Council and the City of Kingston.

Agnes Etherington Art Centre

218 Barrie Street, Queen's University
Kingston, Ontario K7L 3N6
Tel: 613 545-2190 Fax: 613 545-6765
<http://www.queensu.ca/ajeth/>

Looking for class readings?
Get them
at the Library.

Ask us!

Queen's University Libraries

Notice

Due to computer error, undergraduate students assessed optional student activity fees were unable to opt-out of the 50-percent contribution to Dawn House, a local womens' shelter.

Any student wishing to have this fee assessment reversed may do so by completing a form in the AMS office, in the lower JDUC, between 9:00am and 4:30pm on October 7 and 8.

Get Out There

Movies:

Playing at the Capitol Theatre until Thursday October 8:
546-5395

Ronin 1:15, 4:05, 7:05, 9:55
7:00, 9:50
Antz 12:15, 12:45, 2:30, 3:00,
4:40, 5:10, 7:00, 7:20

What Dreams May Come 1:30,
4:20, 7:15, 10:00

Night at the Roxbury 1:00,
3:10, 5:15, 7:30, 9:45

Simon Birch 1:35, 4:05, 7:10, 9:50

Saving Private Ryan 3:30, 8:00

Playing at the Catarqui Cineplex until Thursday October 8:
389-7442

Rush Hour 6:45, 7:15, 9:10, 9:20

Urban Legends 7:35, 9:50

One True Thing 6:55, 9:40

Something About Mary 7:05,
9:30

How Stella Got Her Groove Back 7:05, 9:40

Playing at the Princess Court Cinema from Friday October 2:
546-3456

Smoke Signals 7:00,
Studio 54 9:00

Live Entertainment:

On Saturday, October 10 at 8 p.m., FLOOM will perform at the Edward Day Gallery. The group is described as a capella performance of literature and poetry replicating the sounds of classical, jazz, rap and other musical styles. Tickets are $10 for adults and $5 for students. For more information call 921-6540.

On October 17 at 8 p.m. at Balsam Hall on Gore Road, the Cantabile Choirs present a Bavarian-style Oktoberfest. The event will include traditional Oktoberfest food, a beer garden and a five piece band. Reserve tickets by calling 549-7338.

Theatre:

On October 8, Theatre Kingston will open their 1998 - 99 season with the play Aunt Dan and Lemon by Wallace Shawn. The play runs until October 25, at the Baby Grand Studio with performances Wednesday to Saturday at 8 p.m. Tickets are available by calling the Grand Theatre Box at 530-2050.

From October 10 until October 31, the Thousand Islands Playhouse is presenting, Educating Rita. Tickets are $18-25 for adults and $10 for students. For tickets contact the Playhouse at 382-7020.

THE SCENE

The Scene is a new addition to the Arts and Entertainment section. Appearing throughout the 1998-99 volume of The Journal, The Scene will highlight various facets of entertainment culture and artistic endeavor not normally featured in the section.

WHY FZ WAS THE MOST PROGRESSIVE MUSICIAN OF OUR TIME

BY SEAN SPRINGER

"Some scientists claim that Hydrogen, because it is so plentiful, is the basic building block of the Universe. I dispute that. I say there is more stupidity than Hydrogen, and that is the basic building block of the Universe."

— Frank Zappa

AS A LEGEND WOULD HOLD, A young Frank Zappa stepped up to the microphone and challenged the audience to a battle of wits.

I bet I can do anything crazier than any of you out there!

A hairy hippie leaped out of the crowd onto the stage, whipped down his trousers only to lay a shit on the stage's floor. Under the influence of nothing but his own lunacy, Zappa then scoops up the poop... and eats it.

Was he possessed by some incredibly hypnotic pill? Nope. As he repeated about 20 times on Saturday Night Live to Dan Aykroyd, Bill Murray and Paul Shaffer, Frank Zappa did not do drugs. He tried them once, didn't like the effects, and never did them since. Actor Garret Morris had to clutch his stomach in laughter as he howled, "Frank Zappa doesn't do drugs?"

Sure, the rock n' roll biz is like a strip off a pack of zig zags that's sprinkled with tobacco, rock stars, coke, managers, opium and groupies. But, this brainchild was as clean as soap. Pure FZ fuelled the madness in albums We're Only In It For The Money, Jazz From Hell and Have I Offended Anyone Lately? not to mention songs "Dinah-Moe Humm" (Frank's bet with a woman that he could make her cum), "Fembot in a wet t-shirt" (a wet t-shirt contest where the boys want to see 'some pink delight') and "Stinkfoot" (where Frank articulates the stench under his python boots).

Lovely, aren't they? A mild listen might lead one to think that Zappa was a sick, male chauvinist pig obsessed with female genitalia and bathroom humour who plagued the music market with tunes for perverted assholes. But if that's your diagnosis, then you really don't know anything, do you?

Zappa was a satirist who broke down forbidden patches of society by picking away at the institutional infringement of liberty by the church, government, record companies and society in general.

Frustrated at the lack of integrity musicians had for their art, he continually mocked the rock star tradition to release mindless no-brainers while flaunting their top-charting muscle for "a little leg" from the groupie on the bus.

When Tipper Gore, in reaction to the rap industry's immense popularity, spearheaded the mid-eighties movement to muffle lyrics such as "motherfucker, shit and bitch" on record albums, which were to be accompanied by a warning label, Zappa hopped into the ring to defend the rights of artists everywhere.

His band, which added to Zappa's insanity in the mid-sixties and in several seventies spin-offs including a few acid-laced motion pictures (200 Motels, Uncle Meat) was originally called The Mothers, but was forced to comply with external pressures to rename the group something a little less "offensive," The Mothers of Invention.

Accused of insulting family values, Zappa ripped apart the hypocrites looking for an excuse to mask their own insecurities.

"Ever take a minute just to show some real emotion? In between the moisture cream & velvet facial lotion? Ever tell your kids you're glad that they can think? Ever say you loved 'em? Ever let 'em watch you drink? Ever wonder why your daughter looked so sad? It's such a shame to have to love a plastic Mom & Dad"

— "Mom & Dad" from the 1967 smash We're Only In It For The Money.

So, Zappa was a hippie right? Wrong, that is, if your definition of a hippie was someone who just wanted to wear trippy beads, go to Frisco and make love on the beach. Zappa offered his two notes on this superficial movement with his flower child deconstruction hit "Who Needs The Peace Corps?"

"I'm completely stoned! I'm hippy and I'm trippy! I'm a gypsy on my own! I'll stay a week & get the crabs and! Take the bus back home! I'm really just a phoney! But forgive me! 'Cause I'm stoned."

— from We're Only...

This is hardly sick stuff. However, I am essentially justifying the perversion through examples of his subtle, politically-charged lyrics, which were, admittedly, not always as well-defined as illustrated above. Often, Zappa's music could be interpreted as 'shock rock,' as some fans were merely enticed by Zappa's obscene portrait of America. One could argue that the lesson on conduct in 1974's "Don't Eat the Yellow

Continued on page 20

PETERS GUARDIAN DRUGS

Est. 1930 640 KING STREET WEST 546-5165

YOUR WEST CAMPUS PHARMACY

Students Save

10%

on ANY

Jamieson Product

Present this Coupon & Save on Echinecea, Vitamins & all Herbal Products.

Present Student ID

STUDENTS
SAVE 10% ON
Jamieson

Open 6 Days a Week

students club ck
get a year's worth of savings with your club ck discount card!
our downtown store is open 7 days a week
Monday-Friday 9-9
Saturday 9-5.30
Sunday 11-5

one hour photo video digital imaging
complete in-house photofinishing services
darkroom supplies rentals repairs
passport photos used equipment photo restoration

Camera Kingston
foto source
650 Bath@Gardiner's 384.3747 114 Princess@Wellington 549.3747

Urban Hymns: Mike Thompson kicks it for Best Value shoppers.

BY SARAH CROSBIE

His name is Mike Thompson and he's a musician. You've probably never heard of him or his music, but he's worth paying attention to — if not for his musical talent or ability, then for his philosophy on life.

Thompson is a busker, whom I met while walking down Princess Street. I interrupted his

Kingston or busk!

A glance into a busker's music and life

set and asked him if he was willing to have an interview with me. What was initially only supposed to be a quick interview turned into an intriguing story.

Thompson is originally from Ottawa and has only been in Kingston for the past two months. He toured Canada coast to coast for seven years busking in different cities.

Kingston is currently his home and he has noticed that "in other cities people really look down at busking. I have to endure put-downs. People tell me to get a life, get a job and they call me a bum. People here are more open to it. I get more smiles than in other places."

For now his travelling plans are not systematically planned out — the city he ends up in is up to God, but Thompson said,

"looks like I'm staying for now unless something else urges me on."

They may not be his musical inspirations, but they are his mentors because they began where Thompson currently is — and in the end they succeeded.

It's not the students who make Kingston an appealing place to busk. In London, students were really into his music; they danced and sang with him on the streets. It's also students, however, who make the negative comments.

What keeps Thompson going? Bryan Adams, Tom Petty and Roy Orbison, because they all began as buskers. They may not be his musical inspirations, but they are his mentors because they began where Thompson currently is — and in the end they succeeded.

For Thompson, busking is like going to school and studying, "it's a choice to be an individual and it's been a lot of hard work."

Perhaps the hard work is about to pay off. Thompson has had three companies interested in giving him recording offers and he is currently investigating one of them. "The interest and offers stemmed from people seeing me on the street," he explained.

Thompson's love of music is evident. "Even if a recording contract came through, busking probably wouldn't end," he said.

What are important aspects to a busker's career? According to the seasoned vet, material and location. Thompson plays mostly covers because, "people like and know covers," but he also puts original music in the set.

He also stressed the importance of location. "Buskers generally try to share spots and get along. If I kept a spot [for a day] someone else would get it the next morning," he explained.

The most inspiring and interesting aspect about Thompson was his philosophy on music and life. "Busking is medium for me to get the music out there. It has smoothed the savage beast."

Thompson is anything but concerned about other peoples' ideas and biases about him.

Inquiring as to whether or not Thompson would recommend busking as a career he said, "it's about passion — you'd have to love it do it. It's been a struggle."

Thompson was an engineer, but became a busker because he was "more interested in creation than destruction." He said, "anything's possible if you set your heart and mind to it. Don't let others get in your way."

Thompson is currently planning his first two albums. The first album is about "losing sight of your dreams and searching in your heart and finding yourself."

One of the songs on the first album is entitled "Confined by the boundaries in other people's minds."

Thompson is anything but concerned about other peoples' ideas and biases about him. He is passionate and open about his music.

When strolling down Princess, stop and listen to Thompson. When I found him, he was in front of Best Value, formerly Zellers. Upon leaving, he was singing, U2's "With or Without You." It may not have been the most polished rendition ever played, but guaranteed, it had more personality and passion than any recording.

Zap happy

Continued from page 19

"Snow" is as simple as the title implies, don't eat blocks of urine. They aren't good for you.

While I can't explain the moral significance behind urine sampling, most of his semi-opaque lyrics can be extrapolated into something with a semi-serious message. "Disco Boy" and "Dancin' Fool" both swipe insults at the movement that sent Zappa the musical shivers, Disco.

His bizarre imagery freaked out Zappa cults, not only in his lyrical excursions, but also in the biting edge saturating all of his instrumental triumphs. The humour pervaded his music as he masterfully played a range from country rock to classical with an overlaying satirical tone featuring an intense melting pot of quirky trills and thrills.

Well aware that in order to be a subversive threat, the rock n' roll hall of famer had to embrace the hype, which was rock n' roll. Zappa was able though, to fuse his love for classical music with rock by embedding an electric symphony orchestra into virtually all of his major works. Try plugging in the London Symphony Orchestra's two-volume set of Zappa scores written specifically for a full concert orchestra.

In 1993, the year FZ died of prostate cancer, he released The Yellow Shark, which was a purely live classical event kick-started by Zappa's reminder that comedy never escapes a night of FZ, "And if you feel like putting your underpants onto the stage put 'em over there."

His last album ever? Nope. The compilations and live albums have been spilling over like crazy and just this year, we've seen the $7.99 steal, Cheap Thrills, which features live gems and other hits for the youngster with a taste for Zappa Krappa. And released on September 15 was Mystery Disc, a single CD that combines material released on "mystery discs," which between 1985 and 1987 accompanied a three-part mail-order box set of vinyl entitled The Old Masters. It mysteriously flows Mothers of Invention live shows, some FZ advice on how to be the life of the party and suggestions for rock stars on how to "hustle some young ladies."

Let's say it's awesome, but can only truly be appreciated by hard core Zappa zealots. Curious minds should check out Strictly Commercial, which is the best back door entry point to the vault belonging to the best musician "you've never heard in your life."

Listen for the Zappa limerick... zap, zap, zap. Drop the split, take the acid off your tongue and subject yourself to a dose of Frank Zappa!

THE JOURNAL CROSSWORD

Canadian Criss Cross by Walter D. Feener

- ACROSS
- Calf flesh
  - Turf
  - Brink
  - Stand high
  - Fred's partner
  - Gouge out
  - Lowest number
  - Kitchen appliance
  - Put into service
  - Freeze
  - Greenish blue
  - Remove seeds from cotton
  - Boldness
  - Beginning to exist
  - Prehistoric
  - Feel sorrow over
  - Fishing boat
  - Sedaka and Young
  - Made a quick exit
  - Black-tailed gazelle
  - Choose
  - Neck-and-neck
  - Clear profit
  - Vehement speech
  - Foolish
  - Victims of delusion
  - Aquatic rails
- DOWN
- Stag party guests
  - Leg joint
  - Plywood layer
  - Unit of work
  - Length of life
  - "Little Caesar" director
  - Before long
  - Nocturnal bird
  - Flood
  - Country singer
  - Gill
  - Palm of the hand
  - Violinist's need
  - "South" (Nicholson movie)
  - Left a place
  - Heflin or Momison
  - Prison room
  - Solemn promise
  - Fireballs
  - Battery size
  - Investigates
  - Horse's gait
  - Swift
  - Bony sinus
  - Spawn
  - Set on fire
  - Loamy deposit
  - Clut
  - Moved secretly
  - Paradise
  - Imitate
  - Not prefix
  - Grievous distress

Answers for last Tuesday's puzzle.

The people who do the crossword will look at this ad 86 times.

There are still many ad spaces on this page in upcoming issues available. Call 545-6711 now to make sure your advertising gets in.

FORMAL

SOLO Hair Design • Tanning
376 Barrie Street
(613) 542-0823

Help us deliver!

We are always looking for new contributors. If you are interested in being part of The Journal family, give us a call at 545-2800 or stop by 272 Earl St.

No experience necessary. We'll even give you free food on press nights. Yummy.

exchange

Events List

Get Your Queen's Entertainment Card

For access to great Queen's events!

Selling tickets for an event?

Sell them at:

exchange

Call 545-2120

Tickets sold at:

exchange

Full Leg Wax $29
Bikini $8-$15
Basic Facial $25
Deep Cleansing Facial $34
1 Hr. Massage $36
1/2 Hr. Massage $20

FREE MANICURE
with any service over $20 1st time customers only valid Sept. & Oct., '98 only

Aesthetics with Jennifer
72 Princess St.
Unit 2 (upstairs)
545-0193
Please call for appointment.

Alfie's PUB

OLD SCHOOL WEDNESDAY

OLD SCHOOL NIGHT THIS WEDNESDAY
DJ NEIL BROWN
U.W.O.

HTTP://WWW.ALFIES.QUEENSU.CA/ALFIES

We're open regular hours
Thanksgiving weekend

Stop by for deep-fried turkey

ASUS

'02 Year Society Elections

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1998

Come out and support your year!
Take the time to vote at the following polling stations:

LENOARD HALL	11:30-1:30 PM
BAN RIGH HALL	11:30-1:30 PM
JDUC	10:00-5:00 PM
MAC CORRY	10:00-5:00 PM
STAUFFER LIBRARY	10:00-5:00 PM
HUMPHREY HALL	10:00-5:00 PM

SEE YOU THERE!

Classifieds

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WONDERING ABOUT RELATIONSHIPS, career etc? Seeking direction? Experience greater self-awareness with Tarot, palmistry, runes, and more. Clients say my readings are inspirational and very accurate. I also offer classes in meditation, Tarot, etc. For more information phone Kellye at 544-1909. Also available Fridays and Saturdays at "Harmony", 93 Princess St. Walk in or pre-book at 544-7897. Tape included.

BLUEROF FARM a get-away for Queen's students and their families. Half an hour away. Visit our website -

BURGER KING FREE
BIG KING WITH PURCHASE OF A BIG KING
 no coupon necessary
99¢
 whopper junior every day

www.ikweb.com/blueroot or call Kim Ondaatje at 374-2147.

PROFESSIONAL TUTORING and Editing. Are you achieving the grades you deserve? Improve your essay skills, editing, research and writing. E.S.L. a specialty. Phone 416 280-6113, fax 416 960-0240.

PRIMA COMPUTER BOOKS: The most important peripherals you'll ever own. Ask in the Campus Bookstore. Fast and easy; In A Weekend; Admin Guides and more...

GRADLINK is a service linking graduate students for mutual support. Call Student Counselling service for more information at 545-2893.

PRECISION SKATING Kingston Senior Precision team has a few openings. If you are interested in making new friends, exercise, hard-work and fun come out and see the team. For more information contact Anne at 384-4903 or Maryke at 389-8883.

FOOD THAT MAKES CENTS. Learn how to make quick, tasty, cheap one pot meals at our "hands-on" cooking class Wednesday, October 7th 5:30-7:00 p.m. at the International Centre. Limited spaces so call 545-6712 to sign up. Brought to you by the Health Outreach program, Health, Counselling and Disability Services.

LAW SCHOOL BOUND? Meet

University of Victoria Law Dean, David to discuss opportunities. Friday, October 9th, Sutherland Room, JDUC, 12:30 to 1:30 p.m. Questions? Call Career Services 545-2992.

KNOW ANY QUEEN'S SUPPORT STAFF that go above and beyond the call of duty? Why not nominate them for a Staff Recognition Award. Applications and information available at the University Secretariat, B 400 Mackintosh-Corry Hall or on the Web at www.queensu.ca/secretariat/staff-pol.html. Nomination deadline: October 15th

NEED MONEY TO STUDY ABROAD? Awards are available for study at the International Study Centre for Winter 99. Drop in to the Awards Office for an application or contact Jennifer Mercer at mercerj@post.queensu.ca

GET PUBLISHED! Queen's Health Sciences Journal is now accepting articles on any aspect of health and medicine to be published in the upcoming edition. Deadline - October 15th. Instructions at http://meds.queensu.ca/hsj/ or email hsj@meds.queensu.ca

QUEEN'S PROJECT ON INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT (OPID) is a non-profit, student run initiative dedicated to promoting sustainable community development, both in Canada and abroad, through working partnerships. Come and learn more on Wednesdays, 6-7 p.m., Ellis 224. All years and faculties are welcome.

QUEEN'S PRO-LIFE CLUB will have its first meeting, Wednesday October 7th, from 6:30 - 8:30 in Mac-Corry room D 326.

MOSAIC is a Queen's committee which works alongside KDAQL (Kingston and District Association for Community Living), a non-profit organization which supports 325 individuals with developmental disabilities. Volunteers can become involved in over 100 activities with children or adults. All it takes is one or two hours a week. For more information contact Tracey Allen at 531-3189 or the Core at 545-6278.

POTTERY CLASSES Creative fun - no exams or assignments! Beginners welcome. Close to campus. 6 week session starting October 19th. Cost $85.00 which includes all supplies. Call Linda Abbott at 549-3546.

FOR SALE/FOR RENT
PARKING FOR RENT: Near Albert and Union. $30.00 per month. Garage also available. Please call 378-0575.

HOUSE FOR RENT: 2 bedroom, cozy house overlooking the St. Lawrence. 20 minutes east of Kingston. $650 per month plus utilities. Please call 382-4033.

WANTED
DRINKERS WANTED: If you patronize campus pubs, tend to drink responsibly and would like to contribute to on-going campus alcohol policy and education initiatives we want to talk to you. Please call Diane Nolting at 545-6712 for more information about this volunteer opportunity.

LOST AND FOUND

LOST: Diamond engagement ring lost sometime after Wednesday September 2nd in Johnson St., Queen's area. Reward if found. Please call 536-1679.

LOST: Maroon fleece vest, "Contour". Lost on campus Thursday September 17th. Please call Daryn at 530-3419 or email 6gdm. Thanks

FOUND: At Kill McGill game a set of keys. To claim, call Alison at 545-2729.

FOUND: At the Campus Bookstore an envelope containing wedding photos. Thompson from Walmart. Can be picked up at the Customer Service desk.

MISC

Neil Young demonstrates his support for a creature of recent controversy: the tree.

Saturday night's thunderstorm toppled trees, flooded streets and brought many Kingston residents yet another night without electricity this year. If you were away for the weekend and feel like you missed out, don't worry. CRWS should be running ads for you to purchase RAIN STORM '98: THE VIDEO any day now. But those who stepped over downed power lines and broken branches as they walked about our glorious Student Village will agree with me when I say that Kingston's trees have got to go.

These multi-leaved menaces have cost Kingston tax-payers millions of dollars in lost revenue this year alone. January's ice storm left thousands without power and caused extraordinary property damage.

Senior citizens, children, and small pets such as gerbils and guppies were stranded in their homes. And all because our trees were too cowardly to put up with a little ice.

As "The Limestone City," isn't it about time we showed off our famous bedrock instead of covering it with vegetation?

A lot of people felt sorry for city trees after the ice storm, thinking that they looked bare and sick. The same people say they're happy that the branches have grown back so lushly this summer. But obviously this regeneration hasn't been such a blessing after all. The trees have just been regrouping to make another attack on us.

The solution to Kingston's tree problem is simply to cut them all down.

The ramifications for other industries will also be astounding. We advertise

RUN, FOREST, RUN!

Frankly, I suspect that it's part of a left-wing conspiracy. Ever think about all of the publicity that food banks and support groups and public hospitals got during the ice storm, just at the time when they'd been complaining about cutbacks? Ever notice how all of Kingston's trees lean to the left? Coincidence? I think not.

Their roots may go deep, but they're old, wooden, shady and apt to snap under pressure. Just like Joe Clark.

The solution to Kingston's tree problem is simply to cut them all down. Not only will we be freeing ourselves from the dangers of more power outages, but the economic benefits will be incredible. I estimate that 300 workers will be employed for one full year. That number will increase to 450 if the city should be ambitious enough to deforest the Little Cataraqui Creek and Lemoine Point conservation areas. The export of lumber will bring millions of dollars to the Kingston treasury, which can be used to hire crucial bureaucrats and give Big Business a tax break. Then just watch the economy take off!

five to ten pounds, at least.

Now I'm not suggesting that we cut down ALL of the trees in Kingston. Some of them can be pretty useful when they're still alive. Maples, for instance. They produce syrup for us to use in pancakes and Jewel lyrics. Oaks, on the other hand, are completely useless. What have oaks ever done for us? They make pretty nice desks and doors. Rev up your

Kingston as the Limestone City, so isn't it about time that we showed off our famous bedrock instead of covering it with unsightly vegetation? The tourist trade will triple. And the publishing industry will flourish with the abundance of paper. The WHIG FLYER PACK that keeps appearing at my front door will be able to increase in weight from

In a frenzied dance that would make Dionysus blush, a group of children celebrate the slaughter and posthumous decoration of a spruce.

Bob McGill, Arts '99, makes the willows weep.

MONDAYS ARE QUEEN'S DAY
 AT
THE MARKET SALON
 327 KING ST. EAST
 (JUST 5 MINUTES FROM CAMPUS)

Bring a frosh for a free haircut and you will get a free manicure.
 QUEEN'S IDENTIFICATION REQUIRED

Call For Details
549-2110

Multideas Promotions
 Screen Print and Embroidery.
 In house Graphic Design.
 More than 300,000
 Promotional Products to choose from!

Wide range of in-stock or customized SPORTSWEAR.
 Want to promote your TEAM? Leave it to US!

Make '98 the year to remember.
 Make an impression at your conference.

Quality merchandise at very competitive prices.

Come and visit our showroom
 We are licensed for the Queen's logo.
 530 Barnsley Cres. Kingston, ON
 Tel: (613) 634-2437 Fax: (613) 634-2505
 www.multideas.com
 multl@adan.kingston.net

IT FEELS GOOD, SO DO IT!

Write for MiSC

It's like writing for GW: you can do pretty much anything and it doesn't necessarily have to be funny. The only difference is that you'll probably want to have a point.

To submit an article or just to inquire about contributing, Contact Ken at 545-2800 [journal@post.queensu.ca]

For Thanksgiving!

Don't go home without it.

Tricolour Express Thanksgiving Schedule

	Thursday	Friday	Monday
TORONTO	4:20 West Campus 4:30 Via Hall 4:40 JDUC	2:20 & 5:20 West Campus 2:30 & 5:30 Via Hall 2:40 & 5:40 JDUC	7:30 Union Station 7:50 Scarborough
OTTAWA	4:40 West Campus 4:50 Via Hall 5:00 JDUC	3:20 West Campus 3:30 Via Hall 3:40 JDUC	7:30 Bus Terminal 7:45 Kanata
MONTREAL	4:00 West Campus 4:10 Via Hall 4:20 JDUC	3:20 West Campus 3:30 Via Hall 3:40 JDUC	6:30 Bus Terminal
STYVENAGE/ LONDON		1:20 West Campus 1:30 Via Hall 1:40 JDUC	6:00 London 7:00 Kitchener
MISSISSAUGA/ CASTLE		1:20 West Campus 1:30 Via Hall 1:40 JDUC	7:30 Oakville 7:45 Mississauga

Tickets only at:

Student Lounge
Upper Cellblock, JDUC
545-2120
ubs@ams.queensu.ca
www.ams.queensu.ca/AMS/UBS

Unlimited tickets available before noon Thursday (limited tickets also available thereafter)

Tricolour Express
545-6863
Always Your Best Ticket Home

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL

since 1873

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1998

Female student assaulted on campus

A pathway leads out to University Avenue, the location of a sexual assault that occurred between Jeffery and Richardson Halls on October 3.

BY JOCELYN LAPORTE

Between 11:00 and 11:30 p.m. on Saturday, October 3, a female student was sexually assaulted by a man while walking along University Avenue to her residence. This marks the second time in less than two years that an attack has occurred at this time and place on campus.

According to Campus Security, the student was walking southbound on University Avenue from Stauffer Library when she noticed a man following her. The assailant caught up to the woman and pulled her to a dark area along University Avenue between Richardson and Jeffery Hall. The assailant then pinned the woman to the ground and placed something over her eyes. The victim managed to escape and run to her residence.

The only information currently available about the assailant is that he is approximately six feet tall with a muscular build.

The location of the attack was in the same approximate area as an assault which occurred at 11:30 p.m. on January 9, 1997, near Jeffery Hall. The victim in that case was pulled to the ground and pinned down but managed to escape by throwing snow in the assailant's face. The assailant, whose identity remains unknown, was described by the victim as six feet tall with a muscular build, dark connecting eyebrows, with dark collar length hair and wearing a dark toque and a dark nylon bomber jacket.

The only information currently available about the assailant is that he is approximately six feet tall with a muscular build.

Sue Wagar, Campus Security, was unsure why two attacks have occurred in this particular area of campus. "I have no idea why it would happen there again," she said, adding, "there are two emergency phones along that pathway." Wagar stressed the importance of taking precautions at night. "We strongly encourage the use of Walkhome and the emergency phone system," she said.

Please see Second on page 4

Deregulation of engineering possible

BY CHAD HEARD

Engineering students could face deregulated tuition fees as a result of a new provincial government program designed to increase overall university revenue.

The program, labelled Access To Opportunities Program (ATOP), was lobbied to the government by a coalition of microelectronic companies called Canadian Advanced Technology Association (CATA). If Queen's accepts the ATOP program it will be implemented within the next couple of years, said David Turpin, vice-principal (academics).

Turpin explained that ATOP is designed to increase student enrollment in highly technical fields such as electrical engineering and computer science. "The increase resource flow wouldn't be just for that faculty, but for others as well," said Turpin, describing the additional money from the province as "university revenue."

Dean of Applied Science Tom Harris, said CATA's "concern is that there [are] not enough graduates in these fields."

Turpin said the program was proposed, because the Ontario government "has to stand up and be responsible to industry."

Specific academic programs in highly technical, specialized fields would be considered by the Ontario government as target areas and must be proposed by the university to the government, Harris said. There are two separate sections to ATOP which Queen's may decide to participate in, he explained.

The first option requires a minimum 20 per cent increase of the 1995-1996 enrollment figures in the target programs. The Ontario Government will grant Queen's $5,000 for each additional student in Engineering and $3,500 for each additional student in Computer Science, Harris said.

If the second option is chosen, the university will have to double the target program enrollment. The reward would again be the $5,000 and $3,500 for each additional student. If Queen's picks the second option and if Queen's can find corporate funding for the target areas, the government will match funding with a one-time start up grant of up to $9,800 per student. The government will deregulate tuition for

Please see Program on page 2

Residents compensated for ResTel congestion

BY SHAWN BRIMLEY

After five weeks of busy signals, first-year students in residence are finally able to communicate over the telephone with ease.

An overload of the ResTel system, due largely to unlimited flat-rate long-distance programs, made calling outside of the Queen's network almost impossible.

"The biggest problem was the difficulty in getting an outside line, as well as receiving a call from outside the Queen's network," said Graham Brown, director of Queen's residences.

"The problem is what we call network congestion," added Brown. "This problem occurred all over the country as long-distance companies established fixed-rate plans, and the volume of calls increased in frequency and duration."

To alleviate the congestion, the Queen's Residences and Information Technology Services have expanded the Queen's network, almost doubling the amount of available lines. Work to expand the lines was completed on October 6, and early indications are that congestion is significantly reduced.

However, Brown cautions that "only if student calling patterns remain the same can the expanded network handle the volume. If the level of calls goes up, the problem of congestion could occur again."

Since the first five weeks of telephone service was unacceptable, the residences have decided to remunerate each student for the subpar service.

Students will be credited $60 to their Queen's student account, which includes five weeks of ResTel service ($40) and a long-distance credit ($20). In addition to the credits, each residence common room will be furnished with a television set, 40 in total, in order to access the recently completed installation of cable television service.

"While the problem of network congestion was no one's fault, we want to make sure that the students know that we feel badly," Brown said. "Hopefully, we have succeeded in compensating the students in a fair and equitable way."

index

Volume 126, Issue 12
www.journal.queensu.ca

News	1	A&E	18
Editorials	6	Crossword	21
Opinions	7	Classifieds	22
Features	11	MISC.	23
Sports & Fitness	15

---

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Happiness and virtue rest upon each other; the best are not only the happiest, but the happiest are usually the best."
— Bulwer-Lytton (1803-1873)
English Novelist and Poet

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

reader

NEEDS
writers

submit your

- creative non-fiction
- memoirs
- short fiction
- artwork
- photography
- poetry
- book reviews
- ideas

QR

545.2800

journal@post.queensu.ca

Program proposed

Continued from page 1

all engineering programs under this second set of conditions.

Turpin said, at this point, no one knows exactly how deregulation would affect tuition, adding it would depend on a number of conditions reflecting the goals of the faculty.

Harris explained, "If the government is not going to find the resources to meet the needs... then students will have to fund the needs."

Henk Meijer, associate head of computer information science, said the details of tuition deregulation were not included in the government's Web site explaining the ATOP program.

"The reality today is that the costs to mount an engineering program that is required in the future exceeds the revenues we are currently receiving," Hattis said. The ATOP program is "funded at the margin," he continued, which means it covers the costs required for expansion without providing additional funds.

"We sometimes feel that we don't give as good a job as we could because of our given resources," said Meijer.

"New government resources will be targeted toward particular programs, our challenge will be to reallocate existing resources to meet the university's goals," said Turpin.

Both Turpin and Hattis were concerned about government programs regulating students into specific fields. "I think a preferred solution would be to increase base funding to the university to support an increase in enrollment in engineering," said Hattis.

"There's one objective for Queen's," said Turpin, "we will take part only if it enhances the learning quality for students here at Queen's."

Despite Turpin's reservations, Harris said Queen's would "certainly take part in the 20 per cent program and probably be taking part in the full program."

Queen's must submit a proposal to the Ontario government by November 16, a "plan of attack" for the university in the ATOP program, Turpin said.

Bus-It reassessed

BY REBECCA STELTER

The Alma Mater Society executive is investigating alternatives to the Bus-It program.

The Bus-It system, offered to students through a $36 mandatory student fee, "gives everyone bus service and a free local shuttle when they show their student card," said Gord Moodie, AMS vice-president (operations).

Moodie has recently attempted to add to or replace the bus system with a taxi system. He contacted three taxi companies only to discover that free taxi service is not possible due to a city transit ordinance.

Still, Moodie is exploring other improvements to the existing Bus-It system. "There is demand for a bus that goes to the train station," he said. Moodie said he would also consider purchasing buses for the university, however, at this time, the idea does not seem "cost feasible."

QP advertisements offend some students

BY STEPHANIE CARVIN

Controversy over caricatures used in a Queen's Pub advertisement surfaced on campus this week in an IDIS 302 "Race and Racism" class after a film about stereotypes entitled "Ethnic Notions" was shown.

Eun-Hye Chung, teaching assistant for the course and a member of CARR (Creating Awareness on Race Relations) acted as a spokesperson for members of the class who were upset with a QP advertisement posted around campus.

"The advertisement shows a stereotypical image of black people," said Chung. "We could ignore it but we saw the image after the movie which deals with black caricatures."

Chung became involved in the controversy after some students in her tutorial brought the posters to her attention. In turn, she raised their concerns to QP staff. Last Wednesday, Chung assisted some of the students in the class with starting a petition for the QP, which garnered 50 signatures in protest of the caricatures.

The petition outlined the concerns that the students had with the advertisement, including a statement that the posters "portrayed negative, stereotypical caricatures of two people of African descent" which "exacerbates the lack of positive images of people of African descent."

"There are so few [black individuals] on campus so misleading caricatures portray stereotypes as the only image we see on campus."

— T.A. Eun-Hye Chung

Chung indicated that she was concerned over the portrayal of black individuals because of the small percentage that they make up at the University. "There are so few [black individuals] on campus so misleading caricatures portray stereotypes as the only images we see on campus," she said.

Chung indicated that she was received very well by QP staff after she came forward with the group's concerns. "As soon as I approached with my [Teachings Assistant] title they were very helpful," she said. "We are very happy. They have done all we wanted."

"I feel really bad," said Scott Thompson, QP assistant manager, who created the ads, having obtained the image through Corel Draw Clip Art. "I didn't realize it would cause any problems. I sincerely apologize... I am very embarrassed to have caused so [many] problems."

Jack Sinnott, director of the John Deutsch University Centre is responsible for approving the advertisements that are displayed within the JDUC. Sinnott said the issue came to his attention last Tuesday afternoon when Chung brought her concerns to the JDUC office. "We looked into [the issue] and removed the advertisements tight away," he said.

According to Sinnott, the JDUC's advertising policy complies with the University code of conduct which bans advertising that makes fun of a minority group. "We failed to catch it before it got up," he said. As a preventative measure Sinnott has placed advertising on the agenda for the next JDUC staff meeting. "We all need to be on the look out," he said.

Chung, Thompson and Sinnott agree that although the ads were unfortunate, the consequences have been positive. "Things are good... they responded very well," said Chung. "I am very happy that we got all that we wanted. They apologized even before the signatures [on the petition]."

Thompson described the result of the situation as "very positive."

"It's a good thing that this has come to my attention," he said. "It's good to recognize that I am not always aware... Eun-Hye has been great."

The concerned students have encouraged the QP to present the movie "Ethnic Notions" at the QP. Chung would like to see

QP and JDUC staff and the student body attend the showing and follow up the film with a discussion of the issues presented.

"We recommended that the QP show other films as well which portray positive black stereotypes," said Chung. "The QP is willing to show the movie 'Ethnic Notions' and that is a very, very positive sign."

"We welcome the opportunity [to see the movies]," said Sinnott. "Certainly it is a chance for us all to learn."

The screening of "Ethnic Notions" will be announced at a later date.

One of the many posters generating heated debate over racial undertones advertises the "phat beats" at the Queen's Pub. PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

New kind of security rolls into town

BY JENNIFER MORRISON

Students can find Campus Security in a new spot this year: on the seat of a white security bicycle.

Security has implemented a new Bicycle Patrol Program designed to emphasize a community-based approach to security on campus and assist staff in patrolling areas inaccessible by vehicle.

Jeff Garrah, Campus Security

Under the direction of security supervisor Jeff Garrah, the pilot program began during Orientation Week and had a successful month. "The reception has been positive... staff and students think that it's a really good program," he said.

"The way Queen's campus is set up is perfect to get around on a bike," Garrah explained. As such, he hopes that the bike patrol system will help Security "get a little closer with the students."

According to Garrah, bicycle patrol programs are already being used on other university campuses across Ontario including Waterloo, York and Toronto. The Queen's bicycle patrol program is still in its infant phase and is rather small. To date there is only one bike being used to patrol campus and even this is only used at particular times. Whenever there are two supervisors on duty at the same time, instead of having them both working a regular shift, one is assigned to patrol around campus on the bike. Depending on how successful the bike program is, student patrollers may be using bikes next school year.

Garrah also anticipates that the program will help reduce emergency response times, particularly on main campus. "It is a real positive step towards a community-based security. It provides a deterrence for crime, promotes physical fitness for our staff and has been cost efficient," added Garrah.

The pilot program has been relatively inexpensive to institute. The whole initiative has cost just under $1000, including the cost of the bike and all necessary accessories. It has also garnered the support of Queen's Campus Security Director Louise Fish and Patrol Co-ordinator Dave Patterson, helping the program run a lot more efficiently, Garrah said. Although the program has been a success so far, an immediate expansion is still premature because of budget restraints. "We're going to see how it goes and perhaps get another patrol bike for at night," he continued. Other than that possibility, the project will be reassessed at the end of the year.

AMS user card in works

BY MANDY MARRIOTT

The Alma Mater Society is looking to introduce an AMS services card that would support AMS services and translate into savings and prizes for students.

If implemented, students would be able to use the card at the Publishing & Copy Centre, the Queen's Pub, Alfie's Pub and the Used Book Store Exchange.

Each student would be issued a personal card with space for 20 stamps, five for each of the four services. After making five purchases at any one of the designated services, the student would receive a free prize from that service, such as a colour photocopy from the P&CC or a lunch from the QP.

AMS Vice-President (Operations) Gord Moodie is currently in the middle of discussions with Air Canada to offer a year-end grand prize draw for card holders.

If the plan is successful, each completed card will be entered in a ballot box to win two free round-trip airplane tickets to any North American destination. In exchange for the complementary tickets, the Air Canada logo will be printed on the back of the cards, designed by AMS Media and Services Director Owen Minns.

Moodie said the card system has been considered by past AMS councils although the idea has never been implemented. Moodie explored the idea of a partnership with an airline because, "I thought it might add some zip there was a really big prize," he said.

Nick Du Prey, who held the summer position as AMS marketing office co-ordinator, contacted Canadian Airlines over the summer to see if they were interested in sponsoring the program prize in return for advertising on the cards. When this airline did not express interest, Du Prey contacted Air Canada who was more willing to negotiate, Moodie said.

"I think it is great, and if implemented I would definitely use it," said Jill Downs, Comm '99.

Mike Callen ArtSci '00 agreed. "Other businesses have already been using a similar type of reward system, so it only seems logical for Queen's to follow suit," he said.

Moodie is currently waiting to hear confirmation from Air Canada, and when it is received, the AMS will have the cards printed up and distributed to students immediately. "I'll be very excited if it works out in the next few days," Moodie said. "It will allow students to save money and give them a fun prize."

Times, They Are A' Changin' ...

Walkhome is Now Open at 7 p.m.!

Walkhome

Sun - Wed 7 p.m. - 2 a.m.
Thurs - Sat 7 p.m. - 3 a.m.

The AMS Walkhome service is provided free of charge to all students, staff and faculty of Queen's University in order to provide the option of being safely and comfortably accompanied while walking on campus and in the surrounding area.

Our boundaries extend West to West Campus, North to York St., East to Ontario St., and South to the Lake!

So Give Us A Call @ 545-2662

We would also like to thank our sponsors: Tordiff Communications for their radio support, and Cyclepath for our six Peugeot Bicycles!

Cyclepath
339 Princess St.
Kingston, Ontario K7L 1H7
542-3616

MONDAYS ARE QUEEN'S DAY

AT
THE MARKET SALON

327 KING ST. EAST
(JUST 5 MINUTES FROM CAMPUS)

Bring a frosh for a free haircut and you will get a free manicure.

QUEEN'S IDENTIFICATION REQUIRED

Call For Details
549-2110

Second assault in area

Continued from page 1

However, students are ultimately responsible for whether or not they choose to use these safety measures, she added. "It is risk management... we are offering these things as a service to help avoid risks."

Alison Loat, Alma Mater Society vice-president (university affairs), commented that although the area is generally populated and well lit there are often dark areas between the buildings because of shadows.

"This shows that you have to be aware of what is happening around you, and the services available to you, and make the choice that is right for you under these circumstances," she said. Loat also stressed the importance of being aware of the risk that is involved in walking alone on or near campus.

Currently the AMS and Campus Security are working to introduce glassed-in security bulletin boards at local laundry mats, grocery and variety stores by the end of the month. The boards will feature safety notices including security postings and information about services offered by Campus Security. Loat said she expects the new boards to help promote community safety through increased advertising of possible threats and precautions.

Anyone with information about this incident is asked to call Campus Security at 545-6733.

Professor remembered

By STEPHANIE CARVIN

Last Thursday morning, Walter Frank Connell, professor of medicine and chair of medicine at Queen's from 1942 to 1968, passed away.

Following the footsteps of his father, Dr. Connell, born in 1906, entered the Queen's Faculty of Medicine in 1923. He attained many available academic honours while enrolled in the Faculty, including the N.E. Dupuis, the Pharmacology and the Dean Fowler Scholarships. Graduating in 1929, he earned the Gold Medal in medicine and in 1931 was awarded the George Christian Hoffman Fellowship in pathology by the University.

In 1933, Dr. Connell was the first

Richardson Fellow in Medicine. He researched the biochemical parameters of heart problems and became head of the department of medicine in 1942. He helped establish the medical department by appointing several prominent professors during his term.

Both his father and Dr. Connell received the Montreal Medal in 1962 from the Queen's Alumni Association and Connell was honoured by the Heart and Stroke Foundation in 1987 for his fund-raising efforts on their behalf. Dr. Connell retired in 1961 but remained involved with the university as an emeritus professor and honorary graduate (LL.D '73).

Information courtesy of Gail Knutson, Queen's Faculty of Medicine

In Here

Queen's Model Parliament elects leaders

Queen's Model Parliament '99 has elected its party leaders.
Ian Collins — NDP
Jascha Jabes — Liberal
Darren MacDonald — PC
Brock Jones — Reform
Greg Hughes — Bloc

Scholar-in-Residence

Visiting scholar Ludmilla A. Nemova with the Department of Political Studies will be in Chown Hall from October 18 to 26. An informal drop-in will be held on Thursday, October 22 from 7 to 9 p.m. For more information, contact Debra Christie at the Office of Student Affairs at 545-6944.

Volunteers needed

A local shelter for women and children is looking for a volunteer to coordinate the volunteer needs of the organization on a regular, weekly basis.

Volunteers who can commit one half day a week for the school year are needed to work in schools doing presentations on substance abuse prevention and making healthy choices.

The Community Volunteer Centre is looking for a volunteer to help recruit volunteers for the hundreds of available community needs.

Call 542-8512 for more information.

Supermarket Safari

Join a registered dietician for a Supermarket Safari on October 20 at Loeb on Princess Street, from 7 to 9 pm. Participants will learn how to make healthy food choices, how to make sense of food labels and how to get the best nutrition for their dollar. The cost is $10 per person. Call the KFLA Health Unit at 549-1232, ext. 155 to register.

Community Services Directory

The Kingston District Community Information Centre is pleased to announce the 1999 edition of the Where to Turn Community Services Directory, a comprehensive resource book for information on Kingston's human services. Copies of Where to Turn are available from the centre at 130A Johnson St. at $35/copy. Call 542-1001 for details.

Better Beginnings

Better Beginnings is holding an informal meeting to talk about the organization, its services and its future. Drop-in meetings will be held on October 21 from 1:30 to 3 p.m. at 183 Weller Ave. and October 22 from 6:30 to 8 p.m. at Rideau Heights Public School, 77 MacCauley St. Call 542-2835 to book child care.

PETERS GUARDIAN DRUGS

Est. 1930 640 KING STREET WEST 546-5165

YOUR WEST CAMPUS PHARMACY

Students Save

10%

on ANY

Jamieson Product

Present this Coupon & Save on Echinecea, Vitamins & all Herbal Products.

Present Student ID

STUDENTS
SAVE 10% ON
Jamieson

Open 6 Days a Week

THE COCAMO

WHERE QUEEN'S PARTIES!

WEDNESDAY

HIP HOP

TOONIE ALL NIGHT!

DJ DUSTY
FROM OTTAWA

THURSDAY

LOONIE!

LOONIE
NIGHT!

$5 Cover Between 7 & 9 pm
1/2 price after 9 with
STUDENT ID

FRIDAY

KILL THE KEG

SUPER LITE
DRAFT

From 7-10pm

Loonie until 11:00

WIN A BAR FRIDGE!

What's Happening

The AMS updates you on what's happening on and around campus

WE WANT YOU for the Queen's Inquiry Committee. Be on the front edge of AMS EXCITEMENT. Meet tonnes of cool people. Call 545-2732 or drop by the Communications Commission in the AMS. Don't be shy - CALL NOW.

Be a Street Captain!
Applications due @ AMS Front Desk by Tues. Oct. 6. Committee Members due Wed. Sept. 30. Questions? 545-6000 x.5178

Learning Strategies Workshops:
Health, Counseling, and Disability Services - Call 545-2893 to sign up!

Learning Strategies Series
Tuesday Oct. 13(lectures), 1:30-2:30
Tuesday Oct. 20(texts), 1:30-2:30

These boots were made for walking...
The Walkhome service will be opening at 7pm as of Oct. 12th. Come and try us out!

Are you an Infomaniac?
All those who want to get down and dirty in the Infobank (translation: Do you want to volunteer?) call 545-2732 to get in on the action.

Can you find your C-Spot?
Every Sunday night at the Queen's Pub. 8pm to 11pm. Sinful desserts, gourmet coffee, live music, no cover, all ages.

Fall Into the CAC. That's the Campus Activities Commission, the coolest place to party and get involved! We run all the phat AMS events, and still need groovy people to plan Welcome Back Week, United Way Events, Charity Ball, Futures Forum and sooooo much more. Call us. You know you want to. All the Kool Kidz are doing it... Weekend

Alignment?!
What's up with that?
Want to find out more? Well, come to AMS Assembly on Thursday Oct. 15 at City Hall. Or contact AMS president Tom Stanley at 545-2726 or call Academic Affairs Commissioner Milan Konopek at 545-6000 x.4818.

Free Money!!!!
(Just for causes) Application forms and criteria for Fall Clubs and Assembly grants will be available Monday, Oct. 19 - Friday Oct. 27, outside of the commission of Internal Affairs office. Questions? Please contact Dave Conlant at 545-6000 x 4815

If you have something you want to tell the world then

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

AMS should butt out

THE ONLY PROBLEM WITH SMOKE at Alfie's is AMS council butting in to Alfie's management's plan to sell cigarettes in the bar. AMS President Tom Stanley's concern that selling cigarettes would lead to increased health risks seems contradictory since smoking is already permitted in the bar. Furthermore, it is hard to see how selling cigarettes in a bar where patrons can already choose to smoke would do much more to actively promote smoking.

As for the argument concerning an increase in second-hand smoke, there doesn't seem to be any reason to doubt Alfie's Manager Ben Bourke's assurance that the bar's ventilation system could handle it. Indeed, the quality of air at Alfie's, as compared to other local bars that allow smoking, attests to how well the ventilation system works. As for students who would prefer to avoid cigarette smoke altogether, there are always the Queen's Pub and Clark Hall Pub, both of which are smoke-free.

While the AMS council's misgivings about selling smokes in Alfie's appear to be unfounded, the fiscal benefits of offering the service would be considerable. Aside from the revenue that would be generated by selling smokes, the bar would profit by keeping patrons who want to purchase cigarettes from going elsewhere and not returning.

It is hard to see how selling cigarettes in a bar where patrons can already choose to smoke would do much more to actively promote smoking.

More important than an improvement to the bottom line, however, is the increase in safety for students who choose to walk unescorted to Princess Street late at night to purchase a pack of smokes.

Since the moral high-road that some members of the AMS council adopted appears to be a dead-end, Alfie's management should stick to their guns and present the idea at the next AMS assembly.

Party of five

MENAGE-A-TROIS? QUATRE? Cinq? Contrary to a common stereotype, polyamory is not about orgasmic couplings, or even necessarily about sex at all, but rather is about maintaining intimate relationships with several people at once.

With the divorce rate in our society at close to 50 per cent, some people are turning to polyamory as an appropriate alternative to the traditional model of a single life partner. While this solution may not be for everyone, it is unfortunate that the right to make such a choice is hindered by legal obstacles and is far from being an accepted lifestyle in our society. Many people are unwilling to admit they are part of a polyamorous relationship because of the social stigma that is attached to the word. At a time when Canadian society and law are beginning to extend recognition and benefits to gay couples, it is a shame that another group of people are being forced into a fight for equality because of their lifestyle choices.

It is also a shame that loving families are deprived of the opportunity to adopt and raise children simply because they do not resemble a traditional family structure. According to proponents of polyamory, one of the greatest benefits of a multi-person relationship is the amount of love, time and financial support that can be dedicated to raising a child. This idea does not seem outlandish when compared with similar practices by other cultures around the world.

All in all, it seems both counter-intuitive and unfair to label someone as depraved because they feel unable to love just one person.

Bons Mots: The state has no business in the bedrooms of the nation.
— Pierre Elliott Trudeau

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF
Keithie Gerein
Tara Mansbridge
MANAGING EDITOR
Laura MacInnis
NEWS EDITOR
Fiona Stevenson
ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS
Shawn Brimley
Renée Huang
Vacant

EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
Paul Heisler
ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR
Stefan Murray
ASSISTANT A&E EDITORS
Sarah Crosbie
Lilian Klim
FEATURES EDITOR
Sean Springer
OPINIONS EDITOR
Vacant

SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Adam Kaminsky
ASSISTANT SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Robert MacNeil
MISC. EDITOR
Ken Butland
GRAPHICS EDITOR
Janice Chan
THE READER EDITOR
Jesse Craig Bellringer

SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT
John Bowman
SPECIAL PUBLICATIONS EDITORS
Elizabeth Frogley
Shandley McMurtry
PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS
Alex Kronby
Jamim James T
WEB EDITOR
Marco Lui

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Kraft
SALES REPRESENTATIVES
Karl Brintnell
Andrew Cooke
Kristian Li
ADVERTISING COORDINATOR
Mark Fucella
ADVERTISING DESIGNERS
Katherine Colbourn
Annie Ge
Rachelle Villanueva
SYSTEMS MANAGER
Vacant

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Tuesday, October 13, 1998 • Issue 12 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of The Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.
Contents ©1998 by The Queen's Journal; all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Goss Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Gananoque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions.
Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please address complaints or concerns to Laura MacInnis, Keithie Gerein or Tara Mansbridge.
Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2H8
Telephone—editorial: 613-545-2800 advertising: 613-545-6711 Fax: 613-545-6728 Email: journal@post.queensu.ca
Circulation 9,000
Issue 13 will be published on Friday, October 16, 1998

Tell me I suck

AS FAR AS OBJECTIVE CRITICISM GOES, most friends are useless. They don't want to hurt your feelings, or else they've never looked at you with a critical enough eye. Strangers and casual acquaintances are useless. They don't know you well enough to deliver good criticism. Enemies, as some people have heard, are more useful than friends and strangers. A good enemy knows you well enough to have figured out what they don't like about you.

Direct personal criticism is a social no-no at Queen's.

This leads us, gentle reader, to a problem I have (and you as well, whether or not you've realized it yet) with people at Queen's. I belong to a generation that supposedly isn't afraid to speak its mind, to question authority, etc. So how come none of the people I've met here who don't like me have told me why they don't?

I'm not talking about someone I might meet on any given day who doesn't 'click' with me right away and who I'll probably never see again. I'm talking about the people who, for one reason or another, I interact with on a daily basis. I want them to tell me what I'm doing wrong. That's the only way I'm going to be able to consider changing in order to make both our lives a little bit less miserable. It's in their best interest, isn't it?

I know there are things wrong with the way I act, the way I dress and the things I say. Everybody's human, nobody's perfect, blah blah blah. For every fault I have I'm aware of and am consciously attempting to change, there are probably at least 10 things I'd be willing to change if someone would only take the time to tell me what they are. And the people who can't stand me, or at least dislike me—they're the ones who could do it.

This goes for everyone to anyone. If we all did it, the world would be a little less miserable. The only problem is that most people are dishonest with people they don't like. Sometimes people even pretend to like the people they dislike, seething silently while that person goes on and on doing whatever it is that's pissing them off. It's not healthy, Chester. I think it's because most people are cowards, or lazy, or both. They don't have the courage to speak to the pisser directly. They're content to seethe, perhaps they even talk about the pisser behind their back in order to let off some steam. They don't want to put themselves on the spot because direct personal criticism—unless it's from a friend or an associate—is a social no-no at Queen's.

I hate it, but I play ball. I'm just as lazy and non-confrontational as everyone else. However, in print, especially in the least read section of the campus newspaper, I'm willing to make an exception: Shannon, I hate your cloying voice and your ugly hat; Martin, everyone thinks you bullshit way too much, and you're a close talker, and your breath always stinks—chew gum or something; Michelle, you look fine without all that makeup and you don't have to throw yourself at every guy you see in order to be liked—try and keep it in your pants once in a while for God's sake.

By Ken Butland

OPINIONS

Feminism lacks substance

By Greg W. Jack

An old friend from the class of '98 came to visit last weekend for Homecoming/Kill McGill. Having graduated with an arts degree many people can lay claim to, she is trying her luck in the "real world." Perhaps, she lamented with some skepticism, she could fall back on her training as a volleyball referee. But to get to the top, where the real money is, where she wants to be, she would have to break what she calls "the all-boys club." And then she gave that thought up to one of more immediate concerns, like what bar we were going to hit to celebrate her "Homecoming." Nonetheless, her comment stuck with me.

Time Magazine a couple of months ago broached the question: "Is Feminism Dead?" Perhaps, they said, the bona fide movement of the sixties and seventies has seen its day. That doesn't explain to me why now, in the 1990s, my friend is still trying to crack that coveted "all-boys club." Clearly, feminism didn't accomplish what it set out to do, and as such it cannot yet be dead. The fact that we use a phrase to refer to the barrier to female equality, the "all-boys club," means we have not accomplished our goals. No, feminism is not dead, nor has it failed us. Instead, we have failed feminism. We have reduced the movement to a word or a label that we can blame or explain things away with.

We have failed it by introducing hybrid terms that don't mean anything, and instead have split the movement. Ask people today what feminism is, and some will respond "a group of really pissed off women who want to destroy the entire male populous." Others might say "the movement for equality of women," and both will have successfully pointed out the difference between radical and liberal feminism. But these terms fail to capture the true essence of the original movement; they are just terms to describe perspective. And the term feminism should be more than a noun, it is a verb too. It ought to be an action as well as a cause—something we engage in as much as something we talk about and label.

A battle that was fought so well early on now has been reduced to another "ism." The world does not need more "isms." It needs more movements, more causes or truths or convictions. Today's feminism needs teeth, it needs integrity. The word has been hijacked, and used by people to explain away actions. And it has been tossed to the side as a term to be used to justify almost any behaviour associated with women or equity. We stopped engaging in feminism, and instead pointed to icons to define it. Ally McBeal is good example of a symbol that doesn't accurately reflect the depth of the term 'feminist.' She's the cute girl in the office who everyone wants to kiss, and she is hardly the equal of those she works with. She is what feminism should not be. Television does not tell us anything about what is really a grass-roots movement. We have robbed it of that integrity with shows like Ally McBeal, or the token female shown on every male-dominated programme.

It is time to re-define the term "feminism." It does not mean any of the above. Like our belief that we are all entitled to certain rights, feminism should be among those rights. There should be no "all-boys club" for my friend to feel threatened by. This is where we have failed the original movement of feminism. There should not even be a term for it. The term itself is a problem. Feminism is not really dead, but it is dying, and we have to revive it before it is discarded. We have to remember what it really represents to us, both in what we say and what we do. The word needs new meaning, or it won't mean anything at all.

Letters to the Editors

HETEROSEXISM

Discrimination is real

Dear Editors,

In the opinion piece titled "Insensitivity is reality" (Sept 25), Ryan Hoffman offered "homosexuals" this sound advice: "If homosexuals wish to be treated by the whole of humanity as equals, they are going to have to learn to be more open about who they are. They are going to have to take the risk each time they interact with a heterosexual, and simply state who they are."

I'm going to take Ryan's advice and be more open about how I am. Hi, I am David and I am gay. I am a gay fourth year student who has a gay boyfriend. Sometimes I like to go to the gay bar with my gay friends after watching a gay movie. Now do you know who I am?

I do not believe so. To know who I am is to also know my experiences as a gay man. This includes my experience with heterosexism—something that Ryan attempts to deny in his letter. There's nothing simple about expressing who you are in a world that denies you exist. Allow me to offer my understanding of the definition heterosexism. Heterosexism is the belief in the superiority of heterosexuals or heterosexuality evidenced in the exclusion, by omission or design, of non-heterosexual persons in policies, procedures and events, or activities. This includes bisexual, transgendered persons and other sexual minorities.

Ryan uses the tendency for heterosexuals to assume that everyone they meet is straight as an example of heterosexism. This is perhaps the least harmful of its manifestations. Heterosexism is not just about language or terminology. It has denied queers marriage and adoption rights, job security and opportunities, and most importantly cultural inclusion. The word 'homophobia' is not enough. It only describes more overt behaviour against queers. Discrimination against queers happens at a much more subtle and pervasive level.

Since Ryan believes his minority status gives him the liberty to discuss mine, I would like to take the same liberty. I believe fundamental differences exist between queers and Jews in relation to discrimination. The term anti-Semitism and the attitudes behind it has been acknowledged to a greater degree than the term and attitude behind heterosexism. Nonetheless, heterosexism is as important a concept to queers as anti-Semitism is to Jews. Let me use our shared historical experience of the Holocaust to demonstrate my point.

When we learn about the Holocaust at school, in museums and through the media, we learn about the importance of remembering the millions of Jews who lost their lives as a result of anti-Semitism. If someone were to deny the existence of the Holocaust it is generally seen as anti-semitism, as a denial of Jewish history is a denial of who they are as people.

When we learn about the Holocaust at school, in museums and in the media we do not learn about the 100,000 or so queers who lost their lives due to heterosexism. We do not learn that queers represent the second-largest group of individuals to be persecuted in the concentration camps and that queers were the only group that had to remain imprisoned after the war had ended. When someone denies that the Holocaust occurred to queers it is seen as 'normal.'

According to Ryan, "heterosexism is absurd because the focus is shifted from what is truly malevolent behaviours towards assumptions that human beings make naturally." I do not believe that it is 'natural' for people to be heterosexist. It is something that we have learned and it is possible to unlearn.

P.S. Don't assume I'm straight and I won't assume you're gay.

DAVID SHORTT
ARTS '98

Watch your language

Dear Editors,

I would like to begin by thanking Ryan M. Hoffman for tackling the issue of politically correct language and the current social backlash against using various labels and "isms". I hope this letter will shed some light on a somewhat different perspective of this complex issue.

One cannot forget the impact of language. As humans our primary mode of communication is language. Although actions speak louder than words, we need to remember that first impressions are formed mainly on what people say. As humans our primary mode of communication is language.

Anyone who has ever tried to change their language to be more inclusive will honestly tell you that it isn't that difficult. Changing terms like boyfriend/girlfriend to partner, Christmas to holidays, or mailman to mail carrier only takes some practice. By forcing yourself to choose your words more carefully you are educating yourself and others on the subtle everyday realities that have quietly alienated groups for years. We don't wear signs (other than maybe Rainbow flags and 'Let's Stop Racism' pins) that inform the general public we are socially aware people, but language can make people aware of this immediately.

Hoffman suggested that the real fight lies within the obvious covert forms of oppression such as gay bashing and Neo-Nazism. Those are definitely worthy of our energy, but let's not forget that the "assumptions human beings make naturally," such as heterosexism or assuming the entire Queen's population is Christian, act as institutional barriers that leave out entire groups of people everyday.

Being Jewish, Hoffman may not feel offended if his religion isn't represented in people's everyday dialogue. Human experience, however cannot be paralleled. Belonging to a minority group does not necessarily mean you understand the realities of people from other minority groups anymore than they understand what you face daily. There is no all access pass in this concert!

At the end of the day, using inclusive language is a personal decision, but please think about the image you are portraying when you decide not to use it.

NAOMI BRUNEMEYER
ARTSCI '99
AMS SOCIAL ISSUES COMMISSIONER

POVERTY

Journal lacks sensitivity

Dear Editors,

While sitting in a coffee shop the other day, I overheard two older women discussing the 'disgusting' fact that peo-

Continued on page 8

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS POLICY
The Editors of The Journal want to hear from readers. All letters must include the writer's NAME and TELEPHONE NUMBER. Letters that are legible, legal and literate will be published if space permits. Drop off letters to The Journal House at 272 Earl St., fax to 545-6728, or E-mail them to <journal@post.queensu.ca>.

Letters to the Editors...

ple live on the streets of Kingston. They wondered why the police could not do something, perhaps put fences in front of store entrances to prevent people from sleeping there at night. I was shocked that these women could be so oblivious to the reality that for some, the streets are the only option.

To prevent myself from causing a scene in the café, I had to rationalize their opinions as perhaps a product of their generation, which was not as exposed as we are to the world's shocking variations in living conditions.

While this rationale calmed me momentarily, when I read the Talking Heads column in last Friday's Journal, I realized how naive I had been. I had comforted myself by believing that at least my generation understood the social conditions that lead to, and perpetuate, life on the streets.

I could not believe the ignorance and insensitivity that The Journal staff displayed by publishing a column which ridiculed people whose lives we can not even pretend to understand. I think that it would be difficult for anyone attending Queen's to legitimately perceive the events which lead people to find themselves living on the streets.

How these people "keep busy" is by attempting to sustain themselves on less than we can fathom. There are unfortunate circumstances that place people in poverty and force them to deal with it any way that they can.

As the benefactors of varying degrees of privilege, it is our responsibility to combat and eradicate these social issues, not to pretend they do not exist — and definitely not to ridicule them.

SIRI AGRELL
ARTS '00

TUITION

AMS funeral missed the point

Dear Editors,

What a sad day last Wednesday was. As the cover picture of last Friday's Journal showed, AMS President Tom Stanley accompanied by "somber" AMS officials; the first official on Stanley's left appears to be holding a candle while a piper stands off to the side. I know nothing about this "demonstration" other than what was reported in The Journal, so my source is not exactly reliable. The question I must ask, in the most bluntest terms possible is: what the fuck were you thinking?

Although those posters poignantly declared "we regret to announce the death of accessible post-secondary education," I'm sure what really caught the eye of student politicians and activists alike was this summer camp escapade. I propose we settle the issue of tuition hikes with a big all-out Battle Royal type scavenger hunt or perhaps challenging Hartis et al. to a monstrous game of 'suck and blow.'

For the last three years I have watched with amazement consecutive Queen's student government leaders' attempts at some protest of this sort. When will the 'representatives' of Queen's and the student body alike realize that the average Queen's student is either too rich to care because Daddy is paying for it anyway, or too worried about getting a black spot on their career to do any real shit disturbing.

I think that is the reason the only risqué thing anybody has done was to 'sit in' on vacationing Leggett's office. If you want to get peoples' attention, Mr. Stanley, first get some leadership skills, then 'burn flags' of Harris and Leggett in ephygy! By now you should know that Leggett probably wants the tuition hikes to privatize this university so officially only 'Rosedale' kids from UCC can come here. But stop with this camp counsellor routine, because frankly, it's embarrassing.

JAN MATHEWS
ARTS '00

Tuition hikes not only option

Dear Editors,

It has become obvious to me that Brock Jones' verbal diarrhea in the letters department of The Journal, is not only offensive to most readers, but also grossly misinformed and biased.

Firstly, the Income Contingency Repayment Program does not really help students. It simply delays debt and differentiates between programs. It can safely be assumed that Commerce graduates, for instance, are more likely to find high-paying jobs after graduating than those of us holding degrees in English. (This is not even considering wage discrimination based on sex, race, class, etc.) Consequently, the ICRLP favors those degrees with a higher market value. Schools become directed by, and geared towards, the market.

Secondly, even if it were true that our government is "broke," and therefore unable to provide adequate funding to post-secondary education, cutting funding is not the answer. Instead, the government might look into imposing higher taxes on businesses or the profits raised by banks.

In raising tuition every year, universities send the message that they can adequately deal with the lack of funding. The governments will not only fail to realize the dire necessity of providing appropriate funds to post-secondary education, but will instead cut funding even more. Universities, again, have an excuse to raise tuition even higher. We have to make it clear that we do not have an infinite supply of money to cover rising costs. Not do we have an infinite supply of patience for the administration's empty promises to seek alternatives to tuition hikes, considering that (conveniently enough) they have NEVER been able to find any alternatives. Last year, I witnessed both rallies and discussions with various Queen's administrators, who simply turned the other cheek. Our concerns will not go away, however, and our voices need to be heard.

Continued on page 9

Letters to the Editors continued...

Jones recognizes this "perpetual stalemate" between the administration and students. Why then, does he continually mock those who are fighting to end it? His inability to understand that James Worrall — a Meds student with a potentially high paying job — could be concerned over these matters shows that "BrockJonesland" must indeed be a cold and selfish place, void of sympathy and humanity. His ignorance of the ethical issues at stake (i.e. the resulting lack of diversity in the socio-economic background of the student population and the privatization of knowledge) and failure to recognize the financial burdens of his peers, is as constant and worrisome as the administration's insensitivity towards these same issues. To me, this not only justifies student action, but shows its necessity.

LEYLA MAHDAVIANI
ARTS '00

Accessibility first; tax cuts second

Dear Editors,

Please allow me to respond to Brock Jones' letter (Sept. 29) criticizing my article "Real change depends on real action" (Sept. 22). Mr. Jones suggests that I consider the plight of Indonesian and that of Canadian students directly analogous. Rather, I used the Indonesian example to show that when students get together and stand up for themselves, they can often provoke change, even if it seemed impossible at first. Our situation is similar to theirs only in that our voices also don't seem to count in the decision-making process.

Rather than encouraging students to "throw a fit," I am encouraging them to utilize one of their most basic democratic rights: the right to protest. This right is enshrined in our Charter as a basic freedom — right up there with freedom of speech.

Ontario spends less on university education than any other province in Canada, and less than 49 of 50 American states.

Citizens have been using protest as an instrument of change for thousands of years. It represents their ultimate attempt to influence their government when other methods don't work.

I agree with Mr. Jones that the fundamental problem is money. He writes, "our governments are broke. End of story." However, as the Ontario government proudly declares, it has made numerous tax cuts. It repeatedly chooses to listen to business interests instead of students. That may be a good decision or a bad decision, but it's a decision. Mr. Jones implies that government is not accountable for that decision because there is no other option. His statement is not simply undemocratic, it is factually wrong.

Principal Leggett himself pointed out that Ontario spends less on university education than any other province in Canada, and less than 49 of 50 American states. The Principal also admits that the university's intense efforts to secure corporate sponsorship have met with only middling success. As Mr. Jones suggests, maybe students shouldn't get a "free ride," but why is it that even the poorest provinces can afford to spend more on students than a wealthy province like Ontario? Let's face it, no Canadian government has ever been as hard on students as the Harris government.

I am lucky — I can pay my tuition. I am concerned that many would-be students will not be able to. Mr. Jones argues in his recent article (October 2) that higher enrollment proves that students are willing to incur debt to reap the later rewards of university education. Indeed, many are. Higher enrollment, however, only demonstrates how important a university education is in the modern world — so important that limiting accessibility may fundamentally disenfranchise poorer citizens.

Increasingly, university campuses are populated by the middle and upper classes. Anyone who thinks that higher tuition does not limit accessibility should note that Queen's has one of the most socio-economically homogenous student bodies in Canada.

Lastly, Mr. Jones writes that I should not 'bitch' about tuition levels because I am a medical student. I do admit that I am privileged, but I fail to see why my privilege makes it wrong for me to argue any one side of the issue. I believe that tuition increases should stop for all students, even for arts students like Mr. Jones. Although he may not think so, many people criticize this government for reasons other than self-interest. Mr. Jones should attack the argument, not the person. Does he think that one's opinions are determined by one's choice of profession? If that were so, we should all be asking ourselves why we made a golf pro the premier.

JAMES WORRALL
MEDS '01

Economic realities first; tuition second

Dear Editors,

In Tuesday's Journal Carrie Reid wrote in a letter criticizing my suggested reforms of the tuition and student loan system. I would like to take a few moments to help her and others who share her views understand why I believe what I do.

Ms. Reid suggested that the only reason that university enrollment has increased with rising tuition is because of 'spoiled rich kids' like myself making it into university. This argument is based on a premise that more rich kids are entering university, apparently at a rate faster than poor students are dropping out. It is ludicrous. When tuition was low, 100% of my 'rich bastard' friends from UCC made it into university, and when tuition is high, 100% of us will also make it into university. There's been no change in the rich making it into university. Tuition fees don't affect us whatsoever. But if applications are still rising overall despite rising tuition, then poorer students must also be applying in record numbers despite increased tuition because they recognize the values of higher education.

Ms. Reid also attacked my suggested Income Contingent Repayment Loan (ICRL) program, saying that in reality the added interest charges make for a bigger debt in the end. She is correct. However, the beauty of

Continued on page 10

THE BEST MINDS, THE BEST OPPORTUNITIES

"THE BEST WAY TO GET THE MOST OUT OF A STAFF IS TO GIVE PEOPLE FULL RESPONSIBILITY."

— Peter Lynch
Fidelity Investments

Career Opportunities in Equity Research at Fidelity Management & Research Company.

In the world of money and markets, Equity Research opportunities at Fidelity are among the most desirable anywhere. Why? Because no one gives first-year Associates the responsibility and independence to make significant investment decisions like we do. We seek people who are highly motivated, take initiative, and work well under pressure. And whether your background is in English, Engineering, or Business, an avid interest and intellectual curiosity about the stock market is what we look for in all candidates. While you will enjoy a high degree of autonomy, you won't have to go it alone. Many of the brightest minds and best resources in the industry are in place to support you, along with instant access to the most powerful research capabilities available. So before you make a decision on your investment career, invest some time with us. Hear how a career at Fidelity in Boston rivals anything you could ever find on Wall Street. We'll be coming to your campus soon.

MAKE THE RIGHT INVESTMENT IN YOUR FUTURE.

INFORMATION SESSION:
Equity Research Associates
Queen's University
Wednesday, October 14th, 5:30 p.m.–7:30 p.m.
University Club

Fidelity Investments is committed to creating a diversified environment and proud to be an equal opportunity employer.

WHERE 12 MILLION INVESTORS PUT THEIR TRUST.

"Beating the Street," Peter Lynch. Simon & Schuster © 1993.

Letters to the Editors continued...

nessed both rallies and discussions with various Queen's administrators, who simply turned the other cheek. Our concerns will not go away, however, and our voices need to be heard.

Jones recognizes this "perpetual stalemate" between the administration and students. Why then, does he continually mock those who are fighting to end it? His inability to understand that James Worrall — a Meds student with a potentially high paying job — could be concerned over these matters shows that "BrockJonesland" must indeed be a cold and selfish place, void of sympathy and humanity. His ignorance of the ethical issues at stake (i.e. the resulting lack of diversity in the socio-economic background of the student population and the privatization of knowledge) and failure to recognize the financial burdens of his peers, is as constant and worrisome as the administration's insensitivity towards these same issues. To me, this not only justifies student action, but shows its necessity.

LEYLA MAHDAVIANI
ARTS '00

Accessibility first; tax cuts second

Dear Editors,

Please allow me to respond to Brock Jones' letter (Sept. 29) criticizing my article "Real change depends on real action" (Sept. 22). Mr. Jones suggests that I consider the plight of Indonesian and that of Canadian students directly analogous. Rather, I used the Indonesian example to show that when students get together and stand up for themselves, they can often provoke change, even if it seemed impossible at first. Our situation is similar to theirs only in that our voices also don't seem to count in the decision-making process.

Rather than encouraging students to "throw a fit," I am encouraging them to utilize one of their most basic democratic rights: the right to protest. This right is enshrined in our Charter as a basic freedom — right up there with freedom of speech.

Ontario spends less on university education than any other province in Canada, and less than 49 of 50 American states.

Citizens have been using protest as an instrument of change for thousands of years. It represents their ultimate attempt to influence their government when other methods don't work.

I agree with Mr. Jones that the fundamental problem is money. He writes, "our governments are broke. End of story." However, as the Ontario government proudly declares, it has made numerous tax cuts. It repeatedly chooses to listen to business interests instead of students. That may be a good decision or a bad decision, but it's a decision. Mr. Jones implies that government is not accountable for that decision because there is no other option. His statement is not simply undemocratic, it is factually wrong.

Principal Leggett himself pointed out that Ontario spends less on university education than any other province in Canada, and less than 49 of 50 American states. The Principal also admits that the university's intense efforts to secure corporate sponsorship have met with only middling success. As Mr. Jones suggests, maybe students shouldn't get a "free ride," but why is it that even the poorest provinces can afford to spend more on students than a wealthy province like Ontario? Let's face it, no Canadian government has ever been as hard on students as the Harris government.

I am lucky — I can pay my tuition. I am concerned that many would-be students will not be able to. Mr. Jones argues in his recent article (October 2) that higher enrollment proves that students are willing to incur debt to reap the later rewards of university education. Indeed, many are. Higher enrollment, however, only demonstrates how important a university education is in the modern world — so important that limiting accessibility may fundamentally disenfranchise poorer citizens.

Increasingly, university campuses are populated by the middle and upper classes. Anyone who thinks that higher tuition does not limit accessibility should note that Queen's has one of the most socio-economically homogenous student bodies in Canada.

Lastly, Mr. Jones writes that I should not 'bitch' about tuition levels because I am a medical student. I do admit that I am privileged, but I fail to see why my privilege makes it wrong for me to argue any one side of the issue. I believe that tuition increases should stop for all students, even for arts students like Mr. Jones. Although he may not think so, many people criticize this government for reasons other than self-interest. Mr. Jones should attack the argument, not the person. Does he think that one's opinions are determined by one's choice of profession? If that were so, we should all be asking ourselves why we made a golf pro the premier.

JAMES WORRALL
MEDS '01

Economic realities first; tuition second

Dear Editors,

In Tuesday's Journal Carrie Reid wrote in a letter criticizing my suggested reforms of the tuition and student loan system. I would like to take a few moments to help her and others who share her views understand why I believe what I do.

Ms. Reid suggested that the only reason that university enrollment has increased with rising tuition is because of 'spoiled rich kids' like myself making it into university. This argument is based on a premise that more rich kids are entering university, apparently at a rate faster than poor students are dropping out. It is ludicrous. When tuition was low, 100% of my 'rich bastard' friends from UCC made it into university, and when tuition is high, 100% of us will also make it into university. There's been no change in the rich making it into university. Tuition fees don't affect us whatsoever. But if applications are still rising overall despite rising tuition, then poorer students must also be applying in record numbers despite increased tuition because they recognize the values of higher education.

Ms. Reid also attacked my suggested Income Contingent Repayment Loan (ICRL) program, saying that in reality the added interest charges make for a bigger debt in the end. She is correct. However, the beauty of

Continued on page 10

Footloose in Canada

Student Class Fares

Vancouver	from $359
Calgary	from $299
Edmonton	from $299
Regina	from $329
Winnipeg	from $229
Halifax	from $239
Saint John	from $339
St. John's	from $279

Free Date Change
Don't know your exam schedule? No need to worry! Book your student class flights and you'll receive a coupon for a free date change.

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
186 Princess St., Kingston (at Montreal)
Lodging Travel 549-3553 Long Haul Group Travel 549-3561
Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

So affordable, you only have to eat macaroni and cheese 6 days a week.

clearNET pcs

- ClearNet extends your service to 90% of Canada's population
  - You can use your internet minutes anywhere in Canada
  - There's a 30-day return policy on all equipment
  - Our really affordable rate plans include free local calls on your birthday
- $20 a month includes 100 minutes and a voice mail and caller ID
- $30 a month includes unlimited minutes and 100 minutes of free mail and caller ID
- Pick it up at the bookstore, call 1-888-253-2763, or visit our website at www.clearnet.com for more details.

Trade marks used under licence from Clearnet Communications Inc.

Multideas Promotions

Screen Print and Embroidery.
In house Graphic Design.
More than 300,000
Promotional Products to choose from!

Wide range of in-stock or customized
SPORTSWEAR.
Want to promote your TEAM? Leave it to US!

Make '98 the year to remember.
Make an impression at your conference.

Quality merchandise at very competitive prices.

Come and visit our showroom
We are licensed for the Queen's logo.

530 Barnsley Cres. Kingston, ON
Tel: (613) 634-2437 Fax: (613) 634-2505
www.multideas.com
multi@adan.kingston.net

Our Hurt Penguins Sale Won't Last Forever.

STARTS TODAY!

SMOKE DAMAGED

MISPRINTED

UNCOVERED

DOG
EARRIED

BENT

Every year the Campus Bookstore presents the Hurt Penguins Sale, consisting of a huge assortment of books that are publishers overrun or discontinued items. It's your chance to find great books at the great price of only $3.00 a piece! Come to the Campus Bookstore and find great books at an unbeatable price. It won't last forever!

Campus Bookstore • Clark Hall • Weekdays 9-8, Saturday 10-5
www.campusbookstore.com • 545-2955
Owned and Operated by Students Since 1909

Letters...

the ICRL is that while your income is below a certain level, you don't have to pay back any money at all. So, in those first few years when it's hard to get on your feet and find a job, you don't have the burden of immediate debt repayment hanging over you. Unlike the current system which demands repayment almost immediately, despite your income level. I believe the ICRL is the lesser of the two evils and makes university far more accessible to those poorer students whom Ms. Reid is concerned about.

Finally, Ms. Reid claimed that Queen's may only produce doctors and lawyers because students who pursue degrees that don't provide high paying jobs will take longer to pay off a larger debt. A philosophy major, for instance, will not have the earning-prospects as a doctor, and will face a greater debt load in the long run. Applications to these programs may be hindered. It is unfortunate, perhaps, but also inevitable. If someone enters Queen's and chooses to pursue a practically useless degree, say in women's studies or philosophy, that is their own decision. They know fully well entering their degree program that their job prospects may be weak in the future. It is their responsibility to accept these consequences, and this hardly changes under the ICRL.

Ms. Reid, I do not think you are a 'silly leftist girl.' I know you are very passionately concerned about tising tuition and want to make sure university is open to everyone who deserves to be here, regardless of their income. Believe it or not, so do I. I welcome debate on how we achieve those goals. But they must be done within the economic realities you seem to despise. If we ignore them, we are only dooming ourselves to an even worse situation.

BROCK JONES
ARTS '00

PREGNANCY

I respect my body

Dear Editors:

Perhaps it is due to my extreme young age and naivety, as so, um, nicely pointed out by Christophet Boodram, but I am rather confused by his letter to the editor of September 29.

What was revealed by my expressing disdain for Ms. Natvik's poor choice of vocabulary? That I respect myself and my gender enough to take exception to derogatory terms when in reference to body parts? Or possibly that I think it's important for people to know that those terms are crude and UNACCEPTABLE?

I strain to reason how Mr. Boodram could have termed me as being "uncomfortable." I wonder, did he actually read my letter in its entirety? Is it fair to assume that it is not I, but Mr. Boodram, who is uncomfortable, being faced with a female who refuses to read insulting slang and accept it as journalism?

Can one actually live in today's society and still accept "tits" and "boobs" as appropriate words? If you're Christophet Boodram, apparently so.

KATIE EDWARDS
ARTS '02

Features

Wagging the HOG

Why dirty Bill is the best U.S. president ever

BY MALCOLM LEVY

IN THIS MODERN DAY AMERICAN version of tarring and feathering social deviants (the media's dissection of Bill Clinton's back toom debauchery), what has gone unnoticed is how wonderful a president dirty Bill actually is. While it goes without saying that Bill's clever use of the catch-phrase and staunch ambiguity towards international affairs leaves him in good standing where Kennedy and Reagan fall short. While John and Ron espoused two completely unrealistic concepts (political freedom and constant economic success respectively), Bill favours the virtues of smoking pot, bribery, money laundering and adultery. While not condoning these actions, there is no doubt that the majority of people in the United States can relate to at least one of Bill's "atrocities."

Bill favours the virtues of smoking pot, bribery, money laundering and adultery. While not condoning these actions, there is no doubt that the majority of people in the United States can relate to at least one of Bill's "atrocities."

This is not to say that others haven't come close; in the 1980s, Ronald Reagan's Hollywood antics and bouts with amnesia came close to fitting right in with the make-believe economic growth of the country. Unfortunately though, the crash of 1987 had the depression of some foreign neo-... list (pick your adjective) film, which lay in stark contrast to the apple pie and ice cream silver screen Ronnie so proudly represented. A few decades earlier, J.F.K. had symbolized the freedom and promise of a bold, new generation until he was "replaced" by Texas war hawk Lyndon B. Johnson. In order to prevent such a replacement, Clinton has constructed a $56 million deal with the New York crime families to have their crone, Hatold Ickes, as Deputy Chief of Staff. Same story, different generation.

There is one definitive reason why William Jefferson Clinton succeeds where Kennedy and Reagan fall short. While John and Ron espoused two completely unrealistic concepts (political freedom and constant economic success respectively), Bill favours the virtues of smoking pot, bribery, money laundering and adultery. While not condoning these actions, there is no doubt that the majority of people in the United States can relate to at least one of Bill's "atrocities." So, during this time of burning Bubba at the stake, I humbly put forward the notion that Bill Clinton is the best president the U.S. has ever had.

AS CONTROVERSY AROUND the president began to erupt earlier this summer, former Time magazine reporter Nina Burleigh made the statement that "I would have been quite willing to let myself be ravished by the president, should he have but asked... just to thank him for keeping abortion legal." In response to this, feminist and conservative critics alike joined forces to lash out against Burleigh's "indecent statement." This bonding between members of the Christian Right and Feminist Left has been commonplace since the beginnings of the Starr Inquisition. Except for in times of war, no president has ever been so successful in bringing such factional sides together for one common cause.

The circus surrounding the Starr report has also been quite an effective method of highlighting the hypocritical, close-minded, americocentric view of the world which Americans hold so dear. In a 1987 interview on "60 Minutes" Kenneth Starr stated that "Public media should not contain explicit or implied descriptions of sex acts. Our society should be purged of the perverts who provide the media with pornographic material while pretending it has some redeeming social value under the public's right to know."

Well, either old Kenny is suffering from short-term memory loss or his political beliefs are determined by which party is in office at the present time. It seems only fitting that when interviewed, the majority of the population claims that they have no interest in the Clinton/Lewinsky scandal, yet at the same time one finds these people glued to their televisions for the next tidbit of information on where Bill stuck one of his cigars. This ridiculous attitude lies not only with the slack-jawed yokels giving their opinion on CNN 24 hours a day, but also with the lackies in highest realms of American politics.

In response to the situation, Missouri Senator John Ashcroft remarked that "America simply cannot afford a dishon-

"Public media should not contain explicit or implied descriptions of sex acts. Our society should be purged of the perverts who provide the media with pornographic material while pretending it has some redeeming social value under the public's right to know."

— Kenneth Starr in a 1987 60 Minutes interview

ompleted leader." Such a statement lies in complete contrast with the standing ovation given to President Clinton at the United Nations Monetary Fund meeting held recently in New York. As opposed to being dishonoured, Clinton has received huge support from the international community.

In fact, it's no wonder why the international community has embraced Clinton so amicably when one looks at the affairs he has undertaken overseas. In the Middle East Clinton has sworn allegiances at the rate he eats cheeseburgers in his quest to keep both Israel and the Palestinians on their toes. This strategy of foreign policy, known as "diplomatic ambiguity," has arguably prevented the two sides from coming to any conclusion on the peace accord. In the former Soviet Union the Clinton administration has worked hand in hand with Russian mobsters to illegally extradite whistleblowers who have revealed massive KGB-Mafia corruption. He has also aided in the construction

Continued on page 14

Alfie's
PUB
PRESENTS

HUEVOS RANCHEROS

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 14

WITH OPENING ACT

FRANKLINS
FAULT

HUEVOS RANCHEROS
TICKETS $5
AT THE DOOR

He Has Saved The World From Death And Corruption.
He Has Had Sex With Hundreds Of Beautiful Women.
He Makes 45 Copies A Minute.

We're more than just 6 cent copies.
We're Resume Design from $15,
Fax Receiving and Sending, Binding
Poster and Pamphlet
Design, and Overhead Transparencies

Continued from page 11

tion of state-of-the-art offensive nuclear strike capabilities for China, Russia, Pakistan and Iran. It seems that Clinton is following in the heroic footsteps of the presidents before him in creating a "good old war" to keep the American economy entertained for a while.

"I would have been quite willing to let myself be ravished by the president, should he have but asked... just to thank him for keeping abortion legal."

— Nina Burleigh, former Time magazine reporter

Another remarkable development out of the Lewinsky debacle is the incredible amount of economic and intellectual stimulation which has arisen. Talk show hosts, still confined to reeling off dated jokes about O.J. have embraced the affair with gusto. Jay Leno and Conan O'Brien have found enough material to take them into the next century and beyond. Monica has already been offered over $10 million to write her autobiography, and there is no doubt that the competition will be fierce when it comes to the rights of the TV docu-drama. Burger King and Pepsi are already preparing advertising campaigns based on the "morality" of their fast food and drinks stacked against the Clinton-associated McDonald's and Coca-Cola.

IN LOOKING AT THE OVERALL success of the Clinton Administration, it must be concluded that he has done a relatively good job as president. The budget is balanced for the first time since Kennedy. Unemployment is lower than it has been in over a decade, and the stock market is at its highest point since 1987. The media has conveniently omitted these few facts since this "scandal" began. The American people need to take a long look at themselves and realize that Bill

The skinny on Bill Clinton: lacies man, chronic marijuana smoker, backroom dealer, McDonald's cheeseburger mauler and all-round swell guy from Arkansas, the heart of the U.S.A.

ain't such a bad guy. Just because he screwed around in office like the majority of presidents allegedly have before him, doesn't necessarily mean that he should be charged for impeachment when lying about it in court. First of all, the question was completely irrelevant to the issue at stake during the Paula Jones affair, and secondly, why should any individual be forced to tell his private matters in front of the world? In this world of Internet porn and Late Night HBO, hasn't the public gotten their fill of smut for a while? This is why I hereby ask the American people to think about where they are and what kind of lives they're living before they get too sidetracked with where Bill's parking Air Force One.

Malcolm Levy, a third year cultural studies student at McGill University, is The Journal's Montréal correspondent.

Starr report highlights

- Physical evidence conclusively establishes that the President and Ms. Lewinsky had a sexual relationship. ... Ms. Lewinsky turned over a navy blue dress that she said she had worn during a sexual encounter with the President on February 28, 1997. According to Ms. Lewinsky, she noticed stains on the garment the next time she took it from her closet. ... the genetic markers on the semen, which match the President's DNA, are characteristic of one out of 7.87 trillion Caucasians ...
- According to Ms. Lewinsky, the President touched her breasts and genitalia — which means that his conduct met the Jones definition of sexual relations even under his theory.
- The sexual encounters generally occurred in or near the private study off the Oval Office — most often in the windowless hallway outside the study. During many of their sexual encounters, the President stood leaning against the doorway of the bathroom

- across from the study, which, he told Ms. Lewinsky, eased his sore back.
- According to Ms. Lewinsky, she performed oral sex on the President on nine occasions. On all nine of those occasions, the President fondled and kissed her bare breasts. He touched her genitals, both through her underwear and directly, bringing her to orgasm on two occasions. On one occasion, the President inserted a cigar into her vagina. On another occasion, she and the President had brief genital-to-genital contact.
- According to Ms. Lewinsky's friend Neysa Erbland, President Clinton once confided in Ms. Lewinsky that he was uncertain whether he would remain married after he left the White House. ... Ms. Lewinsky thought, according to Ms. Erbland, that "maybe she will be his wife."
- On 10 to 15 occasions, she and the President had phone sex.
- Ms. Lewinsky and the President

- exchanged numerous gifts. By her estimate, she gave him about 30 items, and he gave her about 18.
- [During the first few instances of oral sex.] he stopped her before he ejaculated because, Ms. Lewinsky testified, "he didn't know me well enough or he didn't trust me yet."
- At one point during [a sexual] encounter, someone entered the Oval Office. In Ms. Lewinsky's recollection, "The President zipped up real quickly and went out and came back in. ... I just remember laughing because he had walked out there and he was visibly aroused, and I just thought it was funny."
- On August 18, [1996], Ms. Lewinsky attended the President's 50th birthday party at Radio City Music Hall. ... According to Ms. Lewinsky, when the President reached past her at the rope line to shake hands with another guest, she reached out and touched his crotch in a "playful" fashion.
- On Saturday, May 24, 1997, according to Ms. Lewinsky, the President ended their intimate relationship. ... Earlier in his marriage, he told her, he had had hundreds of affairs, but since turning 40, he had made a concerted effort to be faithful. He said he was attracted to Ms. Lewinsky, considered her a great person, and hoped they would remain friends. He pointed out that he could do a great deal for her. The situation, he stressed, was not Ms. Lewinsky's fault. Ms. Lewinsky, weeping, tried to persuade the President not to end the sexual relationship, but he was unyielding.

IS YOUR BODY GETTING YOU DOWN? LET ME PUT MY HANDS ON YOU!

- Close to campus and downtown
- Personal one hour treatment sessions
- Comprehensive, fun, cheerful atmosphere
- Extended health plans, reasonable rates

Evelyn Southern Physiotherapy
BNSc (PT), R.P.T.
Post-graduate Study of Osteopathy
Canadian College of Osteopathy
68 Pembroke Street

For all your bumps, spills and headaches
Call 544-7023 to discuss or schedule an appointment.

Got Queen's Spirit?

Volunteer for Degree for a day!
Oct 21 & / or 22. Pair up with a high school student for a campus tour, a class & pizza lunch at Alfies.
Info meeting on Wed. Oct. 14 or Thurs. Oct. 15 at 6:00pm in Stirling D.

Call the High School Liaison Committee at the MAC for more info. 545-6000 ext. 5178

Paradiso Pizza

400 Elliott Ave., Rockcliffe Plaza
548-7006

Pizza	14" 8 slices	18" 10 slices	21" 12 slices
BASIC	7.99	9.99	11.99
1 Toppings	9.23	11.53	13.73
2 Toppings	10.22	12.82	15.22
3 Toppings	11.21	14.11	16.71
4 Toppings	12.20	15.40	18.20
5 Toppings	13.19	16.69	19.69

Schiacciata (House Special)
Small.....8.99
Large.....10.99

1 FREE litre of Coke with purchase of any size pizza.
Cannot be used in conjunction with any other offer.

SPORTS & FITNESS

MAJOR LEAGUE BASEBALL ROCKED BY CANCER

As a result of tragic circumstances, Major League Baseball is now faced with an opportunity to take its World Series to another level — acknowledging a disease which has taken the lives of millions of people. Since the playoffs have begun, Darryl Strawberry has undergone surgery for colon cancer and Cal Ripken Sr. has begun chemotherapy to treat lung cancer. In addition to these tragic cases, former major-leaguer Mark Belanger and Dan Quisenberry have succumbed to this horrible disease.

The day before Game 3 of their divisional playoffs against the Texas Rangers, the New York Yankees found out that Strawberry was going to miss the rest of the playoffs because a large portion of his intestine had to be removed to stop the spread of a walnut-sized tumour found in his colon.

After watching his son complete his record of consecutive games played, former Baltimore Orioles manager and coach Cal Ripken Sr. announced that he was undergoing treatment for lung cancer.

Former Kansas City Royals' relief ace Quisenberry died at the age of 45 from brain cancer. He had undergone surgery twice since last December and was recently named to the Royals' Hall of Fame. At the induction ceremony this past summer, former teammate Frank White, now a Royals coach, sobbed openly on the sidelines. Finally, one of the best fielding shortstops in the history of baseball, Baltimore Oriole Mark Belanger passed away from lung cancer after being diagnosed last year.

Major League Baseball should pay tribute to these players. It would be a great opportunity to raise money for cancer research. Perhaps the Commissioner's office could suggest to the owners of the two World Series finalists that they donate $1 from every ticket sold to cancer research. This alone could possibly raise over $300,000. If given the opportunity, I am sure millions of baseball fans would answer the call and donate money to this noble cause as well.

IF CHRISTMAS CAME EARLY...
• A Canadian hockey team would be playing deep into June.
• The actual game of soccer would rival the excitement of FIFA '98 on the Nintendo.
• Hat tricks would outnumber concussions in the NHL this year.

Return of the ice age Lacrosse starts hot

The Journal experts preview the NHL season

BY AARON COLLINS

In Canada, the month of October signifies Oktoberfest beer guzzling and Thanksgiving turkey shoveling. The only thing better than these events is the start of the NHL season on October 9.

WEST — COLORADO

The defending champs, having added Deutschlander Uwe Krupp to the blue line and having Sergei Federov in the lineup for the whole season make them formidable opponents again. However, with the addition of Brett Hull and the full recovery of Joe Nieuwendyk, the Dallas Stars are poised to take their second President's Trophy as the NHL's best for the regular season. Unfortunately, over the past 10 years this title has not served teams well on their way to the Stanley Cup.

Look for the Colorado Avalanche to come out of the Western Conference, beating out the Red Wings in the conference finals. With scrappy yet talented veterans like Joe Sakic and Claude Lemieux, and three Stanley Cup rings in nets from Patrick Roy, the Avs are ready to sip from the Cup once again.

EAST — PHILADELPHIA

The old Wales conference will be much more interesting as it lacks the powerhouses that dominate the Western Conference. With Mike Richter focusing on hockey pucks rather than dollar signs and Wayne Gretzky being Wayne Gretzky, look for the New York Rangers to be tough come playoff time. The Buffalo Sabres and New Jersey Devils with excellent goaltending, will be tough nuts to crack. However, with a rookie coach in Jersey and each team lacking significant scoring punch, both will have trouble winning in the 'second season.'

WEST — DALLAS

A lot of analysts have picked the Stars as the team most likely to knock off Detroit, and for

BY KEITH GEREN

WEST — BUFFALO
In the new NHL, big and tough is out, and small and quick is in, a pattern which will be aided this year when the league repositions the nets and the introduces a two referee system.

BY KEITH GEREN

WEST — DALLAS
A lot of analysts have picked the Stars as the team most likely to knock off Detroit, and for

BY KEITH GEREN

WEST — BUFFALO
In the new NHL, big and tough is out, and small and quick is in, a pattern which will be aided this year when the league repositions the nets and the introduces a two referee system.

BY KEITH GEREN

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL HOCKEY POOL

RULES

1. Pick three forwards, two defencemen, one enforcer and one goalie. Enforcers will receive one point for every five penalty minutes. Goalies will be given two points for a win and three points for a shutout.
2. Pool is open to Queen's students, faculty and staff only. No cost to enter but only one entry per person. Deliver entries to The Journal house at 272 Earl Street. Once entry has been received, no changes will be permitted. Deadline for submissions is Friday, October 16 at 4 p.m.
3. Points will be tabulated from start of regular season to Mar. 12. Standings will be published occasionally in The Journal. Winners will be announced March 19. Top three scores will receive prizes.

NAME _____ FACULTY/YEAR _____
PHONE NO. _____ E-MAIL _____

Forwards (pick 3)	Goalies (pick 1)	Defence (pick 2)
<input type="checkbox"/> Ron Francis, CAR <input type="checkbox"/> Joe Sakic, COL <input type="checkbox"/> Jaromir Jagr, PIT <input type="checkbox"/> Mike Modano, DAL <input type="checkbox"/> Mats Sundin, TOR <input type="checkbox"/> Zigmund Palffy, NYI <input type="checkbox"/> Peter Forsberg, COL <input type="checkbox"/> Sergei Federov, DET	<input type="checkbox"/> Chris Osgood, DET <input type="checkbox"/> Patrick Roy, COL <input type="checkbox"/> Martin Brodeur, NJ <input type="checkbox"/> Mike Richter, NYR <input type="checkbox"/> Curtis Joseph, TOR <input type="checkbox"/> Dominik Hasek, BUF <input type="checkbox"/> Olaf Kolzig, WAS	<input type="checkbox"/> Oleg Tverdokhovo, PHO <input type="checkbox"/> Ed Jovanovski, FLA <input type="checkbox"/> Sergei Gonchar, WAS <input type="checkbox"/> Vladimir Malakhov, MON <input type="checkbox"/> Roman Hamrlik, EDM <input type="checkbox"/> Bryan Berard, NYI <input type="checkbox"/> Brian Leetch, NYR <input type="checkbox"/> Scott Niedermayer, NJ <input type="checkbox"/> Sandis Ozolinsh, COL <input type="checkbox"/> Sergei Zubov, DAL
<input type="checkbox"/> Keith Tkachuk, PHO <input type="checkbox"/> Wayne Gretzky, NYR <input type="checkbox"/> Eric Lindros, PHI <input type="checkbox"/> Paul Kariya, ANA <input type="checkbox"/> Jolin Leclair, PHI <input type="checkbox"/> Peter Bondra, WAS <input type="checkbox"/> Teemu Selanne, ANA <input type="checkbox"/> Alexei Yashin, OTT	<input type="checkbox"/> Matthew Barnaby, BUF <input type="checkbox"/> Chris Simon, WAS <input type="checkbox"/> Tie Domi, TOR <input type="checkbox"/> Sandy McCarthy, TB <input type="checkbox"/> Donald Brashear, VAN	<input type="checkbox"/> Niklas Lidstrom, DET <input type="checkbox"/> Al MacInnis, STL <input type="checkbox"/> Rob Blake, LA <input type="checkbox"/> Kevin Hatcher, PIT <input type="checkbox"/> Steve Duchesne, LA <input type="checkbox"/> Larry Murphy, DET

Entries due by Friday, Oct. 16 @ 4 p.m.
Deliver entries to 272 Earl Street
For more info call 545-2800

The Queen's women's lacrosse team began their inaugural season with varsity status in style by beating McGill and the University of Toronto on Saturday, October 3.

The squad defeated Toronto in their first game of the season by a 7-4 score, paced by Janet Pye, a fourth-year computer science student, with a three goal performance. The team immediately followed that up with a 15-0 trouncing of McGill, with six goals coming off of the stick of veteran centre/coach Anne Benedetti.

The wins, while seemingly easy, have come after a lot of change for this team, which is moving from competitive club status to varsity recognition.

"This is a transition year for us," said Benedetti. "We are running the team the same way as last season, but we are moving in the right direction." With the practices and administrative issues being dealt with by a three person executive: Benedetti, Nancy Symons and Darcie Spearing, things are running fairly smoothly.

"We get along really well and the rest of the team is helping us out a lot," explained Benedetti, a fourth-year Con-Ed student. While things are going well off the field, the team on the field is looking to be very strong as well.

"We were expecting our strength to be on the attack, but with the return of Symons and Ainsley Hunt, a first-year student who has had a lot of experience on the junior provincial team, on the defence, we are very balanced," said Benedetti, who plays on the senior provincial team.

With the return of a good core of veterans and many rookies who are contributing, the team looks to improve. After finishing last season second in the conference to York, there is only one place to go from here.

With major competition coming from Toronto, Guelph and Western, the team is looking to win the inaugural OUA lacrosse championship. "We are a very strong team and I really think that we can contend for the [OUA] championship," said Benedetti.

With a 2-0 record, the team is well on their way. The quest continues on Sunday, October 18 at 9 a.m. against rival York University. The team then plays at 1 p.m. versus the hapless McGill squad, both games taking place on the North Field of West Campus.

Where teams stand

Queen's athletics standings as of Oct 8

MEN'S SOCCER

EAST	G	W	L	T	P
Lanarcton	8	7	0	1	22
Tanouba	9	5	1	1	18
York	8	4	2	2	14
Queen's	9	4	3	2	14
Carleton	9	3	4	2	11
Nipissing	8	2	5	1	7
West	8	1	6	1	4
Ryerson	8	1	6	0	3

MEN'S RUGBY

Queen's	G	W	L	T	F	A	P
Queen's	4	4	0	0	154	58	8
Guelph	4	3	1	0	150	57	6
McMaster	4	2	2	0	79	45	4
Waterloo	4	0	4	0	19	184	0
Western	4	0	4	0	17	216	0

WOMEN'S RUGBY

Queen's	G	W	L	T	F	A	P
Queen's	4	4	0	0	101	41	6
Guelph	4	3	1	0	113	27	6
McMaster	4	2	1	1	138	35	5
Waterloo	4	2	1	1	55	46	5
York	4	1	3	0	63	55	4
Guelph	4	1	3	0	58	99	2
Queen's	4	0	3	1	34	138	1

WOMEN'S TENNIS

Queen's	G	W	L	MW	MLP
Queen's	5	0	30	5	10
McGill	5	0	28	6	10
Queen's	5	0	26	7	10
Toronto	6	3	26	15	6
York	6	2	23	19	4
Western	5	1	24	25	2
Waterloo	5	0	5	1	34
Laurier	5	0	5	0	35

WOMEN'S SOCCER

EAST	G	W	L	T	P
Queen's	8	7	0	1	22
York	8	6	1	1	18
Ottawa	6	4	2	0	12
Toronto	8	3	4	1	10
Carleton	7	2	4	1	7
Trent	7	1	5	1	4
Ryerson	7	0	6	1	1

MEN'S TENNIS

Queen's	G	W	L	MW	MLP
Queen's	6	6	0	36	3
McMaster	5	1	35	7	10
Western	6	5	1	28	14
Toronto	6	4	2	26	14
McGill	6	3	3	19	22
York	6	2	4	24	4
Brook	6	1	5	14	28
Ottawa	6	1	5	7	34
Waterloo	6	0	6	5	37

FIELD HOCKEY

Toronto	G	W	L	T	F	A	P
Toronto	11	10	0	1	45	4	21
Guelph	11	7	1	3	19	5	17
York	10	7	2	1	10	9	15
Waterloo	11	6	2	3	25	8	15
Western	10	2	3	5	3	6	9
Queen's	10	2	6	2	4	16	6
Carleton	10	1	7	3	7	34	4
McGill	10	0	6	3	1	29	3
Trent	9	0	7	2	3	26	2

CIUW TOP 10

MEN'S CROSS-COUNTRY

- 1) Windsor
- 2) Guelph
- 3) Victoria
- 4) Queen's
- 5) Calgary
- 6) UBC
- 7) Western
- 8) Alberta
- 9) Laurier
- 10) Manitoba

WOMEN'S CROSS-COUNTRY

- 1) Western
- 2) Guelph
- 3) Saskatchewan
- 4) Toronto
- 5) Alberta
- 6) McGill
- 7) Victoria
- 8) Queen's
- 9) UBC
- 10) Windsor

WOMEN'S SOCCER

- 1) Alberta
- 2) Queen's
- 3) British Columbia
- 4) Laval
- 5) Western Ontario
- 6) Dalhousie
- 7) Victoria
- 8) Guelph
- 9) York
- 10) Ottawa

FOOTBALL

- 1) Western Ontario
- 2) Mount Allison
- 3) Saskatchewan
- 4) British Columbia
- 5) McMaster
- 6) Waterloo
- 7) Queen's
- 8) Calgary
- 9) Saint Mary's
- 10) Babyp's

WOMEN'S LACROSSE

EAST	G	W	L	T	F	A	P
Toronto	4	3	0	3	37	10	6
Queen's	2	2	0	2	22	4	4
McGill	5	0	3	0	1	39	0
York	1	0	1	0	2	9	0

O-QIFC FOOTBALL

Queen's	G	W	L	T	F	A	P
Queen's	4	3	0	1	827	43	6
Ottawa	4	3	1	0	844	61	6
Babyp's	3	3	2	1	111	117	6
Western	4	2	2	0	79	80	4
Laval	5	2	3	0	123	103	4
McGill	5	2	3	0	40	107	4
Carleton	5	1	4	0	66	181	2

In the game

Field hockey

The Queen's field hockey team's offence was dramatically shut down in Nepean on the October 3-4 weekend. Amber Palmer counted the lone goal for the Gaels as they lost all three games. On Saturday, the Gaels lost 2-0 to Toronto and 2-1 to Western and Sunday saw the team limp home after losing to Guelph 2-0.

Women's rugby

The women's rugby team continued their struggles after being pummeled by McMaster University by a count of 65-0.

Rowing

Queen's men's and women's rowing team had a remarkable tournament in which there were two first-place finishes, two second-place finishes and one fourth-place finish. Coming in first was the lightweight coxed four men and the lightweight eight women. Finishing second was the lightweight double women and the lightweight eight men. Rounding out the successful tournament was the heavyweight eight men with the fourth-place finish.

Men's volleyball

In an exhibition tournament, the men's volleyball team swept all five games and were crowned tournament champions at the Brock Invitational. On their way to the top, the Gaels beat Laurentian 3-0, Guelph 3-1, Laurier 3-1, McMaster 3-0 and Ryerson 3-0. With these resounding victories, it looks like an exciting year for the men's team.

Men's water polo

The men's water polo team defeated Ottawa by a formidable count of 18-3 but then took two sets back because of losses to Carleton (13-8) and York (13-10).

Golf

The men's golf team came within an inch of winning the OUA Golf Championship. The team finished a close second to the University of Ottawa, taking 609 shots to Ottawa's 610. The team was led by captain Matt McCloy's fourth place finish.

Stars to shine

Continued from page 15

It is for this reason that I like the Sabres, whose speedy forwards skated circles around Eric Lindros and the rest of the orange giants in Philadelphia in last year's playoffs. The Sabres don't have a proven goal scorer, but they get the job done because they play as a team.

Other teams to keep an eye on include the Bruins and the Hurricanes, even if no one in North Carolina knows or cares about hockey. The Canadian teams in this conference will fair a little better than their counterparts in the west, but don't expect any miracles. Although they'll never get far in the post-season without more scoring, the Senators are probably the best of the three because they know how to backcheck. Montreal has explosive potential but the shaky Jocelyn Thibault is going to see a lot of rubber this winter. Toronto's problems in recent years have stemmed from poor defence, not poor goaltending, so the signing of Curtis Joseph is really no help.

TOASTING TEXAS

The Dominator and a gutsy team effort might get Buffalo to Game 6 or 7, but the Stars' lethal firepower and punishing defence will be too much for the over-worked Sabres to overcome.

ATHLETES OF THE WEEK

Setting for victory

Female

This week's Queen's Journal female athlete of the week, Julie Macmillan is poised to help lift the women's volleyball team to new heights. Macmillan, a fourth-year physical education student from Oakville, was named to the all-star team after an outstanding performance at the Brock Exhibition tournament on October 2-4.

Macmillan was instrumental in a 3-2 Gaels win over McMaster which saw them advance to the gold medal game. She excelled in the match and finished with 168 assists, 52 kills, 20 digs and two service aces. Later that day, the team lost the gold medal game to Laurier by a score of 3-2. Macmillan, however, continued her strong play and recorded 136 assists, 41 kills and eight digs.

In her opinion, the volleyball team showed a lot of character in the tournament and showed that they definitely have the ability to fight back.

While the exhibition tournament was a "good team building experience," it is time to shift the focus to October 30 — the start of the regular season according to Macmillan.

The team has two tournaments before the regular season begins, one of which will be hosted here at Queen's during the weekend of October 23-25. However, these will be tune-ups for the pending regular season.

After finishing her first three season eighth in the OUA, Macmillan and the team have vowed to not finish in that position again.

"(While) we haven't said what our goals are as of yet, we know we want to finish higher than eighth."

If the other members of the women's volleyball team are able to raise their level of play to that of Macmillan's, then the disappointing eighth-place finishes will be a thing of the past.

'The scoring machine'

Male

Seventeen goals is a good season total for most lacrosse players, but for this week's Queen's Journal male athlete of the week, it is all in a week-end's work.

Neil 'the scoring machine' Boon, a fourth-year attack, scored eight goals in an 11-9 win over Brock's 'B' squad and then followed that up with a nine goal performance in their 13-2 rout of Laurier, giving the squad a 4-1 record.

While the Laurier win seemed like a walk in the park, things got pretty tough on the lacrosse pitch.

"When they got down things got pretty rough in there," said the battered and bruised Guelph native.

Despite the constant physical attention, Boon's teammates marvel at his skill around the net.

"(Boon) is just so good around the net, when he gets the ball, it is amazing how he finishes," said veteran Jake Kuiken.

The three-time team scoring leader is equally willing to heap praise upon his teammates. "I have benefited from being on the receiving end of a lot of good set-ups from the attack and midfield," he explained.

That said, there is more to Boon's game than his quick stick and poise around the net.

"He has contributed a lot to our character as a team, he is a good leader," said veteran long-stick Steve MacLeod.

With games coming up against the vaunted Brock 'A' and Guelph sides, the team is hoping to hold on to third place.

"It is going to come down to us, York and Western for third place," said Boon. "I believe that we can get that spot."

If this weekend is any indication, he will play a big role in that quest.

Have Pouch Will Travel.

The Roots Kanga Hoody Regular $54.<sup>95</sup> NOW $39.<sup>99</sup>

ROOTS KINGSTON

Canadian Made 100% Cotton 3 Colours 4 Sizes

229 Princess Street - 546-7668 - Open Sundays

the Laundry Cafe

291 Princess St. 542-2282 OPEN TIL 2am.

Sunday Pasta Night

Salad, Pasta & Focaccia $4.95

Hit Canada Hard.

the most powerful Canadian search engine

www.altavistacanada.com

ALTA VISTA Canada Presented by TELUS

Want a JOB?!?

The official graduate photographer of the Tricolour Yearbook is hiring 4-5 part-time RECEPTIONISTS.

Apply by dropping off a resume and cover letter to the AMS office by October 23 @ 4:30pm.

The Campus Bookstore Is Pleased To Announce Our New Regular Hours Designed To Serve You Better:

Monday-Friday 9 AM - 8 PM Saturday 10 AM - 5 PM And Always Open At: www.campusbookstore.com

Clark Hall • Weekdays 9-8, Saturday 10-5 545-2955 • After January 1st 533-2955 Owned and Operated by Students Since 1909 www.campusbookstore.com

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

RAGING SPIRITS FROM THE WEST

Vancouver's Spirit of the West sweeps over K-Town

Concert Review

BY TRUNG NGUYEN

Amidst bobbing heads, flailing hands and a constant shower of beer, Vancouver-based Spirit of the West rocked a capacity crowd Wednesday night at AJ's. The band has always had a strong following in Kingston, especially amongst the student population at Queen's. Their concert Wednesday night was further proof of why fans keep coming back time and time again — a Spirit of the West show is not just a concert, it is an experience.

The show was to be opened by critically acclaimed Toronto-based songstress Emm Gryner. Unfortunately, Gryner fell ill shortly before the show, and had to drop out at the last minute. Any disappointment that may have resided in the audience quickly subsided when Spirit of the West took the stage. As soon as the first note rung through the PA system at AJ's, a frenzy of bodies swarmed the dance floor. With incredible energy and enthusiasm, the band proceeded to take the audience on a two hour journey of dance, mayhem, and pure unadulterated fun. Their accomplished musicianship shone throughout the performance, accentuating each member's unique talents and contributions. It's refreshing to see a band that allows all its members to have equal time in the spotlight. Even the merchandise manager was given credit when the band dedicated a song to him.

The band paid tribute to Kingston's own Tragically Hip during the concert by playing a song inspired by their recent tour with them in the United States. During an interview, lead vocalist Geoffrey Kelly cited The Hip as one of his favourite bands, and said he admires the cryptic lyricism that Gord Downie has been able to achieve with his song-writing. When asked about how he felt about his own lyrical development, Kelly responded by saying that "if someone spells it out for you on the first listen, then it just doesn't demand as much from the listener."

PHOTO BY MATT GILBERT

In the Spirit of Things, Vocalist/guitarist John Mann enraptures the crowd.

Along with vocalist and guitarist John Mann, Kelly assumes the responsibility of conceiving and developing the songs. Kelly and Mann have been called the best song-writing team in Canada. Their songs span a diverse spectrum of human experiences that range anywhere from university drinking anthems such as "Home for a Rest," to more introspective and darker songs such as "Tell Me What I Think."

One of the highlights of Wednesday night's concert was when drummer Vince Ditrich serenaded the audience with his rendition of the waltzy "That's Amoré."

Accompanied by Hugh McMillan on the mandolin and Tobin Frank on the accordion, Ditrich inspired the audience to join in the song by guiding them through the operatic melody at the end. Ditrich also provided another highlight later in the night when he drank, or more appropriately, showered himself with an entire bottle of beer at the beckoning of the audience. The band made no apologies for their wild and foolproof stage antics, and this seemed to reflect in the loud and boisterous audience. By the end of their first set, most people were arm in arm, singing along with the band. Of course the reason for this could have been the song that they chose to end their first set: "Home For a Rest." Needless to say, the floor at AJ's deserves more credit than it receives.

However, the crowd seemed dissatisfied with just one set. Always willing to please their fans, Spirit of the West came back and went tight into one of their perennial favourites "Sadness Grows." Even after finishing the second set, the crowds' chants for an encore only grew louder. So after nearly two hours of all out playing, Spirit of the West took to the stage for their second encore. Kelly took the reins and kicked into a traditional Celtic tune, but with his own little spin on things. Forever the showman, Kelly rhymed his way through introducing the band, member by member. Impromptu.

While the creativity and spontaneity of Spirit of the West is one of their calling cards, they have suffered in achieving more mainstream success in part due to their refusal to fall into the "fatal mistake" of adhering to popular fads. "Like every other band, we'd just like to have a little bit more success. It just makes life easier. The fact of the matter is that for us, there really isn't that cushion," said Kelly.

Although the dynamic band has seen members

Please see Spirit on page 21

Traveller crosses borders

Agnes exhibit fuses nature with metropolis

Art Review

BY VIRGINIA WIGMORE

At the forefront of the recent resurgence of abstract art is the young Toronto-based artist Sheila Gregory. She is known for her ability to capture the raw essence and animal nature of the urban environment. Her latest exhibit Traveller however, does not possess the same manic qualities of her previous works. Instead, traces of past cultures and hints of the harsh reality of nature intermingle with the world of neon lights and bustling metropolises. This transformation is a result of Gregory's travels to the Arctic Circle, and her excavation of Thule whaling villages on Somerset Island.

The brush strokes are intense, driven with emotion, yet placed by intuition, while the pools of acrylic paint are the consequence of simply pouring the paint onto the canvas and letting it forge its own path. Gregory sees painting as a means of tapping into the unconscious mind, basically surrendering herself to her emotions and materials.

"Shore Site" is a modern interpretation of the circle of life, with the first and last layers of paint embodying life and the middle layers, death or destruction.

The painting entitled "Shore Site" uses the layering of the paint to represent the levels of earth uncovered on an archaeological dig. At the forefront are large patches of green and black paint, representing vegetation and soil. Beneath the layers of green and black, are layers of white and red, alluding to the whale blood that would have saturated the snow surrounding the various Thule whaling villages. Encircling the initial colours are layers of brown and yellow, reminiscent of the sod houses, bone fragments and assorted tools that would have once been used in the ancient villages of this now extinct society. The power of this painting lies in the combination of the death that the dig uncovered and the possibility of the life and happiness that once infected these villages, as hinted at by the strokes of vibrant colours that peak through the layers.

"Shore Site" is a modern interpretation of the circle of life, with the first and last layers of paint embodying

PHOTO BY SAMSON WU

life and the middle layers, death or destruction.

A graduate of York University, she appeared in multiple solo and group shows since 1988. Gregory is acknowledged as one of the driving forces in artist-organized exhibits, which have revitalized the Toronto art scene in recent years. Her current exhibit entitled Traveller is on display at the Agnes Etherington Art Centre until November 1 and is worth seeing for its unique comparison of the stark environment of the Canadian north to the barrage of visual sensations encountered in Canadian cities.

Curio-us?

Zine hits the music scene

Magazine Review

BY LINDSAY ROBERTSON

Curio, a free-thinking, intelligent publication, is truly a mixed bag of fruits.

A quarterly that labels itself as an Independent Arts and Entertainment Forum, it's the first magazine I've read which covers such a broad range of, quite frankly, anything and everything.

Promising that you will "discover the subversive pleasure of thinking for yourself," Curio gathers all the interesting and original bits you might find in the deepest corners of other magazines and puts them in the first few pages. An excerpt from the Fabio's new romantic novel (tongue in cheek one hopes), original artwork and poetry, wise words from the New York urban caveman and a lengthy article on sari tying, all before you can say "why haven't I bought this already?"

Indeed why not, when it insures me that one can sound positively more urban after consumption. Random miscellanea and elephant facts aside (the average trunk is composed of 60,000 muscles), the column and feature writing in Curio is both intelligent and hard hitting. Journalist Celia Farber, a major figure in the Spin Trial, a campaign against sexual harassment, speaks out exhaustively about her year and a half on the case. What is immediately recognizable is that Farber, and all the other writers in Curio, really know what they are talking about. As one columnist Lucy Gwin points out, they are tackling issues which other journals fail to take on board. And if they do, they do not deal with them in such a down to earth and concise manner that is relevant to their subject matter.

All other stories of interest are brilliantly illustrated and encapsulate something for us all, including personal accounts of travel, childbirth and the growing problem of American gigolites in Cuba. My personal favourite is a six page special on the comic book college in New Jersey. Further to the back you'll discover the reading list entitled "Five books to read with a drink in your hand and your toes in the sand" along with comprehensive music and film reviews and many humorous asides.

Curio is indeed limitless and it certainly enjoys telling you just that. On the subscription page at the back it promises to be like a full meal of fine bohemian cuisine. The layout and artwork alone could be enough to keep your interest and with a lovely picture of Ice T on the front what more could you ask for?

Being a glossy magazine queen myself, Curio was a welcome break from being told the 10 fundamental steps to greatness. I liked it and learned a lot. I can now step outside confident of my new found urban street cool armed with facts a plenty to impress my friends with during Sunday brunch.

Did I enjoy thinking for myself? I normally do anyway and I'm not sure whether telling people en masse to think for themselves really constrains the basis of free thinking.

However, Curio definitely opened my eyes to a distinctively individual but unpretentious style of magazine culture. Still, if it is all a wee bit much and you're after something less eclectic then there is always the novel Wild, Fabio's newest.

KINGSTON IN FEBRUARY SUCKS!

A week in the Club Vila on the beach in Cancun, however, does not.

$1389.00 per person
Taxes included

ALL INCLUSIVE!

FEB. 20 - 27
Limited Space!

CALL SOON!

Marlin

TRAVEL
370 King St.
Call Betty 549-4400

Richardson
LSAT MCAT
GMAT GRE
Queen's University LSAT Nov. 7 & 8.
Register at 1 877 PREP-GOM or at Queen's University Continuing & Distance Studies, Macintosh-Corry
Hall, F100.
Fee: $260.00
www.prep.com 1 877 prep.com

Antz takes a stance

Animated film bugs with vague politics

Movie Review

BY JESSE CRAIG BELLINGER

After exhausting the cultural history and folk tales of several continents over a decade of animated features, major studios have seen their options shrink to the point where the micro-world of insects is one of the few unexplored plot devices.

Antz, the first of two bug-themed major-studio releases to hit theatres before December, is highly successful as a comedy, visually entertaining but frustratingly vague in its politics. Unlike George Orwell's 1984 and Animal Farm, two works to which Antz owes a deep measure of gratitude, Antz pushes the audience to the brink of one mode of thought before recklessly falling back upon the opposite. The resulting political stance — if Antz can be said to have one — is either ground-breaking in its fusion of socialist and democratic principles or careless in its confused message of individuality within a collective.

Antz tells the story of Z (with the voice of Woody Allen), a neurotic and utterly insignificant worker ant who longs for personal freedom and escape from the rigours of his work as a "dirt relocation engineer." Switching places with his soldier-ant friend (Sylvester Stallone), Z becomes known as a war-hero after inadvertently surviving an offensive manoeuvre against the "termite enemy."

In the meantime, his soldier-ant friend discovers his unadulterated love for the life of a worker ant. After Z escapes the ant colony by kidnapping the Princess (don't ask why a neurotic Woody Allen worker-ant would kidnap a Sharon Stone princess-ant... or why a hard-line communistic ant colony would be governed by a monarchy. It all seemed to make some sort of sense at the time), rumours of Z's revolutionary zeal electrify the colony. Furtive whispers transmit the secrets of a labour strike of truly minuscule proportions — ants suddenly realize that "the workers control the means of production!" and "we don't have to work!" At this point the film's politics seem obvious; the pro-individualistic worker's movement in the face of tyrannical military rule read like a scathing debunking of Stalinistic communism; but the political philosophy does not end there.

Perhaps the film does not intend to be considered in such a philosophical light. Antz is a solidly funny film, relying on dialogue and wit to supply the majority of laughs. Woody Allen reminds a generation of movie-goers of his considerable talents as a comedian, putting in his first truly likeable performance in many years as, ironically, a bug. Christopher Walken and Sylvester Stallone are also particularly effective in their roles. Of course, as is to be expected of such a major production, the entirely computer generated film is a visual spectacle, full of vibrant colour, alien insect architecture and engrossing landscapes. When taken for what the film does best — showcase Woody Allen's comic gifts and allow the computer animators a chance to shine — Antz succeeds brilliantly. When it takes itself seriously and attempts to allegorize recent human political history, Antz only manages to make a molehill out of a mountain.

Paradoxically, Antz seeks to

FORMAL

SOLO

Hair Design • Tanning Salon
376 Barme Street
(613) 542-0823

Rotate this!

Lauryn Hill
The Miseducation of Lauryn Hill
Columbia Music

By ANNA NESBITT

I'm not exactly an expert on rap music, as I grew up in a house surrounded by alternative sounds, so I was a bit reluctant to listen to Lauryn Hill's solo debut The Miseducation of Lauryn Hill.

You may remember Lauryn Hill from such musical masterpieces as the Fugees' The Score or maybe even recognized her from Sister Act II, Back in the Habit. Her most current CD, The Miseducation of Lauryn Hill proves her ability to succeed as a solo artist. Her strong and unique vocals have skyrocketed her album into the number one position for several weeks on major charts. Her lyrics are complicated since they represent views concerning issues based on her personal life including political and social problems she grew up with.

Overall, the CD's sound is mellow as Hill has stepped out of the boundaries of the traditional hip hop/soul genre by experimenting with various cultural influences such as the track "Ex-Factor" which boasts a pleasant Spanish guitar melody. However, Hill hasn't forgotten her roots as some tracks are reminiscent of her involvement with The Fugees. The heavily rotated "Doo Wop (That Thing)" has her belting the chords and rapping furiously to the beats that has made her so popular since her sweet rendition of "Killing Me Softly."

With her flattering and exceptional debut album it is obvious that Lauryn Hill is much smarter than her miseducation leads us to believe.

Chemical Brothers
Brothers Gonna Work It Out
Virgin Records

By ANDREW LIMMERT

The Chemical Brothers are back at last. Arguably credited with popularizing techno and spawning a new offshoot genre of music, dubbed Electronica, the Chemical Brothers have released a new CD which may surprise some of their die-hard fans. Instead of following their wildly-successful 1997 record, Dig Your Own Hole, with a new compilation of original tunes, the Brothers have chosen to release a selection of music that is "a collection that sums up the whole DJing history of the duo." Included is a psychedelic melange of remixes, reworking a few songs from the band's past releases and mixing in a variety of funk, trip-hop, acid-house, dance, electronica, and even some pop.

Essentially, the album listens like a night at your favorite cave bar. The CD is divided into five tracks, with each track composed of a flow of four or five songs, mixed seamlessly together. The end result is over an hour of solid, non-stop beats.

Admittedly, Brothers Gonna Work It Out will be less accessible than Dig Your Own Hole and Exit Planet Dust to many of the Chemical Bros' fans.

With 23 full-length songs mashed together into five tracks, it is hard to assess each remix individually, but there is certainly a trend in the way that the CD was arranged. The duo's patented drum and bass beats and melodic repetition tie the songs together. The Chemical Brothers then mixed in some of their favorite reworked tunes from their years of DJing in Great Britain and around the world.

The first track throws a bit of funk into the mix, ranging from the title track Willie Hutch's "Brothers Gonna Work It Out" to samples of "The Jimmy Castor Bunch" and "On The House" with a little Chemical Brothers with Justin Warfield to round out the score. Track 2 features Kenny Dope, Badder Than Evil with Hot Wheels - The Chase, Unique 3, and the Love Corporation.

Track three loses some of the range of the previous two, moving towards a more drum and bass and electronica-oriented set. The Micronauts, who are featured prominently throughout the compilation, start off with The Jazz. Samples from The Serotonin project, Carlos Berrios, Freestyle, and Metro L.A. follow. Track four features an old CB tune, Morning Lemon, along with Meat Beat Manifesto, Renegade Sound-wave, DBX, and the Dubtribe Sound System in a harder-edged mix with a funky dance beat and the refrain "Mars needs women." With the last track on the compilation, the duo take another change of pace, mixing pop tunes by Spiritualized and the Manic Street Preachers with The Ultra Violet Catastrophe and The Riot by Vorzon and Botkin.

Admittedly, Brothers Gonna Work It Out will be less accessible than Dig Your Own Hole and Exit Planet Dust to many of the Chemical Bros' fans. The duo's attitudes towards this issue are summed up in the CD sleeve: "The fact that there are no new records on here is testament to the fact that a mix can be timeless rather than just a document of where the Chemical's are right now." True, Brothers doesn't feature any new popular hits (like Setting Sun was in its time), but it is a very personal exploration of the history of Tom and Ed's parallel DJing career. Any fans of the Chemical brothers and house mixing should definitely check this out.

Squirrel Nut Zippers
Perennial Favourites
Mammoth Records

By ANDY POOLE

Squirrel Nut Zippers /skwerel nut zipperz/n. 1 - an old time brand of chewy peanut-flavored sweets. 2 - A septet from Chapel Hill North Carolina formed in 1993 that plays original music crafted in the dixie, ragtime, jump and jive style.

Their lively, energetic sound and their irreverent lyrics created an atmosphere very conducive to a garden party out of the old south.

Perennial Favourites, the third rerecording released by this band that models themselves after a pop band from the 1915-1925 music era, picks up where their last rerecording finished off. I first heard the SNZ two summers ago. Their lively, energetic sound and their irreverent lyrics created an atmosphere very conducive to a garden party out of the old south.

Perennial Favourites, SNZ's latest offering, continues in this vein of music with its tongue planted firmly in cheek. The first track, "Suits are Picking Up the Bill" tells a typical tale of musicians being treated to a night out on their record company's executives (the suits). In typical artist fashion, they take as much advantage of them as will surely be reciprocated. On track six, "Trou Macaca," the lyrics tell of the frustration of being a pawn in the game of the music business -- "once upon a time we thought we were free and had control over destiny...we saw ourselves a competent band, able to reason, prosper and plan...when the veil was torn from our face we became the monkey riding the race."

The musicianship throughout the recording is excellent, the lyrics are a times thought-provoking and at other times 'syrupy' and sentimental, all of which combine to make the SNZ one of my Perennial Favourites. I recommend them highly.

Get Out There! Spirit grasps AJ's

Continued from page 17

Movies:

Playing at the Capitol Theatre until Thursday October 15:
546-5395

Ronin 4:05, 7:05, 9:55
Antz 12:15, 12:45, 2:30, 3:00, 4:40, 5:10, 7:25, 9:35
What Dreams May Come 1:30, 4:20, 7:15, 10:00
Night at the Roxbury 1:00, 3:10, 5:15, 7:00, 9:45
Simon Birch 1:35, 4:05, 7:15 9:50
Saving Private Ryan 9:00
Holy Man 1:05, 3:40, 7:10, 9:50
A Night at the Roxbury 1:00, 3:10, 5:15, 7:30, 10:00
Dr. Dolittle 1:10

Playing at the Cataragui Cineplex until Thursday October 15:
389-7442

Rush Hour 7:15, 9:20
Urban Legends 7:35, 10:00
One True Thing 6:45, 9:30
Something About Mary 7:05, 9:30

How Stella Got Her Groove Back 7:05, 9:40

Playing at the Princess Court Cinema from Friday October 2:
546-3456

Smoke Signals 7:00,
Studio 54 9:00

Live Entertainment:

On Saturday, October 10 at 8 p.m., FLOOM will perform at the Edward Day Gallery. The group is described as an a capella performance of literature and poetry replicating the sounds of classical, jazz, rap and other musical styles. Tickets are $10 for adults and $5 for students. For more information call 921-6540.

On October 17 at 8 p.m. at Balsam Hall on Gore Road, the Cantabile Choirs present a Bavarian-style Oktoberfest. The event will include traditional Oktoberfest food, a beer garden and a five piece band. Reserve tickets by calling 549-7338.

come and go within its 15 year history, they have largely remained a traditional Celtic rock band, opposed to more ground-breaking interpretations of Celtic music, such as that of Ashley MacIsaac.

Another source of change within the band is that they have all matured privately and musically. "Family will do it every time. It just turns your world upside down." Yet Kelly contends that the "spirit" of Spirit of the West has remained the same. He sees a return to even more traditional Celtic roots for the band, after experimenting with a harder, rockier edge in "Two Headed," and a full orchestra (the Vancouver Symphony Orchestra) in "Open Heart Symphony." Kelly believes that the band has "always let the songs lead the way." He expects a "Greatest Hits" record to be out next summer. The CD will include an unreleased version of "And If Venice is Sinking" recorded during their concert with the Vancouver Symphony Orchestra. In the meantime, Spirit of the West are nearing the end of their Ontario tour and are set to play a couple of dates in their hometown of Vancouver. After their Vancouver dates, they will be touring in Europe in support of their 1997 release "Weights and Measures."

With incredible energy and enthusiasm, the band proceeded to take the audience on a two hour journey of dance, mayhem, and pure unadulterated fun.

Let's hope that Spirit of the West continues their tradition of eclectic Canadian Celtic Rock. If Wednesday night's performance is any indication, it would be safe to assume that the Spirit of the West will remain one of Queen's favourite bands.

THE JOURNAL CROSSWORD

By Jesse Craig Bellringer With thanks to Deborah Windell

ACROSS

- 1 - Iranian capital
- 7 - meal
- 10 - fossilized resin
- 15 - South Pacific Islands
- 17 - current epoch
- 18 - As opposed to bottom
- 19 - whiz
- 20 - middle eastern alcohol
- 21 - actor/director Howard
- 22 - type of paint
- 24 - antiviral drug used to treat AIDS
- 25 - Quebec telephone greeting
- 26 - what makes cars go
- 27 - measures frequency, abbr.
- 29 - moon of Jupiter
- 30 - Doe, Ray, etc.
- 31 - the study of birds
- 36 - a wonderful life
- 37 - requirements
- 38 - code
- 39 - measures air pressure, abbr.
- 40 - either /
- 41 - seven days
- 44 - as opposed to junior, abbr.
- 45 - what Ringo might have said to John
- 50 - actress Leoni
- 51 - lies between north and east, abbr.
- 52 - common cause of drug-related fatalities
- 53 - to make or become solid
- 57 - standard equipment on most new cars, acronym
- 60 - tropical bird
- 61 - abbreviated Los Angeles
- 63 - city in NW Italy
- 65 - usual effect of poison ivy
- 66 - U.S. sprinter Devers
- 67 - rhymes with couch
- 68 - often precedes a word beg. with a vowel
- 69 - the Enterprise, for example
- 71 - a private in the United States army
- 72 - Nobel Prize-winning author of Siddhartha
- 73 - a member of a group of Bantu-speaking persons
- 75 - to stimulate (esp. one's appetite)
- 76 - English dramatist, best known for The Spanish Tragedy
- 78 - what you don't want on your car
- 79 - channel 33 on Kingston cable
- 80 - What Charlie Parker plays

DOWN

- 1 - symbol
- 2 - John Kenneth Galbraith, for example
- 3 - disease of the liver
- 4 - Egyptian sun god
- 5 - extreme displeasure
- 6 - system of rating television programming
- 8 - son of Jotham, father of Hezekiah
- 9 - type of law concerning a breach of duty
- 10 - condition wherein everything is fine

- 11 - 1050; also Hammer
- 12 - composer of Symphonie fantastique
- 13 - the study of wines
- 14 - the other gambling capital of Nevada
- 16 - a compound vowel character, a ligature
- 23 - an established way of conducting one's affairs
- 24 - composer of "Rule, Britannia"
- 27 - His Holiness, abbr.
- 28 - designated area; industrial, for example
- 32 - Rhenium's chemical symbol
- 33 - is commonly forged, abbr.
- 34 - a group of peoples residing in Botswana
- 35 - town in NW Belgium, site of three major WWI battles
- 39 - 3.1459, etc, etc.
- 40 - Henry, the chocolate variety
- 42 - usually found on the edge of an eyelid
- 43 - principal city of Minoan Crete
- 46 - what ensued when the puppy was lost
- 47 - moderates most sporting events
- 48 - occurs for half of every day
- 49 - inherited instinctive impulses of the individual as part of the unconscious
- 53 - of hair, perhaps
- 54 - what results when red and yellow get together
- 55 - Alamos, New Mexico
- 56 - coupled with "L," forms a popular wedding vow
- 58 - a Spanish dance in simple triple time
- 59 - actress Chabert of "Party of Five"
- 62 - extra-terrestrial
- 64 - of an elephant, for example
- 70 - sibling of "bro"
- 74 - replaced the League of Nations
- 75 - initials of author of "The Two-Part Prelude"
- 77 - Arthur's sister

Answers will appear in Friday's issue of The Journal

exchange Events List

Get Your Queen's Entertainment Card
For access to great Queen's events!

Selling tickets for an event?

Sell them at: exchange
Call 545-2120

Tickets sold at: exchange

COLEMAN-ELLIS LECTURES UNDERGRADUATE COLLOQUIUM

DIGITAL COMMUNICATION SECURITY

by: Dr. Henk Meijer
Department of Computing and Information Science
Queen's University

Pay -tv., automatic teller machines, internet traffic, cellular telephones, passport control and Qcard are only a few examples where we use or need secure communications. Are you sure that your cellular telephone conversation is private? Can we trust the automatic teller machine to protect your personal identification number and bank card information? Is your transcript readable to computer hackers (or worse) in all of these cases, cryptography, the art of secret writing, can be used to protect sensitive information. In this presentation we look at some interesting cryptographic tools that are used in a variety of applications. We will also examine some of the underlying mathematics and computer algorithms. This talk is aimed at undergraduate students. No particular knowledge of mathematics, computing or communications is required, but an interest in mathematics is expected.

Wednesday, October 14, 1998, 8:00 p.m.
Jeffery Hall, Room 118.

Lost on the Net?
Take a class at the Library.

Ask us!

Queen's University Libraries

WEDNESDAY

grand opening extravaganza

Games!
Prizes!

DJ SPINNIN'
DA GOODS

Free Stuff!

grand opening Week

queen's pub

THURSDAY

OCT. 15th

Weeping tile

Benefit Gig

Tickets $4

at Earth Centre

FRIDAY

CRAIG CARDIFF

BLUE SCREEN WHITE NOISE

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY THE JOURNAL

since 1873

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1998

WW/WN editor fired

By ANNA NESBITT

Who's Where/What's Next editor Jason Teske was fired Wednesday by the AMS because he is not enrolled as a student at Queen's. More firings may follow as the AMS continues to investigate the student status of salaried employees.

Teske was hired in February as the layout and design editor for WW/WN Publications. At the time, he was a full-time student at Queen's. However, over the summer, Teske learned he could not return to Queen's because he had surpassed the maximum number of failed courses the university allows.

"Regardless of if they are employing me, I'm going to see this publication through until it's in the hands of the students."

— Jason Teske, former WW/WN layout and design editor

"Basically I've done poorly academically," he said. "I didn't think it was going to become an issue."

Owen Minns, AMS media and services director, confirmed that the AMS will consider firing any employee who does not meet the minimum requirements, but no new cases have been identified yet. "At this point I'm not aware of anyone else," he said.

Gord Moodie, AMS vice-president (operations), sent an e-mail to all salaried AMS employees on October 6 telling them he was going to confirm their student status.

Section two of the AMS hiring policy states that all students employed by

Please see Teske on page 3

Only a few protesters turned up to support Queen's Day of Action rally against tuition hikes outside the JDUC Tuesday. See story on page 5.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBERG

Assembly rejects OUSA referendum

By LAURA MACINNIS

After over two hours of debate, AMS Assembly rejected President Tom Stanley's motion to place the question of alignment included in the fall referendum by a narrow margin of 16 in favour, 18 opposed last night.

The motion to Assembly came after extensive debate over whether Queen's should join the Ontario Universities Student Alliance as a means to strengthen their lobbying efforts.

Critics of the motion argued that since student leaders were so divided on the alignment issue, it was unacceptable to ask the student body to make an informed decision on the matter. "I do not feel the people right now are confident enough in our need to align," said Anatole Papadopoulos, ASUS president. "I think there are some large questions that are still unanswered."

"I'm really concerned about how knowledgeable [students] are on this issue," said Alex Tarantino, ASUS representative to the AMS.

"A lot of students don't know what alignment is," added Papadopoulos. "There have been no throngs of debate about it, and that bothers me."

Other reservations included the fact that students would be voting only for or against membership in one group, OUSA, excluding other options such as the Canadian Federation of Students.

"I think it's important to give students a chance to consider another organization," said Ian Billingley, Aesculapian Society representative.

Stanley defended the decision to limit the vote to OUSA as "the application of 18 months of research."

"I feel that OUSA is the organization that is infinitely better for Queen's," he said.

"A vote 'no' to OUSA would mean that students do not want to join OUSA. It would be a firm democratic answer," he said.

Stanley said he plans to collect 600 student signatures in order to push a fall referendum question, to let students decide the issue for themselves.

"I think it's important to act now," Stanley said.

Milan Konopek, AMS academic affairs commissioner, also argued the need for alignment in lobbying efforts.

"We have tried as hard as we can to bring pan-university concerns to the government," he said, adding, "going out on our own really doesn't do that much."

E-mail shocks law students

By FIONA STEVENSON

Several Queen's law students were outraged by an e-mail they received Tuesday night, which they believe showed preferential endorsement of two students by members of the Faculty of Law.

Shortly before 6 p.m., an e-mail composed by Dean of Law Alison Harvison Young to the Faculty's Career Planning and Placement Officer Ann Tierney was unintentionally sent to the Faculty's listserv and, as a result, was received by all law faculty, staff and students.

In her e-mail, Harvison Young asked Tierney to send her the resume of a third-year law student who she described as "the other strong woman who was not matched."

Law Students Society President Chris Ellis said that by the beginning of third year, law students are traditionally committed (what the e-mail referred to as "matched") to a firm where they will spend one year articling after graduation. However, "about a quarter of students don't have a job going into third year," he said. "Obviously it's a very anxious time for these people."

The Dean also mentioned in her e-mail that she already had the resume of another student, who she named. The Dean said she was leaving for Toronto the next day and would be meeting people from two law firms there.

At approximately 8:30 p.m., Harvison Young sent an e-mail over the listserv apologizing for accidentally clicking on the "reply" function to an earlier message addressed to the entire Faculty.

Some students were shocked by Harvison Young's first e-mail and found her follow-up to be insufficient.

"When I read [the first e-mail] I was outraged. I felt that I had been treated unfairly," said Anne Szklidarek, Law '99. "Exactly what about these two students interests are more important than mine or the people I know who don't have jobs?"

"I found [the e-mail] really disillusioning," Szklidarek said. "Our mandate is all about equity but it still hasn't been explained to me how I haven't been treated inequitably."

"You always have this idea that it's not what you know but who you know — having the Dean prove that to you was disillusioning," said Kimberly Kuntz, Law '99.

Ellis, Law '99, said he is unwilling to "condemn" either Harvison Young or Tierney without adequate proof. "I have to believe they're working in our best interests... I really don't think [Young or Tierney were] doing anything behind

Please see Students on page 4

index

Volume 126, Issue 13
www.journal.queensu.ca

News	1	Features	17
Editorials	6	A&E	18
Opinions	7	Crossword	21
Science	13	Classifieds	22
Sports & Fitness	14	MISC.	23

WEATHERWATCH

Today Partly cloudy High 16°C, Low 4°C; POP 20%	Sunday Rainy High 19°C, Low 9°C; POP 70%
Saturday Cloudy with showers High 19°C, Low 6°C; POP 60%	Monday Partly cloudy High 14°C, Low 4°C; POP 30%

Kingston's One and Only Hard Rock Café

Coors Light Fridge
Giveaway on Hallowe'en

Sunday & Monday nights - open MIC with host Smitty.

Every night 6pm - 9pm
20¢ wings
(with the purchase of a beverage)

ATTENTION: ARTS & SCIENCE STUDENTS

Are you interested in:
an Exchange?
Study Abroad?
or the International Study Centre?

You are invited to the International Centre and the International Programs Office information sessions:

Monday, October 19 John Orr Room, JDUC* 7-8:30pm
French, Spanish, German, Russian, Japanese,
Chinese, Language and Linguistics

Tuesday, October 20 Robert Sutherland Room, JDUC* 7-8:30pm
Math, Physics, Biology, Chemistry, Biochemistry, Geology, Computing Science

Monday, November 2 John Orr Room, JDUC* 7-8:30pm
Development Studies, Environmental Studies,
Life Sciences, Geography

Don't miss this opportunity to come out and ask any questions you may have about exchanges, study abroad and the International Study Centre.

All sessions 7-8:30 pm, refreshments provided.

*John Deutsch University Centre

For more information contact: the International Centre phone: 545-2604 email: plawitz@post.queensu.ca or the International Programs Office, 545-2815 email: ipo@post.queensu.ca

Becker's set to close

BY THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL NEWS STAFF

The Becker's store on the corner of Earl and Barrie will no longer see the faces of weary students sneaking a late night treat between study breaks. The store, along with another Becker's on Montreal Street, is set to close by the end of the month.

The Becker's stores were previously owned by SilCorp, a company which also owns Mac's Milk. Both stores were bought out by a private buyer and are being converted to Daisy Marts, which will sell similar products, including Becker's milk.

"What they're going to be is a franchise called Daisy Mart. They will still have Becker's products available," said Floyd Batchelor, a real estate representative from SilCorp.

"They won't be a corporate store, they'll be a franchise store," he said. Employees at the Earl Street Becker's were surprised by the speed of the Becker's store sales.

"We had no warning," said Danny Gavey, who has worked for SilCorp for 16 years. "They [SilCorp] came and said to us 'you're out of a job.'"

Gavey doubts that he will be transferred to another SilCorp convenience store in the area. Since the two stores were purchased by an independent buyer, the new owner is under no obligation to re-employ the previous staff, he added. "I guess in any job you never know [about stability]," Gavey said. "The [Montreal Street] store was supposed to stay open until 2003."

Scott Esford, 18, has worked at the Earl Street Becker's for almost one year. "It's been alright [working for Becker's]," he said. "I like to stock the shelves up and stuff."

Esford also works for Pat's Grocery and said he will try to pick up extra hours there.

Queen's students have had a positive reaction to the convenience store changeover from Becker's to Daisy Mart.

"I think it's for the better," said Tessa Kroeker, Arts '99. "I usually don't go down there [to Becker's] because they usually don't have what I want." Kroeker hopes Daisy Mart will have fresh produce and a wider variety of products.

"As long as it still has a lotto machine, I don't care," said Vanessa Lam, Arts '00.

Roby Ryan, ArtsSci '00 also won't miss Becker's that much. "It's only open until midnight so it's [closure] only a minor impact. The A&P is open 24 hours and it's just around the corner."

The Earl and Barrie location will be closing its doors next Friday and the Montreal store will close October 30.

The Becker's store on Earl Street is slated to close Friday.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Sunday Pasta Night

Salad, Pasta & Focaccia
$4.95

Queen's second most expensive in Canada Guide to university costs rates schools across the country

BY FIONA STEVENSON

The total cost of attending Queen's this year is the second highest among 39 universities across Canada, according to the "1998-99 Guide to University Costs in Canada."

The guide was unveiled in Kingston yesterday by Kevin J. Connolly, executive vice-president for the University Scholarship of Canada Education Savings Plans.

The booklet compares costs for completing a four-year arts and science degree at 39 universities across Canada. The costs are broken down into tuition fees, room and board and books and supplies. The guide also makes university cost projections for the next 18 years.

The average cost of attending university this year is considerably higher in Ontario, with a provincial average of $10,348, compared to averages under $9,000 in Saskatchewan, Quebec, Newfoundland, Manitoba, Alberta and British Columbia.

"Tuition costs are on average higher in Ontario," Connolly said. However, "Tuition will more than likely, over the next few years, normalize and become fairly consistent across the country," he added.

Connolly said the cost of education has risen dramatically since the early nineties. "Prior to the beginning of the decade, the increases were resting equal to or [below] inflation," he explained.

The recent increases mean higher debts and the need to compromise academic success, as students attempt to balance one or more jobs and school, he said. Looking at these figures "shows what's happening and why students are getting so frustrated," he added.

"What it means about the future of post-secondary education is that it's going to become increasingly expensive. People need to plan for this, not assume it's just going to be taken care of," he continued.

Kevin Connolly, executive vice-president of USC Education Savings Plans.

Please see 'Numbers' on page 4

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Princess Street theatre shuts doors

BY TARA MANSBRIDGE

Yesterday evening Princess Court Cinema, one of the only venues for showing independent films in Kingston, closed its doors for the last time.

"It's a turn of events that makes me extremely sad," said Blaine Allan, head of the film studies department at Queen's.

A story in yesterday's Kingston Whig-Standard stated that the shutdown was caused by lack of attendance.

"They've always operated on a shoe-string budget," said Jonathon Rose, a professor of political studies at Queen's and the former vice-president of Princess Court's board of directors.

"The loss of a repertory theatre is a huge blow to people who want to watch quality films."

During the summer, Princess Court Cinema's board of directors tried to avoid a shutdown with the financial help of one of its creditors, Alliance Releasing. Neighbouring businesses supported the aims of the cinema and some, such as The Grizzly Grill, pitched in with promotional deals in an attempt to help the theatre with its financial struggles.

These efforts were inadequate and, as of yesterday evening, the three employees and various volunteers said goodbye to independent film on Princess Street.

"It's a great loss for our students and for us; for students at Queen's and for the Kingston community," said Allan. "I would have hoped that there would be a way of reviving the theatre and, if not, I hope there's some way of filling that gap at Queen's."

"For me it all started with the success of 'The Crying Game,'" he continued.

Princess Court Cinema was the first theatre in Kingston to run "The Crying Game," but the wildly popular indie film was subsequently picked up by commercial chains.

"Distributors learned from that example and started to skip independent theatres entirely," explained Allan.

Student reaction to the closing was equally gloomy. "That's the end of good cinema in Kingston," said Paul Quick, a Queen's student and volunteer at Princess Court.

Adam Olmstead, PhysEd '98, is also disappointed by the cinema's closure. "I liked it, I thought the people were personable. I liked the variety and the way it caters to different groups of people," he said.

Olmstead remembered times when the theatre would show features made by some of his friends in the department of film studies. "I would hope to see students get together a fundraiser or something," he said.

"It was a community there, I thought," said Rose. "There were a lot of people... like me who liked to watch quality films but didn't want to go to the commercial theatres."

The Princess Court Cinema has been at its location on Princess Street between Stages and Burger King for more than 10 years.

Teske to appeal termination to AMS Board

Continued from page 1

the AMS in a salaried position must be enrolled in at least two credits and have paid the full slate of mandatory student activity fees. People receiving AMS wages or honoraria need to be enrolled in three courses with full student fees.

Anyone who does not fulfill the minimum eligibility requirements at any time during their employment or appointment is subject to immediate dismissal. "If you don't meet those guidelines, you're not eligible for work," said Moodie.

Some employees don't feel the hiring policy is fair. "Because the AMS hires at the end of the year, the policy that states that at any AMS employee must be a student at all times is flawed," said Mike Beltzner, WW/WN information and operations manager.

Beltzner said student status should only be checked during the initial hiring process, rather than the rest of the year.

He also suggested that WW/WN Publications may be a special case because the editors are hired in February and work throughout the summer. Teske was enrolled as a student when he was hired.

"Last year, two of the managers of the Who's Where/What's Next were not Queen's students and nothing was done about it," said Beltzner.

Teske is appealing his termination to the AMS Board of Directors. The appeal will be reviewed by Trevor Ogle, chair of the board, who will verify the legitimacy of Teske's firing and either accept or overturn the decision.

No decision has been made whether to hire someone in Teske's place. "We're not sure what we're going to do at this point," said Minns.

Beltzner said that, without Teske, the Who's Where team will be unable to complete some of their goals for the year, including providing graphic design services for campus groups. "Jason is our primary designer," he said. "We can't do it this year anymore."

Teske said the remaining editors, Beltzner and Rebecca Pearce (advertising and accounts) will now be mainly occupied with invoices for the Who's Where and What's Next. "It's a huge job for two people... It's not going to leave time for anything else," he said.

The Who's Where is due to come out on campus next week. Beltzner said the directory, containing "2,000 to 3,000 more names than last year," has proceeded according to schedule.

Teske said he will help Pearce and Beltzner with the distribution of the Who's Where while the appeal process is underway.

"Regardless of if they are employing me, I'm going to see this publication through until it's in the hands of the students," Teske said.

— with files from Laura MacInnis

The Campus Bookstore and Jostens

present

October Ring Days

Save 10% On All Jostens Rings

A representative from Jostens Canada, will be at the Campus Bookstore, next Thursday and Friday. There will be a 10% saving on all Jostens rings ordered. Jostens rings offer unmatched quality and provide a free full lifetime warranty and four year insurance coverage. The Campus Bookstore offers Jostens rings in a variety of styles and designs to suit students as well as alumni. No deposit is required on your order and Jostens rings will be available for pick up within 8 to 10 weeks. Do not miss your chance to save 10% on your perfect ring. Come see the Jostens representative next week.

Campus Bookstore • www.campusbookstore.com • Clark Hall

October 23-24

10% Off Jostens Rings During Ring Days

Campus Bookstore • Clark Hall • Weekdays 9-8, Saturday 10-5
www.campusbookstore.com • 545-2955
Owned and Operated by Students Since 1909

'Numbers not encouraging'

Continued from page 3

According to the guide, the cost of completing a four-year arts and science degree in 2016 is projected at $116,700. "The numbers are certainly not all that encouraging," Connolly said.

"If allocations haven't been made for savings for that purpose then the debt load is going to grow," he said.

The current average debt load for a graduating student is in excess of $25,000 and is projected at $40,000 for students graduating in the year 2000, he added.

USC Education Savings Plans are sponsored by the International Scholarship Foundation, established in 1965. The foundation has been tracking the annual increases in the cost of education since 1975.

"We're a non-profit foundation that assists parents in saving for their kids education," Connolly explained. "Our goal is to educate parents especially of young children today that the burden is going to get worse," he said.

Connolly emphasized the importance

Canadian university costs 1998-99

	Tuition & Fees	Room & Board	Books & Supplies	Total cost
Alberta	$3,734	$3,936	$988	$8,558
Dalhousie	$4,328	$5,440	$800	$10,568
Manitoba	$3,063	$4,119	$1,273	$8,455
McGill	$3,998	$5,881	$700	$10,579
McMaster	$3,912	$5,385	$824	$10,121
Ryerson	$4,149	$6,750	$1,000	$11,899
Toronto	$4,215	$6,148	$1,000	$11,363
Western	$4,290	$5,291	$800	$10,381
UBC	$2,485	$5,470	$600	$8,555
Queen's	$4,299	$6,124	$1,063	$11,486

Source: 1998-99 Guide to University Costs in Canada, Scholarship Consultants of North America Ltd.

of a university degree for competing in today's job market. "If you don't have a post-secondary education, you basically can't find good employment any more," he said, adding "Two thirds of all jobs by the year 2000 will require a post-secondary education."

'Forum for feedback'

Continued from page 3

for deregulation. The majority of grant money received from the provincial government will most likely go towards improving facilities and hiring more staff in Applied Science, Savage predicted, to offset the increased number of students enrolled in the program. "It's not a hidden agenda," he continued. "There hasn't been an increase in student funding in 20 years, as far as I've been told," he said.

Savage emphasized that even if Queen's does qualify for deregulation, it does not mean the university has to raise tuition to astronomical heights.

"University is not a business, it's an institution. It's the same thing as government; it's not a business, it's the government. You cannot apply the rules of business to everything... You can't have the fickleness of the market," Savage said.

If Queen's joins ATOP, Savage said it may still be two years before deregulation could be implemented. In the meantime, Queen's is creating more bursaries and programs to ensure the student debt load is met, he said.

"Queen's still believes they'll still get applicants [to engineering.] It is a gamble but they think they can do it," he said.

Students question equity

Continued from page 1

anyone's back or anything they shouldn't have been doing," he said.

"I'm quite convinced that Anne Tierney in particular does the job exactly the way she suggested she does that, without favour to particular students," agreed Associate Dean Don Stuart. "I think she was very hurt by the reactions of some of the students."

On Wednesday morning Szkudlarek sent an e-mail to the listserv expressing her anger regarding the e-mail and requesting an apology from the Dean to "those students whose resumés are not accompanying her to Toronto."

"I've only gotten strong supportive comments about [the e-mail]. I know a lot of people feel the same way that I do," Szkudlarek said.

Harvison Young wrote Szkudlarek a personal response to her e-mail, however, Szkudlarek said she was not satisfied with the reply. "She said my concerns were valid but I didn't get any indication that what I was saying to her was getting across to her," she said. "She just didn't answer my question — she didn't tell me how I wasn't treated unfairly. She implied that I misunderstood."

For the past three days the listserv has been bombarded by messages from students regarding the e-mails, including new follow-ups written by Harvison

Young and Tierney on Wednesday. Harvison Young emphasized in her e-mail that the firms she was visiting had not notified her of vacancies and that she was not selecting certain students for any special opportunity. She could not be reached for comment.

Tierney's follow-up e-mail outlined the procedures of the Career Services office regarding assisting students and stressed that no students are given special treatment. Tierney was reached by The Journal but refused to comment.

Kuntz said she is not satisfied with the explanations offered by Harvison Young and Tierney. "[The Dean's still] not explaining why she felt the need to bring these two resumés," she said.

According to Ellis, the issue will be discussed at the next meetings of the LSS and the Career Planning and Placement Office Review Committee. "The message was as much of a shock to me as it was to most law students," he said.

"We have to remember that the e-mail message from the Dean wasn't intended for the law school community," Ellis said. "It is a big issue of concern but we have to put it in some kind of context and address the real issues. We've got to get our facts straight."

"This is going to be investigated obviously," Ellis said. "If there is anything wrong, we're going to get to the bottom of it."

Day of Action lacks student support CFS-organized protest falls short

By LIANNE ELLIOTT

Less than two dozen Queen's students showed their support at the Day of Action rally in front of the John Deutsch University Centre on Wednesday afternoon.

"People are cynical because they feel nothing is changing."

— Harry Pilford, Day of Action co-organizer

Queen's Day of Action rally was one of many occurring across Canadian campuses this week, as part of the Pan-Canadian Week of Action organized by the Canadian Federation of Students.

Organized by the Ontario Public Interest Research Group, Queen's rally was scheduled to march past major banks in Kingston as an open protest against the university's decision to include bank representatives in their Board of Trustees.

However, because of the low student turnout, protesters collectively decided to cancel the downtown march, keeping the rally centred at the JDUC.

According to rally speaker and former president of the Society of Graduate and Professional Students Steven Kammerer, the small number of participants can be partially attributed to "technical problems" with the event. Though OPIRG advertised the rally on CFRC, sent press releases to local newspapers and put up posters around campus, Kammerer said last year's two tuition protests, which attracted over 1,000 students, were more effectively publicized than Wednesday's rally because organizers hand-delivered flyers to students individually.

Both Kammerer and rally

co-organiser Harry Pilford, member of OPIRG University Issues and the Kingston Direct Action Working Group, said because many issues raised in last year's protests were ignored, there is growing pessimism surrounding the effectiveness of student protests. This factor may have also contributed to the low rally turnout, Kammerer and Pilford added.

"People are cynical because they feel nothing is changing", Pilford said.

Pilford also noted the "timing of the event," during a busy point in the school year, and the "higher socio-economic make-up of Queen's students" as additional factors affecting student participation.

Despite the size of the protest, organizers said they hope the demonstration was effective through its speeches, picket signs and through protesters' silent actions, which included burning their student loan forms or auctioning off fake Bachelor of Arts degrees.

Last year's two tuition protests, which attracted over 1,000 students, were more effectively publicized than Wednesday's rally because organizers hand-delivered flyers to students individually.

Organizers said they wanted the rally to illustrate students' unwillingness to accept the banks' involvement in Queen's administration and their unhappiness with government cuts to post-secondary education funding.

"We're here to lift our voices in anger," SGPS president Chris Hales said, "and to keep tuition on people's minds."

The Brockington Visitor 1998

Dr. Joseph MacInnis
Physician, Ocean Explorer and Author

Titanic:
A Four Year Journey to Photograph the Greatest of All Lost Ships

Monday, 19 October 1998 8PM
Grant Hall, Queen's University

*Science writer and adviser to the Titanic Discovery team, one of the few to dive down to see the great ship.
*The first person to dive under the North Pole.
*Co-leader of the expedition that raised the Titanic on Imax film

THE LOCALS KNOW THE GOOD STUFF IS WORTH A HIKE!

Skis and Boards

K2            Burton
Rossignol    Sims
Volkl        Ride
Volant       Winterstick
& More!

Clothing

Sierra Designs
Patagonia
The North Face
Oakley
Sessions
Burton
& More!

13 Montreal Street
Downtown, just off of Princess
542-4558

Take the Short Walk off Princess — It's worth it!
Great selection, knowledgeable staff & no attitude

Historic New Music Release !!!

Bob Dylan's
"Royal Albert Hall Concert," 1966

This never-before released complete concert recording, both acoustic and electric sets (2 cd's), mixed and mastered from the original 3 track source tapes, is musical history in the making. This concert marks the most influential occasion for rock music and for Bob Dylan. This is a must for every collector or anyone interested in fine quality music.

2 CD set -- only $34.99

Be there now!
Don't forget to use your orientation CD discount coupon.
Proud to be 100% Canadian

Indigo
Books, Music & Cafe
259 Princess Street
546-7650

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

QP takes easy way out

WE HOPE QUEEN'S PUB assistant Manager Scott Thompson will put more thought into how he plans future QP ads, after his last effort got him into hot water for displaying caricatures of black people from the funky seventies.

While the QP's use of racial stereotypes in the ad managed to offend Eun-Hye Chung and her IDIS 302 class, it is also disconcerting how quickly and painlessly the whole issue was resolved.

It's difficult to know what motivated the QP's overly-conciliatory apology and agreement to screen a film about racial awareness. On the one hand, it appears that as soon as Chung pointed out the ad was offensive, the QP managers saw their error and publicly stated that the ad was indeed inappropriate.

But if the error was so glaringly obvious, how could Thompson have been so careless as to create an ad that depicts racial stereotypes without a thought as to who it might offend?

If, on the other hand, Thompson and the QP are only apologizing because someone complained and not because they agree that the advertisement was offensive, then surely this was a hollow victory for those seeking to create more awareness on race relations.

It's clear that an honest response to an accusation of racism or prejudice has become almost impossible on our campus.

Either way, it's clear that an honest response to an accusation of racism or prejudice has become almost impossible on our campus. The QP's apparent hyper-sensitivity to complaints about anything that might be construed as offensive is not only unwarranted, it also undermined an opportunity to have a genuine dialogue about racial stereotypes. Eun-Hye Chung and her class may believe they "got all that they wanted," but all they really did was make Scott Thompson and the QP management swear a little.

Out in the cold

ASIDE FROM THE DISCOMFORT OF last year's ice storm, life at Queen's could not be further from the cold reality of life on the streets for Canada's homeless population. With winter looming near, we should turn our attention to the plight of these thousands of families who will have no shelter this year. In Toronto alone, it is estimated that each night close to 500 of the 5,000 people who need access to emergency shelters are left out in the cold. Despite the Toronto Disaster Relief Committee declaring the homeless problem a national disaster, and our municipal, provincial and federal governments studying the problem, no one seems to agree on who is responsible for solving what is an urgent social crisis.

Since the homeless do not have the political clout to force elected officials to pay proper attention to this problem, we must remind them that providing adequate shelter during the winter is a top priority. The shortage of low-income housing in urban areas and the lack of proper facilities for the mentally ill are issues that will require a viable long term solution. In the short-term, however, we cannot afford to ignore the immediate and fatal consequences of waiting to act. Unless all three levels of government take immediate action, people will die this winter.

It is too easy for us, however, in the safety of our heated-homes, to look the other way. Unless we all become advocates of homeless rights in our daily lives, the government will have little incentive to act.

Bons Mots:

Do not waste your time on social questions. What is the matter with the poor is poverty; what is the matter with the rich is uselessness.
— George Bernard Shaw

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF
Keith Gartin
Tara Mansbridge
MANAGING EDITOR
Laura MacInnis
NEWS EDITOR
Fiona Stevenson
ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS
Shawn Brimley
Renée Huang
Vicant

EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
Paul Heisler
ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR
Stefan Murray
ASSISTANT A&E EDITORS
Sarah Crosbie
Lillian Kim
FEATURES EDITOR
Sean Springer
OPINIONS EDITOR
Vacant

SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Adam Kaminsky
ASSISTANT SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Robert MacNeil
MSC EDITOR
Ken Butland
GRAPHICS EDITOR
Janice Chan
THE READER EDITOR
Jesse Craig Bellingier

SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT
John Bowman
SPECIAL PUBLICATIONS EDITORS
Elizabeth Frogley
Shandley McMuray
PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS
Alex Kronby
James Terjanjan
WEB EDITOR
Marco Lui

CONTRIBUTORS

WRITERS AND REPORTERS: Laura Hampel, Mike Kealy, Julietta Loeffler, Eric McDonald, Anna Nesbitt, Corey Wilson, Jim Whittington.
PHOTOGRAPHERS: Geoff Ashenlurst, Gil Bae, April Bond, Robin Brubano, Jill Offenbeck.

The cost of holding on

A HOUSE OF COMMONS subcommittee on the Study of Sport in Canada recently recommended $5 million in grants and tax incentives for Canadian National Hockey League franchises. Bud Selig, the Commissioner of Major League Baseball, recently met with Quebec Premier Lucien Bouchard in Montreal. He is trying to convince Bouchard to contribute provincial money towards the construction of a downtown ballpark that would prevent the Montreal Expos franchise from moving to the United States. At the same time, our government has a $19 billion surplus in its Employment Insurance fund that Minister of Finance Paul Martin is refusing to give back to the workers that pay into it, and more importantly, to the unemployed people it was designed to help.

Canada should spend its money elevating and maintaining its social programs.

When I think of the Canadian government spending these dollars on sports franchises, I am reminded of the United States, where state governments are spending tax dollars in order to fund multi-million dollar stadiums and payrolls in order to keep their beloved teams. While the owners of Canadian teams argue that they need similar government assistance in order to compete, we must not forget that these same American governments rip apart their own social programs so they can balance budgets at the expense of the unemployed. Some state governments, in order to save money, entrust their prison systems to corporations whose main consideration is profit rather than inmate rehabilitation. The health care system is so abysmal that citizens had better not leave home without their American Express card or else they will be denied emergency health care. And yet they are unable to live without a team of 30 athletes.

Being a Canadian sports fan, it breaks my heart to see our teams leaving to go south of the border and on to greater success. A few seasons ago, the Quebec Nordiques played their last game up north and the very next season hoisted Lord Stanley's cup in Denver, Colorado.

Realistically, however, we are living in a dismal era in which an unacceptable number of Canadians are unemployed. For those Canadians that have been able to get off (or have been pushed off) welfare, many have jobs that barely allow for a basic subsistence. Food banks are faced with massive shortages this time of year and the cold Canadian winter is approaching.

It is unfortunate to see Canadian teams scatching and clawing to stay above our plummeting dollar. They need to pay their players in U.S. funds means in their operating budgets are 40 per cent higher than those of their southern neighbours. But it would be an even greater travesty if one of our teams had a brand-new arena or stadium instead of a family having a steady income, a warm house and food in their stomachs. Canada should spend its money elevating and maintaining its social programs and resist the painful urge to support an entertainment industry.

BY ROB MACNEIL

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Kraft
SALES REPRESENTATIVES
Kari Brinnett
Andrew Coole
Kristian Li
ADVERTISING COORDINATOR
Mark Fucella
ADVERTISING DESIGNERS
Katherine Colbourn
Annie Gie
Rachel Villeneuve
SYSTEMS MANAGER
Vacant

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Friday, October 16, 1998 • Issue 13 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.
Contents ©1998 by The Queen's Journal. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Goss Conquestary press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Gananoque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston communities are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions.
Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please address complaints and grievances to the Managing Editor and/or the Co-Editors-in-Chief. Please inquire about further general policies if you are not satisfied with their response. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2A8. Telephone—editorial: 613-545-2800; advertising: 613-545-6711. Fax: 613-545-6728. Email: journal@post.queensu.ca. Circulation 9,000. Issue 14 will be published on Tuesday, October 20, 1998.

OPINIONS

Marks not an even playing field

Letter of the week

Dear Editors,

This is a strange school. When I arrived I was told, as were 2500 others, that I am special — that I had to be special to be a member of the Queen's Arts and Science class of 2002. According to the Principal my class is made up of the brightest of the brightest of young Canadian students. Apparently we are going to run Canada one day.

Three weeks after the Dean's speech I found myself sitting in a lecture theatre listening to a detailed presentation on how to write essays. The presentation was not on how to write a philosophy paper in comparison to a politics paper or anything of the like — it was on how to write an essay. An essay. I tuned out gradually (the speaker literally started the talk with "Does anyone know what a thesis is?") and I spent the hour long presentation wondering what it really meant to be deemed one of Canada's brightest young students.

The class of 2002 isn't composed of Canada's young intellectual elite, it's composed of 2500 naive kids who think they're brilliant and who are going to get a rude awakening.

If I ask someone sitting next to me how they did in high school and they spout off something about having a 92 per cent average, should I be impressed? What does getting 92 per cent really mean? Am I talking to a genius or to someone who laughed his/her way through high school knowing that simply showing up to class with a pulse would earn him/her an 'A'? It occurred to me that the only acid test for a high school education is how well one fares in university. I find that frightening — my class isn't composed of Canada's young intellectual elite, it's composed of 2500 naive kids who think they're brilliant and who are by in large going to get a rude awakening.

In some cases students will be forced to realize that they've moved from the bush leagues to the majors. Others may have been playing semi-pro already.

In either case, we should put all of Canada's high schools should pur secondary and early university marks side by side under a bright light to see the results of the acid test. Maybe then some idea of what a true 92 per cent is will be made clear; maybe then Queen's won't have to wait until after the first set of marks are in to see whether it really does have the smartest young students in Canada.

Jordan Dodd
ArtSci '02

Golden Words

No hypocrisy here

Dear Editors,

It's ironic that the letter by LSS President Chris Ellis in the issue of Oct. 2 was titled "EngSoc shows hypocrisy." Ellis accuses GW of publishing lies and innuendo in an article entitled "The Queen's LSS is run by a bunch of sneaky assholes!" Yet, he inexplicably includes those same things in his letter.

GW is editorially autonomous of EngSoc. Stewart holds no control over GW's content, and isn't obliged to agree with it.

I must address the statements Ellis attributed to me: that I, "an editor of GW, Peter Lynn, confessed to [Ellis] that it was likely that no editor had read the piece before it was printed." In fact, I told Ellis that I personally hadn't taken part in the production or editing of the article. To clarify, I left it in the capable hands of three other editors during the preliminary stages. However, I did read it and satisfied myself that it was factually accurate before approving it.

Further, Ellis claims I admitted that the editors' failure to read and approve articles "happened all the time — press night was a zoo." This is ludicrous. There wasn't an occasion last year in which an article went into a GW issue without editorial approval. That simply doesn't happen.

Moreover, I advised Ellis of his right to lodge a formal complaint, which might — pending investigation — bring about a correction, retraction or apology. Yet, Ellis failed to do so — perhaps because he knew his case was too weak to bring to trial.

The article merely cited publicly-recorded incidents, including statements Ellis made at AMS assembly, and his official stance during the LSS secession referendum — hardly "untrue innuendo." In fact, when I asked Ellis what, specifically, he found objectionable about the article, he was unable to offer particular complaints. He simply called the entire article "reprehensible," yet somehow seemed unable to say exactly why.

Further, Ellis' central argument — a "rebuttal" of EngSoc President Keith Stewart's criticism of George Reinblat's attack on engineers — is flawed. Ellis contends that Stewart's objection is hypocritical since EngSoc publishes GW, which allegedly abused Ellis and "law students in general" (actually, law students weren't maligned — only their leaders).

What Ellis overlooks is that GW is editorially autonomous of EngSoc. Stewart holds no control over GW's content, and isn't obliged to agree with it. Thus, he may object to Reinblat's article without hypocrisy. Ellis has demonstrated only two things: First, that he carries a grudge against GW and EngSoc over an article entitled "The Queen's LSS is run by a bunch of sneaky assholes." Secondly, that the LSS does, in fact, have at least one at its helm.

Peter Lynn
GW Editor 1997-98

Frank Zappa

Article full of shit

Dear Editors,

I read with some interest the column "The Scene" in The Journal of Tuesday, October 6. It opened with the description of a particular Frank Zappa "legend." Your writer may, however, want to do some research before his next article — the events he described in the article never actually happened.

At least, that's what he claims in his autobiography, The Real Frank Zappa Book. The book goes on as some length about this, but his summary of this particular story is short and to the point:

talking

HEADS

Who would you not trade places with for a million dollars?

"The guy who always misses the Polkaro — man that would suck!"

Susy MacDougall
Con-Ed '99

"Entertainment staff at the Plaza"

Susy MacDougall
Con-Ed '99

"Bill Clinton — Enough said"

Tim Elgar
Comm '02

PHOTOS BY APRIL BOND

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS POLICY

The Editors of The Journal want to hear from all readers.

Letters that are legible, legal and literate will be published if space permits. All letters must include the writer's NAME and TELEPHONE NUMBER.

Drop off letters to The Journal House at 272 Earl St., fax to 545-6728, or E-mail them to <journal@post.queensu.ca>.

If, as the article implies, the father is not in the picture, then the boy is likely to be materially and emotionally deprived and society should be judgmental.

I am not interested in the Miss Natvik's incomprehensible psychobabble, though it does seem rather narcissistic. It would be more interesting to learn about the relationship between the mother, father, and son. If, as the article implies, the father is not in the picture, then the boy is likely to be materially and

NEED A PART-TIME JOB?

THE STUDENT EMPLOYMENT RESOURCE MANUAL

YOUR FREE GUIDE TO JOBS IN KINGSTON!!!

Pick up a copy of the Student Employment Resource Manual in the Municipal Affairs Commission in the AMS or on the web at: www.ams.queensu.ca/ams/munic/serm/
Call us at 545-6000 ext. 5178 with any questions!

Shop for eyewear at Marc F. Raymond Opticians.

Then show them off - on us.

With every purchase over $50.00 we'll give you a $5.00 coupon good for food or beverages at Tir Nan Og.

FREE $5.00 COUPON good at...

Prince George Hotel, 200 Ontario St.

So, choose the right glasses for your hectic lifestyle and then celebrate on us.

We have frames for every occasion, Brooks Brothers for lecture hall, Esprit for casual, and MEXX for partying till dawn.

Marc F. Raymond Opticians
"More Than Meets The Eye"

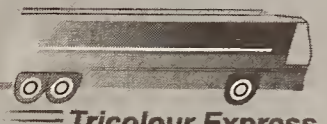

324 King St. East, On The Market Square
549-2020
(Offer expires October 30th 1998)

Don't go home without it.

Weekly runs to Toronto ($23), Ottawa ($18) and Montreal ($25)

Unlimited Tickets Always Available Until Noon Of The Day Before Departure

Tricolour Express
545-6863

Always Your Best Ticket Home

Tickets only at: exchange

Student Lounge
Upper College, JDCG
545-2125
www.ams.queensu.ca
www.ams.queensu.ca/AMS/USBS

Letters to the Editors

emotionally deprived and society should be judgmental. But these days, everyone is all tight a-okay and those who point these things out are the villains.

Andrew Zur
Artsci '99

Tuition

When financial need becomes personal

Dear Editors,

I have a question for Brock Jones. Are you on OSAP? You see, I was always under the impression that you were. That's why I was never offended by any of your letters in which you attempted to justify tising tuition and explain the wondets of the OSAP repayment plan. After all, you were facing the same increases and need for more loan money as the rest of us.

Until you are a student in need, you have absolutely no right to criticize the worries of those who are.

Of course, I was making a lot of assumptions about your life circumstances. I was assuming that, like myself, you have worked full-time for the four months between school yeats, averaging 50-60 hours per week. I assumed that you also had limited financial support from your parents; not because they weren't encouraging your academic endeavors, but because they simply couldn't afford to help. I assumed that you, like myself, work part-time during the year in lieu of extracurricular activities, so that you can afford to pay rent...and eat. And I assumed that despite all your work, despite bursaries and scholarships, you still, like myself, managed to accumulate a five-figure student loan. Not due to poor money management skills, but because a dollar only stretches so far.

So, Mr. Jones, I ask you — is that scenario familiar to you? Or, as your letter implied, are you fortunate enough to have a family that can afford to carry your financial burden? Not that I would resent you for that; after all, it just means less competition for those of us who rely on government funding to (temporarily) pay for our education. However, what I DO resent are all your lectures on the wonderful OSAP repayment plan, when that is a wonder you'll never have to face. I resent your support of higher tuition when the reality is that any tuition increase would have little or no impact on your finances, but just means that Mommy and Daddy writes you a bigger cheque. And, most of all, I resent your implications in past letters that my financial worries are due to "laziness"; that I should "get off my ass and get a job"; that I should be more financially responsible for my education. After all, just who is responsible for yours? And if it is, as I now suspect, your parents, how can you possibly justify lecturing me on responsibility, when I am the one paying my own way (since the thing about OSAP is, it does have to be repaid)?

I encourage you to reply to this letter, and share a bit of your financial state with the Queen's community. If my first assumption was correct, and you do have a loan, then it will only add credibility to your suggestions as to how students should cope with increasing tuition and increasing debt.

I encourage you to reply to this letter, and share a bit of your financial state with the Queen's community. If my first assumption was correct, and you do have a loan, then it will only add credibility to your suggestions as to how students should cope with increasing tuition and increasing debt.

You and your friends from UCC got in here because you are intelligent and rich, two circumstances that are unlikely to be affected by rising tuition. The rest of us are here because we are intelligent and work hard — the latter of which is almost certain to be affected, since there are only so many hours in the day in which to balance work and study.

All I ask is that you at least try to understand exactly why we are so worried, that you at least have the courtesy to pay us the respect you deserve.

Cynthia Dixon
Nursing '99

Loan program a viable solution

Dear Editors,

I must say, it was rather humorous to read Ms. Carrie Reid's letter in the October 6 Journal. After reading yet another offering from Brock Jones last week, I fully expected to hear some sort of half-witted, empty and emotional attack towards him in the next paper. Ms. Reid bit the bait.

My main question to Ms. Reid is "what was the real point of your commentary?" If it was only to point out that Mr. Jones is a UCC grad (and oh, do we ever hate those 'private school junkies') then you were successful. You failed to convince me, a public school grad, why the Income Contingent Repayment Loan (ICRL) program is the worst possible answer to our reality.

Mr. Jones has offered us a very viable solution to our problem. Faced with reality, (my reality consists of: government has no money = university has no money = higher tuition no matter how many times people write useless letters to The Journal), the ICRL is an answer. Note, I said AN answer, not THE answer. It is quite a change to see a Journal editorial offering solutions to the current crisis. And by the way Ms. Reid, the ICRL program is designed so that those who cannot pay, pay later, and if you can pay (in order to avoid all that nasty interest) you can pay now.

How can Queen's attract top students when it has spent all its money on bursaries and has none to offer for an updated library, a physical education centre, research centres, etc.?

I also would like to comment on Ms. Reid's 'question of the week to Brock.' She wonders how Queen's can justify raising tuition in an effort to attract top students when our admission standards have been consistently falling year after year.

Let me answer this for Brock with another question. How can Queen's attract any, including top, students when it has spent all its money on bursaries and has none to offer for an updated library, a physical education centre, overhead machines, computer labs, research centres, etc.? At this point we might as well put lectures on videotapes and mail them to students.

The final point I would like to address is Ms. Reid's myopic view of enrolling students. Ms. Reid mentions that faced with rising tuition, "only rich kids can afford Queen's." I am sure many of us who read the national newspaper are aware that tuition is rising "everywhere." Ms. Reid's argument thus implies that only rich kids can afford university in Canada. Ms. Reid then stipulates that the number of people going to university has risen, then continues writing that the real growing number is the number of rich kids who can afford university. Well Ms. Reid, rich kids could always afford university. So I don't see how one can pos-

The Toucan
www.thetoucan.com

SPECIALS

1/2 price WINGS* sun-tues	1/2 price NACHOS* wed	$2.49 sunday BREAKY
---------------------------	-----------------------	----------------------

*With beverage purchase after 2pm

FRI OCT 16
BLOOM

FRI OCT 23
luther wright & the wrongs with guest MOE BERG

Kirkpatrick's
76 Princess st. 544-1966

SENATE ORIENTATION ACTIVITIES REVIEW BOARD

Invites submissions from individuals or groups regarding Orientation September 1998.

Comments should be sent by Friday, October 23 to:

Liljan Davies, Secretary
University Secretariat
Mackintosh-Corry B-400 or e-mail
davesl@post.queensu.ca

ELECTROLYSIS
Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely. Experienced electrolysisists. Recommended by Physicians.

HARRISON SALON
Kingston Since 1959
Free Consultation
Call 542-5595

Professional skin and hair

...welcomes you to Queens University

Enjoy a visit to Professional Skin & Hair

EXCLUSIVE to Professional Skin & Hair is one of Canada's top Make-Up lines???

Full service hair & esthetics for men & women
Student discount Monday to Wednesday

Aveda • Redken • Babor • K.M.S.

Specializing in Formal Up-do's
Waxing • Permanent wave • Manicures
Pedicures • Advanced cutting techniques
foil hi-lites • Skin treatments & much more.

613-549-7546
115 Clarence St. Kingston, ON K7L 5N6

More letters to the

sibly correlate rising tuition with increasing university applications from rich kids. One would think that university applications would decline with rising tuition. Since they haven't, a growing number of "average young Canadians" have decided that the investment in their future is worth the higher tuition.

The letter headline read "Jones needs a dose of reality." I believe it should have read "Jones sees reality but still cannot get through to narrow-minded students."

John Shipman
Comm '99

Canadian tuition rates make sense

Dear Editors,

I would like to address some of the issues raised by Ms. Reid's letter of October 6th.

If, as Ms. Reid seems to believe, high tuition is discouraging under-privileged youth from attending university, why is it that the countries with the highest tuition, namely the United States and Canada, are also the ones with the highest rate of university education? Specifically, in the U.S. and Canada close to 30% of people between the ages of 18 and 25 attend a three or four year degree granting program, while the similar figures for France and Germany (where tuition is free) are less than 20%.

More broadly, in the course of the lifetime, over 50% of Americans, and 48% of Canadians will receive a post secondary education of some sort (college, university, technical schools, and so on), whereas in France and Germany the similar figures are less than 30%. How does Ms. Reid explain these figures? Is it that there are twice as many rich people in Canada as in France?

Perhaps the better explanation would be that since France pays all the tuition for its students, it can't afford to educate more than a small proportion, whereas in Canada, because the students pay a share of the cost of education it is possible to provide a good (but still subsidized) education to a lot more people.

Isn't it ironic that higher tuition makes Canadian (and American) education more accessible? And even though we have to pay for our education, it's still a bargain considering that university graduates earn more money, generally have better, more secure, jobs.

And for the record, Ms. Reid, while I do consider myself to be member of the intellectual elite (if only because it improves my self esteem), I did not attend UCC, and in fact attended an high quality inner city high school.

Carl Irvine
Arts '00

Smoking

Cigarette sales send the wrong message

Dear Editors,

In response to the recent controversy over the sale of cigarettes at Alfie's, I find The Journal's stance on smoking disappointing. While Health Canada is spending mass amounts of money on its anti-smoking campaign, it's embarrassing that Queen's university would even consider offering students cigarettes at one of its campus bars.

While I agree that selling cigarettes in a bar may not do much more to actively promote smoking, it does, nonetheless, send a clear message that smoking is acceptable. Don't get me wrong, I don't find cigarettes nor those that smoke them morally abhorrent, but the long-term consequences of the habit are undeniable. And even more unfortunate is that they are so brutally addictive.

It's embarrassing that Queen's university would even consider offering students cigarettes at one of its campus bars.

Since many lifelong smokers began at our age, both Queen's and The Journal should avoid advocating cigarettes as a student's "best friend."

Nancy Carlson
PT '99

Computing

Technical glitches

Dear Editors,

I had a few thoughts which you might find interesting.
1 — The article could have

Stuart's Place

offers a

10% STUDENT DISCOUNT
(on presentation of a student card)

Weekend Breakfast till 2 pm
Daily Specials under $5

Great Coffee
Home Cooking
Vegetarian Options

320 King Street East
in Market Square

City Sports
298 PRINCESS STREET (at Clergy), KINGSTON, ONT. Phone 542-4415
RACQUET & RUNNING SPECIALISTS

Graphite Black Knight SQUASH RAQUET REG $109.00	LARGE SELECTION OF SWIMWEAR, GOGGLES & ACCESSORIES
WE HAVE QUEEN'S BACKPACKS, QUEEN'S SWEAT SHIRTS, QUEEN'S SHIRTS
LARGE SELECTION OF ATHLETIC SHOES	WINTER FLEECE AND JACKETS ARRIVING DAILY

TEAMS ◊ FLOORS ◊ CLUBS ◊ FACULTIES
JACKETS ◊ T-SHIRTS ◊ RUGBY JERSEYS ◊ GOLF SHIRTS ◊ SWEATS
Baseball/Football/Hockey Jerseys ◊ Custom Cresting at Very Special Prices!

Having trouble paying bills?

The student food bank is there to help.

There's no application. You don't need to show ID or prove financial need. Just drop by, and take the food that you need.

We're open Mondays and Thursdays, 4-6 p.m.

Basement, 272 Earl St. (between University and Division) • 545-6972

Rent the beer. Keep the video.

Grab a specially-marked case of Labatt Blue right now and inside you get an NHL video. For keeps. There's four videos to collect, full of great goals, bloopers, and hits. Beer and hockey? 'Giddyup!

Must be legal drinking age. For no purchase entry call 1-800-267-BEER. NHL and NHL Shield are registered trademarks of the National Hockey League. ©1998 NHL. All Rights Reserved.

More letters to the

been much more substantial had the journalist researched in either graffiti or soapbox for relevant "discussions."

2 — Performance: ITS gives the excuse that subscribers exceeded their expectations. This is the same excuse that they gave regarding qlink's performance when it was installed. The performance of qlink is still not very good. There exist several excellent solutions to this problem which have been implemented by other institutions. Carnegie-Mellon University (CMU) in the states is a notable example.

3 — Download limitations: It sounds like a reasonable idea until you realize that it constitutes an invasion of privacy by means of traffic analysis. While I have not personally seen a Q@H contract, I expect that it does not cover this subject. Finally, since it is not a subject covered in the advertising, what about those persons who signed up for the service with the explicit intent of using it to "suck files"?

4 — Toll lines: ITS is the least cost effective ISP in Kingston. Dial-up access from any other service provider can be obtained at a more reasonable rate.

5 — Activity in general: It is clear why Queen's became an ISP since the term did not even exist 5 years ago. There were a few students who needed remote connectivity in order to do numerical analysis or some other work on the mainframe. The best option was for Queen's to provide dial-up lines internally. But why does Queen's continue to try to be an ISP when there are several local businesses which are capable of filling that niche, and probably in a more cost effective manner for all involved? Offsetting e-mail "aliases" in the same manner as numerous professional organizations (for example the ACM and IEEE) would appear to be a more appropriate alternative. Furthermore, these aliases could be maintained after graduation at little or no cost, providing a stable e-mail address.

Why does Queen's continue to try to be an ISP when there are local businesses which are capable of filling that niche, and probably in a more cost effective manner?

6 — Along the same lines, why does Queen's sell computers? This side business appears to have the same origins as the dial-up lines since there wasn't much of a market to support local computer stores in the 80s.

However things have changed, and Queen's is supposed to be an educational institute.

I have talked to many first year students who informed me that they were under the impression that they had to buy their system from Queen's in order to access the internet from residence. One solution would be for Queen's to publish some sort of standard that would outline requirements for hardware and software, and, optionally, certify packages from local businesses. This would be a reasonably easy measure to take and would make it much simpler for people who don't know much about computers to make an informed decision.

7 — Another appropriate and positive activity would be organizing and facilitating local interconnectivity of local ISPs. It is ludicrous to have datagrams travel from a dial-up access in Kingston to Toronto and then back to Queen's. Providing this connectivity would not violate our contract with O-Net.

Andrew Hammond
ArtSci '96

Hit-and-run Of life and loss

Dear Editors,

I was recently witness to the aftermath of what turned out to be a tragic hit-and-run accident of two elderly women on Queen street. As I walked across the street to my destination, amidst the flashing lights, my eyes met with the blanketed figure being helped by a paramedic.

As I glanced across I looked into her large glossy eyes and I saw the most terrified and helpless look I have ever seen. As she lay there helpless and terrified, her gaze pierced my soul and sent a shiver down my back.

For the second time this month I have felt an emptiness in my heart and have had to reflect back on my life and say, "that could have been me." With the recent loss of a distinguished professor, a great person and loving individual, Mark Wilson, to whom I had great pleasure of getting to know as his frosh leader, and an innocent old woman to whom I had no affiliation except that we shared the same street that night, I cannot help to feel like there is some purpose in life.

With a birthday just passing, I feel lucky to be where I am, who I am, with the family and friends that I have. We live in a messed up world; I don't understand and don't think I ever will, but because of the sadness and fright I saw in what may have been one of her last gazes I will be forever changed... and will always look both ways before crossing the street.

Ryan DeBruyn
ArtSci '98

SCIENCE

Let's talk about sex, baby

BY LAURA HAMPEL

IF YOU COULD ARBITRARILY pick the gender of your baby at conception, would you do it? Or would you not, preferring to leave such a weighty decision to Mother Nature?

Everyone has preferences. I remember back in the pre-Queen's days, riding to high school on the bus, as Nicole, the "loud bus girl" (every bus has one), noisily told everyone that she wanted a boy, so that he could play hockey. Your reasons may be somewhat different from Nicole's, but many of us, if asked, probably would admit to having a preference.

No longer simply rhetorical, these questions may shortly become very much a part of the decision to become pregnant. A mid-September study in the journal Human Reproduction reported that a fertility centre in the United States will now assure a couple an 85 per cent chance of having a girl (they guarantee slightly smaller odds on having a boy — you'd have around a 65 per cent chance). This is ground-breaking news for a society which has always wanted to control that last elusive variable. Why leave anything up to chance?

The idea has been kicking around for a while. Ancient Greeks would lie on their right side during sex to guarantee a boy and 18th century Frenchmen tied-off the left testicle to achieve the same result. Today's procedure is a lot less unpleasant and comes from a process which has been used in breeding farm animals for the last decade or so.

The basic scientific problem is those carrying an X chromosome, and those carrying a Y. If the mother's egg is fertilized by an X sperm, you get a girl, and if the Y sperm does it, you get a boy. But with 100 million sperm racing around after ejaculation, how can you make sure that you get the right one?

The answer is actually quite simple. X chromosomes have about 3 per cent more DNA than Ys. If you stain sperm with a fluorescent dye that sticks to DNA, and then shine a laser on them, the dyed DNA will glow X (girl-producing) sperm will glow more brightly since they have more DNA. Then all you have to do is separate the bright X sperm from the less bright Y sperm and artificially inseminate Mom with the sperm of her choice. Voilà. At only $2,500 a try (non-reimbursable if it fails), this is definitely a feasible option for parents, and the procedure will certainly get cheaper if the idea catches on and more people try it out.

This is ground-breaking news for a society that wants to control this elusive variable. Why leave anything up to chance?

Now some people might ask why anyone in this day and age would care so much whether they have a boy or a girl. After all, sexism and the glass ceiling are slowly but surely receding. And we aren't living in some eugenics dictatorship — we can have as many babies as we want. Theoretically, the procedure is aimed at parents trying to avoid sex-linked diseases, or trying to give some balance to their family. But really, anyone is welcome, for whatever reason — even Nicole with her hockey dreams.

Who knows? By the time you and I have children, picking the gender of the baby may be as common an option as picking blue or pink paint for the nursery room.

The Miyagi triangle solution

We have a winner! Congratulations to Adam Brown, Ph.D. 1 (in geometry, if you can believe it), for successfully solving the Miyagi Triangle puzzle. He was one of several people to come up with the correct solution. A coin toss (actually, a couple of them) decided the winner.

The solution is:
$$r_2^2 = r_1 r_3$$

That is to say, the radius of the middle circle is the geometric mean of the radii of the large circle and the small one. This solution can be reached by realizing, first of all, that all of the triangles in which the circles are transcribed are similar to each other, and to the entire triangle itself. The solution on the original Japanese wooden tablet then determines the relationship among the squares. Another solution involves bisecting the angles in the triangles to find the centres of the circles and using the Pythagorean theorem to find expressions for the radii. Anyway you reach it, by geometric finesse or (as I did) by algebraic brute force, the result is quite elegant.

Adam has selected a $50 gift certificate from Novel Idea as his prize. Thanks to all of you who entered.

Watch for more geometric gems in upcoming issues

Acht Mein Leibent!

Science Spectrum

Science news from around the world and beyond

Scientists working in the U.S. sweep Nobels...

This year's Nobel prizes in physics, chemistry, and medicine have all gone to scientists working in laboratories in the United States.

Physics

The prize in physics went to Robert Laughlin of Stanford University, Horst Störmer of Columbia University and Daniel Tsui of Princeton. Their work is a quantum-level refinement of the Hall effect, which describes the resistance induced in a superconductor carrying a current when placed in a magnetic field.

Nobel laureate (1985) Klaus von Klitzing, using strong magnetic fields and very low temperatures, discovered in 1980 that the resistance does not increase linearly with increasing field strength, but step-wise, each step given by the product of physical constants divided by an integer. This is the integer quantum Hall effect.

Störmer and Tsui, using even lower temperatures and magnetic fields up to 5 times stronger than those used by von Klitzing, found steps in Hall resistance given by that same constant divided by fractions, demonstrating the fractional quantum Hall effect. The question of the source of these new steps was kicked around for a year before Laughlin offered an explanation. He proposed that the electron "gas" in the conductor, under the influence of the near-absolute-zero temperature and strong magnetic field, condensed into a quantum fluid. Quantum fluids have been previously described in liquid helium and in superconductors.

The fluid described by Laughlin, when excited by the addition of another electron, creates quasiparticles (they're so clever with their nomenclature, these physicists) with the precise fractional charge to account for the new steps.

Chemistry

This year's Nobel laureates for chemistry are Walter Kohn of the University of California at Santa Barbara, and John Pople of Northwestern.

Kohn will receive the Nobel in recognition of his work in simplifying the calculations in analysing the quantum nature of molecular bonds. He showed that following the movement of each electron in a bond is not necessary, that the electrons' spatial distribution is all that is needed, giving rise to the density-functional theory.

Pople will be recognized for his development of computational methods used in the study of molecules, including the design of the GAUSSIAN computer program.

Medicine

Three Americans will share the Nobel prize in medicine this year: Robert Furchgott of New York, Ferid Murad of Houston, and Louis Ignarro of Los Angeles. All three had a hand discovering that nitric oxide (NO) is produced in mammals and is a signal molecule in the cardiovascular system, relaxing the muscles around arteries and dilating the vessels. This explains why nitroglycerine, which is now known to release NO into the body, is an effective treatment for atherosclerosis, the narrowing and hardening of blood vessels. This discovery also led to the development of the wildly popular anti-impotence drug, Viagra.

...but Canadians show well at Ig Nobels

Meanwhile, three Canadian scientists have been awarded Ig Nobel prizes by The Annals of Improbable Research "for research which cannot or should not be reproduced." Jerard Baln of Mt. Sinai Hospital in Toronto and Kerry Siminoski of the University of Alberta won the prize for statistics for their study "The Relationship Among Height, Penis Length, and Foot Size" (there is a very slight, although not predictive, relationship). And the Ig Nobel for safety engineering went to Troy Hurtubise of North Bay for the construction of the world's first suit of armour designed to protect the wearer against grizzly bear attacks. The seven-year development of the suit, which features chain mail, a "black box" data recorder and pepper spray guns, was the subject of the National Film Board documentary Project Grizzly.

SPORTS & FITNESS

The Peanut Gallery

BROTHERS PURGED

Tough day for the Esposito family, as brothers Phil and Tony were fired by the Tampa Bay Lightning. Phil, who was the general manager, is widely regarded as the man who brought hockey to Florida, had been with the team since its inception seven years ago. Coming off of a last place finish, the two Hall of Famers were fired by new owner Art Williams only two games into this season. Jacques Demers, currently the coach, has assumed the role of general manager as well. Tony's replacement as assistant to the general manager will be filled in the immediate future. It was about time that the Lightning rid themselves of the arrogant and incompetent GM.

PICTURE PERFECT

Three teams remain undefeated in the NFL this season, none of whom are a big surprise. The defending Super Bowl champion Denver Broncos have cut a swath through the league this year with 203 points scored and only 103 allowed. They are again paced by running back Terrell Davis and his 865 yards rushing. Jacksonville and Minnesota share the undefeated perch, with each earning significant victories along the way. Jacksonville has defeated Kansas City and Minnesota traveled to Lambeau Field and defeated the Packers to put themselves amongst the league's elite. In a top heavy circuit like the NFL, it is most likely that at least one of these teams will be playing in the Super Bowl come January.

WORLD SERIES SET

While the Yankees and their 114 regular season wins have done what is expected of them, by reaching the World Series, their dance partner in the fall classic is a bit of surprise. After upsetting the Houston Astros and the heavily favoured Atlanta Braves, the San Diego Padres have earned the right to take on the most prolific team in recent history. While it has been a remarkable run, the Padres do not have the depth to compete with the American League champs. The glass slipper doesn't quite fit. Yanks in 6.

IF CHRISTMAS CAME EARLY...

- Tony Gwynn would culminate his spectacular career with the one thing he seeks — a World Series ring.
- Evander Holyfield and Lennox Lewis would fight in a winner-take-all bout.
- CTV Sportsnet would have a No Curling policy.

Gaels fumble away game

By ADAM KAMINSKY

To give is better than to receive. While this is a good way to look at life, it is not the way to win football games. With eight turnovers, the Queen's Golden Gaels (3-2) were in a giving mood in their 47-30 shoot-out loss at the hands of the Ottawa Gee-Gees (4-1) last Saturday.

Ottawa	47
Queen's	30

Going into this O-QIFC first-place showdown at Frank Clair Stadium it was clear that mistakes, or lack thereof would pick the winner, and they did. The turnovers, while devastating against any team, were particularly destructive against the explosive Ottawa Gee-Gees and their superhuman quarterback Phil Cote.

"We paid quick and early for our turnovers," said defensive coordinator Bob Mullen. Cote, who is the leading Hec Creighton Trophy candidate, did not disappoint in this game. He passed for 340 yards, ran for 82 yards and threw four touchdown balls.

"He is a scary runner, tremendous athlete, he's the best athlete on the team and is the key to everything they do," marvelled Mullen.

Cote showed his skill early by throwing a 23-yard touchdown pass to Rob Harrod, his first of four on the day, midway through the first quarter. A touchdown pass in typical Gee-Gee fashion, Cote scrambling for a while before heaving the ball to Harrod who outleapt the defender for the first major of the day.

The Gee-Gees came back to score a second touchdown three minutes later after halting a productive Gael drive by forcing a turnover. It was Cote and Harrod who connected again, this time from 27-yards out, to capitalize on the Queen's miscue.

After the Gaels tackled Gee-Gee punter Darren McNeice for a safety to get on the scoreboard, Harrod and Cote hooked up for another score, this one measuring 22-yards. Ottawa failed to convert the touchdown, but McNeice kicked a field goal with just under three minutes remaining to stake Ottawa to a seemingly comfortable 23-2 lead.

O-QIFC FOOTBALL STANDINGS	G	W	L	T	A	P
Ottawa	4	1	1	1	91	8
Queen's	3	2	1	1	157	90
Bellevue	1	3	2	1	111	117
Concordia	2	2	2	1	109	101
LaVal	6	3	3	1	152	120
McGill	6	2	6	1	137	134
Calleton	6	1	5	1	83	205

Ottawa at Queen's, Saturday 8 pm
Richardson Stadium on West Campus

It was at this point that the scoring got a little crazy. The Gaels rebounded by scoring two touchdowns in the final three minutes. The first, a 57-yard bomb to speedmeister Colin Campbell from Beau Howes, gave the offence some much needed confidence. This confidence manifested itself quickly with Paul Correale taking the ball over from two yards out to narrow the lead to seven by half-time.

Scoring continued to come by the bushel in the second-half when Ottawa widened the lead to 33-16 on a 21-yard McNeice field goal and a nine-yard touchdown catch by Harrod.

Queen's responded with a 65-yard pass and run play from Howes to Ken Radcliffe to get the deficit back to ten.

The Gee-Gees replied one minute later when running back Ali Ajram broke a number of Gael tackles and took the ball 66-yards to pay dirt, moving the score 40-23.

The track meet continued on the ensuing kick-off, which Paul Correale, who was held to 26 yards rushing, took back 97 yards to the three-yard line. Beau Campbell from Beau Howes,

Please see Rematch on page 16

Going to the net: Gaels' forward Shane Findlay knocks the net off looking for a rebound. Queen's beat RMC 4-0 on Wednesday. PHOTO BY GAL BAE

Workin' it in the water

By JULIETTA LOEFFLER

Water aerobics. If the first thought that enters your head after hearing these words is some older person who can hardly move attempting to get a good workout, you are wrong. Water running is a great exercise for those who want a change from the regular routine of treadmill or track running with the same benefits. It is for those who want a change of pace in their regular workouts and for those that want a new and exciting activity to start them on the road to good health. Basically, water running is for anyone and everyone.

Before we get into how to run in the water, let's get to the basics and convince you of the benefits of water aerobics. Water running is exactly what the name implies. You, in a pool, moving your body in the running motion. It is a great workout for your entire body because the water acts as a very powerful resistor. It is also a good cardiovascular workout due to the fact that your heart rate is elevated sufficiently to provide all the benefits of a cardiovascular workout.

Due to the fact that water running is a non-weight bearing exercise, it is a great activity to do when you are rehabilitating muscles that might have been injured and are not sufficiently strong enough to handle the weight of your own body for extended periods of time. Such injuries might include a recently twisted ankle, an injured knee, a broken leg or any other body part that is not at 100 per cent. It is a great workout and might be just the thing you need to maintain your pre-injury physical fitness level.

Besides its use in injury rehabilitation, water running is a great social activity. Going to the pool with one or two of your friends makes for an enjoyable workout. It is relatively easy to keep up a conversation with a friend while running and both of you will have many laughs for the first few runs (it does look silly the first couple of times). Running with friends is a great way to unwind, catch up on the latest gossip and get a workout in as well.

Besides its use in injury rehabilitation, water running is a great social activity.

The secret of water running is to try it. The first few times may feel awkward, but regardless of how it feels you will still be getting the benefit from it. It can be done in deep or shallow water (no excuses for all you non-swimmers, although shallow water running does have some weight bearing properties to it). Deep water running can be done with or without water belts.

The best way to describe the running motion is as follows:

bring your leg up to a 90-degree position, extended backwards. Do not bring your leg very far past your buttocks. Keep feet relaxed and your back upright (leaning forward is a natural motion so be sure to check your position often). Pump your arms back and forth at 90-degree angles. While pumping, use your arms to pull the water. This motion will keep you above the water and move your body forwards. Without proper use of your arms, you will run rather slowly.

After about 30 minutes of running, you can finish your workout with a few water stretches using the pool edge as a wall or as a support and a few sit-ups, again using the pool edge.

I guarantee that water running will elevate your heart rate, give your muscles some work and leave you energized to finish off the rest of your day. If water running does nothing else, it will leave you feeling refreshed.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Rookie sensation leads team to playoffs

The average first-year varsity athlete would probably have so much on their plate that it would be difficult for them to instantly get with a veteran team. However, Heather Brown is not your average rookie. The Golden Gaels' field hockey goaltender, with four consecutive shutouts, is this week's Journal Athlete of the Week.

Brown, with the help of a strong defensive core, propelled the team into the playoffs after completing a three-game sweep on Thanksgiving weekend. Backed by an opportune offence, she shut down Trent 2-0, McGill 1-0 and Carleton 1-0. Before the weekend, Brown began her amazing streak with a 2-0 shutout against Carleton.

Brown, a Toronto native, has been playing field hockey since the summer of grade 10. She had been a soccer goalie before, so when word got out that a field hockey goalie was needed, she answered the call. This past summer, Brown participated in a Toronto field hockey league and played against women that were twice her age. "This gave me a lot of confidence, especially in goaltending," said Brown.

She was able to put the experience to good use and provided an instant lift to her teammates the day she arrived.

Assistant Coach Richard Bennett commented that Brown "gives the defence a lot of confidence."

Despite all her success this season, Brown still feels there are things she can work on. "[I need to] work on my explosiveness and trust my instincts a little more," said Brown.

At 5 feet 8 inches, she is one of the taller goalies around in field hockey and has been able to use her height as an advantage when stopping high shots.

The Gaels still have two regular season games left, one against Waterloo and one with York, and the team "will use this time to try and tinker with some things," said Bennett. The Gaels are rolling into the playoffs and hope to go farther than they have in years. With the great mix of a solid defensive core and goaltending that would deflate any opponent's morale, Brown and the Gaels are set to contend for a championship.

X-country co-hosts open event at RMC

By QUEEN'S JOURNAL SPORTS STAFF

On Saturday afternoon Queen's will co-host an open cross-country meet that includes many Canadian universities, RMC and Kingston-area elementary and secondary schools. The race is to be held at Fort Henry and the games begin at 12 p.m. The track is a 2.5 kilometre loop that allows fans the opportunity to get a great view of the runners.

The women's race will feature top runners including Nathalie Cote of Ottawa University, a two-time defending CIAU champion, and Emily Tallen, the national 5,000 metre champion. There will also be three teams from the CIAU top ten represented in the women's race. Seventh-ranked McGill, eighth-ranked University of Toronto and fifth-ranked Queen's will all be running the course.

On the men's side there will be some very strong teams in attendance, including the fifth-ranked Queen's group, tenth-ranked Waterloo squad and solid programs from McGill, University of Toronto and Ottawa.

The race will provide fans with the opportunity to see their men's and women's x-country teams who are both having strong seasons.

There is free parking provided at the Fort Henry parking lot, and the meet will take place across the road.

Intramural corner

Upcoming events at the PEC

The Queen's Intramural Program is underway for another season. The fall leagues have started in a number of sports including basketball, football, ice hockey and indoor/outdoor soccer. The co-ed leagues have started for interurb water polo and volleyball. This weekend there is a BEWIS ultimate frisbee tournament and a volleyball tournament on the Oct 31. A BEWIS tennis tournament is beginning this weekend and there is softball on the Oct. 24 and women's squash on November 7 and 14.

The Intramural Office is currently accepting nominations for the September-October Gatorade Intramuralist of the Month Award. This award will be presented to a first-year student who contributes to the intramural program in a positive and meaningful way.

Congratulations is extended to Darryl Dafoe for posting the lowest score in the men's golf tournament. In softball action, the men's team of PHE '99/'00 won the tournament and Comm '00 captured the first ultimate frisbee title of the year. Comm A won the outdoor volleyball and PHE 3 won the women's three-on-three tournament while PHE 2 won the men's three-on-three.

In the game

Men's soccer

This past weekend, the Queen's men's soccer team broke even after two contests. On Saturday, the Gaels lost a tough game to an undefeated Laurentian squad by a count of 2-0. On Sunday, however, the team rebounded to win handily over Ryerson by a lopsided score of 4-0.

Women's soccer

The women's soccer juggernaut continued to roll with two impressive Thanksgiving weekend victories. On Saturday, the women defended their number two national ranking by squeaking by the Ottawa Gee-Gees 3-2. Scoring the goals for the Gaels were Kim Mwenifumbo and two Nuala Grieve. On Sunday, the stomping continued as they defeated Ryerson by a count of 4-0. Talling for Queen's were Nuala Grieve, Laura Shearer and Ange Crockford.

Men's hockey

Last weekend, the men's hockey team continued their exhibition season by taking part in a tournament at Wilfred Laurier. Unfortunately, the Gaels' offence was not quite up to par and they finished with a 1-2 record. The Gaels suffered their first two losses of the season at the hands of Wilfred Laurier and York University by matching 5-1 scores. They followed the two losses up with a win against Conastanga College in a tight 1-0 game, firing 53 shots on net.

On Wednesday night the Gaels hosted the RMC Paladins in an exhibition game and thumped their cross-town rivals by a 4-0 count. Queen's goals came from Matt Thorne, Jonathan Bishop, Rob Mailloux and Shane Findlay. The shutout was earned by Jason Skilnick. The Gaels play against Ryerson in Toronto on Saturday night.

Field hockey

The women's field hockey team completed a dramatic Thanksgiving weekend with three straight victories that propelled the Gaels into the playoffs. On Friday, the team downed Trent by a count of 2-0 on goals by Jessica Whelan and Jackie McLachlan. Saturday resulted in two victories with 1-0 shutouts against McGill and Carleton. Both goals in the contests were scored by Amber Palmer.

Men's rugby

The league leading squad visited York on Thursday afternoon and thumped them to the tune of a 28-14 score. This moves the Tricolour's record to an impressive 5-0. The first XV have a difficult game coming up against the improving Gaelic side. This matchup will be for supremacy in the OUA.

Follow the Gaels on CFRG 101.9 FM. Listen to Sports Talk Thursdays at 5:30

Want a JOB?!

The official graduate photographer of the Tricolour Yearbook is hiring 4-5 part-time RECEPTIONISTS. Apply by dropping off a resume and cover letter to the AMS office by October 23 @ 4:30pm.

Rematch looming

Continued from page 14

Howes finished the drive on the next play, strolling into the end-zone after a convincing fake.

Facing a 10 point deficit in a game with the back and forth pace of a ping-pong match did not seem like a huge obstacle. However, on the first possession of the fourth quarter, Ottawa stretched their lead to 17 on a two-yard touchdown plunge by full-back Dave Maclean.

The Gaels were able to move the ball down the field, but it was interceptions and fumbles that continually kept the offensive unit from scoring.

"We shot ourselves in the foot and that was frustrating," said offensive coordinator Steve Yovetich. "The guys got a sense of what they were capable of doing, but just didn't finish."

While the scoring barrage ended with a 47-30 score, the Gee-Gees continued to put offensive statistics on the board and finished with 638 total yards. Receivers Harrod (8 catches, 160 yards) and Chris Etraite (11, 143) had huge days through the air and Atram with 199 yards on the ground leant balance to the unit. This output moved Queen's from the top-ranked defence in the conference, to fourth overall.

There is little doubt that the athletic and speedy Gee-Gee offence was constructed with the fast artificial turf at home in mind.

"They are at their peak on the turf, it makes them look like another class of athlete," said Mullen.

The Gaels offence, outside of the turnovers, had impressive statistics as well, rolling up 413 yards. Howes threw for 304 yards and was able to distribute the ball to his various receivers, with eight catching passes.

A major concern for the team is the lack of a running game, with only 57 yards on the day, but Coach Yovetich was not too concerned.

"[Ottawa] did a good job of forcing the run early and they gave us stuff down the field that we don't normally take and we took it," explained Yovetich.

With the results of last week's game fresh in the minds of players and coaches, there will be an opportunity to implement what was learned quickly with a return engagement this weekend at Richardson Stadium.

"We shot ourselves in the foot and that was frustrating."

— Coach Steve Yovetich

The game has huge implications for the Gaels. Another loss would virtually eliminate hope of finishing first in the O-QIFC and would force the Gaels to focus on a playoff berth.

With the Queen's offence showing that they can move the ball virtually at will, it is the team's ability to protect the football that will help decide who wins this game.

Defensively, Coach Mullen knows that things are going to have to change. "They were at their best last Saturday and we certainly weren't," he said.

This said, the fact of the matter is that the Gee-Gees and Golden Gaels are two explosive offensive teams, and the scoring will be fast and furious. This game will be entertaining for the fans and a painful struggle for the defensive coordinators.

While high scoring games are Ottawa's strength, Queen's doesn't lose very often at home and Ottawa's speed advantage is somewhat negated on the natural grass field, so revenge will be attained.

Editor's pick - Queen's by 7

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL HOCKEY POOL

- RULES
1. Pick three forwards, two defencemen, one enforcer and one goalie. Enforcers will receive one point for every five penalty minutes. Goalies will be given two points for a win and three points for a shutout (combined 5 points on a shutout).
  2. Pool is open to Queen's students, faculty and staff only. No cost to enter but only one entry per person. Deliver entries to The Journal house at 272 Earl Street. Once entry has been received, no changes will be permitted. Deadline for submissions is Friday, October 16 at 4 p.m.
  3. Points will be tabulated from start of regular season to Mar. 12. Standings will be published occasionally in The Journal. Winners will be announced March 19. Top three scores will receive prizes.

NAME _____ FACULTY/YEAR _____
 PHONE NO. _____ E-MAIL _____

Forwards (pick 3) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Ron Francis, CAR</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Joe Sakic, COL</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Jaromir Jagr, PIT</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Mike Modano, DAL</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Mats Sundin, TOR</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Zigmund Falty, NYI</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Peter Forsberg, COL</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Sergei Federov, DET</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Keith Tkachuk, PHO</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Wayne Gretzky, NYR</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Eric Lindros, PHI</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Paul Kariya, ANA</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> John Leclair, PHI</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Peter Boudra, WAS</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Teemu Selanne, ANA</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Alexei Yashin, OTT</li> </ul>	Goalies (pick 1) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Chris Osgood, DET</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Patrick Roy, COL</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Martin Brodeur, NJ</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Mike Richter, NYR</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Curtis Joseph, TOR</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Dominik Hasek, BUF</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Olaf Kolzig, WAS</li> </ul>	Defence (pick 2) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Oleg Tverdokh, PHO</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Ed Jovanovski, FLA</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Sergei Gonchar, WAS</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Vladimir Malakhov, MON</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Roman Hamrik, EDM</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Bryan Berard, NYI</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Scott Niedermayer, NJ</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Sundis Ozolinsh, COL</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Sergei Zubov, DAL</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Niklas Lidstrom, DET</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Al MacInnis, STL</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Rob Blake, LA</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Kevin Hatcher, PIT</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Steve Duchesne, LA</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Larry Murphy, DET</li> </ul>
Enforcers (pick 1) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Paul Luss, FLA</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Matthew Barabuy, BUF</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Chris Simon, WAS</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Tie Domi, TOR</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Sandy McCarthy, TB</li> <li><input type="checkbox"/> Donald Brashear, VAN</li> </ul>

Entries due by Friday, Oct. 16 @ 4 p.m.
 Deliver entries to 272 Earl Street
 For more info call 545-2800

ENTER AND WIN EXCITING PRIZES

Camera Kingston
 foto source™

• One hour photo • Video
 • Passport photos •

ASK ABOUT YOUR CLUB CK SAVINGS CARD!

2nd Set* PRINTS FREE

*35MM or APS film at time of development. See store for details!

114 Princess St. (near Wellington)
 549-3747
 650 Bath Rd. at Gardiners Rd.
 384-3747

Our FALL SALE includes Expedition Room savings of up to 50% OFF

ALSO Bring in this ad for TAX FREE SAVINGS! on all new arrivals.

TRAILHEAD
 CLOTHING EQUIPMENT ADVENTURE

237 PRINCESS ST. across from The Body Shop
 546-4757

Weed-eaters

It's high time Canada legalised marijuana

By SEAN SPRINGER

TO GROW, OR NOT TO GROW, that is the question. The recommendation of this exposé into the life of a marijuana-growing guru is not to grow. Why? Number one: it's illegal. Number two: it's a social stigma difficult to balance with life in the outer world. Number three: to repeat, it's illegal, and anything that's illegal is certainly "wrong," right?

Interestingly enough, the (ironic) reason why people enter business as marijuana entrepreneurs is because it is illegal. In an interview with Allan, who for the purposes of this feature has selected a misleading alias, the marijuana entrepreneur claimed that in the best interest of his annual income, he hopes marijuana remains illegal in Canada.

With marijuana legalisation appearing more and more viable as time progresses, Allan is putting in overtime to prepare for when government marijuana prices smoke he and his fellow growers tight out of business. "The goal right now is to make as much money as possible [off growing pot]," Allan admitted.

He can only cunge at the image of the Walmart-ish prices that could possibly wind up featured in pharmacy store windows: "STELLAR B.C. BUDS: ONLY $9.99/oz — YOU'LL BE HIGHER THAN THE ROCKIES." Potential buyer's response to Allan's own deals: "Dude, I try to support independent businesses, but c'mon, $9.99?"

So, why does Allan grow marijuana? Laziness? Lack of education? The family business? Who knows? A peek into the life of this semi-professional pot-grower, however, raises the question of whether the reasoning for pot-growing should ever be called into question. In our society, is it not goal Numero Uno to make lotsa money? Definitely. And wouldn't we all like to accumulate mucho deneros through an absurdly-low amount of work? Ideally, no, but realistically, yes!

Growers can only cringe at the image of the Walmart-ish prices that could possibly wind up featured in the store windows of pharmacies: "STELLAR B.C. BUDS: ONLY $9.99/oz — YOU'LL BE HIGHER THAN THE ROCKIES."

IN HIS DEALINGS, Allan rents out five separate houses. "I have people run houses for me," he explained. "I have them live in the house and they take care of the plants and my part of the bargain is I supply them with the equipment, plants, half the bills and I sell all the weed when it's done. I tell them how to do it... passing on the knowledge."

One tenant is, in fact, a college student who pays for his tuition, and other education-related expenses he may have, through the growing operation.

Allan and each tenant profit "about $8,000" every two months. Allan, however, receives $8,000 times five every two months, which works out to approximately $240,000 a year — "take home."

While Allan did admit that it requires an effort to keep five grow-houses above monetary sea level, he appears to be surpassing the comparable ripoff $6.85 per hour in wages that local fast food joints throw at their employees. Allan even has a college diploma, which is more useful to him as a rolling paper than a resumé padder.

What about the risks? They must surely be deterrents. "I have to take special cars to the hydro stores [stores selling items for growing]," he said, "and then afterwards, I have to drive all over the country to make sure that I'm not followed. Yes, there's a lot of risks involved."

Access to marijuana is about as simple as a trip to the park. Regardless of the legality, anyone can find or grow marijuana.

PHOTO BY SEAN SPRINGER

If this underground pharmacy were to be discovered, Allan believes that he could be charged with conspiracy to run organized crime, which could cost him a few years in prison. He figures, though, that this is unlikely. In his own opinion he estimates that if "you were busted for owning one house... it was a huge operation, but you didn't have a criminal record... were pretty clean cut, had a college diploma, you would get a month maybe — at the worst."

ALLAN EXPLAINED that he has been taking advantage of marijuana's "illegal" status ever since he was a tyke peddling pot to the kiddies at the local high school. His ambitions took him to a level he never imagined.

"One summer I did this huge, huge outdoor crop," Allan said. "I spent money all summer and then when we were supposed to get this big outdoor crop off at the end of the year, it got busted by the police. I realized that I had no money as I spent the whole summer hoping this would come through."

Allan estimated that the crop was worth approximately $250,000, and though the crop was confiscated, Allan had no ties to the property. Thus, he walked off scot free, minus his expenses.

To soften the financial blow, he decided to take his business indoors. "I started off with two lights and now I have 20 lights," he said.

Now that he's wheeling and dealing with 20 "1,000 watt high-pressure sodium lights," a relatively thick wad of cash has ballooned under his mattress.

My question, then, is where does this money go? "Don't ask me where that money is because I've been building everything up for a year," he said. Up to now, he's been dumping profits into the equipment necessary to facilitate the operation, so we'll have to wait and see what Revenue Canada has to say when Allan hits the jackpot.

Though the legal and financial powers lurk behind the brush waiting to prosecute, they don't seem to bother Allan. In fact, the sense of pride emanating from this young man is astounding. Pot-growers, he affirmed proudly, "work for the blue-collar [individual]." Coke, on the other hand, "is what scumbags sell."

A small-time pot-grower can conceivably profit as much as a small-time coke dealer. You've gotta scratch your head at the powder shipper when you also consider that the law swats a heavier stick at the coke dealer and the relative consequences of chronic marijuana use are arguably minute, thus less of a guilty burden.

The ironic reason why people enter into the business of marijuana entrepreneurs is because it is illegal.

ENTICING, ISN'T IT? Now, whoa, whoa, whoa! Don't run down to the hydroponics store all of a sudden! My point here is that we have reached a crossroads. How do you prevent Journal readers who, number one, lack a sense of legal ethics and number two, like the sounds of getting cash with minimal work simply by setting up a flortal shop at home?

First option: Jean Chrétien assembles a task force to seek out and purge our society of those who would grow the herb. Second option: legalise marijuana.

The logical answer: since marijuana has become an economic underground hit in B.C. (the RCMP officially reports that the industry is worth $1 billion annually), and marijuana lobbyists continue to stuff their sound arguments down the throats of Ottawa politicians, the Prime Minister probably wouldn't even have the power to pass a bill requiring cross-country stakeouts on basement greenhouses. In a country jam-packed with dealers fuming at the competition, most 16 year olds already have better access to a gram of wacky tabacky than a mickey of Johnny Walker. Prohibition is accomplishing almost nothing. Legalise it.

Now, what does Allan have to say about marijuana legalisation? Surprisingly, he was rather optimistic (or pessimistic depending on which way you look at it).

"No, it won't be legalised," he said. "The States have a very hard line against it and they have a lot of influence on us. If we made it legal in Canada, they would freak, especially with how big our border is." And, of course, it isn't in Allan's best interest if the Canadian government were to legalise pot — God forbid he would have to go out and look for a real job.

Sean Springer wants a new drug — one that will cure his cold.

GW:

We accept.

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Sugar in the raw

Canada's own Big Sugar sweetens up Wednesday night at AJ's

Sugar n' Spice: Gordie Johnson doubles up for an explosive night.

PHOTO BY JILL ORENECK

Concert Review

Big Sugar
AJ's Hangar
Wednesday, October 15

By ERIC MISSIO

Wednesday night, AJ's Hangar was rocked (although "musically assaulted" may be a more apt term) by the sweet sounds of hard rock, electric blues and even reggae tones. Canada's own eclectic quartet Big Sugar was back in town and they were in fine form. Bassist Garry Lowe, drummer Gavin Brown and harp/sax player Kelley Hoppe put on one hell of a show with frontman/Hugo Boss spokesman Gordie Johnson.

Ah yes, Gordie Johnson — Canada's other musical Gordie, did indeed look good Wednesday night in his black silk shirt. And more importantly, he sounded great. After taking the stage sometime after 11:30 p.m. (following a solid, although slightly dragged out set by Que Villa), Big Sugar proceeded to kick some musical ass.

Opening up with "Where I Stand" (from their latest disc, Heated), Gordie and the boys delivered a tight set with few weak points and many highlights. Lowe's guest vocals on a few songs were well received by the crowd, but it was his deafening, continually thumping bass line that grabbed the packed house by its collective throat and shook it to its feet.

While Johnson's crooning and falsetto moans meshed perfectly with the driving musical onslaught, the crowd did take it upon itself to help along with the singing.

The set list was varied, including favourite songs from all four of Big Sugar's releases, and several cover versions ranging from John Lee Hooker to the Police. Johnson's guitar work was so fast, furious and above all, frenetic, he seemed to destroy guitar strings every song and a half or so. Watching him play his solos felt almost voyeuristic — the bond he shares with his guitar, evident through his intensity, seems so personal and powerful that watching him on the stage felt like one was catching a glimpse of something special. The guitar alone helped transform stellar rock songs into, as one person standing near me put it, "something you can have sex to" with its funk and passion.

While Johnson's crooning and falsetto moans meshed perfectly with the driving musical onslaught, the crowd did take it upon itself to help along with the singing on a few songs, notably "Digging a Hole" and "If I Had My Way." The latter was a show highlight in a large part to Brown's air raid-esque cymbal clashing and military drumming.

Hoppe, who essentially plays every instrument the other three do not, showcased his incredible harmonica skills with a standout solo. Instead of simply "playing" the harmonica, "Mr Chill" spoke through it, using the harmonica to sing, rant, whine and yes, even flirt.

After closing the initial set with the rock anthem "Ride Like Hell" to thunderous ovation, Big Sugar's encore showed what can happen when you get too much of a good thing. Whether due to his own playing style or a technical decision, Lowe's bass seemed to be turned way up during the final song, a 15 minute plus medley of "Joe Louis/Judgement Day." No longer just the skeleton of the music, each bass throb seemed to explode inside you. In fact, the intensity of the bass was enough to actually force a lot of people to move further back from the stage in attempt to save themselves from what felt like a gargantuan heart attack.

The guitar alone helped transform stellar rock songs into... "something you can have sex to" with its funk and passion.

Despite this one flaw, Big Sugar maintained their reputation for putting on an incredible show, leaving a very satisfied, if not worn out, crowd.

During "The Scene," when Johnson asked the audience if they "like to get high," the explosive response said it all. And Big Sugar delivered its promise like a band of its calibre should.

Grooving on the ranch

Calgary band Huevos Rancheros dims Alfie's

Concert Review

Huevos Rancheros
Alfie's Pub
Wednesday, October 15

By KATE HUNTER

For the few dozen students at Alfie's Wednesday night, a strange occurrence took place as Huevos Rancheros began to play: Alfie's became a roadhouse while the band provided the soundtrack. Grasping uniqueness with a lack of lyrics, Huevos Rancheros provided a show of tricky guitar riffs and spastic drums but ultimately failed to excite.

Then Huevos Rancheros took to the stage sans lights and sank into the bluesy Pulp Fiction groove.

The same cannot be said for the opening act. Local band Franklin's Fault preceded the main showcase with their blend of ska jazz and nifty instrumental choices. They had the majority of the audience on their feet, tangling to the music of their Blues Brothers meets Sarah McLachlan backed by Ben Folds Five on Ritalin conglomerate.

Franklin's Fault scored with performances of "Walking on Sunshine," "Take on Me" and finished with a rendition of So I Married an Axe Murderer's "This poem sucks." The band turned the bat into Romper Room. I eagerly await another lease to the sympathetic Queen's community.

Then Huevos Rancheros took to the stage sans lights and sank into the bluesy Pulp Fiction groove. With Brent on guitar, Tom on bass and Ritchie on drums, the band used tight bass lines and staccato drum beats; the sort of music that resides in a film noir's roadhouse. That was the atmosphere that spread throughout Alfie's, as if the entire crowd had walked on to the set of a seedy, B-movie.

The one impressive aspect of the band was their passion. They didn't sing, but the enthusiasm they injected into their music was compensation enough. This energy was obviously recognized by the audience which, though sparse, showed due appreciation for the effort. This style compensated for the band's unoriginal music, which seemed to be merely a new turn on a tired movement.

The one impressive aspect of the band was their passion. They didn't sing, but the enthusiasm they injected into their music was compensation enough.

So as Alfie's survives its roadhouse transformation, Huevos Rancheros heads to London and then to their hometown of Calgary to continue work on a CD expected to be released in January of '99.

Maybe when they return to Kingston they will be rewarded by a larger audience and we will be rewarded with a bigger, more original sound. Until then, Huevos Rancheros still has a way to go in creating music that can exist beyond the constraints of a B-movie soundtrack.

PHOTO BY GEOFF ASHENURST

In the noir: Rancheros' Brent mellows the crowd in the darkened pub.

Get Out There!

Movies:

Playing at the Capitol Theatre until Thursday
October 22:
546-5395

Ronin 4:05, 7:05, 9:55
Antz 12:15, 12:45, 2:30, 3:00, 4:40, 5:10,

What Dreams May Come 1:30, 4:20, 7:15, 10:00

Night at the Roxbury 1:00, 3:10, 5:15, 7:00, 7:30, 9:45, 10:00

Simon Birch 1:35, 4:05, 7:15, 9:50

Saving Private Ryan 9:00
Holy Man 1:05, 3:40, 7:10, 9:50
Dr. Dolittle 1:10

Beloved 1:15, 5:00, 8:00
Practical Magic 1:25, 4:30, 7:15, 10:00

Playing at the Cataragui Cineplex until Thursday
October 22:

389-7442

Lolita 1:10, 3:34, 3:50, 6:15, 7:00, 9:25, 9:45, 12:10

Rush Hour 1:50, 3:30, 4:25, 6:05, 7:10, 8:50, 9:15, 10:55

Bride of Chucky 1:30, 3:10, 3:35, 5:15, 7:30, 9:10, 9:35, 11:15

Urban Legends 1:40, 3:30, 4:15, 6:05, 6:50, 8:40, 9:05, 10:55

One True Thing 1:00, 3:20, 3:45, 6:05, 6:40, 8:40, 9:05, 10:55

Something About Mary 1:20, 3:30, 4:05, 6:15, 7:20, 9:30, 9:55, 12:05

Live Entertainment:

Octave Theatre:

Singer/songwriter Laura Smith is performing in concert on Friday, October 16 at 8 p.m. She received two Juno nominations in 1996, including Best New Solo Artist. Smith is promoting the music from her latest CD, "It's a Personal Thing." For tickets call 387-3579.

Windmills Café:
544-3948

On Sunday, October 18, The Ignaz String Quartet will perform on the following Thursday (Oct. 22). Dragonfly will perform at Windmills. Entertainment is provided every Thursday and Sunday evening.

The Cantabile Choirs:

On Saturday, October 17, the Cantabile Choirs is presenting Oktoberfest at Balsam Hall on Gore Road. The evening will include traditional Oktoberfest food and a beer garden. A five piece band will also play. To reserve tickets all Liz Bates at 549-7338.

Art Galleries:

Eclectica Gallery
542-4438

From October 20 to November 1, the Eclectica Gallery is presenting the works of two internationally renowned Canadian artists: Ghitta Caiserman-Roth and Gord Smith. The exhibit is entitled, "Then and Now and Then Again."

Studio Tour:

On Saturday, October 17 and Sunday, October 18 from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. the 11th Annual October Studio Tour will take place featuring 23 different artists. The tour gives the public the opportunity to meet the artists where they work and live. For more information call Hanna Back at 372-5240 or David Ambrose at 359-5050.

Edward Day Gallery:
548-8607

From October 19 until November 15, the Edward Day Gallery presents Bill Irish.

Theatre:
Thousand Islands Playhouse:
382-7020

Until October 31, the Playhouse presents Willy Russell's acclaimed comedy Educating Rita. Tickets are $18-$25 for adults, $16-$23 for seniors and $10 for students. To order tickets contact the Playhouse.

Art for art's sake

Queen's students showcase their talent

Journal Review

By ERIC McDONALD

Flush with short fiction, poetry, essays, art and photography, the Undergraduate Review has something that will catch the attention of most Queen's students.

Editor Julie Russell states in the journal, "the Undergraduate Review is an annual publication which showcases and celebrates the academic and creative genius of undergraduates at Queen's."

After leafing through the introductory pages, the reader falls upon Andrea Summer's, "Of Roots and Wings: Imagining Native Resistance, A Personal Reflection." Her story, written out of Native-Canadian tradition, follows a narrator who grapples with the cultural and spiritual truths that plague a Native world. The author's poetic reflection sets a promising tone for the works to come.

Alison Lam's "Untitled," explores the mind-set of an individual who confronts a terrible truth — a friend's death is his responsibility. The author's tendency to enumerate events, however, makes for a choppy narrative structure.

Sharon Bala's, "Journey of the Soul: A Story in the Style of a Hindu Myth," like Summer's work, is written out of another literary tradition. The author seems talented, but loses herself in the story — at times stalling mythical conventions. The stories are worth reading and all writers show some ability to harness the power of words. The Review's poetry is the least inspiring of the publication's sections. A select few of the works are particularly striking. Kim Palmer's "Postcards from the Journey" is an interesting sort of epistolary poem. The poet experiments with forms and tones and possesses a sensitive use of words. Her work is original and well constructed.

Jane Par's "A Short Song in Favour of the Virtue of Sincerity" shares similar aspects. The poem opens with a brilliant image and follows through with a clear line of argument. This poem will some readers of Eliot's, "Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock."

One cannot help but hear the words "teen angst" echoing through some of the journal's pages.

A number of the poems fall prey to the exploration of themes that are too familiar, and one cannot help but hear the words "teen angst" echoing through some of the journal's pages. A few of the poet's, however, share a gift for a more than ordinary use of words.

The essays cover a wide range of academic interests. The entries will appeal to English majors, biology majors, media enthusiasts, German scholars, and political theorists. The essays are tightly packed bundles of prose and explore fresh topics and ideas.

Renu Mandhanes's "Kate Chopin" essay is easy to follow, but could benefit from a more creative style. Becky Stewart's plant biology paper gives evidence of a student attune to the principles of science. Overall, most essays are well structured and academically engaging.

The Review ends with a collection of photography, visual art, and music. Unfortunately these are very few works and those that appear are not terribly impressive. The Review would profit from a few extra pages of artwork. Keith Trois's "Fugue in D Minor," however, is a delightful final entry.

The Queen's Arts and Science Undergraduate Review is an adequate collection of the literary, artistic and academic works from Queen's talented students. A few entries stand out and after a quick flip through the journal, most readers will be left with the proverbial taste for more.

Footloose in Canada

Student Class Fares

Vancouver	from	$359
Calgary	from	$299
Edmonton	from	$299
Regina	from	$329
Winnipeg	from	$229
Halifax	from	$239
Saint John	from	$339
St. John's	from	$279

Free Date Change

Don't know your exam schedule? No need to worry! Book your student class flights and you'll receive a coupon for a free date change.

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
186 Princess St., Kingston (at Montreal)
Lafayette Travel 549-3553 Long Hall/Group Travel 549-3561
Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

Look Good in Ugly Weather!

Featuring the famous "Interchange" Winter Parka Systems!

DOWNTOWN KINGSTON SOURCE FOR SPORTS

121 Princess St. 542-2892

Rotate this!

Charlie Hunter and Pound for Pound
Return of the Candyman
Blue Note Records

BY COREY WILSON

With all the progressive branches of mainstream jazz music piercing young ears with the continuous pounding of hip hop beats these days, traditional jazz musicians are often muted by the DJs and respected acid jazz artists. Well kids, if you want to expand your supposed hip and intellectual CD carousels, check out Charlie Hunter's Return of the Candyman. Hunter has made no real noise in the industry until his recent move from the Bay Area to New York City, where he signed with BlueNote records to record his fourth album, reminiscent of fellow label-mates Medeski Martin & Wood and John Scofield. This most recent LP from his newest band, Pound For Pound, is purely a serene soundscape of reverberating madness and logic conveyed simply through Hunter on electric guitar, Stefan Harris on vibraphone and John Santos on percussion. However, Hunter's sound is not emanated through the conventional six string guitar; his sounds are produced with an extra two bass strings. This is a hybrid custom made instrument that allows him to simultaneously cover deep, rich basslines with chordal accompaniment and single note melody lines.

The 11 tracks on this disc will definitely remind you of a weird acid trip to the circus with a complimentary super lounge brigade neo-groove attitude.

Keb' Mo'
Slow Down
Epic Records

BY JIM WHITTINGTON

Anyone who thinks that the only people making blues albums nowadays are teen proteges, like Jonny Lang and Kenny Wayne Sheppard, needs to take a listen to Keb' Mo'. Slow Down is the artist's third album and is a follow-up to two very successful and Grammy award-winning recordings.

Keb' Mo' is a traditional bluesman in every sense of the word. His new release remains true to the traditional Delta Blues style of acoustic/steel slide guitar and finger picking pioneered by Charlie Patton and Robert Johnson, and his voice is similar to Luther Allison — aged well beyond his years.

Keb' Mo's instrumentation and arrangement choices, however, give parts of the album a little bit of a pop feel, though it's still decisively blues.

Every song on the album is just great. Standouts include, "Soon As I Get Paid," which is a catchy song that anyone who loves blues will enjoy. "Love In Vain" is a thoughtful and worthy arrangement of the Robert Johnson original and "A Letter to Tracy" is a fine example of Keb' Mo's fine slide playing, singing and song writing.

Keb' Mo' is an artist who is just so good at what he does that I'd bet money that blues artists 50 years from now will look back at his work and see it as some of the best of the times.

If you're into blues in a big way, or maybe if you liked Clapton's MTV Unplugged album, you're gonna love this CD. If you're still not convinced, take a listen to it before you put down the 15 bucks.

Nikita: Music from the Television Series
Various Artists
Moonshine Music

BY ELI SCHUSTER

Okay, before I begin this review, let me put my cards on the table and admit that I'm not a fan of the "Nikita" TV series. That's not to say I don't like it. The truth is, I've never seen an episode of the show (I prefer to spend my time watching quality programming such as the "McLaughlin Group"), and the World Wrestling Federation's "Monday Night Raw"). My point here is simple: I don't have an opinion of "Nikita," although I have to admit that some of its promos on CTV look pretty cheesy. That said, I should tell you that I chose to review this CD for two reasons. First, it consists of 15 tracks by various artists, and I figured at least one of them could be a winner. My second reason had to do with the aesthetic beauty of the CD jacket — it features a lovely photograph of the leggy blonde actress, Peta Wilson, who portrays Nikita. As a red-blooded male I was unable to pass it up.

I'd suggest watching the show rather than buying the soundtrack.

Did I make a wise decision? Well, let me answer that question this way: I have long suspected that the last TV show to produce a half decent soundtrack was "Miami Vice," and this CD merely confirmed my suspicion. That's not to say it's as awful as say... Cimerama's "Va Va Voom." Vibrolux's "Drown" isn't bad, but hardly memorable. Similarly, Afro Celt Sound System's "Inion/Daughter" is eerily reminiscent of Vangelis's "Cry of the Ancient Temple" from the Blade Runner soundtrack, yet it's creepy as hell and not something you'd want to listen to with a bunch of friends. The other songs seem to range from uninspired New Age blather to insincere, synthesized industrial house music that no club would ever play.

If you wish to hear any of these selections, I'd suggest watching the show rather than buying the soundtrack. Come to think of it, maybe you'd be better off reading a book instead.

Reunion Barr-ed: The TV reunion that was to take place between Roseanne and Tom Arnold on Roseanne's syndicated talk show is off. Scheduling conflicts have made it impossible for Arnold to appear on the show, entitled "Forgiveness."

Polka King Where Are You? Frank Yankovic, the Grammy winning, "Polka King" whose songs wore out polka dancing shoes over six decades, died Wednesday at age 83.

The Hip coming to K-town: Warner's Music Group's Internet Concert website is offering live, daily and free concerts. The cyberfest festival is running all of October. The Hip, Paula Cole and Third Eye Blind can be checked out at ear1.com

For One Week, Aerosmith ain't on top: Aerosmith's "I Don't Want to Miss A Thing" has slipped to third place on the Billboard charts. Monica's "The First Night" took second place, while Barenaked Ladies, "One Week" scored first.

Autz-y to get to the box office:
1. Autz $15.4 million
2. Rush Hour $11.5 million
3. What Dreams May Come $11 million
4. A Night at the Roxbury $6.2 million
5. Holy Man $5.2 million

Beloved Chucky is back: New movies releases today include, "Beloved," "Happiness," "Goodbye Lover," "Practical Magic," "Bride of Chucky" and "Slam."

THE JOURNAL CROSSWORD

Canadian Criss Cross by Walter D. Feener

- |                                  |                              |                          |
|----------------------------------|------------------------------|--------------------------|
| ACROSS                    | 51. Stitches                 | 25. Jazz devotee         |
| 1. Confined                      |                              | 27. Fasten a seat belt   |
| 5. Volatile computer memory      | DOWN                  | 29. Pleased with oneself |
| 8. Wild card, in some games      | 1. Cottonwood                | 30. Cavalry soldier      |
| 9. Isaac's mother                | 2. Lengthen                  | 31. ___ generis          |
| 11. Swamp tree                   | 3. "Old Curiosity Shop" girl | 33. Disproves            |
| 12. "Wild Bill" of the Wild West | 4. Freshwater game fish      | 34. Observers            |
| 14. Type of fuel                 | 5. Sudden attack             | 35. Delightful abode     |
| 15. Easily understood            | 6. Joan of                   | 36. Male cat             |
| 17. Before                       | 7. Forgive and forget        | 38. Braids               |
| 18. Cheating scheme              | 8. Electricity: sl.          | 41. Baglike structures   |
| 20. Wine cask                    | 9. Black eye                 | 42. Artificial bait      |
| 21. Working                      | 10. Stallion                 | 45. Reminder             |
| 22. Goat antelope                | 11. Throw a ball             | 47. Bend the head        |
| 24. Cookery formula              | 13. Lock opener              |                          |
| 26. Apprehend                    | 16. Unfriendly dog           |                          |
| 28. Knock                        | 19. Dollars and cents        |                          |
| 29. Neural network               | 21. Two-footed animal        |                          |
| 32. Brusque                      | 23. Cerumen                  |                          |
| 36. Hair color                   |                              |                          |
| 37. Half pint                    |                              |                          |
| 39. Feat                         |                              |                          |
| 40. Charged particle             |                              |                          |
| 41. Expertness                   |                              |                          |
| 43. Hymenopterous insect         |                              |                          |
| 44. Of the cheek                 |                              |                          |
| 46. Reddish brown                |                              |                          |
| 48. Tennis score                 |                              |                          |
| 49. Hurries                      |                              |                          |
| 50. Legal matter                 |                              |                          |

Answers for last issue's puzzle.

Professional Schools Fair

Thursday, October 22nd

Upper and Lower Ceilidh
John Deutsch University Centre

- |                               |                       |
|-------------------------------|-----------------------|
| Accounting                    | Naturopathic Medicine |
| Applied Health Sciences       | Nursing               |
| Architecture                  | Policy Studies        |
| Chiropractic Medicine         | Social Work           |
| Communicative Disorders       | Speech Pathology      |
| Counselling Psychology        | Theology              |
| Dentistry                     | Urban Planning        |
| Information Technology        |                       |
| Information and Media Studies |                       |
| Law                           |                       |
| Medicine                      |                       |

Representatives from these programs will be available from:

11 a.m. - 2 p.m.

- answers to questions on admission requirements
- information on programs offered

Presented by Career Services <http://careers.queensu.ca>

ASUS THEATRE PRESENTS . . .

TITANIC

8 pm ONLY

Coming this Sunday, October 18th

Dunning Auditorium

$3 as usual

NOTHING ON EARTH COULD COME BETWEEN THEM.

ASTHMATICS NEEDED
Help us discover the Asthma Gene

If you have ASTHMA and have a sibling with asthma
OR
have more than one child with asthma
AND
have both parents of asthmatics available for testing.

Supervisor: Dr. D. O'Donnell - Kingston General Hospital
Contact Sonja @ 548-3232, ext. 4950

•2 Medium Pizzas
(One Choice)
•6 Wings
•1 Order of Onion Rings
For $15.99
Tax included & Free Delivery
(Sun, Thurs, Wed)

ZA MASTER
530-2525

Pita and Pop
$5.00
Taxes Included
(Pick-up Only)

The Managers of the Publishing and Copy Centre feel that in order to give the best service and highest quality of products possible, we must become at one with the copiers. That's why we drink warm, refreshing black toner ink. It helps us to get the job done right.

got toner ink?

Help us name our new fax machine. When you send or receive faxes be sure to put your suggestion into the box and you could win a prize. ($1.50/pg to send w/in Canada; $0.50/pg to receive)

We Design Resumes starting at $15, as well as Posters and Pamphlets, Custom T-Shirts with full colour image - $18.95 Custom Mouse Pads with full colour image - $9.99 Discounts on Bulk Orders

QUESTIONS? Please come in and ask us about anything. If you can think of it then we can probably make it possible. Don't know how to use a photocopier? We'll teach you.

Free Stuff, Tomorrow Only!
Jasens Ring Days This Thursday and Friday.
Only at the Campus Bookstore

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY THE JOURNAL

since 1873
TUESDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1998

Leaders divided over alignment

By SHAWN BRIMLEY

Aftershocks continue to resonate through the AMS this week in the wake of last week's Assembly vote to not allow a referendum question on alignment.

Assembly defeated the referendum motion in a secret ballot by a count of 16 in favour and 18 opposed. Had the motion passed, students would have been allowed to decide whether they favour alignment with the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance, as a way to strengthen lobbying efforts.

The AMS executive will now attempt to force a referendum by collecting 600 signatures.

AMS President Tom Stanley said, "I would characterize the dissent in Assembly as general discomfort or indecision with alignment in the sense that if Assembly members were indecisive, how could an average student on the street ever make a informed decision? Some Assembly members seemed to believe that the average student had limited interest, inclination, desire or ability to cope with such a decision on alignment."

"Nobody was saying that students aren't intelligent enough to decide, or that students shouldn't have the right to decide. There were fears of lack of information, and people thought the issue had been put forward in a very one-sided manner," said Arts and Science Undergraduate Society Anatole Papadopoulos.

"The big problem I have with [the assembly meeting] was that there were a lot of Assembly members saying that there were a lot of unanswered questions, yet there was not a single question asked about alignment to any of the other council members," said Milan Konopek, AMS academic affairs commissioner.

Jascha Jabes, ASUS representative to the AMS, disagreed, saying, "Procedural decisions were taken by the president

Please see Secret on page 4

False alarms disrupt researchers

By FIONA STEVENSON

The administration is responding to concerns among students and professors that unnecessary fire alarms and evacuations at Botterell Hall are seriously disrupting research.

"This is a very big and ongoing problem... A false alarm can be just a disaster," said Leda Raptis, professor of microbiology and immunology. Raptis said disruptions during a key part of an experiment can result in "years worth of work down the tubes" and monetary losses as great as $20,000 for lost time and materials.

Raptis said she is unhappy with Botterell Hall policy which instructs people to contact the university's Emergency Report Centre whenever they smell something suspicious in the building.

"With the pyridine spill, in retrospect, maybe it was an over-reaction, but the person who started the system going obviously felt it was justified."

— Eileen Walters, associate professor in biochemistry

According to Wiebke Welkins, from Environmental Health and Safety, in assessing a situation, ERC will normally try to consult Kevin McKegney, the building manager of Botterell Hall for advice. However, "if the [caller] doesn't know where [the smell] is coming from and if it's getting stronger, they've been told to pull the fire alarm," she said.

However, an evacuation during a critical point in research can be catastrophic, Raptis said. For example, it can take as long as a year for a tumour to develop in an animal, and if an evacuation occurs while the tumour is being extracted, "you have wasted a year of work," she explained.

"I understand students' concerns, quite honestly," said Eileen Walters, associate professor in biochemistry. "With the pyridine spill, in retrospect, maybe it was an over-reaction, but the person who started the system going

Gord Thiessen, the governor of the Bank of Canada, spoke to the Queen's community last Thursday about the merits of interest rate targets in the context of Canada's economy.

PHOTO BY JAMES TERJANIAN

Security boards to appear off campus

By JOCELYN LAPORTE

The AMS, in cooperation with Campus Security and the office of the Dean of Student Affairs, is implementing a program that will introduce glassed-in safety notice boards in local laundromats, groceries and convenience stores.

The function of the notice boards, which will be maintained by Campus Security, will be to inform students of serious security incidents, such as assaults, that occur in the student housing district. The goal is to increase students' awareness about potential dangers and provide them with information about security precautions.

"The pedestrian nature of the Queen's community makes it all the more imperative that students be aware of any safety issues that may arise in their neighbourhood," said Alison Loat, AMS vice-president (university affairs), who came up with the idea.

Kathy Beers, assistant to the Dean of Student Affairs, said the estimate for producing 20 of the cases is just over $12,000. This cost will be shared by the AMS, the Office of the Dean of Student Affairs and Campus Security she added.

"It works out well for the businesses because they just have to provide the wall space," commented Loat. The boards measure approximately 18 by 24 inches. In return, the participating establishments will be featured in one advertisement per term, publicizing the locations where students can access the security information.

So far, community response to the campaign has been positive, with six locations already agreeing to participate. These include A&P on Barrie Street, College Variety on Alfred Street, Freddie's Grocery on University Avenue, Bearance's Grocery on Livingston Avenue, Food Basics on Barrack Street and Central Laundromat on Division Street.

Loat, who is still in the process of implementing the program, said she is awaiting response from other local establishments and believes there will be further additions to the list. The boards are expected to be in place soon. "I am hoping by the end of the month," she said.

Loat said the boards will help ensure that, within a week, at least one student per household comes into contact with a security bulletin, whether it be posted on campus or at one of the local businesses. "It is not to make people scared or cause panic, but just to make people aware," she said.

Please see Evacuations on page 3

index

Volume 126, Issue 14
www.journal.queensu.ca

News . . . . . 1	A&E . . . . . 19
Editorials . . . . . 6	Crossword . . . . . 23
Opinions . . . . . 7	Classifieds . . . . . 23
Features . . . . . 13	MISC. . . . . 24
Sports & Fitness . . . . . 15

WEATHERWATCH

Today

Mix of sun and cloud
High 11°C; Low 7°C;
POP 30%

Wednesday

Mix of sun and cloud
High 9°C; Low 0°C;
POP 30%

Thursday

Partly cloudy
High 10°C; Low 0°C;
POP 20%

Friday

Partly cloudy
High 13°C; Low 1°C;
POP 30%

Multideas Promotions

Screen Print and Embroidery.
In house Graphic Design.
More than 300,000
Promotional Products to choose from!

Wide range of in-stock or customized
SPORTSWEAR.
Want to promote your TEAM? Leave it to US!

Make '98 the year to remember.
Make an impression at your conference.

Quality merchandise at very competitive prices.

Come and visit our showroom
We are licensed for the Queen's logo.
530 Barnsley Cres. Kingston, ON
Tel: (613) 634-2437 Fax: (613) 634-2505
www.multideas.com
multi@adan.kingston.net

A.M.S. Fall Referendum and Rector Election

Would you like to collect MILLIONS* of dollars in student fees to support your club???

PUT A QUESTION ON THE A.M.S. FALL REFERENDUM!

Do you want to be the NEW Queen's Rector?

Nomination Period
October 12, 1998 to October 25, 1998
@ 5:00pm

Campaign Period
October 30, 1998 to November 9, 1998

Voting Dates
November 10, 1998 and November 11, 1998

Nomination packages are available at the Front Desk of the A.M.S.

QUESTIONS?
CONTACT THE ELECTIONS TEAM
AT 545-6000 EXT. 4815

*Dollar value collected from student fees may vary significantly.

QPID receives warm welcome in Ottawa

BY JENN MULVIHILL

Queen's Project on International Development made important connections at a meeting in Ottawa earlier this month.

QPID Director Amy Lister and members Bryan Wills, Andrea Stuparyk and Tyson Verstraete attended the Commonwealth Finance Ministers' Conference, where Commonwealth business leaders and thinkers gathered to discuss projects and swap influence with Canadian and Commonwealth Ministers.

The organization focuses on establishing grassroots projects in developing communities and has completed past projects in Northern Canada and Bolivia.

Lister said she went to the conference expecting a handshake and maybe a word or two with someone there, but was surprised when QPID received much more than this.

While in Ottawa, the QPID members were invited to a personal meeting with Andy Chande of Tanzania, one of the conference speakers. Chande is a close friend of Tanzania's former President, Julius Nyerere, and is currently the president of Tanzania Railways, Lister said. The African leader spoke to the students about current issues in Tanzania. It was quite an achievement for QPID to make a connection with as highly regarded a man as himself, Verstraete said.

"In order to be effective you have to be informed," Lister explained, and this meeting was very informative for the QPID members, she added.

During the meeting, Chande stated, "It is a delight to be with enthusiastic, young people and these young students from Queen's impress me deeply. They combine enthusiasm with expertise and compassion. I like them and will be delighted to assist QPID. They are a credit to Queen's and to Canada."

QPID also met with Foreign Affairs specialist Terry Jones, a former deputy high commissioner to Tanzania. Also present was the former High Commissioner to Tanzania, Mauritius, Seychelles and past Ambassador of Madagascar, Patricia Marsden-Dole.

"All of these remarkable leaders indicated their support for QPID," Lister said, as well as informing students on current issues in Tanzania including literacy programs, street children, urban poverty, medicine, education, mining and engineering.

Dean of Applied Science Tom Harris also attended the conference and lent QPID much support and enthusiasm, Lister said.

QPID, founded 10 years ago, is an organization whose members "strive to raise awareness about issues facing developing communities in Canada and abroad by broadening its ties with global communities," Lister explained.

"In order to be effective you have to be informed."

— QPID Director Amy Lister

The organization focuses on establishing grassroots projects in developing communities and has completed past projects in Northern Canada and Bolivia. QPID focuses on sustainability of the places they help so the communities can remain interdependent, Lister explained.

The organization receives support from the university, the Kingston community and various established organizations.

QPID plans to develop a matrix of action so that it can extend its work to Tanzania, Lister said. In the meantime, QPID continues to focus on raising awareness about issues facing developing communities in Canada and abroad.

HALLOWEEN SUPERSTORE!

AUDREY'S COSTUME HOUSE
699 GARDINERS ROAD
(ENTRANCE OFF PROGRESS AVE.)
384-3781

- 1000'S OF COSTUMES FOR RENT OR SALE
- MAKE-UP
- ACCESSORIES
- WIGS & BEARDS
- HATS & MASKS
- CAPES & KITS
- DECORATIONS
- PROPS

PLUS MUCH MORE!
open week nights till 9, Saturdays till 6, & Sundays 12-5
www.monsterhalloween.com

Mature students' association dissolved

BY FIONA STEVENSON

The Association of Continuing Studies Students has dissolved.

ACCESS was formed in March, 1996 to represent the interests of mature students, spring/summer students, part-time students, evening students and correspondence students. The organization was designed to provide representation, social support, and orientation on behalf of these students, and to lobby the university to improve programs for non-traditional students.

"ACCESS was created as a transitional group with the hope that it would eventually become a student government for part-time students," explained past-president Andy Lehrer.

At the time of the group's creation, it was anticipated that there would be an increase in part-time student enrolment, Lehrer explained. However, "what's happened is a decline in part-time students at Queen's and across Ontario," he said.

Greg McKellar, information officer for the Alma Mater Society said that while there were more than 4,000 part-time students in 1996, there are currently about 2,000 part-time students at Queen's.

people in the same circumstance."

The club will have its first gathering at the Grad Club this Friday at 1 p.m. Rattay said she hopes the club will meet at least once every two weeks.

"First we have to be able to find out who the mature students are, as there is no tracking mechanism," Rattay said. "Once we meet, we can begin to see what the issues are that need to be addressed."

Lehrer said he hopes "the AMS will take on some of the responsibility for mature students" as well, such as providing an orientation and handbook for these individuals.

"I do agree that there's a need for an orientation," said AMS Vice-President (University Affairs) Alison Loat. "Somebody has to take the helm who's actually a mature student who will be here next year," she added.

The AMS has improved its efforts to publicize the society's child care services, Loat said. The AMS offers child care services on evenings and weekends which Loat said is used primarily by mature students.

"I think there's a lot of ways that [mature students'] interests can be integrated into what's already done," Loat continued. "I don't think it's a big loss."

ACCESS has collected a mandatory student fee for the past three years, approximately $6,000 of which has not been spent, Loat said. The money will be directed to the Uncollected Student Activity Fee committee, a panel created two years ago to redistribute unspent student fees, McKellar explained.

Like-minded groups, such as the Ban Righ Foundation and the Mature Students Club may apply for the funding, Loat said.

MAC evaluates local property standards

BY REBECCA STELTER

Beginning this week, the AMS Municipal Affairs Commission is implementing a major project to improve property standards in the student housing area.

Focusing on different areas of the housing district each week, the MAC is offering students the opportunity to book property evaluations with the Kingston property standards officer.

The substandard condition of many houses in the student housing area and numerous complaints from students have prompted MAC to take action to improve property standards, said MAC commissioner Sarah Corman.

"As far as general complaints [received by the commission] go, housing is one of the top three on the list," Corman said.

"We are working really closely with the city and they are very keen on improving the housing situation in the student village," she added.

Tenants can book an appointment to have their house evaluated by calling Property Standards Officer Linda Chartier or the MAC office. Chartier and a student from the MAC Property Standards Task Force will perform the evaluation. "It doesn't have to be a big problem if they want to have their house checked," Corman said.

If the evaluation turns up a problem, according to a city by-law, Chartier will issue a notice to the landlord. She will come back in seven days and if nothing has been done to correct the problem she will issue an order to the landlord, who will have up to two weeks to fix the problem.

The city is in the midst of changing the by-law so that "the Property Standards Officer will no longer have to issue a notice first [and] can move directly to an order to speed up the process," Corman said.

Students may book appointments for property evaluations on the following dates:

- Earl St.: Oct. 19 to 23
- University Ave. and Alfred St.: Oct. 26 to 30
- Johnson St. and Brock St.: Nov. 2 to 6
- Frontenac St. (and further west): Nov. 9 to 13
- William St. and Clergy St. W.: Nov. 16 to 20
- Division St. (and further east): Nov. 23 to 27

If tenants have problems with their houses or their landlords, now is the time to take action, Corman said. Many tenants are unaware that "there is a minimum [property] standard and all they need to do is call and we'll [the MAC] draw an issue to your landlord to do something about it," she added.

"People in the community recognize a large problem with property standards in the student village and fully support students in their pursuit of better living conditions," Corman continued, adding this is a "positive thing that we can do for ourselves and for the Kingston community."

Students can contact Chartier at 384-1770 ext. 203, or the MAC office at 545-6000 ext. 5178 to book property evaluation appointments.

Evacuations 'unnecessary'

Continued from page 1

obviously felt it was justified."

Three years ago, evacuations occurred as often as three times a week and sometimes twice a day, Raptis said. Although there has been a significant reduction since then, false fire alarms still occur too often. Raptis maintains that Botterell Hall evacuations have been "entirely unnecessary or preventable."

"I'm amazed that the fire department still comes... Nobody looks into waste," she said. This waste, according to Raptis, is greatest for "researchers whose work is long term and who are not paid by the hour."

The loss is especially significant for graduate students, Raptis said. "Graduate students get paid very little and the best of them even come for free... They are paying for the interruption."

"Several times graduate students got annoyed and wouldn't leave," Raptis said. The microbiology and immunology department responded by including a statement in students' contract with the department that they would leave the building if an alarm sounded, Raptis said.

According to Walters, in the event of a fire alarm "each area [in Botterell Hall] has a safety advisor to make sure people have left the building."

Some people feel a cautious approach is preferable. "I think I feel fairly comfortable with the system we have in place," said Walters. "I myself would much rather that people erred on the side of safety."

"The number of evacuations is not proportional to the level of safety or care or precautions. It's exactly the opposite," Raptis said. "It's the story of crying wolf. That's the best way to make the fire alarm entirely useless."

The situation has prompted Raptis to embark on a letter-writing campaign. In her letters she has addressed what she sees as the current problems and offered potential solutions. These include hiring departmental fire monitors, installing a public address system, implementing an insurance system for spoiled research, performing an inventory of lab chemicals and obtaining information about how to deal with spills of relatively small quantities of the chemicals.

Students and researchers working in Botterell Hall labs, such as the one above, risk disruption by fire alarms.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Sandra Crocker, executive assistant to Vice-Principal (Research) Suzanne Fortier, said the situation is under examination. "The senior administration takes any concerns of the researchers very seriously," she said. "They are committed into looking into what if anything can be done to reduce any disruptions while at the same time to maintain... safety."

Crocker said, at this point, there has been a flurry of communication between different levels of administration and researchers, however, "steps haven't been taken yet." The issue will be raised at the next meeting of the vice-principals and principal of the university.

Welkins said she realizes that false alarms can be disruptive. "We've had a program in place for the past three years to try to reduce false calls, across campus," she said. "We've reduced our total number of calls by about 20 per cent."

Secret ballot 'distressing,' said Stanley

Continued from page 1

and the academic affairs commissioner, which, for all intents and purposes, some people on council were not allowed to disclose their opinions on. AMS Assembly did not appreciate that we did not hear what AMS council had to say. We are under the assumption that they all agreed on these issues, but we never really got to hear their opinions."

"I would hope that all of us that are elected by students can research and exercise careful judgement in the interests of all students, because we may have more access to information and time," said Stanley.

"As elected representatives, we have a responsibility to construct policy alternatives to be put forward, to be accepted or rejected. If students reject something that we put forward, then we are no worse off," he added.

Some Assembly members said they felt that only considering OUSA, and not the Canadian Federation of Students-Ontario, in the alignment question limited student choice and made the question appear biased.

"The question became very loaded," said Papadopoulos. "It was felt that by putting the OUSA question to students, it would seem to indicate that Assembly agreed with the question."

"Part of the problem was that the executive has a clear understanding of the issues of alignment, because they've been working so long at developing this issue," said McKay Savage, Engineering Society vice-president (student development). "But it's important for Assembly to come to the same level of understanding before it makes a decision," he added.

"On one hand, [the AMS executive] want a democracy by giving the power to students, and on the other, they are limiting the scope of the question," said Jabes. "The outcome of a question is always dependent on the formulation of it."

"As elected representatives, we have a responsibility to construct policy alternatives to be put forward, to be accepted or rejected. If students reject something that we put forward, then we are no worse off."

— AMS President Tom Stanley

"In the research we have done, alignment with the Canadian Federation of Students would be a bad decision for Queen's," said Stanley. "[However,] if there was a grassroots movement to join CFS and someone got 600 signatures and presented it to Assembly for a place on the referendum, I wouldn't vote against it. It is up to the students at Queen's to decide these types of issues."

Much of the controversy following the meeting involved the secrecy of the Assembly vote, requested by Jabes. "I think it was a simple demand," Jabes said. "On certain issues a secret ballot allows for the true opinion of student representatives to emerge, and that is what's important."

"I don't think there was a need for a secret ballot," said Brenda Ha, Commerce Society president. "We should let people know how their student leaders stand on issues that concern them," Ha added.

"Having said that, I think [Jabes] was trying to avoid personal attacks outside of Assembly, and get to the heart of the issue, because the debate was rather heated," Ha said.

"I found the secret ballot terribly distressing," commented Stanley. "Mainly because we had engaged in two hours of debate, with rhetoric flying around about 'the best interests of students' and if that is the content of the debate, and any member is unwilling to stand behind their vote, I find that distressing."

Konopek added, "Representatives should stand up and be counted. If you are truly representing your students, I see no reason to hide behind the secrecy of a secret ballot. It doesn't make sense... to me it is nothing but hiding."

"It can only do good to have students vote on an issue, to have this philosophy discarded on this issue is disturbing," Stanley said. To have notions of limited capacity for students to understand an issue is disturbing. To be blocked from fulfilling an elected mandate is disturbing."

Queen's honours mental health awareness week

BY ANNA NESBITT

This week marks Mental Health Awareness Week across Canada. Queen's is joining in with events run by groups across campus. The Women's Health Issues Committee, under the AMS Social Issues Commission, is planning awareness events, supported by Queen's Health Counselling and Disability Services.

Diane Nolting, health educator at Student Health Services is committed to helping students in need. "Rather than also doing a program we would rather support [the Women's Health Issues Committee] and continue to offer the academic support and the teach relaxation skills that we do," explained Nolting. In 1996-97, Health Counselling and Disability Services saw close to 1,400 students for almost 5,000 hours of personal counselling, Nolting said. "That doesn't take into account the number of students who are reached through the group programs or the learning strategy development programs," Nolting added. These are outreach programs on subjects such as study skills, time management and exam anxiety.

"A whole range of counselling is available [for students] depending on the circumstances," said Nolting. Depression, sexual assault, eating disorders, homesickness and troubles with housemates are among issues brought to counsellors. Learning strategy development centre, family doctors and seminars are other resources available to students.

"There still is a stigma attached to mental health."

— Health Educator Dione Nolting

Nolting said academic stress is the most prevalent problem among university students. The health centre is currently responding to the academic demands placed on students during this time of the year. These issues are keeping the centre incredibly busy, Nolting added.

Raising student awareness about mental health issues is extremely important, Nolting stated. "For me, the whole notion of connection between academic life and the well being [is of special importance]."

"There still is a stigma attached to mental health," said Nolting. These include stigmas about women and depression and the side effects of drugs used to treat illnesses. "As a centre we certainly try to dispel some of that," she said.

Richardson

LSAT GMAT
MCAT GRE

Queen's University LSAT Nov. 7 & 8 Register at 1 877 PREP.COM or at Queen's University Continuing & Distance Studies, Macintosh-Corry Hall, F100.

Fee: $260.00
www.prep.com 1 877 prep.com

Assignments got you down?
Get started
at the Library.

Ask us!

Queen's University Libraries

Footloose in Canada

Student Class Fares

Vancouver	from $359
Calgary	from $299
Edmonton	from $299
Regina	from $329
Winnipeg	from $229
Halifax	from $239
Saint John	from $339
St. John's	from $279

Free Date Change

Don't know your exam schedule? No need to worry! Book your student class flights and you'll receive a coupon for a free date change.

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
186 Princess St., Kingston (at Montreal)
Laissez Travel 549-3553 Long Haul/Group Travel 549-3561
Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

Professional skin and hair

...welcomes you to Queens University.

Enjoy a visit to Professional Skin & Hair
EXCLUSIVE to Professional Skin & Hair is one of Canada's top Make-Up lines???

Full service hair & esthetics for men & women
Student discount Monday to Wednesday
Aveda • Redken • Babor • K.M.S.

Specializing in Formal Up-do's
Waxing • Permanent wave • Manicures
Pedicures • Advanced cutting techniques
Skin treatments & much more.

613-549-7546

115 Clarence St. Kingston, Ontario, K7L 5N6

In Here

Christmas harvest bazaar

A Christmas harvest bazaar will be held October 28 from 9:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the cafeteria in the Connell wing on the third floor of Kingston General Hospital. There will be baked goods, handcrafted items and Christmas gifts available, and a silent auction will take place.

Human Rights Celebration

To celebrate the 50th anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, Canadian Human Rights, Queen's is hosting a free symposium, "Putting Values Into Practice: Celebrating Our Progress, Facing Our Future" from October 30-November 1. The Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Human Rights Commission will open the Symposium with an address on the declaration's impact on recent Canadian history on October 30 at 7 p.m. in the Robert Sutherland Room, John Deutsch University Centre. On October 31 at 9 a.m. human rights activists from across Ontario will discuss current issues. An interfaith ceremony will occur on November 1 at 10:30 a.m. in the McLaughlin Room, JDUC.

Canadian Mental Health Association needs volunteers

The Canadian Mental Health Association's Kids on the Block Program needs volunteers to perform puppet presentations to local children. Training will be provided. Contact Michael Borges or Judi Brill at 549-7027 for information.

Wear Your Jeans Day

The Lesbian Gay Bisexual Issues Committee and the AMS Social Issues Commission are asking members of the Queen's community to wear jeans with rainbow ribbons this Thursday to show support for the Queer community. Rainbow ribbons can be picked up at the Social Issues office in the John Deutsch University Centre. Alfie's will also be holding a LGBTQ smoker that evening.

Guide Dogs for the Blind meeting

All persons interested in learning about or becoming a member of the Kingston Chapter of Canadian Guide Dogs for the Blind are invited to a meeting October 27 at 7 p.m. The meeting will be held at 151 Dauphine Avenue.

Fall Clothing Drive

The fall clothing drive at the Free Clothing Drop-in and Textile Recycling Centre is being held from October 19 to November 6 at Queen Elizabeth Collegiate Institute, 145 Kirkpatrick St. Donations of clothing, linens, kitchen utensils, dishes, small household appliances and decorations would be greatly appreciated. For large item donations call MaryLynn Morrison at 459-1348.

Archaeoastronomy and Pagan Rituals Seminar

The youth group of the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada is meeting October 31 from 1-4 p.m. in Mackintosh-Corry Hall, room B201. The session is for ages 13 to 24 and admission is free. For more information contact 353-7910.

Ombudsman Representative Visits Kingston

Ombudsman Ontario investigates and resolves complaints about provincial government organizations such as ministries, boards, agencies, commissions and tribunals. A representative will be meeting with people who wish to discuss their complaints on November 2 between 11:30 a.m. and 5 p.m., in the Boucher Room of the Kingston Public Library. For more information contact Laura Hugh at (613) 239-1056.

Out There

Aboriginal Head Start program

The federal government has designed multimillion dollar program called Aboriginal Head Start. The program is designed to give young aboriginal children a good start to a healthy life. The program promotes nutrition, health, education and culture, and provides crisis intervention.

Federal plan to reduce greenhouse emissions

Federal officials and environmentalists are designing a plan to reduce greenhouse emissions to six per cent below the 1990 levels by the year 2010. Recommendations include increasing gas taxes, decreasing speed limits, improving city public transportation systems, and increasing dependency on renewable energy sources.

Fire in Nigeria

A fire in Nigeria has been raging since last Saturday due to a pipeline explosion believed to be sparked by thieves. Though an official toll is unavailable, the number of deaths is estimated at 250. Linking an oil refinery in the city of Warri, the pipeline exploded. Though unsure of the exact cause of the fire it is suspected that one of the vandals tools caused a spark which set the oil aflame.

Files courtesy of The Globe and Mail

What's Happening

The AMS updates you on what's happening on and around campus

WE WANT YOU for the Queen's Inquiry Committee. Be on the front edge of AMS EXCITEMENT. Meet tonnes of cool people. Call 545-2732 or drop by the Communications Commission in the AMS. Don't be shy - CALL NOW.

Learning Strategies Workshops: Health, Counseling, and Disability Services - Call 545-2893 to sign up!

Procrastination
Thursday Oct. 20, 1:30-3:00

Presentation Skills
Wednesday Oct. 21, 4:30-6:30
Wednesday Oct. 28, 4:30-6:30

Study Skills Assessment
Wednesday Nov. 4, 1:30-2:30

Cancer Can Be Beaten!
The Canadian Cancer Society will be holding information session for those interested in volunteer positions. Biosciences Complex Rm.3112 Monday Oct. 19, 5:30-6:30 Monday Oct. 26, 5:30-6:30 Call Linda at the CCS at 384-2361 to confirm or for further info

Still can't find the C-spot? Well, where have you been? Obviously not at the QP! On Sundays from 8-11pm enjoying specialty coffee, desserts donated by the Laundry Cafe...amongst other things...like great entertainment. Come and find your Sunday Night satisfaction for all ages at the AMS C-spot

The Times they are a Changin'
The Walkhome service will be opening every night at 7pm

Are you an Infomaniac?
All those who want to get down and dirty in the Infobank (translation: Do you want to volunteer?) call 545-2732 to get in on the action.

Need money for a special project? The AMS can help. Board of Directors Special Projects provides seed funding to groups. Criteria sheets available at the AMS Front Desk, and applications are due by 4pm Friday, Oct. 30. Questions? Call Alison Loat at 545-2729.

Watch "the Q" on Friday's at 9:30pm or Sunday's at 8:00pm on Ch 13.

If you have something you want to tell the world then

phone the AMS Communications Commission @ 545-2732, or email Comm@ams.queensu.ca

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

Let the students decide

TOM STANLEY AND THE AMS executive may not know what's best for the student body. The AMS assembly certainly does not seem to know what's best for the student body. Neither can we, the editorial board, claim to know what's best for the student body. The truth of the matter is, only the students can decide for themselves what they want or need.

Bringing that to the issue at hand, only the students can decide, in a referendum, whether they want to join an external lobbying group. Unfortunately, when 18 members of Assembly chose to temporarily deep-six the proposed referendum question on alignment with OUSA, they effectively said that we are not qualified to make that decision. It is impossible to reconcile the position put forward by some assembly members that students are not "knowledgeable" enough to decide with the democratic process that put them there.

Denying students an opportunity to vote on this issue because student leaders have themselves not reached a consensus on alignment seems to suggest a paternalistic attitude by our elected

(and, more often than not, acclaimed) representatives. It is hard to ignore the fact that Stanley et al. were elected by a huge landslide which gave them a mandate that includes offering students the choice to join an external lobbying group.

That our representatives voted against including such a question on the referendum now suggests that they believe the student body was not informed at the time they debated and is unable to learn enough about the issue in the weeks before the referendum.

Of course, we don't know how our representatives voted because one of them asked for it to be a secret vote. Surely the fair and democratic thing to do would be for each member to inform The Journal how they voted so that we could publish it for all of their constituents to see.

Fortunately, the AMS executive is pursuing another avenue to put the question on the ballot for November 10. As long as 600 Queen's students sign the petition to include the question, we will still have the opportunity to vote for or against alignment with OUSA.

Conceiving the future

IN THE VERY NEAR FUTURE, choosing the gender of your children will no longer be something left to chance, fate or whatever god you believe in. In fact, with advances being made everyday in reproductive technology, the prospect of genetically pre-determined human beings has moved off the pages of science fiction and into reality. Whether we agree with science supplanting nature or not, a future where consumers will be able to purchase the genetic characteristics of their children is right around the corner.

No matter how it is used, the integration of this technology into our daily lives will have dramatic social, economic and personal consequences for humankind. At the very least, medicine and health care will be revolutionized once we are able to prevent debilitating genetic diseases. On the other hand, if abused, reproductive technology could have monstrous implications. Nightmarish scenarios aside, there are serious concerns that reproductive technology will be, and is perhaps already, used inappropriately. Presently, few can afford the exorbitant fees charged by the American fertility centre to choose the gender of their child. If this trend continues and reproductive technology is sold to the highest bidder, only the rich will be able to afford it. It seems intuitively unfair that those who can already choose the best schools and lifestyles be entitled to the best genes as well. Of course, this may be more indicative of the unfair distribution of wealth in our society than of any inherent problem with the technology itself.

Nonetheless, it would be a mistake to succumb to corporate pressure to keep this industry relatively unregulated. It is not in the best interests of Canadians to leave control of reproductive technology to the invisible hand of capitalism. Stringent government regulation is necessary in order to prevent abuses or unfair distribution of the benefits of this technology.

While eliminating genetic diseases is clearly one example of an appropriate use of the technology, it would be unfortunate if parents were allowed to compete to design perfect children.

Before we rush into anything, we should remember that, as in many science fiction novels, the introduction of such technology could lead to a bad ending.

Start cutting schools

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION IS A privilege, not a right. It's about time that people realize that the problem of funding universities can be resolved by something other than raising tuition — how about cutting universities?

It seems obvious that with two universities across the street from one another in Waterloo, three universities in northern Ontario and two across the Rideau Canal from each other in Ottawa, there are far too many universities in Ontario.

People should stop wasting time and money on an education they can't use.

This creates a two-fold funding problem for the provincial government. The first is that each of these universities has an administrative hierarchy which has highly paid employees. The second problem with too many schools is that each student who attends a university only pays a small portion of the actual cost of tuition, while the taxpayers pick up the remainder of the tab. If schools were shut down, then not only would the government save on salaries of administrators, but also on the subsidization of students.

Before people scream about each university having their own specialty program and that closing a university will take away that program, follow this example of how these changes could be made.

Lakehead and Nipissing are shut down, their specialty programs are transferred to Laurentian, which would then become slightly larger, while maintaining only one administration. In this situation, the general arts programs at these three universities which, in my opinion, are not that good anyway, would be reduced to one and the forestry and outdoor physical education programs would remain intact. Similar changes can be made at Carleton — their journalism program can be shuffled to Ottawa. At Waterloo, the renowned engineering faculty can make the shift over to Wilfrid Laurier.

This would create an environment of higher education which would allow less people to attend university, thus cutting out those that truly don't deserve to go, and maintaining the high standard of education. It would also lessen the amount of undergraduate degrees (especially from the more backwards schools), thus increasing the value of those from other schools or those that are already in circulation.

The government could then provide more funding for community colleges, which would be a far cheaper endeavor than funding universities, and those not at university could learn employable skills, rather than floundering in an intellectual environment.

There are a whole lot of jobs that currently require university degrees that don't utilize a university education. It has reached such a point that people should stop wasting time and money on an education that they can't use.

University should not be for the economically elite, it should be exclusively for the intellectually elite.

BY ADAM KAMINSKY

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF
Keith Gerein
Tara Mansbridge

MANAGING EDITOR
Laura MacInnis

NEWS EDITOR
Piana Stevenson

ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS
Shawn Brimley
Renée Huang
Jocelyn Laporte

EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
Paul Heisler

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR
Stefan Murray

ASSISTANT A&E EDITORS
Sarah Crosbie
Lilian Kim

FEATURES EDITOR
Sean Springer

OPINIONS EDITOR
Vicant

SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Adam Kaminsky

ASSISTANT SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Robert MacNeil

MISC. EDITOR
Ken Butland

GRAPHICS EDITOR
Janice Chan

THE READER EDITOR
Jesse Craig Bellinger

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Kraft

SALES REPRESENTATIVES
Kari Brintnall
Andrew Cooke
Kristian Li

ADVERTISING COORDINATOR
Mark Fucella

ADVERTISING DESIGNERS
Katherine Colbourn
Annie Ge
Rachel Villeneuve

SYSTEMS MANAGER
Craig Thomas

SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT
John Bowman

SPECIAL PUBLICATIONS EDITORS
Elizabeth Fregeley
Siandley McMurray

PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS
Alex Kronby
James Terjanian

WEB EDITOR
Marco Lui

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Tuesday, October 20, 1998 • Issue 14 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.
Copyright © 1998 by The Queen's Journal; all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Green Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Gananoque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions.
Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please address complaints and grievances to the Managing Editor and/or the Co-Editors-in-Chief. Please inquire about further grievance policies if you are not satisfied with their response. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2N8. Telephone—editorial: 613-545-2800; advertising: 613-545-6711. Fax: 613-545-6728. Email: journal@post.queensu.ca. Circulation 9,000.
Issue 14 will be published on Tuesday, October 20, 1998.

CONTRIBUTORS

WRITERS AND REPORTERS: Michael Johnson, Milan Konopick, Aaron Lazarus, Heather MacDonald, Jennifer Muir, Jenn Mulvihill, Anna Nesbit, Rebecca Steyer, Stu Tulos, Aaron West, Jim "Tardio tower" Whittington.

PHOTOGRAPHERS: Chris Glover, Luke Mylyaganam, Sean Richmond

OPINIONS

The physiology of a cola deal

WELL, IT LOOKS as if Queen's is almost ready to sign a deal with one of the cola companies for exclusive rights on campus. This issue is not unlike the recent debate over alcohol and tobacco companies sponsoring arts festivals and sporting events; having this money for student programs and scholarships or bursaries would be wonderful, but at what cost?

Coke is basically carbonated, caffeinated, sugared water. The caffeine makes it a very addictive drink, as anyone who's tried to get off it knows. What about the sugar, though?

When you ingest sugar, it is quickly absorbed through your intestines and into your bloodstream. This causes a sudden rise in your blood sugar level. Responding to this, your pancreas starts to frantically produce insulin to hold down the blood sugar. Working so quickly, it goes too far and your blood sugar then drops dangerously low. Your pancreas has to shut down as quickly as it started, and your adrenal glands have to quickly produce hormones to bring the blood sugar back to normal.

Your brain is always the first organ to register these ups and downs. Sugar is known to cause everything from mild depression to psychosis.

Also, when all that excess insulin gets to your liver it is converted into triglycerides, which are then stored as fat in your adipose cells. After years of these cycles, your pancreas and adrenal glands are totally whipped; they can't function properly anymore.

Refined sugar provides only "empty" or "naked" calories; it contains no vitamins or minerals. In fact, it leeches vitamins and minerals from your body for its digestion and elimination. It also produces such high acidity that, eventually, so many minerals are leached out that your bones and teeth are weakened.

Having this money for student programs and scholarships or bursaries would be wonderful, but at what cost?

Coke executives know all of this very well, so they need to spend millions of dollars on their ad campaigns to get people to buy their product. Slogans for Coke take every possible angle from "Coke Adds Life" and "Coca-Cola Revives and Sustains" to "Coke is It!" and "Can't Beat The Real Thing", or the slogan in the upper lobby of the Phys-Ed Centre, "Always The Right Degree!"

When you really know what Coke does to you, you can't help but be saddened when you see people being lured in by this. William Duffy said it best in his book Sugar Blues: "Imagine a young pimply faced kid in front of a camera telling folks how clear his complexion was before he started drinking Coke; and even though he knows it's bumming his social life, he just can't seem to get off the stuff. That would be truth in advertising." I couldn't agree more.

In closing, I'd like to leave you with a little analogy. To make heroin, poppy seeds are refined into opium, then into morphine, and finally into heroin. To make sugar, juice is extracted from either sugar cane or sugar beet, processed into molasses, and finally into white sugar. It is this very refining process that makes both substances so addictive and injurious to your health.

So I ask you: who are the real drug pushers? Are they the people loitering around playgrounds telling children "Your first one's free..." or are they the cola companies with their shiny ads and vending machines that are soon to be found in abundance on campus?

MICHAEL JOHNSON
SCI '99

talking

HEADS

What should you do if you see an endangered species eating an endangered plant?

"Kick its ass!"
Ned Woods
ArtSci '00

"Keep Walking"
Vai Rajgopal
ArtSci '00

"Eat them both"
Doug Couper
Jeff Kaprowy
ArtSci '00

"Enslave them both to work in my evil salt mines"
Alex Low
ArtSci '00

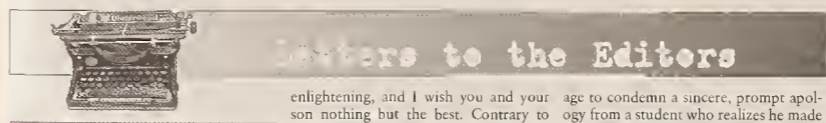

PHOTOS BY LUKE MYLYAGANAM

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS POLICY

The Editors of The Journal want to hear from all readers.

Letters that are legible, legal and literate will be published if space permits. All letters must include the writer's NAME and TELEPHONE NUMBER.

Drop off letters to The Journal House at 272 Earl St., fax to 545-6728, or e-mail them to journal@post.queensu.ca.

Pregnancy

Best wishes to both mother and child

Dear Editors,

Who declared open season on Marte Natvik? First Katie Edwards unfairly makes hurtful generalizations about Miss Natvik's level of education, maturity, morals and suitability as a parent in a letter that appears, at least in her first paragraph, to be merely disputing an editorial decision. Then there is the arrogance (and ignorance) of Andrew Zur!

To Marte: The fact that your pregnancy was a sacred experience for you is all the more reason to share it.

Mr. Zur, I would respectfully suggest that the relationship between Miss Natvik, her son and the father is nobody's business but theirs. You have no right to judge her for her decision not to mention him. As for your comments about single mothers, I know a number of single mothers who have done a fantastic job of raising their children, better than some families with two parents. How dare you suggest that society has the right to look down on them!

To Marte: Your article was very enlightening, and I wish you and your son nothing but the best. Contrary to what Mr. Zur thinks, the fact that your pregnancy was a sacred experience for you is all the more reason to share it. What Mr. Zur dismisses as "psychobabble" was actually a very sensitive commentary on body image that struck a chord with me and others. He obviously understands very little about the centrality of body image to the lives of women; after all, he dismisses a life-threatening eating disorder (which, Mr. Zur, affects both men and women) as some "female thing" which deserves no more attention than a trip to the toilet.

By the way, Mr. Zur, you were thinking of bulimia when you wrote your letter, not anorexia; anorexics do not "puke" to get rid of the food they've eaten. Get your facts straight. And for all you sticklers for the use of proper terminology, "purging" is preferred to "puking" when speaking of bulimia.

Sarah Levis
Artsci '00

QP Advertising

QP editorial unjustified

Dear Editors,

I read with a great deal of bewilderment the editorial entitled "QP takes easy way out" in the October 16 Journal. Through contorted logic, you manage to condemn a sincere, prompt apology from a student who realizes he made a mistake in advertising.

The statement "hyper-sensitivity to complaints about anything that might be construed as offensive is only unwarranted, it also undermined an opportunity to have a genuine dialogue about racial stereotypes" is ludicrous. Students who err in judgement and offend others should remain obstinate in their views for the sake of debate? Services that offend their student consumers in their advertising should begrudge those who offer constructive input in order to avoid "hyper-sensitivity"?

I suspect that if Mr. Thompson had offered the sort of qualified response you apparently hoped for, I would have read an equally critical editorial in the Friday Journal. Such negativism for the sake of it is obvious and tiresome.

Gord Moodie
AMS Vice-President (Operations)
Comm '99

Journal took easy way out in editorial

Dear Editors,

I find it very interesting that The Journal accuses the QP of taking the easy way out when it is clear that The Journal took the easiest way out.

Firstly, in its initial reporting of the

Continued on page 8

FREE MONEY!

(For just causes!)

AMS Clubs & Assembly Grant forms are here! Application forms and complete criteria are available outside of the AMS Commission of Internal Affairs. Application deadline is October 30th.

You may be eligible for a grant if you are:

- Part of the Queen's Student Community;
- A non-profit cause, organisation or society and your activity does not already receive AMS funding.

Please note: Complete criteria, along with application forms, are available at the AMS Commission of Internal Affairs.

For more information please contact Dave Contant, CIA Deputy Commissioner, at 545-6000 Ext. 4815 or e-mail cia@ams.queensu.ca

HEY FROSH! Ever wanted to be a ROADIE?

THE QUEEN'S ENTERTAINMENT AGENCY IS HIRING FIRST-YEAR STAGEHANDS! APPLICATIONS ARE AVAILABLE AT THE AMS OFFICE (IN THE LOWER JDUC) AND ARE DUE BY OCT. 30TH.

QUEEN'S ENTERTAINMENT AGENCY

<http://www.ams.queensu.ca/qea/>
545-2731 or qea@ams.queensu.ca

Letters...

Continued from page 7

story, The Journal hitched itself firmly to the political correctness bandwagon and in doing so removed any traces of journalistic integrity from its report. The Journal failed to even pay lip service to one of the hallmarks of good journalism; what is commonly known as "the other side of the story". For while it was certainly worth noting that Ms. Chung received more than [sic] 50 signatures on her petition, it may have also been worth noting that a significant percentage of the Queen's population did not find the poster offensive. Yet The Journal seems far too fearful of being accused of insensitivity itself to mention the point.

Secondly, in the initial story The Journal extracted quotes from an hour-long interview with Mr. Thompson that portray him as being extremely apologetic for his actions. Unfortunately for Mr. Thompson, The Journal didn't find his apologies to be sincere because he was "over-conciliatory." This begs the question of how sorry does anyone have to be to satisfy The Journal?

Not only did The Journal initially misconstrue Mr. Thompson's response, they then use his words as the ladder with which to climb on their editorial high horse.

For, not only did The Journal initially misconstrue Mr. Thompson's response, they then use his words as the ladder with which to climb on their editorial high horse. Riding high in the saddle, the editorial in the October 16 edition displays the warped logic pattern that typified The Journal's dealings with any contentious issues.

After criticizing Mr. Thompson for his apology, the editorial goes on to lament the passing of "an honest response to an accusation of racism or prejudice... on our campus." It is incredible that The Journal does not realize the role that it has played in making this sad situation a reality. As the main media outlet on campus The Journal has a responsibility to attempt to be objective in its reporting. However, its handling of the QP story demonstrates the dangerous witch-hunt mentality that pervades on campus when dealing with racism and prejudice.

Like so many others The Journal is so afraid of being branded as the racist witch that it has become the bloodthirsty hunter, ready to shoot any possible targets with the bullet of "insensitivity" at the first possible opportunity. Even those who readily apologize, do not apologize the "right" way. The cost of this unfortunate mentality is the death of a thoughtful consideration.

There are many aspects of society that involve racism and prejudice. Each of these should be addressed and dealt with appropriately on a case-by-case basis. However, we do ourselves as a society an injustice by presupposing the correct response to all accusations of insensitivity is to persecute the supposedly insensitive while ignoring relevant details particular to each case. I ask that The Journal please consider this in its future reporting.

Ian Collins
Arts '99

Tuition

Don't hate me because I'm a private school kid

Dear Editors,

As both an Upper Canada College graduate and a Queen's student, I take offense to Cynthia Dixon's response to Brock Jones' apparently syndicated weekly column in The Journal.

Brock has been churning out tyrannical right-wing rants since high school. Although his self-indulgent ramblings serve as unmistakable signs of an over-inflated ego and a blatant cry for attention, the seeds that fostered this full-blown narcissist were neither sewn nor cultivated at Upper Canada. In fact, many of you may be pleased to know that the derision and scorn with which his outbursts are met with Queen's is no different than the contentious reception he received at Upper Canada.

Rather than challenge Brock's argument (which is no difficult feat) Cynthia Dixon seeks to vilify Brock by involving a number of baseless and inaccurate stereotypes about Upper Canada College. In the October 16 issue of The Journal, Cynthia Dixon writes, "You and your friends from UCC got in here because you are intelligent and rich... The rest of us are here because we are intelligent and work hard." Upon what experience do you base this ludicrous opinion, Cynthia? How many Upper Canada graduates do you know well enough to make this conclusion? Have you ever spoken to one or is your misconception based solely on myth and rumour?

Furthermore, you seem to clearly demarcate between Upper Canada graduates and "the rest of us." Are we really so different? For all you know, you and I walk down the same street to class every morning, stand in the same line at the library and pass each other in the hallways, yet you have never given me a second glance because, in truth, my fellow Upper Canada graduates and I are no different than the thousands of other

Continued on page 11

THE CONJUROR a play by DAVID BEN & PATRICK WATSON
Recreating the Golden Age of Magic, The Conjuror ran two seasons at The Shaw Festival and was held over twice in Toronto!
"David Ben is superb!" "★★★★" - Toronto Sun & Toronto Star - CBC Radio

KINGSTON GRAND THEATRE
Oct 27 & 28 - 8pm
Reserved Seating: $22.50 (GST incl)
BOX OFFICE: 530-2050

Next WEEK!

A Shatters Production

Tuition is rising... so what? Take a stand Education cuts hurt everyone

PHOTO BY JAMES TERJANIAN

Forget alignment Students don't care about tuition

OVER THE course of the last week and a half, French students have been taking to the streets in protest of changes to their education system. Windows were broken, cars were overturned and riot police were dispatched; all in a normal day of student activism. Even in this country protesting university students have put up with many of the same things, only these French students were in high school.

It's hard to picture the average 15 year old taking such a pro-active step in ensuring the future of their education. Imagine a riot over growing class sizes at KCVI. Sadly, it seems to be getting just as hard to imagine even your average Queen's student protesting the cost, quality or future viability of the education we seem to take for granted.

It is interesting that for the last two weeks, the Canadian Federation of Students has been heralding its "Days of Action." Interesting, if you are a member of the AMS or one of the 15 or so other people who have shown up to several rallies held during the last two weeks. Otherwise, you probably didn't know or care. Which, once again, begs a very serious question. Why the rampant apathy on campus?

Two possible answers come to the fore, either Queen's students don't care about the rising costs of instruction or there is serious lack of faith in the efficacy of the type of protest being organized. Based on the answers to these questions, serious steps should be made.

If students care so little for rising tuition costs should then the AMS, who represents them, not cut back the amount of resources it devotes to this issue? On the other hand, if students are behind these issues, then a serious look must be taken at how students view the relevancy of the types of protest used by their student government.

If students care so little for rising tuition costs should then the AMS, who represents them, not cut back the amount of resources it devotes to this issue?

It is time the AMS stopped arguing about which alliances students should be allowed to choose from and let the students decide their own alliances. Queen's student government needs to discover the issues meaningful to its constituents and find ways to successfully fulfill the students' need to participate.

The AMS and other similar organizations have voiced their opinion that access to post-secondary education is a very important issue, and I think much of the campus population would agree with them. Gingivitis is also an important issue and, right now, it would seem that students on campus are at least as worried about their gums as they are about the rising cost of tuition.

JONATHAN TINNEY
ARTS '00

Believe it or not, there was a time when tuition was not a contested issue. There was a time when tuition fees were so low, that nobody bothered to talk about them. Those days are gone.

For a number of decades, tuition fees were artificially low. There is no doubt that a post-secondary education is a valuable tool to acquire when trying to ensure future job opportunity and prosperity. But along with the individual benefits of a post-secondary education come societal benefits. Graduates tend to pay higher taxes and tend to vote more often. They tend to have a greater ability to support charitable organizations. Graduates contribute to a growing economy.

The Ontario government argues that individuals benefit from a post-secondary education, and as such, students should be willing and expected to share the costs of providing it. However, the challenge is in determining just what constitutes a fair share.

The Harris government has begun to deregulate some university and college programs, forcing certain students to pay tuition fees in excess of $10,000. The government then tells students to get a loan. But Ontario's student loan program is in shambles, and nothing has been done to fix it. This government has demonstrated a lack of commitment to post-secondary education.

Ontario now ranks dead last in per capita funding of post-secondary education in Canada. Tuition fees have outstripped the cost of living by over 10,000 per cent per year for the last five years. Queen's students, on average, are responsible for paying over 35 per cent of their cost of education, and arts students pay well over 50 per cent. The Harris government is on record stating that students should pay no more than 25 per cent of their cost of education. Last year, 19,470 Ontario university students' financial need exceeded their OSAP entitlement. The total value of unmet need was $35 million.

The Council of Ontario Universities just released statistics showing that enrolment in the liberal arts has declined 14 per cent since the 1995/96 school year. Earlier this year a study was released which showed universities in Ontario have lost 14.3 per cent of our faculty (2000 positions) since 1990.

While some students have advocated the benefits of an Income Contingent Loan Repayment Program, no such program is now in place in Ontario. The Conservative government has promised to institute such a program, but has failed to do so. The current government has established a track record of promises made and promises broken.

The AMS is trying to do something about it. We have met with all three political parties including Minister of Education and Training Dave Johnson. We are also continuing to formulate our own policy papers, and are pursuing the possibility of aligning with an external lobbying organization.

We have launched two information campaigns, one at alumni, and one at finding our level of student debt at Queen's. And we are engaging in a public awareness strategy to let the public know why accessible, quality post-secondary education is important.

The AMS will continue to work for the students of Queen's. It is important that students take it upon themselves to learn about the issues that affect them, and to get involved.

MILAN KONOPEK, ARTS '98
AARON LAZARUS ARTS '01

AMS Academic Affairs Commissioner Milan Konopek (left) and Deputy Academic Affairs Commissioner (External) Aaron Lazarus.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Hit Canada Hard.
the most powerful Canadian search engine

www.altavistacanada.com

Presented by TELUS

← tomorrow only!
FREE STUFF!
 *only while supplies last!

The Boss said something about keeping the Free Stuff Ad Campaign simple. Something about return on investments and saving students money, blah, blah, blah. I don't know, I didn't take Economics. But anyways here it is. Hope you like it.

You should come by. There's going to be Free Stuff. It won't last long though!

Free Stuff at the Campus Bookstore
 (and don't forget about Cover Your Crest and Engineering Week)

Wednesday, October 21st
Only While Supplies Last

Clark Hall - Weekdays 9-8, Saturday 10-5
 545-2955 - After January 1st 533-2955
 Owned and Operated by Students Since 1909
www.campusbookstore.com

Continued from page 11

French kids go to university is that they have a different standard of admission than do we. They set the bar high, but they ensure that everyone with the ability can attend. That suggests their system is much more accessible than ours. And remember, the stratospheric tuition increases in the nineties weren't designed to make up for money the universities lost because of government cuts. How could the fact that tuition is much higher now than it was five years ago possibly make education more accessible?

Those (like Brock Jones) who suggest that increasing enrolment numbers show that there isn't an accessibility problem just don't seem to get it. The importance of a university education has increased dramatically in Canada — that's why enrolment is strong. Yet education is no longer accessible because there are students who have the ability to attend university and who deserve to, but cannot. Furthermore, Statistics Canada reports (The Globe and Mail, October 15, p. A7) that the number of university undergraduate students in Canada has actually dropped for five consecutive years. The drop is mainly due to a drop in part-time enrolment. But wait, aren't part-time students generally the ones who work jobs to pay their way through?

British Columbia, incidentally, has seen an increase in the number of students. But wait! Hasn't British Columbia had a tuition freeze in the last few years? So, if higher tuition really does seem to be affecting enrolment, just what are Brock Jones et. al talking about?

Those who argue that the government is out of money, end of story, also don't seem to get it. True, finances are tight. But the provincial government chose, yes chose, to make tax cuts rather than put money back into universities. We who question this decision have a right to express our dissent. Writing letters to The Journal to encourage dissent is not "useless" as John Shipman suggests (October 16). Not are other forms of student action. We might as well say democracy is useless.

James Worrall
 Meds '01

Golden Words

GW up to old tricks

Dear Editors,

I'd like to thank former Golden Words editor Peter Lynn for his letter to The Journal Editors last Friday. He reinforced my point that GW did not understand its responsibility to the Queen's community. Lynn did not honestly respond to my letter. Instead he stooped to personally attacking me. Let's hope that is a tradition that has left GW with him.

Chris Ellis
 Law '99

FEATURES

From grad club to Book Club

What began as a Masters thesis for Michael Dawson saddled up to become The Mountie: from Dime Novel to Disney, his first novel, a retrospective look at the image of the RCMP

BY JESSE CRAIG BELLINGER

"IN JUNE 1995 MY UNDERWEAR became the subject of a national debate." The underwear in question is a pair of cotton boxers adorned with Canada's much-debated national symbol, the Mountie. Dawson parlayed his interest in his undies into an intriguing study of the RCMP's iconography.

With an opening line that sounds more like it has been torn from the headlines of a tabloid than from the pages of a book articulating the role and image of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police as they relate to Canada's national identity, Michael Dawson's first book performs the rarest of literary feats. The novel is a readable, entertaining and accessible book that never once compromises the integrity of the information that it examines.

The Mountie: from Dime Novel to Disney began as a Masters thesis while Dawson was a graduate student in history at Queen's University. The finished thesis was sold to Toronto's Between the Lines press and metamorphosed into a text that combines historical survey, studies in Canadian iconography and pop culture commentary. Constructing an academic and highly readable novel in an obvious but viable way, Dawson tracks the Men in Red from their distant founding in 1873 as the Northwest Mounted Police to Paul Gross's portrayal of RCMP officer Benton Fraser in contemporary television's Due South. In between are all the expected stops: The Mountie as the pure Canadian, the Mountie as a fearless, emotionless and sexless law enforcement agent who always gets his man [sic], the steadfast and tacky Mounties of pulp novels and cinema during the early 20th century, the incompetent and comic Dudley Do-Right. Then we see the modernization of the RCMP during the 1970s and eighties and finally the infamous "Disney Deal," in which the image of the Mountie, widely regarded to be as Canadian an image as the maple leaf, was sold to the Walt Disney World Corporation, ironically in an effort to prevent the deterioration of the RCMP's image due to a proliferation of unlicensed and often negative merchandise.

Dawson's writing style is lucid and decidedly unacademic, surely an advantage when considering such a potentially provocative and interesting topic as a survey of the iconography of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

RATHER THAN WRITE A HISTORY OF THE RCMP Dawson has written a history of the RCMP's image. As such, a strange but inevitable thing happens: we see the RCMP defined, like so much of the so-called Canadian identity, by what it is not. Early images of the Mountie were anything but flattering; regular reports of theft within the ranks (theft from both the Canadian government and fellow officers) and desertion to the United States culled an image that is the very antithesis of what a professional law enforcement agent should represent. "[Canadians in 1879] could hardly have envisioned a day when Canadians in general would come to see the Mountie as a fitting (and flattering) symbol of their country... for a time, then, inefficiency, irresolution and impropriety seemed as much a part of the Force as fairness, perseverance and self-control."

Following that came the image of the Mountie as a romantic hero, taking the lead in countless dime store novels as a proud and professional representation of Victorian masculinity and a defender of traditional hierarchies, or, as Dawson writes, "an antimodern crusader." In the face of a rapidly industrializing western culture, the Mountie came to be viewed as representing a pastoral and simpler past, where the sun never set on an Anglo-Saxon Empire that was a true world power. Hardly symbolic of a country that wanted to shed its image as a colonial backwater, "the Mountie addressed threats to Victorian hierarchies and sought... to combat threats to Anglo-Saxon middle-class hegemony." These "threats" included immigrants, First Nations individuals and French Canadians while encouraging Canadians of British descent to "defer to a social order that encouraged female passivity and rigid class distinctions." In this manner, the RCMP were seen not as following the letter of the law but as doing "the right thing," that is, upholding the existing status quo by relying on their own perceived common sense and inherent sense of compassion. In this way, the Mountie of the early 20th Century is not only an antimodern crusader but an anti-government agent as well, operating above the law in the uncivilized regions of a vast empire.

CANADA'S LONG-STANDING INSECURITY regarding our more numerous and prosperous southern neighbours also figures prominently in the Mountie mythos. Just as Canadians often define themselves through negativity (we are not Americans; we are not British), the image of the Mountie that developed in the first half of the 20th century could not be more unlike its American counterpart, the cowboy.

Both ate armed, both are mounted and both wear wide-brimmed hats. But beyond that there is little left in common. The wildly-opportunistic, cattle-raisin', law-breakin' cowpoke is just the type of character likely to run afoul of the tenacious, square-jawed, empire-defendin' Mountie. And, in the films and novels of that era (curiously produced, for the most part, in the United States and Britain), that is often precisely what happened. These RCMP officers suffered from the same insecurities that plagued the nation that they represented, in that they could only be defined by their adversaries. What would a Mountie be if he (or she) could get his man?

An image, of course, suffers no insecurities but rather merely reflects its source. But, as was noted, these films were often produced outside of Canada itself, by non-Canadians. Can an accurate image of Canada's perception of their elite crime-fighters really be expected of such productions? Dawson artfully delves into the issue surrounding what he terms "the Mountie and the age of consumption (1930-1970);" Dawson's thoughtful and thorough analysis of this era, which produced the most problematic and enduring image of the RCMP, contains much of the book's most revealing and entertaining insights.

The image of the Mountie that developed in the first half of the 20th century could not be more unlike its American counterpart, the cowboy.

No book of this nature would be complete without a discussion of the Mountie's current cultural location, somewhere between prime-time American network television's broadcast of Due South and Walt Disney World's Mountie-with-a-thunderbird-on-his-hat statue that greets visitors to Disney's oldest and most popular ride, "It's a small world." The Mountie is as visible now as it ever was, further evidenced by Martha Stewart's (and here, along with network television and Disney, is another of America's most powerful cultural institutions) latest Zeller's advertisements. The ads feature a typically rigid and crisp RCMP officer welcoming Ms. Stewart to Canada, to which an admiring Martha (herself a symbol of a bygone American cultural era, along with Ann Landers and "Miss Manners" — but perhaps that is another book. Mr. Dawson, are you listening?) replies: "I think I'm

Continued on next page

2ND ANNUAL
Alfie's PUB
BATTLE OF THE DJ'S
 MANY WILL ENTER ONLY THE STRONG WILL SURVIVE
WEDNESDAY OCT. 28
WEDNESDAY NOV. 4

Alfie's

DJ'S INTERESTED IN WINNING RECORDING TIME & OR CASH PRIZES CALL MATT TO ENTER @ 545-2003 CONTEST OPEN TO ALL STUDENTS
HTTP://WWW.ALFIES.QUEENSU.CA/ALFIES

Indigo Books hosts the book launch of The Mountie: from Dime Novel to Disney tomorrow night at 7:30 p.m. Author Michael Dawson will be reading from this, his first book.

2 cents classics ♦ R. Villanueva

BAD-ASS PENGUINS

TOP 10 REJECTED CAMRUS Bookstore TITLES

comes with FREE KIT

- Waiting for GODOT II
- WHERE YOUR TUITION REALLY GOES
- The QFYS of OSAP
- GAELS ON BAIL
- "PROS" of ProCASTINATING
- FUN with FLOORMATES
- YOU AND YOUR McJOB ♥
- JUST DID IT: HOW TO GET SOME & FAST
- JUST DID IT II: HOW TO GET RID & FAST
- OIL this THIGH

Continued from last page

going to like Canada."

And then there is Canadian-born actor Paul Gross's portrayal of Constable Benton Fraser on television's Due South. At once modern and post-modern, Due South manages to parody the image of the do-right, by-the-book Canadian while simultaneously reinforcing those very stereotypes. It is hard to ascertain if the show is attempting to poke fun at this very well-known and antiquated image of the Mountie or revive it. Gross's physical portrayal of Constable Fraser is a throwback to a forgotten era (one recent magazine article referred to Gross as "genetically perfect"), maintaining decorum and appropriate manners at all times and in all situations. In contrast, Fraser's on-screen partner is a rough-and-tumble streetwise Chicago detective who could not be more different from Fraser. Perhaps this is a better way to think about this (and stop me when this begins to sound familiar): Fraser's American partner is the antithesis of the image of the Canadian Mountie. And yes, they always get their man.

MICHAEL DAWSON HAS TAKEN what would certainly have been an interesting thesis topic and expanded it into an insightful, informative and surprisingly-readable book. Dawson's writing style is lucid and decidedly unacademic, surely an advantage when considering such a potentially provocative and interesting topic as a survey of the iconography of the Royal Canadian

Michael Dawson, author of The Mountie: from Dime Novel to Disney.

PHOTO BY CHRIS GLOVER

Mounted Police. Supplemented with a healthy amount of illustrations, photographs and sketches, The Mountie from Dime Novel to Disney makes like a Mountie and tracks the image of the Men in Red from the thick forests and rugged mountains of the 19th Century Northwest Territories to the postmodern airwaves and board room merchandising deals of the very late 20th century. And, certainly, Dawson gets his man.

Michael Dawson will be reading from his book at the Kingston launch of The Mountie at Indigo books on Wednesday, October 21 at 7:30 p.m. Besides presenting an opportunity to hit up the author for ways to sneak that unpublished thesis of yours past a publisher's desk, there's always the hope that we'll get a glimpse of those national-debate inspiring boxers. "Welcome to Canada," indeed.

Jesse Craig Bellinger missed his deadline by 36 hours. 36 hours, I tell you! Apparently, he was at home while washing his FBI gauchies.

SPORTS & FITNESS

Gee-Gees sweep Gaels Ottawa QB Coté puts on second-half clinic

READY TO RUMBLE

After a long wait, the heavy-weight title will soon be unified again. The holders of the three major belts, Evander Holyfield and Lennox Lewis have agreed in principle to a fight sometime in 1999. It is only a matter of time before the two boxers ink their name on a contract that would pay Holyfield in the neighborhood of 20 million dollars and Lewis approximately eight million dollars. There has been a war of words between these fighters for the last three years, with Lewis accusing Holyfield of ducking the fight. Holyfield better hope he can duck Lewis' punch more effectively than he ducked this challenge.

HOT START ON ICE

All three eastern Canadian NHL teams have started the 1998-99 campaign very hot. The Toronto Maple Leafs defeated the defending Stanley Cup Champion Detroit Red Wings in their home opener en route to winning their first three games, before a 4-1 setback to Vancouver. The Montreal Canadiens also won their home opener against the New York Rangers and are 2-1-1 after one week. The Ottawa Senators opened on the road with a victory over Colorado Avalanche and have yet to lose, winning their first three games. Unfortunately in the long NHL season, it matters where you stand in April, not October.

WORLD SERIES WIPEOUT?

The heavily favoured New York Yankees have already shown why they won the most games by any team in American League history, by thumping the National League champion San Diego Padres in the first two games of the World Series. The Bronx Bombers won the first two games at home by 9-6 and 9-3 scores. The series will now shift to Qualcomm Stadium in San Diego, where the underdogs will send Stirling Hitchcock, the NLCS MVP to the mound in game three. If David Cone and the Yanks win this one, this series will not be coming back to Yankee Stadium.

IF CHRISTMAS CAME EARLY... Pavel Bure would be traded to a team with no Stanley Cup hopes — maybe the Toronto Maple Leafs. Ben Johnson would stop racing man or beast and never be in the media again. The Atlanta Braves would realize that no bullpen means no World Series and address the issue.

Paul Correalle (#20) follows the Chris Robyn block for what was the tying touchdown. Ottawa scored one minute later to win. PHOTO BY JAMES TERJANIAN

BY ADAM KAMINSKY

What started as a rematch between the two best teams in the Ontario-Quebec Interuniversity Football Conference, ended as yet another highlight film for Ottawa quarterback Phil Coté's Hec Creighton Trophy campaign.

Ottawa	28
Queen's	21

The third-year business management student overcame a brutal start to burn a path through the Queen's defence in a spectacular second-half performance, leading his Gee-Gees (5-1) to a 28-21 victory over the Golden Gaels (3-3). Coté's already impressive statistical resume was padded by 251 yards passing, 116 yards rushing, including two touchdowns

Gaels aiming for nationals

Women's basketball

BY ADAM KAMINSKY

The buzz you hear emanating from Bartlett Gym these days is the excitement that surrounds this year's edition of the Queen's women's basketball team.

With 11 of 12 players returning from last year's OUA bronze medal team, the veteran squad has already set loftier goals for themselves.

"We're definitely aiming for first in the conference," said veteran point guard and co-captain Deanah Shelley. "[The through the air and one on the ground, and engineering the conference's best offence to a total of 462 yards of net offence.

While the final offensive statistics are impressive, the game surprisingly began as a defensive struggle. The only points of the first-half came from the foot of Gee-Gees' kicker Darren McNeice on a 17-yard field goal, only four minutes into the game. The field goal culminated the first offensive drive of the game for Ottawa, giving the game the appearance of another shoot-out.

The Gaels' offence answered that first field goal by confidently marching down the field and taking the ball all the way to the Gee-Gees' 12-yard line, before safety Luke Shaver picked off an errant pass in the endzone.

The remainder of the first-half saw very little offensive action due to the good defence and both teams' ability to keep from turning the ball over. Coming the week after the Gaels gave up eight turnovers in Ottawa, this sure-handedness could be taken as a positive.

"When our starting running back went out we had no choice but to use our best runner, who is Coté."

— Ottawa coach Marcel Bellefeuille

"I thought we rebounded from last weekend's disaster and played well," said Queen's Head Coach Bob Howes.

The second-half was a little more exciting for the fans and a lot more distressing for the defensive coordinators, as scoring increased to a steady flow.

The first points of the second-half came with 10 minutes gone in the third quarter when Queen's Offensive Coordinator Steve Yovench reached into his bag of tricks. On the play, quarterback Beau Howes threw a flare pass to slotback James MacLean, who was behind the quarterback, and the slotback promptly stopped and heaved a 66-yard touchdown pass to a wide open Ken Radcliffe down the field.

However, the Gaels' 7-3 lead was short lived when Coté, coming off a first-half where he completed only two of 12 passes, found fourth receiver Pat Aubriot for a 43-yard pass and run play. McNeice then hit the convert and six minutes later nailed a 14-yard field goal to hard on her game, she has been able to be an example for all of the younger players on the team," explained Head Coach Dave Wilson. "[Due to her hard work] she has shown remarkable improvement in her game over five years."

Please see Last second on page 16

While one all-conference player has returned, the other all-star forward, Cheryl Hunt, was lost to graduation. There is no doubt Hunt's talent will be difficult to replace, but the coaching staff is very excited about the scoring potential of converted point guard, Jacqueline Beaudoin.

"Jacqueline is like a coiled up snake or a jack-in-the-box," said Wilson. "[One day] she is going to explode on the OUA and score 20 points a game."

While Beaudoin will be a new starter in the Queen's three-player backcourt, Vankleek Hill native Shelley and Steph 'long range' Glancey will return as the point and shooting guard respectively. The veterans will be backed up by super quick guard Heather Box, who will play at the point this season, and Shalea Pitau, a third-year student.

Please see Wealth on page 18

Welcome To The Jungle

The exchange Invites You To It's:

Plant Sale

Brought To You By:

exchange

&

Flowers n' Things

October 19, 20, 21.

Student Lounge
Upper Campus, IDUC
545-2121
www.queensu.ca/exchange

Tennis looks for OUA championships

BY ROBERT MACNEIL

Despite some late season defeats, the Queen's tennis team is heading to the playoffs with several of their players on personal hot streaks. The men's team concluded their regular season this past weekend with losses to McMaster and McGill, both by scores of 4-3. The women's team had better luck with a 6-1 thrashing of McGill but fell to McMaster by a count of 4-3. The women's team enters the playoffs in second place, and the men reside in the third spot.

These recent losses, however, do not tell the tale of this talented team. The men's team was missing star player Mark Abalman who finished the year undefeated. With his return, combined with the undefeated play of teammate Mark Connolly, Head coach John McFarlane likes the team's chances. "(I am) cautiously optimistic that we will repeat on the men's side," says McFarlane.

With his return [Abalman], combined with the undefeated play of teammate Mark Connolly, Head Coach John McFarlane likes the team's chances.

On the women's side, the star of the team is Paula Myslivecek who has been undefeated for the past two seasons. This year she finished with a 7-0 record in both singles and doubles. In a recent match against Western, Myslivecek defeated former professional player Susan Huang who has recently returned to university. Complementing this talented athlete is second-year law student Angelica Sandelscu, who has had a very strong season during which she has gone undefeated as well. McFarlane is optimistic that the women's side has the tools to win a championship.

McFarlane commented that he has received excellent efforts from every player and was impressed that the playoff spots were clinched so early. When discussing the men's team, McFarlane commented that it "can be a blessing not to be ranked number one." Moreover, he said that "(it is preferable) to have a bad weekend before the championships" so lessons can be learned before the real test begins. McFarlane was blessed last season with a women's team that finished in first place, but they were upset in the first round of the playoffs. This season, however, many of the team's core stars returned for another shot at a banner and their post-season looks very promising.

After running the early season table with relative ease, the success of the team will come down to peaking at the appropriate time. All of the players know that awards are not given out for finishing well in the regular season, they have to perform in the playoffs.

The Gaels will try to attain that success and fulfill their dreams of a championship banner this weekend at York University in the OUA championships.

Former Gaels honoured

BY QUEEN'S JOURNAL SPORTS STAFF

Three former Golden Gaels were selected to be inducted into the Queen's Football Hall of Fame in the year 2000.

Vince Panetta, Tom Langford and John Yach, all Ottawa natives, were tabbed by the committee as worthy candidates to join the exclusive club.

Panetta, who now practices law in Belleville, was a player who had the size and skill to help the team at many positions. The Queen's coaching staff realized this and used him at fullback, tight end and guard over his five year career. He excelled at all three positions due to his blocking ability at all positions. He was a force which dominated Queen's offensive football in his time.

Langford, currently a high school teacher in Port Hope, set the benchmark for the middle linebacker position in the O-QIFC during his time. The quietly dominating defender led the Gaels in tackles during all five of his seasons. His play inspired his teammates to match his standard on every play.

Yach, now a lawyer in Ottawa, brought great athletic and a tremendous competitive spirit. He dominated as a middle linebacker and as an outside backer when injury forced him away from his natural position. His athleticism allowed him to dominate from sideline to sideline.

This group of inductees will be enshrined in the year 2000, during a weekend to be determined by the football schedule.

Sailing seeks respect

BY ROBERT MACNEIL

This year's Queen's sailing team has been producing strong results despite competing against American schools with better funding. Sailing in the Mid-Atlantic division of the U.S. collegiate circuit, both the men's and women's teams have members that are ranked among the division's best.

At the New York Maritime Open earlier this month, rookie Monica Dingle finished first and Erika Vines finished sixth in the women's singlehanded event. Their strong performances qualified both women for the U.S. college women's singlehanded championships at King's Point this weekend. The Queen's sailing team has never had a woman qualify for this before, let alone two. It is even more rare for two sailors from the same school to qualify for this particular meet.

On the men's team, Gordon Cook and Marty Essig have qualified for both the division championships and could possibly advance to the U.S. men's singlehanded championships. Essig will be trying to defend the U.S. title he won last year. Essig, along with talented rookie Stephanie Taylor, also qualified for the World University Games that will take place in July, 1999 in Spain.

Even though the sailing team is without full funding from the university, the talented squad has overcome that fact with impressive results.

Last second victory

Continued from page 15

stake the visiting squad to a 13-7 lead.

The Gaels answered the bell in the fourth-quarter with a 56-yard touchdown pass over the middle from Howes to Kingston native, Jason Wimmer. This huge play put Queen's ahead by one point with nine minutes remaining in the contest.

That lead did not hold up for long as Coté and the Gee-Gees' offence rolled down the field, despite the loss of running back Ali Ajram to injury, and scored a major on a two-yard plunge by the quarterback. Ottawa widened their lead to seven with a two-point conversion when Coté hooked up with Rob Harrod. This drive was symptomatic of the Gaels' defensive struggles in the second-half. If Coté did not beat them through the air, he beat them on the ground.

"When our starting running back went out [Ajram], we had no choice but to use our best runner, who is Coté," said first-year Head coach Marcel Bellefeuille.

The 21-14 lead was short lived as the offensive fireworks continued. This time it was the Golden Gaels who were able to smoothly drive down the field and tie the game with a 15-yard touchdown scamper by Paul Corrae, who had 121 yards rushing, his best game since week one.

With the game tied and 1:35 remaining on the clock, overtime was looming, but the vaunted Gee-Gees offence still had one more possession.

On the kick-off following Corrae's touchdown, Wimmer attempted to kick a low, bouncing ball for a tougher return, but Ottawa's Chris Evraire, a three-time conference all-star, had other ideas as he brought the kick 50 yards down to the Queen's 40-yard line. This left the Ottawa offence only with 10 or 15 yards to go for a game-winning field goal, but the Gee-Gees got a lot further than that. The running of Coté came through again, as he brought the ball all the way inside the Gaels 15-yard line on a couple of scrambles. The Gee-Gees then capped off the drive, and the game with a 13-yard pass to Harrod, his fifth touchdown grab in two games against the Gaels, which made the score 28-21.

"We tried to contain them on offence and special teams, but they scored when they had to."

— Head Coach Bob Howes

Queen's did have an opportunity to get a tying score with no time on the clock when a mindless unsportsmanlike conduct penalty by Gee-Gees back-up free safety Scott McCarthur moved the ball to the centre line. Howes took one more shot at the endzone, but his heave did not make its way into the hands of any Queen's receivers and the final gun went off.

The Gaels managed to keep this game close and play much tighter defence, with stand-out defensive end Jim 'the sack guru' Aru leading the charge. However, it is clear that these Gee-Gees are an offensive force to be reckoned with.

"No question [Ottawa] is very, very explosive," said coach Howes. "We tried to contain them on offence and special teams, but they scored when they had to."

Men's basketball

The men's basketball team played an exhibition match against Dawson College on Friday and were victorious by a score of 81-71. Individual stars include Derek Richardson, with 19 points and 12 rebounds, and John Purdy with 15 points and eight rebounds. From a team perspective, the Gaels dominated with a respectable 40 per cent shooting percentage from the three-point line.

Women's basketball

The women's basketball team thrashed the Concordia Stingers by a score of 61-30. Among the highlights were Wendy Moon's 14 points and eight rebounds in only 23 minutes of playing time. Heather Box sunk the Stingers with her jaw-dropping 67 per cent shooting percentage from the three-point line and her 10 points. The women head to Winnipeg this weekend for a tournament which will give an early indication on where they stand on the national scene.

Field hockey

The Golden Gaels' field hockey team closed out its regular season with an impressive

In the game

A busy weekend of Queen's athletic results

defensive display, but unfortunately the offensive struggles continue. On Friday, the team lost a tight 1-0 game to York University, and on Saturday the Gaels fought to a scoreless deadlock against Waterloo.

Women's lacrosse

On Sunday afternoon, the women's lacrosse team defeated York University by an impressive score of 9-4. Among the highlights was Anne Bennediti's hat trick, and two goals each by Ange Morrocco and Darcie Spearing. This leave the new varsity squad with a 4-0 record, perched atop the OUA East division.

Women's hockey

In the annual X-Border Challenge, the women's hockey team won their tournament by defeating McGill 2-1 on Saturday and St. Laurent 5-4 on Sunday. The main story of these games was the strong goaltending of rookies Claudia Tom and Jenevieve Hupe, something the team did not have last year.

Men's rugby

Men's rugby suffered a huge upset on Saturday when they lost to Guelph by a score of 45-40. The Tricolour leapt out to a big advantage in the first half, playing some of their best rugby of the year, only to have the game Guelph side come back brilliantly in the second-half.

This loss moved Queen's into second place and made the road to the OUA Championship go through Guelph. The second XV won in a blowout and clinched first place in their division.

and Jason Flynn scored on a breakaway that was highlight material. Providing outstanding goaltending was Jason Skilnick. The Gaels start their regular season with two games this weekend at Jock Harty against Wilfred Laurier and Waterloo.

Men's soccer

On Saturday, the men's soccer team defeated Trent 6-2. Mike Cowan scored two goals in a victory that keeps the squad in contention with Carleton for the fourth and final ticket to the post-season.

Men's lacrosse

In men's lacrosse action, the Gaels lost Saturday's home match by a score of 22-2 to Brock University. Despite the blowout, the men responded with an impressive 12-6 win at Carleton. The team will try and solidify their playoff standing over the weekend with games against a dominant Guelph squad and a beatable McMaster team.

Men's hockey

On Saturday, night, the men's hockey team obliterated Ryerson by a count of 7-1. D'Arcy O'Shea scored two goals

Rowing

At the OUA Relay Championships hosted by Guelph University the team had a good showing, medaling in four events. Relay teams finished second in men's 4x50m freestyle and third in women's 3x100 metre individual medley, 4x50m freestyle and 4x100m freestyle. The squad heads across town to RMC this weekend to take on Waterloo and RMC.

Men's volleyball

This past weekend, the men's volleyball team won a Bronze medal at the Western Invitational Tournament. Before winning the medal against Dalhousie, the Gaels beat them in their first-round game in five sets and defeated a surprised Western squad in three straight sets. One of the main stars of the weekend was Jake Magolan who hit 62 per cent of his kills for the tournament.

Mountain biking

Last weekend the Queen's mountain biking team participated in the Ontario Mountain

Women's volleyball

The team travelled to McGill this weekend for a tournament and for the second weekend in a row came away with a silver medal. The team defeated Sherbrooke and John Abbott College, only to lose to the University of Montreal. Power hitter Lindsay Barrett was named to the tournament All-Star team. The team hosts their own invitational tournament this weekend at the PEC, before beginning the regular season.

Professional Schools Fair

Thursday, October 22nd

Upper and Lower Ceilidh
John Deutsch University Centre

Accounting
Applied Health Sciences
Architecture
Chiropractic Medicine
Communicative Disorders
Counselling Psychology
Dentistry
Information Technology
Information and Media Studies
Law
Medicine

Naturopathic Medicine
Nursing
Policy Studies
Social Work
Speech Pathology
Theology
Urban Planning

Representatives from these programs will be available from:

11 a.m. - 2 p.m.

- answers to questions on admission requirements
- information on programs offered

Presented by Career Services <http://careers.queensu.ca>

THE COCAMO

WHERE QUEEN'S PARTIES!

WEDNESDAY

HIP HOP

TOONIE ALL NIGHT!

DJ DUSTY
FROM OTTAWA

THURSDAY

LOONIE!

LOONIE
NIGHT!

1$ Cover Between 7 & 9 pm
1/2 price after 9 with
STUDENT ID

FRIDAY

KILL THE KEG

SUPER LITE
DRAFT
From 7-10pm

Loonie until 11:00

WIN A BAR FRIDGE!

FREE MONEY

APPLICATIONS FOR THE AMS BOARD OF DIRECTORS SPECIAL PROJECTS GRANTS ARE DUE BY FRIDAY, OCTOBER 30.

FOR PROJECT CRITERIA GO TO THE AMS FRONT DESK IN THE LOWER JDUC OR CALL ALISON LOAT AT 545-2729

Are you graduating? ... do something extraordinary next year

Seize the opportunity to see the world -- Queen's students have this to say about:

Interning Abroad -

"It gave me the opportunity to take my scholastic experience into the working world to see if this field was for me..." -Sonya Kalnin, United States Association for the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees in Washington, D.C.

Doing Graduate Work Abroad -

"It is interesting for me to come from the most southern to the most northern country in North America... Probably in the future I will work with Canadians in Chile." -Roderigo Alperi, Queen's graduate student from Chile.

Volunteering Abroad -

"Definitely live with a family... It was absolutely a wonderful experience." -Julie Beasse, volunteered in a number of schools, a soup kitchen, and a home for the mentally disabled in Peru. She also lived with a Peruvian family.

Working Abroad -

"The benefits are very good. I got to know the world outside Kingston." -Jianne Hui, Student Work Abroad Program (SWAP) in London, England.

Teaching English Abroad -

"I learned as much about myself as my students did about English." -Stephan Freund, Seoul, South Korea and Moscow, CIS.

The International Centre
at Queen's University. We're located in the John Deutsch University Centre just past the Queen's Pub
Tel: (613) 545-2604 Fax: (613) 545-6190
<http://www.queic.queensu.ca>

Learn more from students during the Fall Speaker Series
5:30 - 7:00 p.m. in the Music Listening Room, JDUC

- Wednesday, October 21 "Working Abroad"
- Tuesday, October 27 "Studying Abroad"
- Thursday, November 5 "Interning Abroad"
- Thursday, November 12 "Volunteering Abroad"
- Wednesday, November 18 "Teaching English Abroad"

Wealth of talent

Continued from page 15

While the backcourt appears to be crowded, the front court is a veritable log jam of talent. Joining Wendy Moon up front are fourth-year players Andrea Thompson and Tammy Cooper, who returns for this season at full strength after a knee injury last season. The depth in the front court becomes even more evident when second-year stand-out Jenn Jackson and her classmates Monica Marton and Erin Cressman are added to the equation. These three sophomores, along with Box, form a remarkable recruiting class and give coach Wilson a reason to be excited for not only this season, but for a number of seasons down the road.

"We're looking to do the same things... [However], now that we are more experienced, we demand more from ourselves."

— Point guard Deannah Shelley

"I've never been in a position where four women we recruit we want in the program for five years," said Wilson excitedly.

There was some concern over the health of Jackson and Marton, who missed much of training camp due to injuries, but both are back and will be at full strength before the start of the regular season.

While some might see this embarrassment of riches as a potential problem, Wilson is not worried. The Gaels have spent a great deal of time in team-building sessions, discussing the difference between enjoying success as a team and enjoying individual success.

"This is a challenge that we handled very well last year, and we look to do it better this year," said the veteran coach.

With virtually no turnover on the team and the added experience and maturity of another training camp, the team should be able to do many of the same things as last year, only better.

"We're looking to do the same things, same systems, same goals," said Shelley. "[However], now that we are more experienced, we demand more from ourselves."

"This [overload of talent] is a challenge that we handled very well last year."

— Head Coach Dave Wilson

With a stacked deck of talent and veteran leadership, this team seems to be on their way to something special, but Wilson is taking it one step at a time.

"The real key is the journey, not the destination," he philosophized. "Come March, if they have a spot for us in Thunder Bay [CIAU Championships] that will be great."

The team will begin their quest for Thunder Bay with challenging tournament appearances in Winnipeg and London, which will allow them to play some of the best in the nation. The team then begins their grueling 20-game regular season schedule in mid-November against the University of Toronto Blues.

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Colin James swings past

Canada's bluesman and Little Big Band 'just came back' to Kingston

INTERVIEW

By JIM WHITTINGTON

Colin James is as skillful an entertainer as Canada has ever produced. Coming from humble and unlikely beginnings as a blues guitarist from Saskatchewan, James has emerged as one of Canada's most respected musicians. Not bad for a youngster who dropped out of high school to follow his musical dreams.

Currently, James is entering the third stage of his career, at least musically speaking. On the heels of several successful rock and blues albums that have earned him numerous awards and distinctions, he did the unexpected: he made a swing album.

Anyone who is expecting his brand of guitar driven blues rock sound will be shit out of luck.

On October 21 James brings his Little Big Band to Kingston's AJs Hangar and anyone who is expecting his brand of guitar driven blues rock sound will be shit out of luck. The music will be swing and swing only. However, the evening will not revolve solely around the music. AJs will be transformed into an entire swing era dance hall with the sale of vintage thirties and forties clothing and swing dance instruction.

